5. More recently, however, events have taken a brighter turn. Many of the principal problems of administration have been overcome; the international staff has been strengthened materially and is taking hold. The various delegations have settled down in their new location and are displaying more force and confidence in Council deliberations. The Secretary-General himself and his senior assistants are acquiring experience in guiding the deliberations of the Council and in directing the work of the Secretariat and staff. Progress has been made with several of the problems which in June or July the Council seemed unlikely ever to tackle effectively. In fact a new atmosphere of modest optimism is apparent and although no one in NATO is under any illusions about the difficulties facing the Alliance the prospect is much brighter than the Permanent Organisation in Paris will be able to tackle these difficulties effectively.

The Prospects for the Future

6. The next few months will be a period of stress and anxiety. The most immediate problem facing the Organisation is the completion of the Annual Review. This, it will be recalled, was decided upon at Lisbon, as a more systematic application of the concept underlying the "TCC exercise" — the periodic review and reconciliation of NATO's military needs with the military, economic and political capabilities of its members. This year's Review is now being pressed forward urgently. The U.S. Government is determined to present to the new Congress in January a NATO programme for 1953 which will set forth agreed military goals for next year. Their present disposition is to have this programme show major new force commitments beyond those to which member countries agreed at Lisbon for 1952. They argue that, unless the Congress can by such means be convinced that the European nations are working determinedly to build up their defences as rapidly and independently as possible, it will be difficult or impossible to obtain the sums needed for their foreign aid programme. It is of course difficult to meet this argument, in terms of U.S. domestic politics or administration tactics, but it is to say the least questionable whether this is the most effective means of adding to the defensive strength of the Alliance. Indeed the U.K. Government are inclined to take, as yet only privately, quite the opposite view. As for the other members of NATO, it is to be feared that, despite their internal political and economic difficulties, they may be induced to accept unrealistic military goals for 1953 in the hope that by so doing they may receive the maximum U.S. aid.

7. The conduct of the Annual Review will constitute a serious test for NATO. Apart from the difficulty of developing an agreed programme which will satisfy the political requirements of the U.S. Administration there is the basic problem of reconciling minimum military requirements with political and economic capabilities. It will require great patience and skill to reach an acceptable solution of this central issue. It is fortunate that these matters have been posed in a paper recently submitted to the Council by Lord Ismay. It is possible that some progress may be made in laying a basis for compromise when the Standing Group meet the Council in Paris later this month.

8. Another important subject which has gradually come to occupy the Council's attention to a considerable extent is that of consultation on general political issues. An example is to be found in the discussions which have recently been held on the situation in Germany and on the latest exchange in the series of notes between the U.S.S.R. and the three Western Powers concerning the problems relating to a German Peace Treaty. Other subjects which have come before the Council have been the situation in Iran and in Egypt, and the moves toward a rapprochement between Yugoslavia on one side and Greece and Turkey on the other. There are prospects that such discussions will become more frequent and more substantial in the future.

9. It is encouraging also that in the last month there have been various steps taken in the direction of realistic examination of the possibilities of further cooperation under Article 2 of the Treaty. There are now three bodies working under the Council in this field — the Information Policy Working Group, the Committee on Social and Cultural Cooperation and the Committee on Migration and the Movement of Labour.

10. Taken all in all the prospects of NATO for the next six months are, in our opinion, encouraging. There is much hard, complicated and delicate work to be done; there are now grounds for reasonable hope that the new Organisation may be able to make solid progress toward its accomplishment.

III. Organization for European Economic Cooperation

11. Two of the general fields of activity mentioned above are not the concern of NATO alone. The Annual Review is being conducted in conjunction with the OEEC Review of the economic position of its members, and the work of the Committee on Migration and the Movement of Labour is related to that of the OEEC Committee on Manpower. Canada is of course not a member of the OEEC, but like the United States, is formally "associated" with it.

12. Canada has at present two major interests in the OEEC. The first is in the OEEC Annual Report, particularly as it relates to the NATO Annual Review. Conditions in Canada and the United States are being assessed. Moreover, because the OEEC Secretariat is planning to focus this year's Report on the "dollar problem" and the need for European countries to hold steadfastly towards the goal of convertibility and non-discrimination, this year's Report is of particular interest to Canada. In the second place, Canada has an active interest in the progress and processes of European trade liberalization and related policies. Politically as well as economically, Canada is concerned that Europe should be strong. On the other hand, as the past year has made clear, the OEEC and EPU may be used as instruments whereby the relatively weak members can persuade a relatively strong member to follow then in programmes of discrimination against dollar imports. This carries implications, not merely for the particular Canadian interests concerned, but if it spreads wide enough, for the whole nexus of trans-Atlantic and world-wide trade relations.

13. While Canadian concern in the OEEC is concentrated on the two broad issues referred to above, various Canadian Departments have expressed interest in a number of other aspects of the OEEC work relating to individual commodities, manpower, scientific research, etc.

IV. Other Responsibilities of the Mission

14. This Mission is also concerned with the work of the European Defence Community Interim Committee and in the activities of the Council of Europe. With the former, the link is obvious. The French Permanent Representative reports to Council on the progress of the Committee of which he is Chairman. Informally, through contacts with the Secretariat and in the Embassy of the United Kingdom, we have been able to obtain information on the activities of the interim body. So far the work has been technical but, as the organisation takes shape, more general problems with political complications are beginning to arise.

15. The Mission is also interested in the activities of the Council of Europe between the sessions of the Consultative Assembly. As the integration of Europe makes progress and the number of European organisations increase, the problem will arise of assigning responsibilities among our various Missions in Western Europe for reporting on these activities.

V. Conclusions

16. We find that the assignments given to this Mission as regards NATO and the OEEC and other international agencies have developed generally as was anticipated in Ottawa. The Mission has now completed its administrative and personnel organisation and our impression is that over the next six months, the volume of work is likely to continue at about the present level with a gradual tendency to increase. If the Mission is given additional responsibilities, for example as regards "European integration", our staff requirements will have to be reviewed before the end of that period. We are now at about the limit of what can be done efficiently with our present resources and any proposal for our assuming additional responsibilities should be carefully related to the availability of additional staff.

VISIT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS TO WASHINGTON SEPTEMBER 4-5, 1952

Summary of Conversaton at Dinner at the Embassy Residence, September 4

The following were present at the dinner:

Mr. Pearson
Mr. Acheson
Mr. Wrong
Mr. Freeman Matthews
Mr. Perkins
Mr. Ignatieff

The following were the main subjects discussed:

...

1. NATO Problems

Mr. Pearson explained that one of the purposes of his forthcoming visit to Europe was to turn over the Chairmanship of the North Atlantic Council at the end of his tenure of this office for a calendar year to the Foreign Minister of Denmark. He said that since he was a candidate for election to the presidency of the forthcoming General Assembly of the U.N. he thought that it was particularly important that he should turn over his office now, rather than wait until the North Atlantic Council Ministerial meeting on December 15.<sup>21</sup> Mr. Acheson readily agreed that this was desirable.

Mr. Pearson said that he also wished to discuss current NATO problems with Lord Ismay, with particular reference to preparations for the annual review and the decisions which would have to be taken at the Ministerial meeting on force targets. He hoped that it would be possible this time to avoid the kind of controversy which arose before and after the Lisbon Council meeting as a result of statements which appeared in the press comparing the alleged performances of the respective signatories in meeting the recommendations of the Temporary Council Committee and to avoid as well the issue of ambiguous announcements of military objectives. While he recognized that decisions would have to be taken by the Ministers to complete the Lisbon 1952 programme as quickly as possible and to continue the military buildup, balancing military, economic and political considerations, he hoped that it would not be necessary to confront governments with specific qualitative targets which they would be urged publicly to fulfil in 1953. This was not meant to imply that firm figures might not be set for 1953, but we should avoid public debate on the subject prior to NATO agreement, and also avoid as far as possible the projection of figures beyond 1953 in such a way that we appear to accept them as agreed.

He also wished to examine, while he was in Europe, the implications of the announced cutback in the British defence programme with particular reference to the thesis which had been put forward in justifying it. He was worried about the effect of this and recent French statements on NATO objectives and NATO morale. This thesis assumed a revision of the strategic concept governing North Atlantic military planning by assuming a greater reliance upon the strategic and tactical use of new weapons and of air power. This thesis, while it had certain superficial attractions, as it seemed to justify reductions in overall military expenditures and particularly the reduction of ground forces which would have to be made available after the first 60 to 90-day period following D-Day, had serious political implications, particularly in respect of probable reactions in continental Europe where once again they might think they were being considered as expendable.

Mr. Acheson made it clear that he had no sympathy for the British thesis. It seemed to him that it was a rationalization advanced to justify the decision taken by the British Government for political reasons to cut back its defence programme. The British argument, he said, could not be justified by the facts. The strategic use of atomic weapons would not materially affect the campaign which would have to be fought to stop the advance of the Soviet forces in Europe. The strategic counter-offensive which would be launched from the United States would only have longer-term effects upon the Soviet war potential. In the meantime, it was essential that there should be sufficient ground forces with tactical air support to stop the Soviet advance. No one had suggested that these forces should be of a magnitude which would permit them to mount a counter-offensive to drive the Soviet forces into the Soviet Union. The assumption was that, initially, the Soviet forces would advance a considerable distance into Western Europe and it would be necessary to launch at least an initial counter-offensive in order to stop the momentum of the Soviet advance. This explains the necessity of having covering forces immediately available for combat, with forces in reserve which would be made available within 30, 60 or 90 days of the beginning of the battle.

Mr. Acheson said that the British thesis also seemed to assume the existence of new types of special weapons which could be used tactically in the land battle to compensate for the numerical superiority of the Soviet ground forces. Mr. Acheson said that while it was true that the United States was experimenting with the development of a number of what he called "Buck Rogers" gadgets, none of these could be counted upon for use in the field until about 1956.

Mr. Acheson said that the British thesis also seemed to assume that the Soviet Union has no intention of launching a general war in the next two or three years. If by this it was meant that the Soviet leaders were not likely to decide to go to war on the calculation that Western military power now being built up might later place them at a greater military disadvantage, he was inclined to agree. This, however, he suggested, was not the real danger. The risks of general war were more likely, in his opinion, to arise from a different set of circumstances. There were certain circumstances, he particularly mentioned Korea and Berlin, in which the national security interests of the Soviet Union and the United States and other powers were so directly engaged that some unforeseen development might unloose a chain of events (none of which by themselves might be decisive), but which, taken together, might precipitate a general war. For instance, a serious air offensive launched against the U.N. forces in Korea from across the Yalu River would represent a most serious challenge to the security of U.S. forces in Korea that might well precipitate a chain of events. In Berlin, Mr. Acheson thought it was unthinkable that Western Powers could give up a position which the Soviet Government had in its power to make untenable from a military point of view.

The second type of situation which Mr. Acheson regarded as inherently containing the risks of general war was a local conflict in which the interests of the United States, as well as the Soviet Union, became increasingly and directly involved. He cited as an example the present situation in Indo-China and in the Middle East. Neither in Indo-China nor in the Middle-East had the United States sufficient resources to take preventive action in advance. The United States, therefore, had to improvise with the military resources available such action as was necessary to impede the fulfilment of Communist designs.

Returning to the question of the NATO force targets, Mr. Acheson said that the main object of NATO military planning at present was to build up the minimum forces necessary to stop the initial Soviet attack. In order to provide the basis for the necessary request to Parliaments for the authorization of funds, force targets seemed to him essential. Mr. Pearson then said it was the process of establishing them and the publicity given to that process which worried him. Mr. Acheson suggested that a distinction might be made between the tactics employed in the presentation of such targets to the public and their use by governments for supporting defence appropriations. He did not see, however, how it was possible to avoid establishing firm force targets for 1953; otherwise, the United States, for example, would not have any firm basis on which to request Congress for foreign military aid in support of the NATO defence programme. He implied that it might be possible to reduce to some extent NATO targets insofar as the military requirements recommended by the Standing Group proved to be beyond the economic capabilities of the respective NATO members. It was necessary, however, in his view, to continue the build-up of forces to the extent that the economic resources of the member nations would permit. The possibility of using new atomic weapons, tactical and strategic, could not affect NATO military planning in the next two or three years.

London, September 22, 1952

MEMORANDUM BY MR. PEARSON REGARDING TALKS IN LONDON AND PARIS ON NATO DEFENCE PROGRAMMES AND STRATEGY

The first discussion of these matters was during my conference with Mr. Eden on Friday morning, September 12, but it was general in character. He did, however, express emphatic appreciation of the importance of the permanent NATO Council and of the desirability of using it for political discussions. In this connection he referred with satisfaction to the discussion which had recently been held on Germany. This surprised both Mr. Robertson and myself because of the attitude that the Foreign Office had taken towards such discussions, an attitude which had apparently been expressed in instructions to Hoyer-Millar, which were almost rudely negative in character. Incidentally, Mr. Eden repeated this favourable view of Council political discussions at his luncheon on that day. The opposition to these seems to come from officials in the Foreign Office, a fact which was confirmed by the intervention of Pierson-Dixon at the luncheon in question.

At this luncheon, which was attended, among others, by Lord Alexander, Sir Ian Jacob, the United States Ambassador and William Draper, there was a general conversation over a number of NATO military and political subjects. Draper indeed made quite a speech in which he emphasized the importance of the United Kingdom pushing ahead with their defence programme and completing their review of this programme in time to have the NATO Annual Review completed by December 15. The United Kingdom persons present, however, were doubtful whether this would be possible, and were also inclined to emphasize economic and financial difficulties. While Draper emphasized the need for speed in this matter, he took the opposite view in respect of the strategic re-assessment which was underway by the Standing Group and which was to take account of "new weapons." He did not think that this would be completed in time to affect NATO firm planning for 1953. In fact he added — to the obvious disappointment of the other guests — that Washington would need from six to nine months more for this re-assessment (a view which incidentally he reaffirmed in Paris). The United Kingdom obviously found this news discouraging and somewhat mystifying and felt that they have not been given the real reasons which would justify such a delay.

At the luncheon Mr. Eden repeated what he had said to Mr. Robertson and to me earlier, that the current "recasting" of the United Kingdom defence programme would not likely save them much money, but it would make possible the more efficient use of the funds to be appropriated. This view was later confirmed by Lord Alexander and Sir Ian Jacob. It was agreed, however, though not with any enthusiasm, by both Mr. Eden and Lord Alexander that Draper was correct in assessing that the curve of NATO defence effort must still continue to move upward. I have my own doubts, however, whether the United Kingdom really accept this so far as their own effort is concerned, and these doubts were strengthened by the discussion Mr. Heeney and I had with Lord Alexander and Sir Ian Jacob after lunch the same afternoon.

This was an interesting discussion at which both Lord Alexander and Sir Ian Jacob, who did a good deal of the talking, argued that it would not be possible to agree on any realistic NATO programme for 1953 until the re-assessment referred to above had been received; any planning would be largely artificial which did not take into account the new weapons and strategy. Lord Alexander emphasized several times his conviction that "quality, not quantity" should be the objective in NATO planning for the defence of the West. He and Jacob both felt that it would be better to concentrate on having the 50 divisions for 1952 properly equipped, trained and supported, than to agree or plan for a larger number of which a proportion would only be "cardboard divisions".

There was a good deal of talk in this connection about the inadequacy of the equipment and logistic support for the existing divisions and about the importance of new weapons in NATO strategy and tactics. Both Lord Alexander and Jacob were pretty optimistic about the effectiveness of the strategic atomic counter-attack in the early stages of the battle for Europe and argued that this was an element in planning which had to be taken into account. They recognised, however, the American difficulty arising out of the MacMahon Act, and indeed out of other circumstances which made it impossible to have a satisfactory NATO appreciation made at the present time with all existing atomic information made available for that purpose.

In speaking of the technical advances being made and supporting his argument in favour of "quality", Lord Alexander indicated that the U.K.

Government regarded heavy anti-aircraft weapons as obsolescent and spoke of the early effectiveness to be expected of the guided missile. We should rely on these for passive defence.

I brought up the question of the minimum NATO force required for the defence of Western Europe. Jacob indicated, without any qualification, that 50 divisions effectively armed and supported was the maximum which the Western European economy (leaving Germany out) could support at the present time but that such a force plus the German divisions would be adequate for the purpose. That purpose was to hold off the attack while the air counter-offensive was operating. This seems to me to be a most important statement of United Kingdom policy and it will be interesting to discover whether they maintain it in NATO discussions when the Americans put forward, as they are bound to do, larger totals of divisions and aircraft for 1953.

I brought up the question of the advisability of the United Kingdom engaging in strategic atom bombing. Would it not be better for this country, now that it had actually manufactured a bomb, to divert its energy and resources to the development of atomic energy in other fields leaving the military side entirely to the United States? Certainly it would be difficult to understand the United Kingdom plea for economy in defence if they now began to undertake this most expensive form of military operation. Jacob however stated that the United Kingdom authorities felt that unless the United Kingdom participated in atomic air bombing, they would be unable to influence the use to be made of this weapon and the United States would neglect targets of vital importance to Britain, such as submarine bases, etc. It was a matter of national safety and not national prestige. The answer to this is, though I did not give it; why not approach the Americans to see whether agreement could not be reached on targets, etc., which would satisfy the special United Kingdom defence needs.

I mentioned to Lord Alexander and Jacob and, indeed, to others both in London and Paris our worries about a ministerial meeting of NATO in December in relation to the stage which the annual review was likely to reach by that time — the danger of “spotlighting the gaps” — and not having sufficient time to complete the process of reconciliation. I am not sure that this danger is fully appreciated by the U.K. Ministers. They are anxious to have a revision of the Lisbon planning goals based on a new appreciation, but it is difficult to see how this can be expected by December 15. The determining factor, however, seems to be United States political exigencies.

In Paris the subjects of NATO strategy and defence planning were discussed in a very interesting and frank manner at the informal NATO Council meeting on Tuesday, September 16, about which a separate report has been made. I also had the benefit of informal discussions on the same subjects with General Ridgway, General Bradley and General Gruenther at a luncheon given by Lord Ismay, though there was not time for anything more than casual exchanges of views.

It seemed quite clear on my visit to London and Paris that there is a very real difference of opinion between the United States representatives, especially the military representatives, on the one hand, and the European members of NATO on the other, as to the need for an even greater defence buildup in 1953 and the desirability at the next meeting of NATO Ministers of establishing firm goals for that year well in excess of the present 1952 figures. Reflecting this difference of opinion there is naturally a difference of opinion over the risk of war, whether it is now less than before. As was pointed out by Alphand in our NATO informal meeting unless there can be a general agreement on the assessment of this risk, there is not likely to be agreement on requirements to meet it. At the same time it is quite obvious that the approach to the problem of risk is influenced to a very considerable extent by economic factors; especially in European countries and by their own national position in collective strategic planning; that is whether they are likely to be immediate victims of an attack from land or from air and whether they are considered in Washington to be expendable.

I found in my discussion with the NATO members a strong and growing reluctance to support or even discuss NATO defence plans without much more information than has up to the present been made available regarding the strategy of the Pentagon both in regard to atomic warfare and European defence. It is impossible not to have some sympathy with this viewpoint. At the same time one should appreciate not only the normal reluctance of the military planners to put all their cards on a political table, but also their special reluctance to disclose their secret plans to governments whose security reputations vary. There is a real and an increasingly important dilemma here and it came into the open in our NATO discussions on Tuesday and Thursday; especially I should think, in the remarks of the Netherlands member. It was because the Secretary-General's paper on NATO strategy emphasized not only economic factors but the importance of giving the NATO Council all possible strategic information, that it was so heartily welcomed by the members of the Council other than the United States representative who obviously found himself in a difficult position.

There is also an increasing and an intelligent reluctance to agree, largely for American political consumption, on programmes and goals which are not likely to be reached, except in a very artificial way, in the time set. Surely it would be much better to take for our 1953 programme, as the first essential thing to do, the achievement of the 1952 objective; not achievement merely on paper but in fact. Once this has been done then additional firm goals could, if necessary, be decided and made public. This, of course, would not remove the necessity of planning further in advance than 12 months, but it would remove public attention from that necessity and relieve governments from the duty of explaining and defending the gaps between promises and performances. I argued this thesis with everybody I encountered over here and found a very general acceptance of it except in United States quarters. It is felt in such quarters that this course would be too dangerous because it would give the impression in the United States that we were abandoning goals which we had previously agreed on and indeed would encourage Europeans to relax rather than maintain the defence effort. There is, of course, something in this. Yet I feel that the two points of view can be reconciled. That, however, will not be done if we accept under American pressure at the December meeting paper figures as a substitute for what we really think can be done in the economic and political circumstances of 1953. We will have to face this matter soon and more frankly than we have done in the past. I hope that defence planning can proceed steadily and effectively without slavish adherence to unrealistic and publicly declared totals even though they are said to be "for planning purposes only." In this way we can get away from our dangerous practice of concentrating in public on gaps and comparative performances. I think we should explore this whole matter very carefully so that at the December meeting, while a great deal of time will have to be devoted to the Annual Review and there will have to be confidential discussion of force totals, etc., we might be able to confine our public announcement to the fact that we are pushing ahead with the Lisbon 1952 totals until they are completed and making certain that this completion is 100% effective; also that when this goal has been fully achieved further announcements will be made on subsequent programmes. Among other things, this would mean that by the time such further announcement is made we would have some necessary information from the United States on the "new strategy" and "new weapons".

So far as the risk of war is concerned, my visit confirmed my feeling that there is a general disposition in European quarters to feel that it has lessened during the last year or so; a feeling strengthened in the Council by Lord Ismay's paper's reference to this subject. There is recognition however that the situation has worsened in the Far East, though this does not convey the same feeling of immediate crisis to Europeans. There is a danger in this feeling of easement being carried too far; especially as it fits into the desire to reduce defence expenditures because of economic considerations. So the Americans — through their representatives at NATO and else where in Europe and their steady stream of visitors from Washington, especially from the Pentagon — keep pounding away at the thesis that the danger is just as great and as immediate as ever. They make some impression — and it is well that these things should be said — but at times the Americans say them in a way which strengthens the European feeling that there is just about as much to be feared from U.S. rashness as from Soviet aggression. Here the development of consultation and frank discussion in the Council, the strengthening of the prestige and authority of that body, can do much to help.

For this reason — and because of the growing importance of the Council in the planning of defence and broad strategy — it was encouraging to learn that this central agency of NATO after a shaky and somewhat discouraging start, is becoming stronger, better organized and more effective.

Paris, June 25, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

COUNCIL MEETING JUNE 25:
POLITICAL CONSULTATION

Addressed External No. 229; repeated Dominion London No. 437.

In the course of the discussion on the establishment of an information policy committee, the Norwegian representative mentioned that he had forwarded to the Secretary-General a confidential letter setting forth the views of the Norwegian Government on the desirability of setting up as soon as possible a political committee, and also on the political topics which now had to be discussed in Council. Ismay has circulated copies of Skaug's<sup>22</sup> letter to all delegations for preliminary consideration at the informal meeting to take place tomorrow, June 26. The substantial points in Skaug's letter, which clearly reflect the views of his Foreign Minister, are the following:

(i) The Norwegian Government feels that there is a certain lack of political "face" in the recent work of the Council and that while progress has been made to a certain extent on the military and economic fronts, political problems have been markedly absent from our agendas. At the same time the Norwegian Government has always been a strong proponent of the idea that the Council should be used as a forum for exchanges of views on political problems, which are not necessarily limited in scope to the NAT geographical area.

(ii) The Council to carry out its political tasks needs the assistance of a political working group which in collaboration with the Secretariat can prepare reports based on Council discussions, or itself initiate discussions on political problems, depending on the character and complexity of the problem involved. The Norwegian Government therefore favours the establishment of a political "working group" or "Committee" on which representation may have to change according to the subjects under discussion. Wherever desirable the permanent representatives themselves would participate, and in other cases the political counsellors of delegations.

(iii) The work of the Council Deputies clearly proves the necessity of having a political working group. As the Norwegian representative puts it: "Political problems of major importance should clearly be raised and discussed in the first instance in the Council itself, (although the 'round-the-table' method practised in the Council Deputies should in our opinion not be continued). They should, however, be thrashed out in the political committee with a view to reaching the widest possible agreement among all 14 member countries — and the committee should draft reports for the Council. I would here like to stress that it is not so much the contents of such reports — they can hardly be sensational if they have to represent the agreed views of 14 governments — as the fact that 14 governments can agree to the points made in these reports, which give them their value. I can here refer to the Council Deputies' report on Soviet foreign policy. In other cases the topic may be taken up on the political committee's own initiative, e.g. with a view to bringing earlier reports up-to-date, concerning problems of more technical nature, etc. The chiefs of delegations will of course ensure that their subordinates do not embark or decide on matters which in their opinion should come before the Council."

(iv) Turning to the specific political topics which the Norwegian Government feels should now be discussed in NATO, Skaug's letter makes the following points: "The problem which most urgently needs to be placed on the Council agenda is the German question and the reply to the last Soviet note. The urgency is indicated by the fact that according to recent statements by government spokesmen in the United States and the United Kingdom, the reply to the Soviet note will be delivered at an early date. It is our view that since the signing of the contractual agreements with Western Germany, the EDC treaty and the NATO-EDC protocol, the German problem is now intimately linked with NATO. It is a matter which can no longer be regarded — even formally — as the exclusive concern of the Occupying Powers. Furthermore public opinion in our countries is vitally interested in the handling of this problem. The Norwegian Foreign Minister stated in the Norwegian Parliament on June 16th that it would leave a feeling of disquiet if another attempt were not made by the Western Powers to solve the German problem at the conference table, and he felt that public opinion in Norway would support him when he expressed the hope and desire that everything be done to make the German problem subject of another four-power discussion. Under these circumstances it is obvious that it would make a very favourable impression in Norway if my government were able to state publicly that all NATO members had been consulted on the contents of the reply to the Soviet note before it was finalized and delivered. At our meeting on June 19th I also mentioned that it might be useful to have a discussion in NATO of the situation in Morocco and Tunis. At the last United Nations Assembly the Norwegian delegation — although differing from the French view that United Nations was incompetent to deal with the question — took the position that the discussion on the Moroccan problem be postponed. This standpoint was based on the opinion that a discussion in United Nations at that stage might hamper and harm direct negotiations between the parties concerned. The reaction of public opinion was in my country, however, unfavourable to the position taken by the Norwegian delegation and both the Foreign Policy Committee of the Norwegian Parliament and the Foreign Minister himself in his speech mentioned above have stated that later developments have shown that the delegation was wrong when supporting postponement.

As regards Tunisia, the Norwegian delegation to the United Nations has been instructed eventually to support a motion that the Security Council reconsider its previous decision not to place the item on the agenda.

It seems therefore that there is a serious risk that at the next United Nations General Assembly there may appear a split in the NATO ranks on the Tunisian and Moroccan problems. However, this may be avoided if beforehand there have been confidential frank discussions within NATO. Thus a development which might prove harmful to the NATO cause could be avoided. There is no reason for me to hide the fact that a considerable public opinion in my country feels that NATO to some extent has turned into a 'colonial power-bloc.'

Other political topics which might usefully be discussed in the near future are the situation in Eastern Germany, the satellite countries and Yugoslavia. Reports on the conditions in these countries have already been made by the Council Deputies, but we feel that they should now be brought up-to-date — a process which should be established as continuous."

(v) On the general question of committee structure, the Norwegian representative takes issue with the Council's decision that the approach to the committee structure problem should be completely "empirical", arguing that there is a necessity for a general framework for the committees.

2. We should report to you that at the conclusion of today's meeting the Danish representative drew our attention privately to the fact that in the course of his recent visit to Copenhagen, the Danish Foreign Minister and Mr. Lange of Norway, who was also present, had agreed on the desirability of using the Council without further delay as a forum for consultation on the central questions of Germany and current Soviet tactics. So strong was their feeling on this subject, that, according to the Danish representative, his Foreign Minister and Mr. Lange are thinking very seriously of proposing a ministerial meeting of the Council, and we understand that a letter to this effect is going forward to you on this subject, directly from the Danish Foreign Minister. Steensen-Leth<sup>23</sup> has not yet raised this matter in the Council but he intends to discuss this suggestion informally with Ismay in the next day or two, and is clearly hoping for some support on our side. In indicating that he would endorse the Norwegian viewpoint on the need for political consultation, and particularly on Germany, Steensen-Leth made it abundantly clear however that he feels that Skaug's references to the Tunisian situation are ill-advised.

3. As you well know, we ourselves have continuously stressed the importance of the Council as a forum for political consultation, and I think therefore that we should give general support to the main argument of the Norwegian representative's paper. We should be grateful for guidance on the points which Skaug has raised and would be glad to be kept informed of any exchanges between Ottawa and Copenhagen on the subject of a possible ministerial meeting.

INFORMAL COUNCIL MEETING, JUNE 26: POLITICAL DISCUSSIONS

There was a long and on the whole somewhat unsatisfactory discussion this morning on the basis of letter from Norwegian representative on the exchange of political views in the Council (my telegram No. 229 of June 25th). While opinions were very diversified as to the procedure to be followed concerning these discussions there was general agreement that the Council should now address itself to political questions as well as to the various problems arising out of the implementation of Article II.

2. As regards Tunisia which had been mentioned in the Norwegian representative's letter as a subject which might be discussed in the proposed Political Committee, it was argued by the Greek representative who received general support that the problem could only be dealt with by the Council on French initiative. It was felt that there should be no attempt to force a discussion of this subject against the wishes of the French Government.

3. There was unanimous agreement with the proposal made by the Norwegian representative that there should be an early exchange of views on Germany. The United Kingdom representative with the concurrence of his United States and French colleagues said that their respective governments had already been advised that there was a very reasonable interest in this problem within the Council and that they were prepared, providing the question of timing could be solved, to inform their colleagues as to the proposed tripartite draft reply to the latest Soviet communications on Germany and to receive their views at a meeting of the Council which might be convened on Saturday or possibly Sunday morning. United Kingdom representative made the point however that three governments still had particular responsibilities in Germany and that meeting would not be for policy consultation but essentially to keep the Council informed of the discussions and the decisions reached in London.

4. As regards Article II we pointed out that while in our view it would be useful to follow through the preliminary work which had been undertaken by the Atlantic Community Committee, a start had already been made in setting up the NATO Information Policy Working Group and that some Article II matters like manpower problems were more related to the work of an economic rather than political agency. We emphasized and in this we had the support of the United Kingdom representative that consideration of Article II problems should permeate the work of the various Council agencies as a whole and that they were not of a kind which could easily be isolated and assigned to some specific body within the organization.

5. The great difficulty as regards procedure stemmed from the concern of some Council members that in setting up a permanent political committee, the Council would give up its initiative of drawing up the agenda of the problems that should be discussed. Various proposals, by Ismay to set up a working group, to isolate problems to which Council might apply itself, or by Draper to have political advisers in each delegation undertake preliminary work on items which might be assigned to them by Council, were discussed at length but no decision was made.

6. We suggested that procedure which had been evolved in Council Deputies for political discussions might be reviewed and that there was no need for an elaborate or complicated machinery. It was however impossible to reach a decision beyond that of having an exchange of views on Germany. I have a feeling however that though Council itself is the proper forum for political consultation, it will soon become evident that some preparatory work will have to be done by political officers within delegations in cooperation with Secretariat. Council will likely determine which issues should be brought up for discussion and then appoint ad hoc working parties to gather information and to present points for Council deliberation. United Kingdom, United States, Belgian, Portuguese, and Netherlands representatives appear to be in favour of some such arrangement.

7. In connection with proposed discussion on Germany are there any special observations you would like us to make on the assumption that draft reply is communicated to Council by tripartite representatives in advance of its publication.

POLITICAL CONSULTATION

Reference: Your telegram No. 229 of June 25.

We welcome the Norwegian initiative in bringing before the Council the topic of political discussions, which are fundamental to our concept of NATO. This message will deal only with the general topic, leaving for another message the particular point of the Danish proposal that a ministerial meeting be held.

2. Let me say at the outset that I agree that we should give general support to the main argument in the Norwegian representative's paper and, in particular, we should support the suggestion that the German issue be discussed by the Council.

3. We are not however convinced that the establishment of a political committee is necessary or even desirable in achieving this aim. The Council itself would be the appropriate NATO forum for such discussions. The present difficulty in bringing political matters before the Council is not in our view caused by inadequate procedures. The real difficulty of course is what appears to be the increasing reluctance of the three great powers to hold such discussions in the North Atlantic Council. We could, however, express our understanding of the difficulties which this whole problem of consultation raises for the major powers. Theirs is the primary responsibility. They frequently have to take decisions with time limits attached. It is quite understandable that, after going through the sometimes arduous process of securing agreement among themselves, they shrink from repeating the proceeding in the North Atlantic Council. We also appreciate that in the midst of delicate negotiations like those going on at the present time on the nature of the reply to the Soviet note on Germany, they do not wish to expose any differences of opinion which might exist among themselves in the wider NATO forum.

4. We feel that our emphasis therefore should be placed not so much on the North Atlantic Council being given fuller information by the major powers as on the advantages to the United Kingdom, United States and France of consultation with the other NATO powers. These advantages seem to us to be of at least two kinds. In the first place, if other NATO members are able to express their views freely in informal sessions of the Council on these political questions and to put forward the special problems involved for them in tripartite decisions which affect NATO as a whole, it should put them in a stronger position to face their own parliaments when these problems are under discussion. As the Norwegian representative has stated in his communication to the Council, it would make a favourable impression in Norway if his Government was able to state publicly that NATO members had been consulted about the contents of the reply to the Soviet note before it was finalized and delivered. The same general principle applies in other important political issues affecting the whole alliance. It is important in our view that the major NATO allies should understand that it is in their own long term interests to encourage such consultation which may assist their fellow members in the alliance to carry their own public opinion with them.

5. Secondly, the major members of the alliance may find that they can derive considerable benefit from consultation of this kind. Positive and constructive proposals should emerge from such a discussion. Political wisdom is after all not exclusively vested in the major powers.

6. Practically, we would see this proposal working somewhat in this way. Taking the Norwegian case on Germany as an example, the Norwegian representative would propose, in the Council, that the German issue be discussed at a subsequent meeting. He would bring out arguments such as those outlined in the first part of paragraph 4 of your telegram in order to demonstrate that the problem is one in which NATO is involved and that all members are, therefore, entitled to participate in a discussion. If the Council agrees, and this, in fact, would mean if the powers primarily concerned agree, the topic would appear on the agenda and they (the powers principally concerned) would be expected to make the opening statements.

7. We do not agree, however, that a political working group is necessary. The Norwegians are thinking of an agreed report recording some measure of unanimity. We see the important thing to be a frank discussion of the various points of view, not an agreed report, because it should be realized that it is most unlikely that major differences between the powers principally concerned would be reconciled at a Council meeting. A frank exchange of view would, however, undoubtedly be useful for all members interested. It might be that in some cases the members particularly concerned would seek to obtain Council agreement for a course of action which they propose and this would be most desirable, but this development should not normally be expected but we could foresee that in some cases an agreed course of action or an agreed report would emerge.

8. For these reasons, we do not favour the establishment of a standing political committee, although it might be necessary to form an ad hoc body on which members primarily concerned would be represented to help in the preparation of a summary of the discussions.

9. Rather along this same line, we do not favour the Norwegian suggestion that there be an agreed list of topics which might usefully be discussed in the future. There is much more chance of a valuable and realistic discussion of any problem if each one is introduced independently on the agenda. Where NATO countries, either collectively or individually, are able and willing to make some material contribution to the solution of a given problem or are, as in the case of the German issue, inextricably bound up with its consequences, efforts should be directed at demonstrating that a full discussion of the particular question is desirable, having in mind the points mentioned in paragraphs 4 and 5 above. NATO members cannot expect an issue to be brought to the Council simply to provide an opportunity for responsible members to give information on their particular problems and perhaps to provide for gratuitous expression of opinion or a critical examination of their policies or plans by those who are not bearing the responsibility.

10. As the Danish representative remarked to you, Skaug's blunt reference to Tunisia in the Norwegian note seems ill-advised. The whole issue of future political consultation might be prejudiced if the impression were created that to agree to a discussion on Germany, for which a strong case can be made, would be to open the way to the discussion of every and any issue in disregard of the wishes of the member primarily responsible. This is not to be taken to mean that we think Tunisia should not be discussed in NATO — indeed, there is much to be gained by a frank exchange of views on that difficult issue. But to face the problem of political consultation on a broad front minimizes the chances of making progress — whereas a pragmatic approach, starting with the German issue, offers good chances of success. Discussion of the Tunisian issue could then be considered later — but as an independent question.

11. To sum up: (1) Every effort should be made to encourage political consultation in the Council; (2) we strongly support the proposal that the German issue be discussed by the North Atlantic Council; and (3) we do not favour the establishment of a political committee for the purpose of initiating or preparing political discussion but when occasion warrants we would not object to a political working group being assigned the task of preparing an agreed statement summarising the trend of the discussion in the Council.

DISCUSSION OF GERMANY IN THE COUNCIL

Reference: Your telegram No. 238 of June 26.

It now seems clear from your messages and from information from London and Washington that the three major powers plan to put before the Council the text of the reply to the Soviet note about twenty-four hours before it is to be delivered in Moscow. We are informed by Canada House that they have been told by the Foreign Office that:

"As to timing, it is hoped that any changes necessitated by Dr. Adenauer's consideration of the reply can be incorporated not later than the middle of next week. It is then intended that the text should be shown to a meeting of the North Atlantic Council in Paris approximately 24 hours before it is delivered in Moscow. Council members will not in fact be given an opportunity to alter the text, but in view of opinion expressed recently by the Norwegian representative and others that major political problems should be more fully aired in the Council, the Foreign Ministers considered it tactically wise to arrange this preview on an information basis."

Moreover, for your own information, we have learned that the State Department view with some apprehension what they describe as the tendency of smaller powers to introduce important and delicate matters at too early a stage for discussion in the North Atlantic Council and that they would have preferred that discussion of the German problem in the North Atlantic Council should await ratification of the EDC Treaty and the Contractual Arrangements. They are, however, prepared, in view of the wishes of the smaller countries, to give this advance notice of the text.

2. The discussion in the North Atlantic Council will inevitably be conditioned by the fact that the three major powers are unwilling to alter the text of the note in reply to the Soviet note on Germany as a result of any suggestions or criticisms put forward in the Council. The time element will also be a restrictive feature as there will be no opportunity for representatives to refer points to their Governments within the twenty-four hour time limit. This is hardly the kind of consultation which we had envisaged as appropriate in the North Atlantic Council. We think that in cases of this kind, where decisions involve their North Atlantic partners, the three major powers should discuss policy in general terms at an early stage in the proceedings. It was for this reason that we would have thought a meeting of Ministers in Paris at the time of the signature of the EDC documents valuable, as the German question would have been an important item on its agenda. After such general and preliminary discussion, the three major powers, who have prime responsibility in the German question, would, of course, have had responsibility for drafting replies to the Soviet notes. Moreover, in the last analysis, they would obviously have the determining voice as to what should or should not be included in the replies. Under such a procedure, the smaller powers would, however, have had an opportunity to put forward their views, and for the reasons indicated in my telegram No. 177 of June 27, we consider this would have been valuable to the major powers themselves and in accordance with the spirit of the North Atlantic Treaty. While we are glad that the three powers have agreed to put their reply to the latest Soviet note before the Council even at this late date, we cannot feel that this procedure fully takes the place of consultation. In speaking along these lines and in accordance with the suggestions contained in my telegram under reference, you might add that the Report of the Committee of Five has already made this point with regard to consultation and that at Lisbon the Council agreed that there was a "continuing need for effective consultation at an early stage on current political questions of common concern." The Report of that Committee went on to say: "This is essential in order that national policies may be developed and action taken on the basis of an awareness of the attitudes and interests of all the members of NATO." In taking this line in the Council, you should make it quite clear that we are well aware of the difficult and delicate problems involved in consultation, particularly when decisions already represent a tripartite compromise. We do not wish to be unrealistic in our demands, nor do we wish our statement to have the character of a protest but rather of a constructive approach to the problem.

3. You should say that so far as the substantive issues connected with the German problem are concerned, we do not consider that in the circumstances indicated above, there would be much point in our enlarging, at this time, on our general views on Germany. On the specific question of the tripartite draft reply to the Soviet Government which will be before the Council, it seems to us to represent a skillful compromise and to be as satisfactory a document as could be expected.

DISCUSSION IN COUNCIL OF TRIPARTITE REPLY TO SOVIET NOTE

Reference: Your telegram No. 183 of June 30th.

Addressed to Ottawa No. 290 repeated London No. 478.

1. Delegations were informed yesterday by the secretariat that the Secretary-General had been informed by the representatives of the three occupying powers in Germany that they would be in a position to inform the council of the proposed reply to the Soviet note with regard to Germany at today's regular meeting of the council. The text of the tripartite reply was circulated to the council as the first item of business. While I realize that you have been kept very fully informed of the progress of the discussions between the tripartite governments and more recently with the German Government, it may be useful to transmit to you the final text of the note which, according to Alphand, will be presented to the Soviet Government tomorrow and will be made public on July 11th. You will appreciate that until its publication the note is a secret document.

2. When the text of the note had been circulated on behalf of the tripartite governments, the Netherlands representative asked whether the note was in final form, or whether it was intended that there should be some discussion in the council of the substance of the note. In reply Alphand made it quite clear that the note was in final form, and that no changes in the text could be accepted. In the light of this information, the Netherlands representative made a strong statement criticizing the tripartite governments for the way in which this whole matter had been handled, and for their failure to consult more fully and at an early stage with the NATO governments all of which had a vital interest in the German question and possible Soviet reactions. Similar statements were made by each of the NATO representatives present, with the exception of the representatives of France, the United States and the United Kingdom. Our own statement was based largely on your telegram under reference and on the background made available in your earlier telegram No. 171<sup>24</sup> of June 27th on the general subject of political consultation, with particular emphasis being made on the points in paragraph 2 of your telegram No. 183.

3. The striking element in this series of statements was the degree of unanimity which existed among the "non-occupying" NATO governments on the fact that this opportunity for consultation on the central political question of the time had been badly bungled by the three powers principally concerned.

4. In defence of the policy which the tripartite governments have pursued in this matter, Alphand, Draper and Roll<sup>25</sup> each made brief statements. Speaking for the French Government, Alphand stated that his government would like to see the fullest possible use of the council for the discussion and consideration of all questions of common political concern. The German question, however, presented special difficulties. From the legal point of view the tripartite powers and the Soviet Union had a special status in Germany which could not be abandoned until the transition had been made effective as between the occupation statute and the new contractual arrangements. Secondly, there was the practical difficulty that the preparation of this reply to the earlier Soviet note had taken a lengthy period to complete, and that it had not been possible to arrange in time for consultation on the wider basis. Draper echoed these views although indicating that the United States Government saw no reason why there should not be a general exchange of views on the policy problems involved even before the change in the legal status of Germany came about. He did however make a clear distinction between exchanges of views on broad lines of policy, which was a legitimate responsibility of the council (and?) the responsibility for the actual drafting of the notes and for determining what should and should not be included in them. (We had ourselves made a similar distinction in our own statement.) Draper also made the point that at any time individual NATO governments had been free to express their views to the tripartite governments on the basis of the information available to them. He also pointed out that at the time of signing the EDC arrangements the United States had favoured a ministerial meeting in the course of which the German question would have been discussed at an early stage. Roll, for the United Kingdom, stated that his government was determined to see that the council became an effective and major instrument for consultation on political questions of common concern, but he echoed the juridical and practical arguments made by Alphand.

5. In summing up, Ismay said that non-occupying NATO powers had been unanimous in their views and he admitted that he himself had felt concerned during these past weeks as to how the German question could come before council. Was it not up to any of the governments represented to (group corrupt) it at any time? The Netherlands representative, supported by his Norwegian colleague, pointed out that they had deliberately not raised this question earlier on the grounds that the initiative for raising it should be left to the tripartite governments. Van Starckenborgh<sup>26</sup> expressed the view that there were other outstanding questions such as the command structure in the Mediterranean and the Middle East which were over-ripe for discussion.

6. After further discussion it was agreed that when the reply to the Soviet note had been presented and when Soviet reactions became rather clearer, it would be entirely appropriate for the council, preferably at informal meeting, to exchange views on the German question as a whole.

7. It is to be hoped that the general expression of view in the council reported in the foregoing paragraphs will have a salutary effect in bringing forcibly to the attention of the tripartite governments the importance which we all attach [to] political consultation within the NATO framework, and particularly on the crucial question of Germany, and Soviet intentions.

POLITICAL DISCUSSION IN THE NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL

Reference: Our despatch No. 1658 of the 23rd of July.†

In paragraph 7 of Mr. Wrong's previous despatch, he reported that on the 23rd of July he raised the issue of political consultation in the North Atlantic Council with Mr. George Perkins, Assistant Secretary for European Affairs in the State Department. He also stated that a further discussion of this subject would take place later between Mr. LePan of this office and Mr. Parsons, Acting Director of the Bureau of European Regional Affairs in the State Department. This further discussion was held yesterday. A memorandum of the conversation is attached.

Washington, July 30, 1952

On Tuesday, the 29th of July, I called on Mr. Parsons, Acting Director of the Bureau of European Regional Affairs in the State Department, to discuss political consultation within the North Atlantic Council. At Mr. Parsons' invitation, I began by outlining the Canadian position on this question as set forth in telegrams 177 of the 27th of June and 183 of the 30th of June from Ottawa to the Canadian Permanent Representative to the North Atlantic Council. Repeating some of the points which Mr. Heeney had no doubt made in his statement to the Council on the 9th of July, I explained why the Canadian authorities had not been satisfied by the procedure followed by the Three Powers before despatching their latest note to the Soviet Union on Germany; and I emphasized that, in cases of this kind where the decisions of the Three Powers involved their North Atlantic partners, the Canadian Government believed that they should discuss policy in general terms at an early stage. I then went on to detail the Canadian reactions to the proposals advanced by the Norwegian Representative in the Council for improving methods of political consultation.

2. Mr. Parsons confirmed that the widespread dissatisfaction that had been expressed in the Council at its meeting on the 9th of July had provided a salutary jolt for the authorities in Washington. He said that Mr. Acheson had been very concerned by the reports he had received of the meeting, since he realized that, unless something were done to remove the reasons for dissatisfaction, the strength and cohesion of the whole North Atlantic alliance might be gradually sapped. The Secretary of State had given instructions that all aspects of this question should be studied as a matter of urgency with a view to laying recommendations before him for improvement.

3. Mr. Parsons said that those who had been working on this problem in the State Department had decided at an early stage that it would be wise to divide the question into two parts. Since a new Soviet note on Germany might arrive any day, it had been considered expedient to flake off the issue of what procedure should be followed in drafting a reply and to give separate and more rapid attention to that immediate issue. Mr. Parsons disclosed that a paper containing recommendations on this limited point had now been prepared in the State Department and would probably receive final approval today. For the most part, the paper accepted wholeheartedly the proposals which Mr. Parsons attributed to Mr. Heeney. On the receipt of a new Soviet note, the Three Powers would at once place before the Council accurate translations in English and French. They would then invite discussion in the Council on how the note should be answered, allowing enough time for Representatives to obtain the views of their own Governments. The Three Powers would then consult among themselves and also with Chancellor Adenauer and Mayor Reuter and, bearing in mind the views expressed in the Council, would prepare a draft. This draft would be shown to the Council before being despatched. Mr. Parsons said that as soon as these recommendations had been approved, they would be transmitted to the United States missions in North Atlantic capitals for presentation to other Governments. There was only one point, he thought, at which they varied in any way from the suggestions which he understood to have been made by Mr. Heeney. It was just conceivable that an occasion might arise when a Soviet communication to the Three Powers on Germany would require, and be capable of, an immediate reply. In such an unlikely event, the United States would not like the hands of the Three Powers to be tied by a prior obligation to consult with the Council. The recommendations, therefore, contained an escape clause which the Three Powers could take advantage of if, by any chance, it proved necessary and possible at any time in the future for them to return an immediate answer to a Soviet note on Germany.

4. Turning to the wider problem of how to increase political discussion within the Council, Mr. Parsons said the State Department agreed with the Canadian Government in regarding this process as fundamental to the North Atlantic alliance. He adduced a number of reasons for this conviction. None of them will be new to you; but it is perhaps not entirely without interest that he thought it worthwhile to restate them. The North Atlantic alliance, he said, should be more than a military pact; and, if it were to develop into a community, it was clearly essential that there should be discussion in the Council of political issues. This had become all the more necessary now that the European Defence Community was on the verge of becoming a reality. If the E.D.C. were to be held firmly within the North Atlantic Community, concurrent efforts must be made to bring all the countries in the North Atlantic alliance more closely together. Finally, it was possible, he suggested, that in an emergency the United States might have to assume more overt and decisive leadership of the North Atlantic powers. It would be easier for the United States to assume such a position in a moment of crisis if confidence had previously been built up throughout the alliance as a result of political consultation in the Council.

5. As always, Mr. Parsons said, the problem was how this desirable objective was to be achieved; and he enquired whether we had any further precise suggestions. On the basis of paragraph 6 of telegram No. 177 of the 27th of June to our Permanent Representative to the Council, I indicated that in many cases we thought the proper course would be for one of the smaller powers to make a case in the Council that a particular problem was one in which NATO was involved and that therefore, there should be discussion of it in the Council. Mr. Parsons commented that such a mode of initiating discussion would in some cases, no doubt, be effective and satisfactory. He was inclined to doubt, however, whether it would serve adequately as the normal way to arrange political discussion in the Council, since one of its effects might be to make it appear that the larger powers were being pushed reluctantly into political discussion or were even being put in the dock before the Council. To this I replied that I assumed it would be quite satisfactory from our point of view if the United States or the United Kingdom or France were to take the initiative in suggesting political topics for discussion in the Council. Mr. Parsons replied that probably that method also would be appropriate in some cases. His air of perplexity, however, suggested that he was not entirely confident that either his own Government or the British or the French Government would, in practice, very often take initiative in suggesting topics for discussion unless they were subject to some mild spur — and, yet, he was anxious that the responsibility should not entirely rest with the smaller powers for pricking them into action. Speaking entirely personally, he said that he had been revolving two other alternatives. He wondered whether the responsibility for arranging political discussion in the Council might not be lodged primarily with the International Secretariat. This would give Lord Ismay and Signor Fenoalteo important work to do and might be expected gradually to increase the authority of the Secretariat. Another possibility might be that the Secretariat could be assisted in this function by a small rotating committee of not more than two or three members, on which there would always be one representative of the three major powers and at least one representative of the smaller powers. The Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs might perhaps be the Permanent Chairman. In this connection, Mr. Parsons reported that the United States Government had now agreed to make available to the International Secretariat Mr. Hugh Cumming, who is to act as the principal assistant to Signor Fenoalteo. Mr. Cumming is a foreign service officer of long experience, whose last appointment has been as counsellor at the United States Embassy in Moscow. He is expected to take up his post in the International Secretariat in about six weeks' time.

6. Notwithstanding these procedural suggestions (which seem to me at least worthy of consideration), Mr. Parsons was on the whole disposed to agree that the present difficulty in bringing political matters before the Council is not caused by inadequate procedures. On the other hand, he gave the impression that the institution of some continuing procedure for bringing political matters before the Council might be beneficial because of the mild compulsion to which it would subject the three major powers. However, he said that the State Department could find no merit in the Norwegian suggestion for a Political Committee or a Political Working Group. Apart from other disadvantages, this suggestion would have the effect of draining power and prestige from the Permanent Representatives; and one of the present objectives of United States policy was to add to, rather than to decrease, the Council's authority. He said that the State Department had been rather disappointed with the recent evolution of the Council. Insofar as it was now concerned with matters of minor importance and was not discussing major political issues; it was failing to operate as the United States Government had hoped.

7. Mr. Parsons also was in complete agreement with our view that it would be inadvisable to try to agree in advance on a settled docket of political topics which the Council should discuss. Topics for consideration by the Council should be carefully selected, he thought; and this meant that a decision should be made on each possible topic separately.

8. A paper on the general question of how to promote political discussion in the Council is now being prepared in the State Department. But it is not so far advanced as the paper on the procedures to be followed in answering a new Soviet note on Germany. Mr. Parsons indicated that it might be another two or three weeks before the general paper would be ready for submission to the Secretary of State. If there are any further comments or suggestions which the Canadian authorities might like to make, Mr. Parsons said that the State Department would be very glad to receive them.

POLITICAL CONSULTATION IN THE NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL

You will recall the discussion on political consultation which took place in the North Atlantic Council in Paris on July 9th, when the reply which the Governments of the three Occupying Powers proposed to send in answer to the Soviet Government's Note of May 24th was circulated to the Council.

2. Sir Stephen Holmes, of the Commonwealth Relations Office, has subsequently mentioned to me the concern which he said had been felt in the Foreign Office at the support which we gave to the general criticisms of the three Occupying Powers made by the other N.A.T. representatives in the course of the July 9th meeting. Officials of the Foreign Office were somewhat surprised that we should press for fuller consultation on a 14-Power basis on a subject on which, as you will have noted from our telegrams, the Foreign Office felt they had been pretty forthcoming and co-operative. There was also the general feeling reflected in the statements of the tripartite representatives in Paris on this occasion that the Occupying Powers have a special statutory responsibility for Germany, a responsibility which they could not readily share with all N.A.T. governments.

3. I thought it worth while to draw Holmes' attention to the precise statement which was made by our representative in Paris and which had been carefully based upon the views expressed particularly in your telegram to Paris No. 1311 of June 30th,<sup>27</sup> pointing out that our primary concern had been to emphasize that a general and preliminary discussion in the Council at an earlier stage would have been useful to all N.A.T. governments, including the three Powers principally concerned, and that in the light of such a general and preliminary discussion the three Powers would then exercise their special responsibilities in preparing the reply to the Soviet Note. I am enclosing, for your information, a copy of my letter of July 29th to Holmes, with which I attached the text of the remarks made by our representative in the Council on July 9th.†

4. I think that the Canadian statement is a reasonable one, and was no doubt necessary on that occasion. At the same time, you will wish to bear in mind the fact that U.K. officials have gone out of their way to provide us with full information on the progress of the German negotiations, as well as in other fields, and that they feel that round-table discussions on a 14-Power basis may not necessarily be the most effective method of consultation on sensitive and current topics. The process of developing political consultation within NATO will take some time, and while I think the aim of full consultation should be supported, you will wish to take into account the reactions in Whitehall to which I have referred.

5. I am sending a copy of this despatch to Mr. Heeney in Paris.

POLITICAL CONSULTATION IN THE NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL

Reference: Despatch No. 2880 of July 31, 1952, from the High Commissioner for Canada, London, England.

The Commonwealth Relations Office reaction to our statement on political consultation in the North Atlantic Council is most interesting. We are somewhat surprised, however, that Sir Stephen Holmes made no mention of the fact that our statement was the most moderate of those made on that occasion and the only one which made practical suggestions as to how we might deal with the problem.

2. I agree with Mr. Robertson that while we must continue to encourage the development of Council as a forum for political consultation, this is necessarily a long range and somewhat limited objective in view of the large membership of the Council, and we must bear in mind very carefully the repercussions in London of any line we may pursue in this connection within the Council. Perhaps when the question arises again we might attempt to impress upon our United Kingdom colleagues here that we are not urging discussion within the Council of problems of common interest because we ourselves feel that we lack information, but because we think that there are clear advantages from the point of view of strengthening the Alliance and incidentally from the U.K. point of view in ensuring that the smaller NATO countries have an adequate understanding of the policies of the major NATO partners, particularly when, on occasion, they are expected to support these policies within their respective parliaments. The more basic the policies to the Alliance the more important it seems to us the need for a full understanding by all concerned of their implications, background and objectives.

3. The unanimous and very vigorous reaction of the smaller partners, when the Tripartite reply to the Soviet Note was discussed in Council, should have given Whitehall some indication of how strongly they feel on the question of consultation and of the role that such consultations can play in strengthening the Organization.

4. The point raised by Mr. Robertson in his despatch is, however, a very important one and I am convinced that if the issue comes up again for discussion within the Council there should be the fullest possible consultation and understanding between our own and the U.K. Delegation so that there will not be any misinterpretation in Whitehall as regards any statement that we may make within the Council.

5. I am sending copy of this despatch to the High Commissioner for Canada in London.

POLITICAL CONSULTATION IN THE NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL

You will have seen a copy of telegram No. 259 of August 12 to the Delegation in Paris telling them of the United States Embassy report of a revised State Department attitude on political consultation in NATO. As you will have noticed, the United States thinking has come around pretty much into line with our own and, although only future Soviet notes on Germany were mentioned as topics for discussion, we would hope that with this beginning the practice would be extended to cover other issues.

We are sorry to learn that the Foreign Office seem to feel that when we pressed for fuller consultation in NATO on the replies to the Soviet notes on Germany this was somehow a reflection on their co-operation in keeping us so well informed as the tripartite consultations on the reply proceeded. We have always welcomed and fully appreciated the forthcoming attitude of the Foreign Office in keeping us advised on questions in which they believe we would be interested, but we have never made any secret of our hope that it will be possible to develop in NATO a forum for general consultation and discussion of important issues. Such discussion would be a different matter from receiving information privately from one of the three occupying powers. Moreover, it has never been in our minds that such consultation, even if fully developed, should replace the comprehensive exchange of information with the U.K. which has always proved to be so valuable to us. As we see it, the two practices are complementary rather than mutually exclusive and we would hope that with the explanation you have given Sir Stephen Holmes our view will be understood.

We fully appreciate and share the U.K. feeling that fourteen power discussions on sensitive topics may not always be the most effective method of consultation. It is for this reason that we favour a pragmatic approach to the development of political consultation with NATO. As you will have seen from our telegrams to the Delegation, we do not favour the establishment of a standing political committee which would probably operate on the assumption that all political issues could appropriately be discussed in NATO. It seems preferable that each case should be treated separately as it arises in the hope that realistic decisions on what might usefully be discussed will promote a favourable disposition to accept NATO as a suitable forum for this kind of consultation.

Bliss of the U.S. Embassy has informed us that an attitude is developing in the State Department in favour of consultation in the North Atlantic Council rather along the Canadian pattern. (see our tels. 177 and 183.)<sup>29</sup>

Bliss said that the U.S. are planning to discuss with the U.K. and France a proposal of adopting a definite practice in handling future Soviet notes. They will suggest that a translation of any note be given immediately to NATO Permanent Representatives whose comments would be invited at an early, informal meeting of the Council. This forum is preferred for well-known reasons. The United States would want it recognized that responsibility for drafting any reply would remain with the occupying powers.

Bliss did not say whether the United States proposal would extend to general political discussions or be limited to possible future Soviet notes on Germany.

I have reviewed the recent correspondence on this question with particular reference to the United Kingdom reaction to our intervention in the Council and to Sir Stephen Holmes report described in your despatch No. 2880 of July 31st.

2. I think it would be as well for you to go over this matter with Sir Stephen again to make sure that our position is fully understood. I should like you to draw particularly to his attention the point made in our letter under reference that while the Canadian Government are most grateful for the information which we receive from the United Kingdom Government this cannot serve as a substitute for political consultation in the North Atlantic Council.

3. The Canadian Government attach importance to such consultation and it should not be considered that because we receive information from the United Kingdom Government, the usefulness of which is admitted beyond question, the Canadian Government should be required to take the same position as the United Kingdom on questions of interest to NATO such as Germany which may come before the Council for discussion.

POLITICAL DISCUSSIONS IN THE NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL

Reference: Your EX-1684 of August 12.

1. In a discussion with Parsons, acting director of the Bureau of European Regional Affairs in the State Department, we were given some further information on the attitude developed by the State Department in favor of political discussions in the North Atlantic Council.

2. As regards the handling of future exchanges of notes with the Soviet Government on Germany, Parsons repeated that the State Department was definitely in favor of the Canadian position with one slight reservation. They agreed that the permanent representatives in Paris should be given a translation of any Soviet note when received and be given an early opportunity to discuss it. However, it was necessary to provide for the possibility that the Soviet note might agree to a four-power meeting on Germany, in which case the circumstances might require a tripartite reply going forward without delay, seeking Soviet concurrence to a time and place of meeting. This is the kind of situation which Parsons suggested might have to be dealt with with a minimum delay in order to secure maximum political and psychological advantage for the Western powers and was implied in the reservation referred to in paragraph 3 of the memorandum of July 30 forwarded under cover of our despatch No. 1716 of July 30. Parsons said that the discussions with the United Kingdom and France on the proposal had revealed that the French wish to draw a clear distinction between "consultations" and "discussions". In their judgment, "consultations" implied discussions leading to conclusions and commitments binding the occupying powers. In order to ensure that the responsibilities of the occupying powers should remain unimpaired by the proposed procedure, they would prefer to regard the comments the NATO permanent representatives would be invited to make on the notes as a "discussion" rather than a "consultation". However, the State Department say that they expect to be able to obtain a common tripartite understanding of this aspect of the question of political discussions in the North Atlantic Council shortly.

3. As regards the wider problem of how to increase political discussion within the Council, Parsons said that the State Department were in the process of preparing a paper for the guidance of the United States permanent representative which would encourage such discussion. This guidance paper would consider such questions as:

(a) What questions might profitably be discussed in the NATO forum?

(b) How such discussion should take place?

(c) The role of the NATO Secretariat in originating themes for discussion and in contributing material to facilitate discussion. Parsons said that from the study which had been made of the question it seemed to him that there are practical difficulties in trying to lay down fixed general rules. It would probably be necessary to consider in each case how any specific subjects might most profitably be discussed by the permanent representatives. For instance, in the case of some questions, it might be clearly desirable to try to reach a meeting of minds on an agreed plan of action on the part of several members of NATO. In other cases, it might be sufficient to have a rather informal exchange of views; still in others, a briefing by representatives of the more directly interested parties (as, for instance, on the Middle East defence organization) would suffice. The absence of several senior officials in the State Department on vacation is obviously holding up the finalization of this paper. Parsons indicated, however, that he had discussed the whole problem with Livingston Merchant during the latter's visit in Washington and had found general agreement on how to proceed.

London, August 27, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Addressed Ottawa No. 1844 repeated to Canac Paris as No. 247.

We were informed by Hancock, of the Central Department of the Foreign Office, this afternoon that the Foreign Office at the official level have now agreed with the French and United States that discussion on the latest Soviet note on Germany should be invited at the informal meeting of the NATO Council being held in Paris tomorrow. Hancock explained that the official view still had to be confirmed by Mr. Eden, who is due in London this afternoon. He said that he was not 100 per cent sure that Mr. Eden would agree, but added that in the light of the agreement which had been reached with the State Department and the Quai d'Orsay it would be a source of acute embarrassment to them if Mr. Eden did not agree to discussion.

2. In explaining the United Kingdom attitude, Hancock said that the Foreign Office now in effect agreed with the State Department proposal for dealing with the Soviet reply (as outlined in Washington telegram 2087 of August 19, paragraph (2)). He said that up to the time of receiving the Soviet reply the Foreign Office had been reluctant to agree to the hypothetical proposal originally made by the State Department. It was now, however, doubly easy to agree as the three powers were in general agreement on the purport of the Soviet reply. In general terms, they regarded the reply as a re-hash of earlier positions taken by Moscow, and as not containing any proposals which were especially new.

3. The Foreign Office hoped that the discussion in the NATO Council would elicit the views of the members, and Hancock hoped that at least some of the representatives might be able to give their initial views tomorrow. We pointed out that we doubted whether this would be the case, especially since the Council, so far as we knew, were unaware that the three powers had agreed to discuss the Soviet reply. He agreed that this might be so, and suggested that the views of the various governments might be conveyed to the three powers when the permanent representatives in Paris had had a full opportunity of consulting their governments.

4. Hancock said he expected that after discussion in the Council the three powers would set about drafting a reply to the Soviet note and would consult Adenauer in the course of the drafting. We added that if this was to be the procedure we were sure that the three powers were wise in placing the matter before the Council at an early stage as at least a number of the members of the Council would undoubtedly feel that they had as much interest in being consulted as Adenauer. Although Hancock did not demur on this proposition we gained the impression that he had some reservation about it.

5. Hancock thought that when the three powers had drafted their reply the draft would be put to the Council for final "discussion", but not in order to obtain corporate approval. In this connection he stressed that the three powers could not agree to impair their current responsibilities as occupying powers.

6. We understand that the Foreign Office are not yet in agreement with the State Department on the general question of how political discussions in the Council should be handled.

While we are gratified to learn that agreement appears likely between the United States, United Kingdom and France on a discussion in the Council of the latest Soviet note on Germany, you will appreciate that it is virtually impossible for us to provide considered comments should the discussion be scheduled for the informal meeting tomorrow afternoon. I can only assume therefore that what is intended is an analysis of the note by the representatives of the recipient Governments, on which others can comment if they are prepared to do so, but that an opportunity will be provided at a subsequent meeting for further discussion. It would be helpful in this connection if tomorrow a definite date could be set for the later meeting. I assume that you will send us detailed report of the developments in NATO meeting in this connection.

INFORMAL COUNCIL MEETING AUGUST 28: GERMANY

Reference: Your telegram No. 288 of August 27, 1952.

There was a long and quite interesting discussion on this subject.

2. While most delegates expected that the exchange of views would be related to the latest Soviet note on Germany the representatives of the occupying powers took the view that this note should be examined in relation to the broader problem of Germany. They proceeded to outline the policy of their respective governments concerning the integration of Germany with the Western Community. They generally defined that policy in terms of the Washington tripartite declaration of September 1951. All three representatives and the French with particular insistence emphasized that, while they are prepared to welcome any views of other NATO countries on the German problem as a whole, or as regards the Soviet note, their Governments had to (retain?) the responsibility for drafting the reply; the Council was not a proper forum for deciding upon the terms of that reply.

3. The Netherlands delegate was not prepared for a discussion of the German problem as a whole but he improvised a very able contribution. He recalled that his government had from the outset taken the initiative of suggesting that Germany should be integrated with the West. Indeed, the Netherlands would have Germany taken into the NATO fold. As this last had not proved feasible, The Netherlands Government, after some hesitation, had accepted the EDC formula as the most likely to secure German military cooperation, an essential element to the safety of Europe. While the integration of Germany in fields other than that of defence is progressing, The Netherlands Government is concerned about the relationship between NATO and the development of the European Federation which will provide the framework for German cooperation. While in the military field NATO has been able to make progress, in other fields in the view of The Netherlands Government, little has been accomplished. As a result there is some concern in the Netherlands lest the Atlantic Community should lag behind in these fields and be too flimsy to envelop a progressively stronger and united Europe. The wish therefore of the Netherlands responsible authorities is that the Atlantic Community should develop on a broader front and thus contribute to the solution of controlling Germany. As regards the particular point at issue, Van Starckenborgh said that as long as Germany is divided there is bound to be unrest and difficulties which will affect Holland in view of her close relations with that country. Furthermore, the security of Holland is threatened as long as the Slavs are on the Elbe. For these reasons, The Netherlands Government have followed closely the exchange of notes with the USSR concerning Germany and they hope in the end it may be possible to bring into the EDC a reunified Germany.

4. The Belgian representative made the point that while Belgium is part of the EDC her participation is based upon certain principles as regards the relations between Germany and the Western world. Belgium's concern over the exchange of notes and her desire to be informed stems legitimately from her wish to see that these principles are adhered to. Undoubtedly the Soviet attitude as expressed in these notes affects the German problem and in replying to these notes the occupying powers are also influencing the evolution of Germany. The Belgian Government wishes to be assured that the procedure to be followed and the replies given will not be incompatible with the principles which have determined their acceptance of the EDC arrangement and the schemes for integration in other fields.

5. The Greek representative stressed the need for quick action as regards the implementation of the EDC treaty. He argued that, now that agreement has been reached on the policy of integrating Germany within the EDC, there are clear advantages in proceeding quickly with ratification. In East Germany troops are being raised and equipped and unless action is taken soon to implement the treaty the balance of forces of Germany will not develop to our advantage.

6. I spoke briefly expressing our satisfaction that the three occupying powers had taken the initiative in introducing this important problem of Germany for discussion in the Council. I expressed agreement in particular with the view put forward by the Belgian delegate that although we had no desire to answer anyone else's mail, in these exchanges with the USSR over Germany, principles of general policy were involved and we were all concerned with the outcome as it would affect Germany's future. We hoped that an early opportunity might be given for a more deliberate council discussion of the German problem.

7. It was agreed that this had been a useful preliminary discussion and that the question of Germany should be discussed again at the next informal meeting (September 4). While it might be advisable to send a reply soon to the Soviet note there would be time for another and perhaps fuller discussion on the subject within the council before the reply were settled by the three powers.

8. Action required. We should appreciate receiving before September 4 your views as to any comments that you feel we might usefully make both on the German problem and in particular on the reply to the Soviet note.

POLITICAL CONSULTATION IN THE NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL

Following from Under-Secretary, begins: Thomson, Deputy High Commissioner for the United Kingdom, left with me yesterday copy of CRO telegram Y.331 of August 27, which I am repeating to you in my immediately following telegram.† In the course of conversation, Thomson adhered to the traditional attitude of the United Kingdom on the general subject of political consultation in the North Atlantic Council without giving any indication of a more forthcoming attitude. His main remarks were addressed to the problem of Germany. He raised the familiar objections and said that the United States proposal that such consultation be held should be looked into with great caution as in the Foreign Office they considered it as "dangerous". While Thomson covered a lot of territory during this conversation, the main arguments he raised against consultation on the German problem were that:

(a) the Occupying Powers still had the ultimate responsibility in Germany and they alone should assume the responsibility of the drafting of replies and negotiations with the Soviet Government;

(b) that if the German question were raised for discussion in NATO, this would bring about a change in the relationship with the Soviet Union on German questions; and

(c) that if there were consultations with other NATO powers, their advice would at times have to be rejected and this would cause ill-feeling with the net result that the new procedure could do more harm than good.

2. I told Thomson that I was very familiar with the Foreign Office views on this whole question but that I did not share all their apprehensions. I fully agreed with him that the ultimate responsibility about Germany should remain in the hands of the Occupying Powers and that there was no intention, on our part at least, to have this modified. I added, however, that Germany as a problem was and would continue to be the most important one with which NATO was faced and that Germany as a region was the most exposed of NATO flanks. It was therefore normal that all the NATO partners should be concerned in the matter. I added that there was some strength in his arguments whereby the relationship with the Soviet Union on Germany should not be changed at this time but pointed out that it would be relatively easy to combine political discussions on Germany in the North Atlantic Council with negotiations by the Occupying Powers with the Soviet Union. I disagreed with him on (c) and said that according to my own experience, nothing could be worse and could lead to more acrimony among the smaller NATO partners than to be left completely out of the picture and learn through the press of the answers given by the Occupying Powers to Soviet notes on Germany.

3. I took this opportunity also to point out that the United Kingdom Government must by now be aware of the general policy of building up the North Atlantic Council which the Canadian Government had been consistently pursuing for some time. Within this context, I said that we thought the Council should be used to much greater advantage than it is now in the political field. I added that this was a deliberate policy on our part and one which was not based on the fact that we were lacking information on Germany or other matters because, of the smaller NATO partners, we were probably better informed than any of them since our relations with London and Washington were so intimate. Ends.

POLITICAL DISCUSSION IN THE COUNCIL;
SOVIET NOTE ON GERMANY

Reference: Your telegram No. 414 of August 28.

Apart from expressing Canada's continuing interest in the German problem because of its bearing on the peace of Europe and the world, you need not, in our opinion, do more than say on the general question that Canada would like to see Germany peacefully united and free to join the West in a defensive alliance. You could also say that German integration in Western Europe has Canadian support provided that the price of German participation is not German dominance of Europe and the revival of Nazism. If you think it pertinent you might also point out that Canada doubts that a neutral Germany is a political possibility in the post-war world. We believe that every effort must continue to be made to reach a modus vivendi with the Russians over Germany but that in the meantime it is right to press ahead with the integration of West Germany into Western Europe.

2. It follows from the foregoing that we cannot take up a position of disagreement with the general line of the Western notes. I think, however, that you could properly emphasize Canadian hopes that a meeting will be possible between the Four Powers, that their reply to the recent Soviet note should not be long delayed and that it should, if at all possible, make positive proposals for a conference. You could, for example, introduce for discussion the proposal that the agenda for such a conference be widened to include at least a preliminary consideration of the formation of an all-German Government and the preparation of the peace treaty while maintaining that free elections should be the first item.

3. Western insistence on awaiting the report of a commission of investigation is perhaps wearing rather thin and it might have a good effect on Western public opinion if the Allies were to be somewhat less rigid on this point. It would, moreover, be both more realistic and more plausible to allow for discussion going beyond what is but the first step, though admittedly the most important one, namely, free elections. You should, however, support the Allied insistence on the priority to be given to the question of free elections on the agenda. As to the Russian proposal that representatives of the two German Governments be associated with the discussions, we think it might be useful if there could be some discussion of the feasibility of the two German Governments being invited to attend as expert witnesses rather than as participants in the negotiations. This would follow the precedent of their attendance at the General Assembly when the question of the United Nations election commission was under discussion.

4. Finally you could stress once again Canada's agreement with the Western insistence on an all-German Government's freedom of choice to enter defensive alliances.

Paris, September 4, 1952

INFORMAL COUNCIL MEETING OF SEPTEMBER 4, 1952: GERMANY

Reference: My telegram No. 414 of August 28th, 1952.

Addressed External No. 436, repeated to London No. 547.

The discussion on Germany (with particular reference to the reply to the last Soviet note) was resumed. The Norwegian representative with the support of his colleagues from Denmark and Iceland made the following points:

(a) Their governments were glad that the initiative had been taken to discuss this problem in the Council; they hoped that these exchanges of views might be a turning point towards more active consultation in the future on matters of common political concern.

(b) While admitting a special position for the occupying powers, their government felt that, in adhering to the protocol to the NATO Treaty, they also had acquired a status in this matter as parties to arrangements for bringing about the integration of Germany and the West; and in recommending the ratification of the protocol, their governments had given an undertaking that all possibilities for a peaceful settlement of the German problem would be explored.

(c) In drafting a reply to the Soviet note, it was particularly important to convince the opposition in Western Germany, and also public opinion in the NATO countries, that the basis for an agreed settlement with the USSR over Germany did not exist, that the possibilities of negotiation had been exhausted, and that failure to reach a negotiated settlement did not rest with the west.

(d) It might be easier to meet opposition in the Western countries generally and particularly in Germany, if in the proposed agenda emphasis were placed on the conditions required for a free election rather than on the detailed set-up of the Commission of Investigation. If discussion were to extend to the freedom of the political parties, newspapers, trade unions, this might placate the opposition parties in West Germany and help to carry them along.

(e) If the opposition in Germany particularly could be convinced that the occupying powers had shown flexibility in their approach and that they had made every effort to solve the problem by negotiation, they might be less disposed to delay ratification of the EDC treaty and the contractual arrangements.

(f) It was still the view of these governments that membership in NATO for Germany was the logical consequence of her recognized status of equality; they realized, however, that for the time being this was not politically feasible.

2. The Netherlands representative expressed the view that it is not realistic to expect that a settlement would be reached with the USSR over Germany, particularly as a reunified Germany might now join the Western alliance as a result of the recent EDC and contractual arrangements. The feeling in the Hague was, nevertheless, that no abrupt answer should be returned and that the possibility of further exchanges should be retained. It was particularly important, in the view of the Netherlands' authorities, to emphasize in the reply that free elections in the whole of Germany were the essential basis for any settlement. The idea that representatives from the two parts of Germany might be associated with the peace treaty discussion was not acceptable. It could easily be shown to the Germans that two delegations or a split delegation to the peace discussion would only weaken the position of Germany and that the insistence of the West on free elections is in the best interests of Germany herself.

3. I spoke along the lines of your message No. 299 of September 3. The advance copy reached me only in the course of the discussion.

4. The Belgian representative suggested that the Western reply to the Soviet note should also endeavour to meet the point that, unlike the Western Powers, the USSR wished to unify Germany first and then leave her free to enter into defence and other arrangements if she wished.

5. The Greek representative referred again to the urgency of ratification and pointed out that the discussions over Germany had to be examined in the light of the wider problem of relations with the USSR generally. He felt that in view of the particular importance of Germany from the Soviet standpoint Soviet reactions had to be anticipated as a result of the integration of Germany with the West. These reactions might not necessarily have effect in Europe.

6. The United States of America, the United Kingdom and the French representatives reported on the initial reactions of their respective authorities. These are already well known to you and do not need elaboration here. They expressed gratification that all representatives seemed to be in agreement with the broad lines of the policy pursued so far and they undertook to report to the authorities concerned the views expressed in the course of the Council discussion.

7. The exchange of views on this subject proved to be the best that the Council have had so far on any major issue. It was also encouraging as regards the prospects of further political discussion in the Council. All are agreed that at this stage and for psychological reasons it is necessary to pursue negotiations with the USSR over Germany and to insist in any reply to the Soviet note upon the basic requirement of free elections throughout Germany. It was also considered by all particularly important that the Soviet tactics to upset the ratification debates should be countered effectively by providing every public proof in Germany that the west was ready to explore every possible prospect of a negotiated settlement but only upon terms compatible with the interest of Germany herself.

POLITICAL DISCUSSIONS IN THE NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL

We find ourselves in agreement with the special procedure contemplated in the State Department for discussion of the Soviet Note, and with the lines of the State Department's thinking on political discussions generally in the Council. We should like, however, to make a few observations on some aspects of this problem.

2. First there is the question of who takes the initiative in suggesting a topic for discussion. It seems to us that, normally, and subject to certain qualifications indicated below, the initiative should be left to the country primarily concerned or to another country who can make a case that the problem is of interest to the Organization as a whole. If it is agreed that it is desirable to discuss such problems in the Council, the reluctance of representatives to suggest subjects for fear of causing embarrassment to certain others may diminish. Furthermore, the government primarily concerned, knowing that a matter may be brought up by others in any case, might prefer to take the initiative. Such a flexible arrangement based of course on the general acceptance of the desirability of political exchanges in the Council should produce results.

3. We do not think that the Secretariat, either on their own or assisted by a small committee, as suggested by Mr. Parsons (para 5 of despatch No. 1716 of July 30 from Washington), should take any direct initiative in regard to these discussions. No doubt the political division within the Secretariat will occasionally reach the conclusion that it would be desirable for a particular issue to be discussed in the Council. In such cases, however, it would be better, we think, for the Secretariat to suggest to the representative of the country primarily concerned (or even to that of some other country which might be interested) that the matter could be usefully discussed within the Council. The Secretariat should undoubtedly take some interest in promoting these discussions but we are not at all sure that they should be encouraged to take it upon themselves to raise these problems independently. This might cause difficulties between the Secretariat and some delegations if the issues were of a delicate nature, and might even weaken the organization.

4. In considering the question of initiative as regards political discussions one should, we think, have in mind the purposes which these discussions would serve. These may vary considerably and perhaps might be classified:

(a) There may be discussions which are merely "informational" in nature. Greece, for instance, reports to the Council on the progress of conversations with Yugoslavia as regards common defence problems. This is of particular interest to Italy and you will recall that Italy took the initiative in suggesting that the Greek delegate might provide such a report. The Greek representative did not object to such a request having been made by the Italians and it seems to us that it would have been quite possible for the Greek representative himself to take the initiative of suggesting that he might keep his colleagues informed of the conversations which have been going on between his country and Yugoslavia. These "discussions" consist in fact merely of a report by a member on some aspects of its policy which may be of interest to some other members, but they are generally in fields which are not of basic importance to the Alliance;

(b) A country may wish to have a particular problem discussed to obtain additional information and guidance concerning the policies of certain others.

The question of Tunisia may be a good example of this type of problem. Many NATO countries may have decisions to make in this regard at the U.N. Assembly and it would obviously be useful to them to have detailed information from the French on the subject. The idea is not necessarily that all NATO countries will develop a common line in the U.N. on this point but it is clear that in fields other than defence the members of the Alliance have an interest in developing their policy along lines that will be as close as possible. The question of Tunisia is, however, a sensitive one to the French and we think that the initiative in this regard should probably be left to the French representative. This, however, might not exclude the possibility that either the Secretariat or some other Delegation might suggest informally to the French that it might be in their own interest to explain fully to their NATO partners their policy concerning Tunisia. In such cases the formal initiative might be left to the country which is primarily concerned with the problem, although the other countries who are interested in it and the Secretariat may do some prodding behind the scene;

(c) Information may also be required on a subject not because all member countries are expected to take any particular line in relation thereto or to make a decision but because the subject is of great importance to them generally. The question of Trieste, of Germany, of the Middle-East defence organization are clearly of this type. Unless the NATO countries directly involved keep the others fully informed in regard to these subjects, the cohesion of the Alliance seems to me to be directly involved. The countries primarily concerned in these matters may not be likely, at least to begin with, to take the initiative of discussing them within the Council. As we indicated above, however, if we are agreed that important questions of common interest should be discussed within the Council and the smaller countries in the early stages show that they wish to have these discussions, that they are not only of interest to themselves and to the Alliance generally but also that they may not be without some advantages from the point of view of the countries concerned, there is no reason to believe that the prospect of having useful discussions within the Council as regards these questions should not improve gradually;

(d) Discussions will also be clearly desirable if a NATO country wishes its partners to support a given policy. The U.K. suggestion for a common line as between the NATO countries concerning the King of Egypt's title and Persian oil provides a good example of a type of subject which can only be dealt with if there is a Council discussion on it. In this case, we suppose there is no need to worry unduly as to who will take the initiative.

5. These examples show clearly, we think, that the need for discussions in the Council will vary with the importance and nature of the subjects and the aims to be achieved.

6. It is not easy to suggest any formal procedure for initiating such discussions. The real problem is often one of determining which subjects are suitable for discussion. No particular difficulties seem to arise as regards the kinds of topics referred to under (a) and (d) above. It is of great importance that there should be discussion as regards (c). The very fact that each member of the alliance has a right to expect the assistance of the others if it is attacked places upon it, we think, the obligation to consult its partners about any policy which may result in a risk of conflict. The more basic the policy the more important it is for the Alliance that there should be full consultation. And as regards these problems, any country which takes the initiative of suggesting a discussion is promoting the common interest.

7. It cannot be denied that there has in the past been reluctance on the part of one or more countries to have discussions of the type referred to in (c) above. This reluctance has generally taken the form of an unwillingness on the part of one or more of the "big three" to open their minds frankly to the smaller powers collectively on issues of major policy. As we have suggested this unwillingness is likely in the long run to oppose the interest of the major powers themselves if only because it lets pass an opportunity to obtain whole-hearted support on the part of lesser powers for policies upon which the big three may have reached agreement. It seems to us possible that this fact may gradually be recognized by the major powers, and the recent shift of attitude on the part of the U.S. is very encouraging. We may hope that the U.K. will gradually alter its position as well. France is perhaps in a different situation. It may be considered that there are considerable advantages from the French point of view in extending the division between greater and lesser powers recognized in the establishment of the Standing Group. The "big three" concept on occasion permits France to persuade the U.S. and U.K. to accept its position on a particular problem and then to have that position accepted by NATO as a whole by virtue of the tripartite agreement. Full and frank discussion among all fourteen NATO members of such problems would reduce France's opportunity to exploit the predominant weight given to a plan upon which the three countries may have reached prior agreement.

8. The problem relating to discussions of the type referred to in (b) is very different. It seems to us that, when one country is primarily concerned and the issue has serious domestic implications for that one country, it should be left free to take the initiative itself in calling for a discussion. Overt pressure on the part of other members in such a case is bound to create difficulties. This does not apply to the same extent in cases where the issue is not so much a matter for one country as a question of a special tripartite position, and in the latter case we see no reason why the smaller powers should not tactfully but firmly stress the advantages of frank discussion. Fortunately, at present, there seems to be no reluctance on the part of the smaller powers to act in this way.

9. It is also a matter of some importance to reach an understanding as to how these discussions will be carried out. We did not particularly like the U.K. Delegation's handling of its report on the Egyptian and Persian situations, nor indeed was it very effective for the U.K. themselves. What started as a proposal for an exchange of views on these subjects ended up with a short and dry statement urging the other NATO countries to support U.K. policy on certain specific points. It was perhaps natural on the part of the U.K. delegation to make these requests but I feel that they might well have been accompanied by a fuller and more complete analysis of developments in these two countries.

10. Already, a procedure concerning these political discussions seems to be emerging. When the case of Germany arose in the Council, in connection with the latest Soviet Note, the representatives of the three occupying powers made a general statement on the policy of their respective countries as regards Germany and they expressed their willingness to report to the authorities concerned any comments which their colleagues wanted to make both on the general problem involved and on the particular difficulties raised by the Soviet Note. The representatives of the smaller countries were given time to consult their Governments and when the discussion was resumed, at a subsequent meeting, it provided, in my opinion, a real opportunity for an interesting and useful exchange of views. This procedure seems to be the right one; otherwise what is referred to now as "political discussion" will be limited to flat, formal and most incomplete statements of the views of a particular country on a given subject on which, under pressure from other members, it felt it had to say something. What is needed really is an exchange of views, a meeting of minds, a pooling of information on the subjects which are considered suitable for discussion.

11. The above suggestions merely supplement those outlined in your telegram under reference and in despatch No. 1716<sup>32</sup> of July 30 for dealing with this problem. We hope very much that the State Department will be able to convince the Foreign Office and the Quai d'Orsay in particular that such a procedure is desirable and that its adoption will be likely to have a favourable effect in particular on the development of the authority and effectiveness of the Council.

12. If you agree with these views you might wish us to discuss them informally with the U.K. and U.S. delegations and also possibly with the Secretariat.

13. I am sending a copy of this despatch to the Office of the High Commissioner for Canada in London.

GENERAL POLITICAL DISCUSSIONS IN THE NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL

Following from the Minister for the Under-Secretary, Begins: I have found Eden quite forthcoming about the value of general political discussions in the North Atlantic Council. He thought last week's discussions on the latest Soviet note had been helpful and did not reflect any of the opposition to such political discussions in the NATO Council which had been voiced by the Foreign Office. At luncheon when the matter came up again I re-emphasized the value of these talks and was supported by Draper and even Hoyer Millar. Eden again agreed and only Pierson-Dixon seemed to demur. I suspect he is one main source of the antagonism to them in London but certainly his Minister did not agree with his point of view yesterday. Ends.

POLITICAL DISCUSSIONS IN THE NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL

Reference: Your letter D-1610 of October 20, 1952.<sup>33</sup>

We have had an opportunity of discussing further with Parsons the present State Department position with respect to political discussions in the North Atlantic Council.

2. The guidance paper referred to in my WA-2087 of August 19 has now been sent for comments to the United States Delegation in Paris as well as to United States missions in NATO countries. The primary object of the paper, which contains only the preliminary views of the State Department was to suggest appropriate methods for promoting foreign policy discussion in the Council. It also set out areas in which the State Department would consider discussion to be unprofitable and perhaps dangerous. While no specific categories of subjects were suggested as unfit for Council consideration, it was considered that certain subjects concerning activities outside the NATO area should be scrutinized most carefully. There is, I think, a real fear in Washington that a broadening of the area of discussion would excite anxieties in, for example, Asian countries which are apt to regard any attention given by NATO to other regions with some suspicion. Political discussion in the Council would help to develop a habit among NATO countries of acting together on problems of major importance; but it should also be recognized that the level of discussion in the 14-nation group would probably have to be adjusted to the lowest common denominator. Incidentally, we understand that the Dutch have expressed some concern that foreign policy discussion in NATO would limit the scope of Foreign Office-Embassy relations.

3. With respect to procedures, the State Department are opposed to the Norwegian suggestion that a political sub-committee should be established. This, they believe, might result in the de facto establishment of another group of "Council Deputies". The State Department are inclined to the opinion that the Assistant Secretary General for Political Affairs of NATO should be responsible for recommending topics for political discussion to the Council (the Secretariat being less likely to put forward irresponsible suggestions). This would not exclude an interested country from suggesting in the Council that the discussion of a certain political subject would be useful, in which event it would be normal for the Council to refer the suggestion to the Secretary General for staff consideration. In the case of subjects suggested to the Assistant Secretary General for consideration (or subjects which the Assistant Secretary General himself originates) it would be customary to sound out delegations and to obtain their views as to whether the subject could profitably be discussed. In this respect the "buffer" role of the international staff is considered to be of some importance. The Assistant Secretary-General would also consider topics from the standpoint of importance and timeliness and from the standpoint of the substantive contribution which delegations might be expected to make. In recommending to the Council subjects for discussion, the views of the more interested delegations would be given special consideration. As a specific document would be likely to stimulate discussions, in some cases an international staff paper might be prepared. A paper prepared by the international staff would have at least one major advantage over a national study — all countries would have less inhibitions during the discussion. On the other hand, the disadvantages of an international staff paper would include a danger of formalizing the discussion, the risk of leaks, the scanty resources of staff and the time factor.

4. On the whole, the reactions from the United States delegation in Paris to the State Department paper have been highly favourable, but owing to the shortage of staff adequate consideration in Paris has not been possible. It is expected that when a more formal United States position has been reached, and after informal discussion with other delegations, it will be presented to the Council for consideration.

POLITICAL DISCUSSIONS IN THE NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL

Reference: Our Letter No. 435, October 20, 1952.†

We have been greatly interested by your thorough analysis of the problem of political discussions in the North Atlantic Council as set forth in your despatch No. 850 of September 10 which has been discussed in the Department, together with the former procedure of the Deputies to which we referred in our telegram of October 20 (D-D(51)92(Final) of April 30, 1951) and the tentative State Department proposals outlined in WA-2542 of October 25, a copy of which has been referred to you. Meanwhile we have also obtained from the United States Embassy here the text of a State Department telegram of September 19 to Paris which sets out more completely the original American proposal, and which we assume to be the guidance paper referred to in paragraph 3 of WA-2087 of October 19.<sup>34</sup> A copy of this State Department telegram is attached for your information.† We should welcome your further comments on this guidance paper and on the possibilities of adapting to present circumstances in the Council the former procedure agreed to in the Deputies.

2. The American proposal strikes us as more flexible than originally appeared from WA-2087, and you may find that it meets some of your objections. It is now evident that there was no intention of precluding national delegations from introducing subjects to the Council whenever they so wish. There is some merit, however, in the suggestion that the Secretariat could maintain a continuing responsibility for putting forward subjects for political discussions in the Council, and there might be definite advantages from the point of view of orderly discussion and the provision of adequate time for Governments to submit their comments if the Secretariat could on occasion undertake the preparation of the initial background material. A further consideration is that the Secretariat should be given important work to do.

3. Our tentative reaction is to doubt the merit of the American suggestion regarding the establishment of a rotating advisory panel from permanent delegations. It would presumably in any case be the duty of the Secretariat to discuss with permanent delegations the timeliness, appropriateness, and so on, of the subjects that it wished to propose for the Council's agenda. Should any delegation want to raise a political question for discussion in the Council there need, in our opinion, be no cut and dried procedure calling for the referral of the proposal to the Secretariat. Nevertheless, it would frequently be useful to do this, since the interval would provide an opportunity for informal consideration of the advisability of the discussion of a specific topic before the decision is made by the Council itself. We agree with you when you say (paragraph 8) that there should not be overt pressure by member countries on any one country to have a particular subject discussed when that country is primarily concerned and the issue has serious domestic implications.

4. Another consideration to bear in mind in assessing the American proposal is the fact that the United States, alone among the Big Three, has been anxious to forward the idea of political discussions in the Council. We note that you yourself have recognized that the shift of attitude on the part of the United States is very encouraging (your paragraph 7). Because of the helpful United States attitude, it might be desirable for us to go some distance in accepting United States views on procedure.

5. The foregoing does not represent our final thinking and we should be glad to have your views when you have had time to consider the enclosed State Department telegram and this letter.

6. You are, of course, in a better position than we are to assess the various procedural aspects of the problem and it might be useful for you to discuss the whole matter informally with the United States and United Kingdom delegations without taking any firm line at this stage.

DESPATCH No. 1527

Paris, November 17, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

POLITICAL DISCUSSIONS IN THE NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL

Reference: Your letter No. 267 of November 4, 1952.

We have considered your letter under reference and the State Department's telegram of September 19 outlining that Department's views on this subject.

2. In our opinion, two main points remain for discussion: (a) the role of the NATO Secretariat in originating subjects for discussion; (b) the procedure to be followed for such discussions. We propose to comment on these two points in this despatch.

3. As regards the first point, the State Department suggest that the Assistant Secretary General for Political Affairs might be given special responsibility for the selection of problems for Council discussion. It is also suggested that he might be assisted by a rotating advisory panel. We fully share your reservations concerning this latter proposal. As to the former, we are inclined to think that it would be preferable not to assign special responsibility in such a delicate and important field to an assistant secretary general. The arrangement should be more flexible, as for the other major fields of activities of the Organization: economic, production, etc.

In some cases, the Secretariat could usefully and properly take the initiative, but delegations should in no way be precluded from suggesting themselves that the Council consider particular problems. A number of delegations would not be prepared to give a Secretariat official anything approaching a right of veto over any proposals they themselves might have for Council discussion in the political field. We agree, however, that the official in question might well be given the task of considering what items might usefully be discussed and, whenever appropriate, of making proposals just as the other assistant secretaries do in their respective fields. This, we think, is as far as we should go for the time being. If the Assistant Secretary-General for Political Affairs is a man of initiative and judgment and, more important perhaps, if member governments are genuinely willing to facilitate political discussion he should have, under such an arrangement, a good deal of influence in developing this aspect of the Council's work.

Another feature of the problem is the relative coolness of certain U.K. and French officials though there have been signs lately of some change of attitude. From their standpoint the suggestion that a NATO official alone or in association with an advisory panel might propose discussion of a particular subject, is unlikely to commend itself even if the tests suggested in paragraph 3 of Section 5 of the State Department's telegram are applied.<sup>35</sup>

4. Concerning point (b), we think that the procedure adopted by the Deputies could be amended easily enough to meet present circumstances, once agreement is reached on a few underlying questions of policy.

First, there is the question whether a preparatory paper is to be drafted by the Secretariat alone or by the Secretariat with the assistance of a working group on which all or a few delegations are represented. In our opinion, this should be left open. In each case, when a discussion is decided upon, the Council might consider how best the discussion should be prepared. It may not always be possible for the Secretariat to provide a suitable basis for discussion. In the case of Tunisia for instance, if France were to agree that a discussion

<sup>35</sup>Les facteurs en cause comprenaient l'importance de la question, son opportunité, la priorité à lui accorder par rapport à d'autres sujets, et l'aptitude des membres à apporter une contribution valable aux discussions. On tiendrait compte des vues des membres les plus directement concernés.

These were importance, timeliness, priority relative to other issues, and members' ability to contribute to the discussion. Due weight would be given to the views of members most directly affected.

would be useful, it would really be up to the French Delegation to prepare on this subject a statement or a paper.

Then, the problem arises whether the discussion should take place at a formal or at an informal meeting of the Council. These informal meetings were not held by the Deputies and in their telegram the State Department seem to suggest that, for security reasons, it might be preferable to have political discussions at such restricted meetings. We feel that, in this matter also, the procedure should be left open. In some cases countries may wish to have a record of the discussion and the item might then be placed on the agenda for a regular meeting of the Council. In such cases, the arrangement suggested in the procedure agreed by the Deputies would be quite suitable. In other cases, when the problem is to be discussed at an informal meeting and no records kept there would be no question of approval of the minutes or of any commitments being made. In this field, only experience can show how such problems can best be handled. Perhaps, in cases where it is desired to develop a joint policy, countries will prefer the more formal procedure. When it is merely a question of informing other countries of the motives underlying a particular policy, the informal approach may be quite adequate.

5. We propose to discuss these two points informally with officials of the United Kingdom and of the United States Delegations. We shall not fail to report on the outcome of our conversations.

Paris, November 19, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

POLITICAL DISCUSSIONS IN THE NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL

Reference: Our despatch No. 1527 of November 17.

As you suggested in your letter No. 267 of November 4, 1952, we have discussed informally with the United States and United Kingdom Delegations the two points mentioned in our despatch under reference.

2. Insofar as we have been able to gather in our preliminary discussion, the officials concerned in the two Delegations agreed with our views as regards the procedure adopted by the Deputies. In some cases, where it is desirable to have a subject discussed at a formal meeting of the Council and a record of the discussion might be useful, they felt that some elements of the London procedure might be adapted to meet present circumstances. On the whole, however, they were inclined to consider that there was no need to submit such an arrangement to the Council for formal approval: it might be sufficient for the Chairman merely to raise the points when it was agreed to have a discussion on a particular subject, whether the matter would be dealt with at a formal or at an informal meeting of the Council, whether a preparatory paper was required and who should draft it. In fact, the United Kingdom official said that the Foreign Office had never liked very much the procedure adopted by the Deputies and that it was unlikely that they would agree to anything which was so rigid and formal.

3. There is some difference of views between the two Delegations concerning the role which the Secretariat might play in suggesting subjects for discussion. The United Kingdom official favours a very flexible scheme more or less as we suggest in our despatch under reference: NATO countries should not consider that discussions in the Council can be an alternative or a substitute to bilateral conversations; in some cases, particularly when agreement had been reached between Standing Group countries, discussions in the Council which tended to suggest basic revisions might involve regrettable delays and difficulties.

The United States official with whom we discussed this particular aspect of the problem, Mr. G. Burke Elbrick, pointed out that under the procedure outlined in the State Department message of September 19, the Standing Group countries need not fear embarrassment as Fenoaltea would not recommend a Council discussion on a given subject before consultation with the country concerned as to the desirability of such a discussion. Similarly, the smaller NATO countries need not be unduly worried as to Fenoaltea's right of veto as in any case, in due course, he has to report to Council where these countries can object to his recommendations and secure majority support for their views.

In our opinion, Elbrick minimizes the difficulties involved on both sides: in the course of the discussion, he agreed, however, that it might be advisable, in making the proposal to the Council, to present the new task to be assigned to Fenoaltea as being in line with that of other assistant secretaries general in their respective fields and with as little emphasis as possible on its procedural or formal aspects. We made the point that this approach was likely to commend itself more particularly to the United Kingdom authorities.

4. We are convinced that the non-Standing Group countries will dislike any arrangement which will even appear to restrict their right to propose a Council discussion on any political topic and that a proposal along the lines suggested by the State Department will have an unfortunate effect on the prospects of developing political consultation within the Council.

5. Elbrick made two remarks which may be of particular interest:

(a) He said that the subject of political discussions in the Council might be raised at the forthcoming Ministerial Meeting. We replied that we had not envisaged a discussion on this broad subject and that we had no indication as to your views on the matter.

(b) He enquired whether we had considered suggesting ourselves to the Council the general procedure for political consultation which the U.S. authorities have discussed with us: in view of our interest in cooperation under Article 2, and our general position in NATO, an approach by Canada might be well received. We answered that in view of our special arrangements with the United Kingdom as regards the exchange of political information, it might be difficult for us to take the initiative in this matter without implying that we were not altogether satisfied with the present system for consultation with the United Kingdom. Elbrick added that perhaps the United States and Canada might both approach the United Kingdom and reach agreement as to how the proposal under reference might be submitted to the Council.

6. As you will note, the United Kingdom and the United States Delegations do not quite see eye to eye in this matter. Unless the State Department can be persuaded to soften somewhat their proposals, not only are they unlikely to be well received by France and the United Kingdom but they may raise special difficulties for us in relation to the latter country particularly if the United States suggest that we associate with them in sponsoring these proposals.

On June 30, Mr. Wilgress wrote to Mr. Claxton saying that the French Embassy had requested the Canadian Government to divert items (a) to (e) to Indo-China for the use of the French Army there. He pointed out that the Defence Appropriation Act, 1950, would appear to allow this and that Mr. Pearson agreed that we could not object to the request of the French Government.

During Mr. Claxton's absence, I registered no objection on the part of the Department of National Defence and as a result, arrangements have now been made with the French to load this aboard the S.S. Tomaha, arriving in Montreal on July 28th.

On his return to Ottawa, Mr. Claxton on July 15, wrote to Mr. Wilgress expressing concern at the prospect of the French diverting Mutual Aid to Indo-China and thought that this should be brought before Cabinet.

Now the French Government have made a further request to External to have items (f) to (h) also diverted to Indo-China and have stated that the S.S. Tomaha destined for Indo-China would, if authorization were granted, carry this equipment also to Indo-China.

In respect to the 25 pounders, I have this morning spoken to Mr. Claxton, who still feels that the Canadian public is not ready for this kind of thing and he would like to have the issue raised with his colleagues.

The problem is, of course, one of timing, in that the French are going ahead with arrangements to bring this ship here and it would perhaps be regrettable if she were to go away empty and the French be told a couple of days later that the Canadian Government had agreed to this diversion.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Drury:

This will confirm my verbal message of last evening regarding your letter of yesterday with reference to the proposal of the French government that certain of the military equipment allocated to France as part of the mutual aid programme should be diverted to Indo-China.

The Prime Minister expressed grave doubt as to whether such a diversion would be within the scope of the present law and left no doubt that, in his opinion, it was beyond the scope of government policy at the present time. He pointed out that Canada had been among those countries which had insisted that the scope of the North Atlantic Treaty area should not include North Africa but be confined to metropolitan France. He added that we had taken the view consistently that our mutual aid was to strengthen the North Atlantic forces in Europe and that we had been very careful to indicate at all times that we accepted no responsibility for the defence of British colonies and dependencies and that he felt the public would not understand anything which might be construed as accepting responsibilities in relation to the French Empire which we would not accept in relation to the British Empire.

I pointed out that my understanding was this was a mere substitution of materiel to avoid shipping one lot of supplies to France to replace another lot which would be taken from France for Indo-China, and that, in that sense, it might be regarded in fact, if not in form, as a strengthening of the North Atlantic forces in Europe.

The Prime Minister replied that the only modification he would be prepared to consider would be the sale of the equipment under discussion to the French, so that materiel of an equivalent value might be made available in mutual aid at a later date, which could be allocated to France, if the French could get a recommendation from the Standing Group.

I am sending a copy of this letter to the Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs and I presume you will discuss with Mr. Reid the question of communicating the Prime Minister's views to the French authorities.

Yours sincerely,

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, July 28, 1952

Dear Mr. Drury:

I wish to refer to my letter of July 24th regarding the proposal of the French government that certain of the military equipment allocated to France as part of the mutual aid programme should be diverted to Indo-China.

On Saturday, July 26th, I delivered to the Prime Minister a letter from the French Ambassador,<sup>36</sup> a copy of which is enclosed.† After careful consideration of the further proposal put forward by Mr. Guérin, Mr. St. Laurent authorized me to advise the French Ambassador that he would be agreeable to having the supplies in question loaded for Indo-China on the Tomaha, when the ship arrives in Montreal, if the French government would undertake either to make a replacement in kind to the French N.A.T.O. forces in Europe which was acceptable to the Standing Group of N.A.T.O. as a satisfactory equivalent, or, alternatively, would undertake to make actual payment of the actual value — conditions of payment to be determined at a later date.

The Prime Minister asked me if possible to secure Mr. Claxton's concurrence and that I was able to do by telephone late Saturday evening. I then saw Mr. de Laboulaye<sup>37</sup> of the French Embassy and communicated the Prime Minister's proposal to him for his Ambassador. Mr. de Laboulaye informed me yesterday morning that he had sent an immediate message to Paris and that he hoped for a reply this morning. I will keep you advised.

I am also sending a copy of this letter to the Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Yours sincerely,

PROPOSED DIVERSION OF MUTUAL AID TO INDO-CHINA

I understand that the question of diversion of mutual aid to Indo-China is going to be raised at Cabinet tomorrow.

2. You will remember that this question was discussed by Cabinet at its meeting of July 31, and it was decided that Cabinet would be prepared to authorize the diversion of the military equipment recently allocated to France under the Canadian Mutual Aid offer if the French Government would undertake either to make a replacement in kind to the French NATO forces in Europe which was acceptable to the Standing Group of NATO as a satisfactory equivalent, or, alternatively, would undertake to make actual payment of the actual value, conditions of payment to be determined at a later date.

3. This decision was brought to the attention of the French Government by the French Embassy and, on August 5, Mr. de Laboulaye told us that the French Government would prefer to buy the military equipment rather than to undertake to make a replacement in kind.

4. During your interview with the French Ambassador on this subject, you discussed the possibility of a solution along the lines of a communication from the Standing Group to the Canadian Government, the final sentence of which

François de Laboulaye, Counsellor, Embassy of France.

The following was written on this copy of the document:

P[rime] M[inister]'s views given to R.G. R[obertson] for Mr. Pearson on telephone from St. Joseph d'Alma. 18.VIII.52 J.W. P[ickersgill] was agreed to on a tentative basis by Mr. de Laboulaye and Mr. C. Ritchie and might read as follows:

"The Standing Group has no objection to this diversion because it would have as a consequence a correspondingly beneficial effect on the French forces in SHAPE."

The Canadian authorities would be responsible for taking the initiative of bringing the matter to the Standing Group.

5. Mr. de Laboulaye informed us this morning that this formula was brought to the attention of the French Foreign Ministry by telephone, and although it has not yet been considered by the French Government, it has been found acceptable at the official level. If and when the formula is accepted by Cabinet, the French Embassy will undertake to see that it is brought to the attention of the French Government for approval.

6. The above formula would appear to be a satisfactory solution in the light of the following comments:

(a) You will remember that Mr. Pickersgill reported that the Prime Minister expressed grave doubt as to whether such a diversion would be within the scope of the present Canadian legislation. As you are aware, the Deputy Attorney General of Canada, in his letter of July 29 to the Deputy Minister of National Defence (copy of which is attached herewith)† has expressed the view that such a diversion would be covered under the Defence Appropriation Act, 1950.

(b) Mr. de Laboulaye told us that when France put a bid for this military equipment, it was known to the Standing Group that Metropolitan French forces do not use 25 pr guns and that such equipment allocated to France would be diverted to Indo-China.

(c) The proposal that France now buy the military equipment would seem to me to be impractical. If such a proposal is accepted, it would mean that the equipment would have to be turned over to Crown Assets in order to be sold to the French Government with the result that the Department of National Defence would receive no credit.

MUTUAL AID; DIVERSION OF CERTAIN ITEMS TO INDO-CHINA

9. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of July 31st, 1952, said consideration had been given subsequently, to the possibility of France making a payment for the equipment diverted to Indo-China. It had been concluded, however, that this would not be a practical solution. Sale of the equipment would yield a comparatively small payment and a credit would not be established in favour of the Department of National Defence. In the circumstances, a formula had been suggested whereby the equipment would be transferred as mutual aid and the Standing Group would indicate to the Canadian government in writing that it had no objection to the diversion because it would have a correspondingly beneficial effect on French forces in Europe. The Department of Justice had now given an opinion that such a transfer could properly be made under the Defence Appropriation Act, 1950. This formula, which was acceptable to French officials, would safeguard the government's position under the Act, avoid the establishment of an undesirable precedent and permit use of the Canadian equipment on an active front, where it was urgently needed. He suggested that this formula be approved on the understanding that he would seek the concurrence of the Prime Minister.

10. The Cabinet, after discussion, approved the recommendation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs that certain Canadian military equipment offered to France as mutual aid be diverted to Indo-China on the understanding that a statement be obtained from the Standing Group endorsing the transfer and agreed that, subject to the concurrence of the Prime Minister, to be sought by Mr. Pearson, the formula be adopted as submitted.

MUTUAL AID TO FRANCE; DIVERSION TO INDO-CHINA

As I mentioned to you by telephone this morning, Mr. Pickersgill called, giving the Prime Minister's views about the proposed arrangements for the diversion of French aid.

Opposite paragraph 6(c) of Mr. Wilgress' memorandum to you (prepared in Defence Liaison [1] Division by Paul Beaulieu), the Prime Minister wrote the following comment:

"The fact that the Department of National Defence would receive no credit does not appear to me to be a good reason to change our stand about the exclusion of colonies or dependencies from the scope of NATO commitments."

At the top of the second page of the memorandum,<sup>39</sup> opposite the suggested formula for the Standing Group to use, the Prime Minister wrote:

Of Defence Liaison (1) Division.

"This would involve our assumption of some responsibility for the colonial or dependency burdens of the metropolitan members of NATO, and that is something which we decided originally we would not do. I see no sufficient reason to change our stand in that regard."

Concerning the Prime Minister's general views on this question, Mr. Pickersgill said that Mr. St. Laurent's original agreement to the two alternative proposals — sale or replacement — had been reluctant enough. He thought that the new formula could apply just as readily to a United Kingdom application for diversion of assistance to say, Egypt or any other place as it could to the present French application. In a sense, anything that relieved a NATO member of an extra-NATO responsibility could be regarded as help to SHAPE. However, it was precisely that kind of precedent with regard to off-setting assistance that he wanted to avoid. If the Standing Group could say that France had earmarked and transferred equipment that would be one thing, but to say in general terms that there would be a corresponding beneficial effect was quite another.

The Prime Minister does not apparently regard it as a serious point if, under some sale arrangement, the Department of National Defence does not secure any financial credit. He would be prepared to see the sale on some sort of a bargaining or token basis — not a purely symbolic payment, but a payment about equal to what we might get for the equipment in sale to, say, Israel or another country. He would also be prepared to see plenty of time taken about arranging a basis of payment or to have payment through some sort of off-set in connection with our airfields in France or otherwise.

The Prime Minister said that if his colleagues in the Cabinet were convinced that action ought to be taken along the lines that had been put before him, he was prepared to have himself over-ruled. He wanted it to be known, however, that he was quite unconvinced that it was desirable to take any such action.

MUTUAL AID; DIVERSION OF CERTAIN ITEMS TO INDO-CHINA

9. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussions at the meeting of August 14th, reported that the Prime Minister did not agree with the formula then considered for the diversion of certain mutual aid items from France to Indo-China. Mr. St. Laurent preferred one or other of the two formulae discussed at the meeting of July 31st, under which the equipment would be sold to France or France would provide replacements in Europe satisfactory to the Standing Group. In the circumstances, it was planned to review the question at the meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee on August 26th.

10. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs that the formula for the diversion of certain Canadian mutual aid items from France to Indo-China discussed at the meeting of August 14th, 1952, was to be reviewed by the Cabinet Defence Committee on August 26th.

II. MUTUAL AID; DIVERSION OF ITEMS TO INDO-CHINA

5. The Secretary of State for External Affairs referred to discussion in the Cabinet on August 14th and August 21st, 1952, regarding a request of the French government to divert to Indo-China certain Canadian mutual aid equipment allotted by the Standing Group to France. It appeared necessary to decide whether, to meet the French request, the equipment should be sold to France at some price, or given as mutual aid for diversion to Indo-China under certain conditions. It was understood the Standing Group had already agreed that it would be desirable to use the equipment in Indo-China.

6. The Prime Minister said assurances had been given to Parliament that Canada would not be concerned with the dependencies of European powers as a result of the North Atlantic Treaty. It was therefore important that the equipment should not be given to France for direct and unconditional use in Indo-China.

7. The Minister of National Defence did not favour sale to France, since the amount realized would be small and of little benefit in the replacement of equipment for use by the Canadian forces. The equipment consisted in part of new 25-pounders which would be particularly useful in Indo-China and were not of interest to other NATO members.

8. The Committee, after further discussion, noted the report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and agreed that the French government be informed that Canada was prepared to deliver the equipment as mutual aid to France in accordance with the allocation recommended by the Standing Group some time ago, but that the Canadian government could not give any express approval to its transfer to Indo-China.

MUTUAL AID FOR FRANCE

In accordance with your instructions, Mr. Ritchie asked Mr. de Laboulaye of the French Embassy to come to see him on September 16 and handed to him the text of the attached letter to the French Ambassador dealing with the allocation of Canadian equipment to France for NATO purposes.

2. In answer to a query from Mr. de Laboulaye, Mr. Ritchie explained that the ultimate destination of this equipment was not a matter for the Canadian Government. We were simply allocating the equipment to France for NATO purposes and there our part in the matter ended. Mr. de Laboulaye raised the question of the allocation of the equipment by the Standing Group for employment in Indo-China. Mr. Ritchie said that this was a matter between the French Government and the Standing Group.

3. Mr. de Laboulaye then said that, on the assumption that the Standing Group was willing that the equipment should go to Indo-China (which he added was in fact the case) it might be more convenient that the equipment should be shipped direct from Canada to Indo-China as French ships were calling from time to time in the United States to pick up American equipment for Indo-China. Mr. Ritchie remarked that his instructions would not permit of his being drawn into any further discussions of hypothetical situations. He added that he thought that Mr. de Laboulaye was quite familiar enough with the whole negotiation over Canadian equipment for Indo-China to appreciate the position of the Canadian Government and to see the undesirability of reopening the matter. Mr. de Laboulaye agreed.

EUROPEAN DEFENCE COMMUNITY

Our latest information on developments with regard to the European Defence Community is not altogether reassuring. The meeting last month in Paris of the six Foreign Ministers of France, Germany, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg, designed to hasten agreement on the principles to govern the European Defence Community, revealed important continuing differences of opinion.

2. The line of division lay between France, Germany and Italy, on the one hand, and Belgium and the Netherlands, on the other. The latter two countries rejected the idea of a common budget for the European Defence Community. They insisted on the right of national governments to veto decisions on the Council of Defence Ministers which is to be the supreme executive authority of the Defence Community. While all parties rendered varying degrees of lip service to the idea of an eventual European federation or confederation, the meeting underlined a basic difference of view. The Benelux countries seemed to want little more than a coalition of European Governments presiding over a European Army composed of national contingents. The French, Italians and Germans want a measure of pooling of sovereignty in the defence sphere to lead eventually to more ambitious plans for political fusion.

3. A second difference arose over the relationship between the European Defence Community and NATO. It crystallized over the question of the duration of the European Defence Community Treaty. The Netherlands Government suggested that it should be co-terminous with the North Atlantic Treaty, i.e. for a twenty-year period. The French proposed a fifty-year period for the European Defence Community Treaty.

4. The Netherlands Foreign Minister returned to The Hague with the suspicion that the French regard the North Atlantic Treaty as an ephemeral defence alliance, organized to cope with a particular crisis and that they take no interest in the idea of a North Atlantic Community. Mr. Stikker has told our Ambassador in The Hague that he could not believe his ears when he heard M. Robert Schuman describe in a speech the "caractère occasionel et essentiellement éphémère" of NATO.

5. The Netherlands Ambassador, under instructions from his Government, called on me on January 8 to express Mr. Stikker's concern at this development. We have, of course, always considered that there was nothing incompatible in developments leading towards European confederation and the idea of a North Atlantic Community. Indeed, from our point of view, those two concepts must be intimately related, both politically and militarily. We think that the French Government share this view and hope that Mr. Stikker's concern is ill-founded. In view of Mr. Stikker's interest in the matter, I have today sent him a personal message on this subject, copy of which is attached hereto.<sup>41</sup>

6. Despite the somewhat gloomy prospects, the French Government still are optimistic that they may be able to obtain an agreement on the principles of the European Defence Community before the Lisbon meeting, but it may be at the cost of dropping, at any rate for the immediate future, a good many of their more ambitious plans for the political superstructure of the European Defence Community.

7. One method of compromise, which is at present being explored, is for agreement upon a period of transition, perhaps to last till 1954, during which national control over defence policies and budgets would remain. Only then would a European commission produce European defence estimates and submit them to a Council of Ministers.

8. Even in this attenuated form, the conception of a European Defence Community remains, in our view, of the greatest political importance. It provides the only framework yet suggested by which Germany could be associated with the defence of Western Europe on terms acceptable both to the French and German Governments. Its failure would be a very serious blow to French prestige and morale. Meanwhile, the fall of the French Government has been a further disturbing factor. Although it is unlikely to affect French policy towards the European Defence Community, it may bring further delays in the timetable.

9. The United States, for their part, have in the past taken the view that if agreement could not be reached on the European Defence Community by the date of the Lisbon meeting, they would proceed with plans of their own for the association of Germany with Western defence. The latest messages from Washington, however, indicate an important modification in this attitude. In conversations with Mr. Churchill and Mr. Eden, Mr. Acheson has now made it clear that he sees no alternative to the creation of a European Defence Community.

10. The relationship of the United Kingdom to the European Defence Community is a somewhat uneasy one. Mr. Churchill's resumption of the Prime Ministership gave rise to some unjustified hopes of a fundamental change in United Kingdom policy towards plans for European federation or at least for a United Kingdom contribution to the European Army. These hopes have been dashed by the subsequent attitude of the United Kingdom Government.

11. Insofar as such hopes looked to the participation by the United Kingdom in a European federation, they were founded on a misconception of the realities of the United Kingdom position — realities unlikely to be changed by any change of Government. The United Kingdom could not merge itself in a Western European federation without profoundly modifying not only its ties with the Commonwealth but its relationship with the United States. It is probable that the dislocations that would be involved in any precipitate move towards the federation of the United Kingdom in Western Europe would weaken the free world. Our Ambassador in Washington reports that these facts are appreciated by Mr. Acheson, although there are certain tendencies in Congress towards the more facile assumption that the United Kingdom could be dragooned into a Western European federation.

12. So far as the relationship of the United Kingdom Government towards the European Defence Community is concerned, there is little doubt that the obvious scepticism of the United Kingdom regarding the feasibility of the Pleven Plan<sup>42</sup> has, in the past, played a part in strengthening the reluctance of the Benelux countries to accept the more drastic implications of that Plan.

13. Mr. Churchill's personal views on this subject are obviously of importance and you may think it desirable to discuss the problem with him during his visit here.<sup>43</sup> There seems now to be little question of the United Kingdom Government actually offering a token force for integration in the European Army, although this might still turn out to be a possibility if the European Defence Community develops along the very loosely integrated lines advocated by the Benelux countries. For the present, however, Mr. Churchill and Mr.

Eden have both made it clear that they have no intention of making such a contribution. Moreover, the French Government have now indicated that United Kingdom participation which would require an alteration in the proposed basis for the European Army would be unwelcome as it would tend to delay the acceptance of an agreed plan even further.

14. Recent public statements by the United Kingdom Government have been carefully designed to allay any suspicion that the United Kingdom does not in fact fully support the idea of a European Defence Community, even if unable to join it. Nevertheless, as you may recall, Mr. Churchill, in his private discussion of the European Army with me in London, made it clear that he considered the French plan as highly impractical. As he put it, the proper way to bring European armies together was to maintain their national identities and tie them together "as a bunch of sticks" rather than to mix them up as "wood pulp". It is much to be hoped that this private scepticism will not be sensed by the Dutch and Belgians who might then be encouraged to hold out against any compromise on the European Defence Community in the hope of securing an even looser organization which might secure participation of the United Kingdom.

15. It might be desirable, if you agree, to emphasize to Mr. Churchill the importance which we attribute to the concept of a European Defence Community and the dangerous and difficult situation which would result if the Pleven Plan collapsed.

16. This question has some bearing on the future location of the principal agencies of NATO. As you know, the United Kingdom has insisted that any such concentration should be in London rather than in Paris. It might be desirable to point out to Mr. Churchill that the establishment of NATO Headquarters in Paris would have the effect of securing a close working cooperation between the European Defence Community and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Close cooperation between the two is essential if, in the words of the communique on the Churchill-Truman talks issued today, the defence of the free world is to be strengthened and solidified by "the creation of a European Defence Community as an element in a constantly developing Atlantic community".

17. I am attaching to this note an excerpt from a teletype from Washington, dated January 9, on the Churchill-Truman talks, which deals with the discussion on the European Army which took place in Washington between Mr. Acheson and Mr. Eden.† You will see that Mr. Eden agreed to do his best to convince the Benelux countries that they should cooperate in the European Army Plan.

SECRET AND PERSONAL

[Ottawa,] January 11, 1952

Your Ambassador came to see me on Tuesday to explain to me your concern over the question of the relationship of NATO to the European Defence Community. I fully share your view that this relationship must be politically and militarily as close as possible, and we will certainly support that view at forthcoming meetings and discussions. I have never myself seen anything incompatible between the idea of closer European unity and a developing NATO community; indeed, these two concepts must be linked together. This link is necessary, as you point out, to ensure close and continuing United States association with the future of Western Europe. The concept of a European Army with a European Defence Community has now taken such firm root in Washington that failure or prolonged delay in realizing it would, I feel, have a most discouraging and frustrating effect in the United States and might tend to defeat our common objective. United States withdrawal from Europe would, in my mind, be far more likely to result from such failure than from the feeling that European unity and strength made unnecessary her military presence in, and political commitments to Europe.

I am inclined to doubt whether, as NATO gathers force and cohesion and as the United States becomes increasingly committed to its long-term policies and objectives, there is very much danger of the EDC developing in a direction away from NATO. Nevertheless, I certainly agree with you that we should be on guard against this danger and do everything we can to prevent it developing. As I see it, the best way to do this is not to discourage or delay the European Army and EDC, but to make sure that these moves are tied in with those toward Atlantic unity. The two must be parallel, not conflicting, and I would hate to think that one was preventing or slowing up the other.

One further point occurs to me. In the interest of securing that close co-operation between the European Defence Community and NATO which we both think essential, do you not think that we should agree without delay that the headquarters of NATO and of the EDC should be in the same place so that they could work closely together on a day-to-day basis and thus secure maximum co-operation.

I know that this whole question involves special difficulties for the Netherlands, with its overseas outlook, interests, traditions, and its close relationship to the United Kingdom and overseas countries. I know also how easy it is to give advice from North America where your problems may not be always fully understood. That is, in fact, the reason why I hesitated for some time before sending this additional message. However, it seems to me that the question is such a vital one that you would not misunderstand my desire to do so.

There is now, I think, a good opportunity to heal the age-old feud between Gaul and Teuton by the inclusion of both in a European system. The effect of this on future peace prospects would, of course, be incalculable. I realize that if the United Kingdom were organically a part of this European system, the situation would be much easier for the Netherlands. I do not think that there is any likelihood of United Kingdom formal participation in these European organizations, but she is moving to closer co-operation with and support of them. The Washington talks that have just ended confirm this. The failure to realize a European Army and Defence Community might, I think, have a similar effect on the United Kingdom as on the United States, that of slowing up or preventing this bridging of the Channel which is going on. Here again, then, as I see it, the solution is to go ahead on the continent but always, as you put it, with the continental circle inside the larger Atlantic circle.

I apologize for the length of this message and send with it all good wishes and sincere personal regards.

We will meet in Lisbon, I hope, but when?

1. In accordance with the authority given by you on the telephone this morning, I read to Perkins your message to Mr. Stikker repeated to me in your EX 97+ of January 11.<sup>44</sup> He was pleased and impressed by what you said and asked me to give him a copy which he could show to the Secretary of State. I told him that I was informing him of the message on a strictly confidential basis and that you did not want this to be known to other governments. As he assured me that he would himself show the message to Mr. Acheson and return it to me without its being copied, I left a copy with him. He was specially pleased about your argument that the headquarters of NATO and EDC should be in the same place in order to ensure the closest cohesion and keep EDC within the NATO orbit.

2. He told me that Stikker's apprehensions seemed in part to arise from a remark by Schuman in the course of discussion on the length of the agreements establishing EDC. Stikker had proposed a 20-year term to conform with NATO. In arguing for a 50-year term, Schuman had employed what Perkins called a lawyer's argument to the effect that EDC really had to be a permanent organization, whereas the North Atlantic Treaty was for only 20 years. The State Department has asked Bruce to approach Schuman in order to get him to correct any misapprehension caused by his use of this argument.

Reference: My telegram No. (Washington 97; London No. 88; The Hague No. 4)<sup>46</sup> of January 11.

Following is Mr. Stikker's reply dated January 18 to my message quoted in above telegram. Message begins:

"I feel most indebted to you for your kind and encouraging message which shows complete understanding for our views as regards necessity of very close relationship between NATO and EDC.

Only by establishing these strong links now, while we are still working on the shape of EDC, we may ensure that this community will develop within 'a constantly developing Atlantic Community'.

Efforts of the 6 European countries involved to come to terms will no doubt be enhanced if England, Canada and United States continue to stress this necessity. You can rest assured that the Netherlands Government will do everything in their power to come to a reasonable compromise acceptable to all parties concerned.

I read with satisfaction that you do not share my fears of EDC developing away from NATO at a later stage. Indeed I believe with you that this eventual danger may be avoided if aims and obligations of both organizations remain parallel and not conflicting. As you point out so clearly, the continental circle will have to develop in the large Atlantic circle.

I furthermore fully agree with you that cooperation between EDC and NATO would be strongly promoted by establishing headquarters of both organizations in the same place. While I understand too fully British preference for London this involves smaller nations in considerable duplication of effort and therefore in my opinion Paris would be the most appropriate which I hope will be agreeable to all member nations concerned.

I am looking forward to meeting you again in Lisbon on February 16 next or possibly on an earlier date in view of a meeting of the Comité [Committee] on Atlantic Community, which you may wish to convene, and I send you my best wishes and sincere personal regards." Message Ends.

Following from the Under-Secretary, Begins:

1. Our Embassy in Washington informed me last night that the State Department are very much concerned at the impasse encountered in the last day or two in the European Army discussions. They tell us that although the Netherlands have agreed to a compromise proposal acceptable to representatives of the other four Powers, the Belgian Government have indicated their inability to do likewise.<sup>47</sup>

2. The State Department feel that the situation is critical and are doing everything possible to persuade the Belgians to change their position. They have invited us to express our concern to M. van Zeeland and in particular have suggested that we make available to him the Minister's personal message to Dr. Stikker, the text of which is set out in my immediately preceding telegram.

3. Mr. Pearson is away from Ottawa and I am not able therefore to ask you to convey a personal message from him. Nevertheless I do know that he attaches great importance to agreement being reached on the European Army in advance of the NATO Council meeting in Lisbon on February 16th.

4. Accordingly, I would like you to convey immediately to M. van Zeeland a copy of the text of Mr. Pearson's personal message to Dr. Stikker. In doing so you should say that we have heard that the European Army discussions have reached a critical stage; while we are not aware of the precise issues which are causing difficulty to the Belgian Government, I thought M. van Zeeland might wish to know of the reply which Mr. Pearson had sent to The Netherlands Foreign Minister. This reply had been made to certain questions which Dr. Stikker had raised with Mr. Pearson concerning the relationship of the European Defence Community to NATO. You should add that it occurred to me that it might be helpful in present circumstances for M. van Zeeland to be aware of Mr. Pearson's attitude on these questions. M. van Zeeland will know that the Canadian Government hope that it will be possible for the six Governments concerned to agree upon mutually satisfactory arrangements for the EDC.

5. Please report to us any response or reactions you may receive, together with any comments you may have on the Belgium Government's attitude. Ends.

Addressed to Ottawa No. 12, repeated for information to London No. 1, Paris No. 2, The Hague No. 1, Bonn No. 1, Rome No. 1. London please pass.

As Ambassador had already left for Luxembourg (reference my telegram No. 11, January 21st) following from Arnold Smith, Begins:

1. As Mr. Van Zeeland was unable to see me today I early this evening saw Poswick, his Chef de Cabinet, who had been concerned with EDC negotiations and handed him aide memoire making points in your instructions and enclosing text of your personal message to Stikker. After reading message he said he was sure that his Minister would greatly appreciate knowing of it and would also welcome this evidence of Canada's close interest in EDC.

2. In response to question Poswick said that while main outstanding questions had been (a) budget, and (b) relations between Executive Commission and Council of Ministers, Belgium had now "provisionally" agreed to make so many concessions that there was little left at issue except a few matters of wording, chiefly the name of "high authority".

3. On budget side Poswick said that Belgian delegation in last two days had had several meetings and had agreed to concessions which they were confident would make agreement fairly sure on this whole category of questions.

4. Belgian Government was now also prepared to make a number of concessions on political side. But here Poswick was less confident of agreement though he said he was hopeful. He emphasized that presently worked out Belgian position was absolutely their final word in the way of concessions and when they said if "three great powers" (but he added France, Germany and Italy were in reality no longer great powers) did not, repeat not, now meet Belgian offer then it would prove manoeuvring to throw on Belgium the blame for abandoning EDC project which they had themselves now decided was unrealistic.

5. Poswick did not give me details but said only real issue remaining was name of Executive Commission. He said powers of Council and "Executive Commission" were now "provisionally" agreed. Belgium would never agree to call latter the high authority. The EDC's authority (pending establishment of a real political federation — when issues would become meaningless) must be Council of Ministers. Van Zeeland would accept any title "however honorific and pompous" which French might wish, providing it did not, repeat not, obscure this cardinal point.

6. Poswick added though he and other Ministers felt "sure" that he could get parliamentary ratification of Schuman plan,<sup>48</sup> he was less sure as regards EDC; and was sure that if name high authority were used for commission, ratification would be impossible. He emphasized that for a small country sovereignty was inevitably more important and more vulnerable than for a large one and that ordering troops around threatened sovereignty far more directly than the Schuman plan "authority's" power over coal and steel.

7. Poswick also said Van Zeeland was realistic in his supporting idea of a European federation but seemed to imply that it would have to be achieved more directly and overtly than through functional transfers of sovereignty to bodies likely to be dominated by France. He seemed to imply more lack of confidence in France than fear of Germany though, here again he would not be categorical.

8. Poswick said he was reasonably hopeful that there would be full agreement in good time before Lisbon NATO meeting; indeed whole issue should be settled "one way or another" (and Poswick thought favourably) by next Monday January 28th, after meeting of Ministers in Paris.

9. In my immediately following telegram I report a talk earlier today on EDC with United States Embassy Counsellor.† Ends. Message ends.

1. Belgian aide memoire in answer to ours of 21 January was handed to me by Poswick this morning. A translation is given in the next paragraph. Poswick did not, repeat not, furnish any comment on contents of aide memoire nor did he refer to it during the interview except to say that an effort had been made to render the text as concise as possible in view of the fact that it would presumably be wired to you. While intimating that further progress had been made during experts discussion on Monday and Tuesday of this week he did not, repeat not, know the specific subjects on which progress had been made. He said that the main subjects which would not be discussed by experts and which would remain for consideration of the Ministers was that of the powers of Assembly. Its solution would depend in part on final decision reached concerning the powers of other organs of community. (See Paragraph 5 of our telegram under reference.) Poswick confirmed that the question of power of the "Executive Commission" would most probably not give rise to further difficulties and that the main item remaining under this heading was the name which should be given to this organ. The Ministers are to meet in Paris this week.

2. Following is the text of Belgian aide memoire. Text Begins:

The Belgian Government has noted with interest the aide memoire which the Canadian Government was good enough to send them on the question of European army. The hope expressed by the Canadian Government that "it will be possible for six governments concerned to arrive at a mutually satisfactory agreement concerning the European defence community" is shared by the Belgian Government.

Great efforts have already been made by Belgian Government which has agreed to modify many points of view which were strongly held and which it still considers as being justified in order to permit that hope expressed above would materialize. The Belgian Government does not, repeat not, doubt that when making known its views to the other states participating in European army discussions the Canadian Government will insist on the necessity of arriving, to use its own words, "at a mutually satisfactory agreement" i.e. at a real accord meeting the legitimate anxiety and aspirations of all participating powers, Commonwealth and small countries.

The Belgian Government wishes to express its thanks to the Canadian Government for having communicated the views contained in the answer given by Mr. Pearson to questions asked by Mr. Stikker with regard to relations between European defence community and North Atlantic Treaty Organization. CONVERSATIONS WITH ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE PERKINS

IN OTTAWA, JANUARY 31

ON GERMANY AND THE EUROPEAN DEFENCE COMMUNITY.

Reference: My immediately preceding telegram No. 282.<sup>51</sup>

Following from Under-Secretary, Begins:

1. Mr. Perkins expressed considerable optimism about the progress of discussions on the European Defence Community now that the Belgians appear to be much more cooperative. He noted that there were two important outstanding questions (he omitted mention of the budget problem), namely, the duration of the Treaty and relationship with NATO. He felt that it was unnecessary and indeed undesirable to put the complete text of the Treaty before the Lisbon meeting. He thought it would be better to have the Lisbon meeting confronted with a statement of principles. Discussion on these principles would serve as a guide for final drafting of the text. This procedure he thought would permit of greater flexibility.

2. With regard to German membership in NATO he noted that the French were still very firmly opposed. They argue that German membership would be essentially incompatible with the defensive character of the North Atlantic Treaty since Germany would be the only member with territorial aims. Mr. Perkins commented that the admission of Germany to NATO would be the most clean-cut way to handle the matter, but in view of the French opposition some other course was necessary for the present. He was favourably disposed to Stikker's suggestion that Germany might be associated in NATO discussions directly affecting the EDC. In any case, he felt that the question of German membership in NATO would not be raised at Lisbon.

3. The Minister suggested that if the German question was to be solved it was imperative that EDC must be kept within the broader framework of the North Atlantic community. The French seemed to be considering the German problem largely in its European context, and he felt that the concept of the North Atlantic community must be constantly kept before the French. With these views Perkins agreed.

11. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of March 4th, 1952 reported that, in accordance with a decision reached at the Lisbon meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, a treaty and N.A.T.O. protocols had been negotiated to extend N.A.T.O. security guarantees to Western Germany.<sup>52</sup> This would result in a European Defence Community, comprising all the members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and, in addition, the Federal Republic of Western Germany.

It was recommended that the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Permanent Representative of Canada on the North Atlantic Council, or either one, be authorized to sign on behalf of Canada, subject to ratification, the protocol to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization extending the guarantees of Article V to the European Defence Community.

It was thought that ratification of the treaty and of the protocols might be accomplished by all participants by August. As a consequence, it might be advisable to submit the protocol to Parliament for approval during the course of the current session in order to avoid the possibility of Canada being unable to ratify the protocol in the early autumn if all other countries were then ready to do so. If it became apparent that this would be advisable, it could be made clear at that time that the Canadian instrument of ratification would not be

1. The Secretary-General of the European Defence Community conference informed Cadieux<sup>54</sup> and Fournier<sup>55</sup> this week that meetings of the steering committee would resume on June 24 and suggested that if Canada wished to sit on this committee an approach should be made to the chairman of the conference M. Alphand. This procedure had been followed by the United States and United Kingdom last fall when they wished to be represented on the steering committee.

2. It is now the view of this mission and that of our delegation to NATO that because of the progress made to date towards the creation of a European army, and because the important problem of the future relationship between the EDC and NATO will be the subject of further discussions in the steering committee along with many other problems related to NATO at large, Canada should now seek the role of observer at the steering committee. Repeat to Delegation to the North Atlantic Council, Paris, No. 161.

Cadieux and Fournier saw De la Grand'ville, former Secretary-General of EDC conference, yesterday June 24 and conveyed your request to be represented at meetings by observer.

2. It was clear that since matter had last been discussed with him there had been further thought given to the representation of non-EDC members of NATO and some difficulties had arisen:

(a) It was felt that opponents of treaty might object that interim commission had agreed at this early stage to representation of non-European countries by observers and this could be embarrassing to the governments;

(b) Administratively there was also fear of short-circuiting NATO secretariat. De la Grand'ville was however personally in favour of disregarding these objections and receiving observers and he thought that Steering Committee might agree to this arrangement.

3. After first meeting of Steering Committee, De la Grand'ville late yesterday afternoon reported that Alphand had told his colleagues on the Committee that he had been approached by two governments (Canadian and Norwegian) who wished to be represented by observers at meetings of Steering Committee. The reaction had been unanimously unfavourable, the general view being that the Committee is now in existence and that the Steering Committee discussions should be restricted to parties only. The case of the United Kingdom and United States observers representing parties to contractual agreements closely linked to EDC treaty was considered to be different.

4. The problem of keeping non-EDC members of NATO in the picture was apparently discussed for the first time and the decision reached was that:

(a) an official from NATO secretariat would attend weekly meetings (on Tuesdays) of Steering Committee

(b) NATO secretariat will circulate all documents to NATO delegations;

(c) once a month Alphand who is Chairman of Steering Committee will make a full progress report to NATO Council.

5. Under these circumstances I think it will be difficult to proceed with request for formal representation on different basis of other NATO countries who are non-members of EDC and feel we should accept for time being arrangement proposed by Steering Committee. If we receive adequate documentation through NATO secretariat and detailed reports from Alphand in Council I am inclined to think that such arrangements would meet our requirements.

6. In any case, it might be advisable if you agree, to accept the proposed arrangement to take opportunity provided by Alphand's first report in Council to put on record our hope that both documentation circulated through NATO secretariat and monthly reports by Alphand will be sufficiently detailed to enable countries formerly represented by observers at EDC conference to be fully informed of all important developments in interim commission.

7. In addition to these methods of following the activities of the Steering Committee we will of course maintain close informal contacts with our United Kingdom and United States colleagues.

RATIFICATION OF THE E.D.C. TREATIES

When we were in Bonn on December 10, Mr. Claxton was received by Dr. Adenauer, the Chancellor of the German Federal Republic. Mr. Davis and I accompanied Mr. Claxton, and Dr. Hallstein, the German Foreign Minister, was also present.

2. Mr. Claxton opened the interview by mentioning the purpose of his visit to Germany. Dr. Adenauer made some complimentary remarks about the Canadian troops. After a further exchange of pleasantries, Mr. Claxton mentioned that he was going to Paris to attend the meeting of the North Atlantic Council and that he would be seeing Mr. Acheson, Mr. Eden and Mr. Schuman. At this, Mr. Adenauer immediately referred to the importance of assuring ratification by the French Parliament of the E.D.C. Treaties. He said that the European solution was the only possible path to a better future in Europe. Unfortunately, certain political circles in France had grave misgivings about too close an association with the Germans. While he understood this and was doing his best to deal with this factor, he felt that the only real way out of the difficulty was for the United Kingdom to become associated in some way or another with the European Defence Community.

3. At a dinner given by Mr. Heeney on December 18, Mr. Claxton mentioned what Dr. Adenauer had told him. Among those present at the dinner were Lord Alexander, Mr. Hoyer-Miller, Mr. Draper, General Gruenther and Lord Ismay. There ensued a general discussion about the possibility of associating the United Kingdom in some way or another with the European Defence Community. Lord Alexander was very positive that the United Kingdom could not in any way be mixed up with any scheme looking towards a Federation of Europe. The discussion revolved around whether or not limited United Kingdom participation in the European Army might be sufficient to accomplish the objective Dr. Adenauer had in mind. It was mentioned that perhaps the United Kingdom might supply one or two Divisions to the European Defence Force; possibly some tactical Air Force Units, although keeping its main Air Defence Units under its own control, as well, of course, as the Royal Navy. General Foulkes referred to what he had heard from Field Marshal Montgomery about the difficulty of the French supplying properly qualified Corps Commanders and it was agreed that this might be another contribution the United Kingdom could make. General Gruenther felt that there would be no difficulty in working out the requisite Command arrangements both for the incorporation of the United Kingdom Divisions in the European Army and for the assignment of British Corps Commanders to that Force.

4. As the dinner was breaking up Mr. Draper asked Mr. Claxton if he could come and see him next morning because he was shortly going to Bonn to see Dr. Adenauer and would like to have more information from Mr. Claxton as to what the Chancellor had told him.

5. The next morning Mr. Draper and Mr. Merchant called on Mr. Claxton. I was also present at the interview. After Mr. Claxton had told Mr. Draper in more detail of his conversation with Dr. Adenauer in Bonn, Mr. Draper said that he had been thinking over the talk of the evening before and he had been wondering whether or not a three-point solution might not meet the situation. This three-point solution was as follows:

(1) The United States and the United Kingdom to supply a number of Divisions to the European Defence Force and Canada to contribute its Brigade Group;

(2) The United States, the United Kingdom and Canada to supply Corps Commanders and any other superior officers which might be required in order to prevent the European Defence Force being too much dominated by German Officers, having regard to the fact that Germany is the only present member of the E.D.C. likely to supply a large quantity of efficient Staff Officers;

(3) The United States, the United Kingdom and Canada to be represented in some way or other in the higher authorities of the E.D.C. This representation could take the form either of observer status or of associate membership.

6. Mr. Merchant commented upon this proposal by stating that he thought (2) and (3) perfectly feasible from the United States point of view, but he doubted if the Pentagon would agree to the incorporation of United States Units into the European Defence Force. Neither Mr. Claxton nor I made any comment except to indicate that this would go a long way to meeting the requirement which Dr. Adenauer had set forth as a condition for allaying the fears of certain political circles in France.

7. Since returning to Ottawa I received a visit from Mr. Bliss who said that the State Department had had a telegram from Paris reporting on the interview which Mr. Draper and Mr. Merchant had had with Mr. Claxton, following the discussion at Mr. Heeney's dinner.<sup>57</sup>

MILITARY AID TO YUGOSLAVIA

As you will recall, the question of making available to Yugoslavia certain items of ammunition and equipment from Canadian Army stock of United Kingdom type was considered by Cabinet on two occasions, but no final decision was reached. At that time one of the main difficulties in the way of a contribution by Canada was the availability of equipment which could be offered to Yugoslavia after NATO countries' requirements are met. Our interim reply to the United States military authorities in June 1951, was based on the fact that the very limited amount of equipment available might not be of great use to Yugoslavia. Although we considered that no further action was required on the part of the Canadian authorities, the United States authorities were still keeping the matter in mind. Recently we received two telegrams from Washington informing us of the intention of the United States military authorities to place a bid with the Standing Group for unallocated Canadian 25-pounders. (Telegrams WA 726, WA 828).†

2. The Standing Group was recently requested by the Canadian authorities to recommend allocations of all the remaining 25-pounder guns and ammunition. After the bids from NATO countries were all met, 164 25-pounder guns were still available. Standing Group recommended on March 26, 1952 that the 25-pounder guns left over, should, subject to the approval of the Canadian Government, be allocated to the United States for delivery to Yugoslavia together with some ammunition. The decision that the guns be allocated to the United States is apparently a device to overcome possible Canadian legislative obstacles to a direct transfer to Yugoslavia.

3. During a telephone conversation this morning with Major Carroll, Chiefs of Staff Secretariat, we were told that the Canadian Joint Staff in Washington have reiterated their request to the Standing Group that they first determine whether Greece and Turkey have any requirements for the remaining 25-pounders. The Chiefs of Staff Secretariat feel that, in accordance with Canadian Government policy to make available surplus United Kingdom army type equipment to NATO countries, Greece and Turkey should be given an opportunity to make a bid for the remaining guns. However, it is my understanding that General Foulkes intends to submit to Cabinet Defence Committee the question as to whether Canada should, as a matter of policy, make available equipment to Yugoslavia.

4. The problem is of considerable importance as it will no doubt raise various public reactions. Therefore, in order to be in a position to advise the Minister when the matter is discussed by Cabinet, it would be useful if European Division would study the political implications of this question. Legal Division is also asked to look into its legal aspects.

MILITARY AID TO YUGOSLAVIA<sup>58</sup>

We agree with the opinion expressed in your memorandum of April 2nd that it is politically sound to satisfy NATO requirements for army equipment before making such equipment available to Yugoslavia.

2. You asked for our opinion on the political implications of a decision on the part of Canada to make available to Yugoslavia equipment surplus to Canadian and NATO needs. As far as Canadian public opinion is concerned, we feel that such a decision would probably evoke some criticism, particularly from two quarters: Roman Catholics and Communists. Communist criticism, which extends to all our defence activities, cannot be allowed to affect a decision of this kind. Roman Catholic criticism must be taken more seriously, but I doubt if it would be important enough in this instance to put a domestic political obstacle in the way of a Government decision to aid Yugoslavia. It is our impression that the great majority of Canadians, Catholics included, while conscious of the undemocratic features of the Yugoslav regime and disturbed by the Yugoslav attitude towards religion, have accepted the necessity of helping Yugoslavia maintain her independence against Soviet pressure. The public is also generally aware of the fact that the United Kingdom, the United States and France have all extended economic and military aid to Yugoslavia, without attempting to disguise from their citizens the nature of the Yugoslav regime.

3. The other side of the question is the usefulness of sending arms to Yugoslavia from the points of view of: (a) survival of Yugoslavia as an independent state, and (b) NATO strategy.

4. To survive, Yugoslavia needs economic, military and psychological help. The Canadian offer under discussion would probably make only a small difference in Yugoslavia's military potential, even when considered in connection with possible satellite aggression, but might well make a useful contribution to the bolstering of Yugoslav morale. At the same time, such an act might form the basis of effective Canadian propaganda towards the Soviet satellites where Titoism is most likely to be latent.

5. The delivery of a number of twenty-five pounder guns to Yugoslavia would not, in our opinion, be of much strategic value from the point of view of Western defence. In general, and without the benefit of much knowledge of military matters, we have the feeling that there has been a tendency of late to over-rate Yugoslavia's strategic role from the point of view of Western defence. It seems to us that the main Soviet attack would be likely to by-pass Yugoslavia, which would remain relatively a side-issue. The Soviet planners can hardly be ignorant of the wastefulness of pursuing the Yugoslavs into their guerilla infested mountains. Furthermore, the maintenance of communications through Yugoslavia might well be less important to the Russians than it was to the Germans, and even in the latter case we suspect that there has been some exaggeration in the claims regarding the number of German fighting divisions held down in the Balkans by the various Yugoslav forces, particularly Tito's partisans. This is not meant to suggest that Yugoslavia's role in a war of the near future would be insignificant, but rather to keep us alive to the necessity of distinguishing between on the one hand the now indisputable desirability of maintaining the morale and the economic viability of Yugoslavia, and on the other hand the acceptance of increasing commitments to arm large Yugoslav forces, whose relative importance may be less than Tito claims and a number of Westerners believe.

6. The reservations expressed in the preceding paragraph do not, in our opinion, detract from the importance of the aim given in paragraph 3 (a). The Canadian twenty-five pounders would further this aim, we think, and we should therefore consider a decision to make them available to Yugoslavia as politically desirable.

PROVISION OF MILITARY EQUIPMENT TO YUGOSLAVIA

11. The Minister of National Defence, referring to discussion at the meeting of October 3rd, 1951, reported that, from time to time, enquiries were received as to whether Canada would provide military equipment to Yugoslavia, either direct or through the U.S. government. In these cases he had always taken the position that no equipment could be provided unless Canada had items that N.A.T.O. did not require. In any such case there would have to be Cabinet approval of the transfer. He did not feel it would be feasible to make direct shipments to Yugoslavia although there might be cases in which deliveries could be made through the United States. His department was under instructions to do what it could to discourage such proposals.

12. The Cabinet noted with approval the report of the Minister of National Defence that, in connection with enquiries as to whether Canadian military equipment could be provided to Yugoslavia, the Department of National Defence took the position that no items could be considered for transfer unless they were not required by N.A.T.O. and the Cabinet approved the transfer of them, and that the department was under instructions to try to avoid such enquiries.

YUGOSLAVIA; PROVISION OF CANADIAN ARMS

30. The Minister of National Defence, referring to discussion at the meeting of August 14th, said from time to time the United States enquired as to the possibility of Canada making some of its surplus armaments available to Yugoslavia. At the present the Canadian Army had available a certain number of 25-pounder guns surplus not only to Canadian but also to N.A.T.O. requirements. Both the United Kingdom and the United States favoured transfer of this equipment to Yugoslavia and would even be prepared to arrange for movement of the guns to Yugoslavia in the event Canada was reluctant to make a direct transfer.

He thought that even though the 25-pounders were surplus to our needs and to N.A.T.O. requirements, and that both the United States and the United Kingdom favoured the transfer of this equipment, it would be inadvisable to approve such a transfer either directly from Canada to Yugoslavia or indirectly through the United Kingdom or the United States, as it would almost certainly be viewed unfavourably in certain parts of Canada.

31. The Minister of Finance supported the view put forward on a previous occasion by the Prime Minister to the effect that as a matter of general policy Canada should channel through the North Atlantic Treaty Organization any movements of Canadian armaments to other countries.

32. The Cabinet after discussion, noted the report of the Minister of National Defence and agreed that it would not be possible at this time to consider favourably any transfer of surplus Canadian armaments to Yugoslavia either directly to that country from Canada or indirectly through the United Kingdom or the United States.

NATO; ADMISSION OF AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND AND SOUTH AFRICA

I may be called upon to discuss with the Minister, during the next few days, the question of the admission of Australia, New Zealand and South Africa to NATO. I should therefore be glad if you could obtain the views of others in the Department, and co-ordinate them in a memorandum which I could use for the purpose of discussion with the Minister.

2. We have reason to believe that Mr. Menzies, the Australian Prime Minister, is raising this question with the United Kingdom Government during his current discussions in London, and it is possible that he may be raising the matter when he comes to Ottawa following his visit to London.

3. The admission of Australia, New Zealand and South Africa to NATO would make geographical nonsense of the original concept of the North Atlantic Community. On the other hand damage has been done to that concept by the admission of Turkey, which has extended the obligations of NATO to embrace the Middle East. Since Australia, New Zealand and South Africa are being called upon to help defend the Middle East, a good case can be made out for them having equal status with Turkey.

4. Australian public opinion is loathe to make commitments to the Middle East at the expense of the defence of South-East Asia. I think we can agree that strategically an Australian contribution would be more valuable in present circumstances to the defence of the Middle East than to any other theatre. I do not believe that we will obtain adequate Australian cooperation in the Middle East without full representation in NATO.

5. The United Kingdom are endeavouring to satisfy the political aspirations of the Australians by offering them membership on the Council which would advise the Commander-in-Chief in the Middle East. This would mean, however, that Australia, New Zealand and South Africa would be placed in a definite position of inferiority, both to the United Kingdom and Turkey, who are full members in NATO. It is questionable whether it is in our interest, as a member of the Commonwealth, to see other members of the Commonwealth placed in such an invidious position.

6. On account of Australian insistence on some say as to what is happening in NATO, the U.K. Government is bringing the Australians more and more into their confidence regarding developments in NATO. Sir Stephen Holmes asked Basil Robinson,<sup>60</sup> just before I left London, what we would think about regular meetings at the Commonwealth Relations Office with only the older members of the Commonwealth present. His argument was that the partners in NATO would not object to the United Kingdom disclosing classified information to Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, but they would have objection if this information were discussed at a meeting at which the Asian members were also present. This is in line with a tendency which I have found since the Conservative Government took office in the United Kingdom. There is a disposition to promote the concept of the old Commonwealth — a term which is now often heard in London, in contrast to the position which prevailed when the Labour Government was in office.

7. The admission of Australia, New Zealand and South Africa to NATO would have the effect of regularizing the position without doing damage to the Canadian concept of a Commonwealth. We might therefore welcome it on these grounds. We could maintain the Canadian concept by continuing to press for the execution of the Colombo Plan and in other discussions advocating close co-operation with the Asian members of the Commonwealth. At the same time the co-operation of Australia, New Zealand and South Africa in defence matters would be secured through their membership in NATO.

8. You should not infer from this memorandum that I am in favour of the admission of Australia, New Zealand and South Africa to NATO. I have simply wished to set forth some of the arguments I can see from our point of

NATO: ADMISSION OF AUSTRALIA,
NEW ZEALAND AND SOUTH AFRICA

I have discussed the question raised in your memorandum on June 5 with Messrs. Reid, MacKay and Ronning. It may be useful to summarize the advantages and disadvantages of the membership of these three countries in NATO, both from the Canadian viewpoint and in the broader context of the NATO organization.

Advantages

1. Full membership in NATO appears to be the best method of ensuring adequate contributions, especially by Australia, to the defence of the Middle East.

2. The exclusion of Australia, New Zealand and South Africa from NATO makes it difficult to keep these countries fully informed on defence matters without revealing U.S. views and policies; inclusion of these countries in NATO would provide a logical reason to treat them separately in certain defence matters without distinguishing between old and new Commonwealth members.

3. The Australians (and possibly New Zealanders) appear to consider that the importance of NATO is increasing, partly at the expense of the United Nations, and that their exclusion from NATO is placing them in what they regard as an inferior position.

4. If membership in NATO were to be related to probable defence contributions in another war, Australia and New Zealand would have stronger claims than such countries as Portugal and possibly Denmark.

5. Although there has been concern that the growing membership of NATO has made the organization unwieldy, it may be argued that the unfortunate tendency for decisions to be taken from the full membership into the hands of the three leading powers has gone too far to be arrested, or even affected by the addition of new members.

Disadvantages

1. The inclusion of Australia, New Zealand and South Africa would make nonsense of the geographical concept of the NATO community. Against this it may be argued that since the signature of the North Atlantic Treaty, NATO has not been a geographical concept. Particularly since the inclusion of Greece and Turkey, Canada has accepted the fact that NATO is no longer the association of members of a geographical North Atlantic community.

2. The inclusion of these countries would substantially extend the responsibilities of NATO. Australia and New Zealand would tend to emphasize the defence of Southeast Asia possibly to the detriment of the European area in which Canada has a greater interest. Canada might be under some pressure to make contributions for Mutual Aid or otherwise to the Pacific or Southeast Asia area at the possible expense of our effort in Europe.

3. The size of NATO is already making the organization cumbersome. The addition of new members would intensify the tendency to centralize the real power in the U.S., the U.K. and France.

4. If Australia, New Zealand and South Africa were admitted to NATO, it would be difficult to resist the membership of other countries such as Pakistan whose chief concern is not defence against the Soviet Union. Membership of such countries might prove embarrassing to us in our relations both with other Commonwealth countries and with other Asian countries.

5. The important factor in the interests of Australia and New Zealand in membership would probably be the desire for a greater voice in Southeast Asian questions. This desire would not in fact be met by membership in NATO since policy with regard to this area is not discussed in the NATO context but rather by consultation between the three leading NATO members outside NATO.

6. The inclusion of Australia, New Zealand and South Africa might result in increased pressure for Mutual Aid. It is in fact doubtful that these countries would be willing to pay the full cost of NATO membership.

7. South Africa would be neither a political nor a military asset to NATO and might be a liability.

On balance, it appears that Canadian interests would not be best served by granting membership in NATO to Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. Nevertheless, it seems important that we should adopt a positive rather than a negative approach to the Australian interest in NATO. Perhaps the most promising proposal which we could make is that the Pacific Council should be given the same association with NATO as the European Defence Community has, that is, joint consultation on request when questions of common concern are under discussion. This would appear to meet Mr. Menzies' desire for "access to the mind of NATO" without seriously extending Canadian economic or military responsibilities. It would provide a justification for giving NATO information to Australia and New Zealand without appearing to discriminate against the newer Commonwealth members and without embarrassing us in our relations with them. This arrangement would also avoid the association of South Africa with NATO, a prospect which seems of little advantage to us, and would give no grounds for other countries such as Pakistan to press for membership. We might also offer to inform the Australian Mission in Ottawa as fully as possible on NATO developments which might be of concern to them.

We have not received any positive information indicating that Australia is really interested in becoming a member of NATO. Nevertheless it might be useful to hint to Mr. Menzies that Australia might in fact have more influence in Great Power policies, especially in Southeast Asia, by remaining outside rather than becoming merely one of several small power members.

RELATIONSHIP OF AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND AND SOUTH AFRICA TO NATO

As a result of the visit of Mr. Menzies to Ottawa, the question of the relationship of Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa to NATO, including the question of membership, has been under discussion in the Department.<sup>61</sup> Attached is a copy of a memorandum, prepared in the Department, summarizing the advantages and disadvantages of their membership.<sup>62</sup>

2. Under the disadvantages, it should be recalled that the Treaty would have to be amended to permit the inclusion of Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. Such an amendment would emphasize the change from the original concept of the Alliance, which is now open, by unanimous agreement, to European states in a position to further the principles of the Treaty and to contribute to the security of the North Atlantic area (Article 10).

3. You will have seen from Despatch No. 1157 of July 9 to Washington about Mr. Menzies' remarks in a Press Conference and the Minister's comments.† In this connection, you will recall the exchanges between Mr. Pearson and the Foreign Ministers of Australia and New Zealand last October to assure them that the development of Article 2 of the Treaty would not weaken our Commonwealth ties or traditional Commonwealth channels of communication.

4. It would be helpful to have a report on what the United Kingdom is doing to keep Commonwealth Governments informed on NATO affairs. We have, from time to time, told officials of Commonwealth missions here that we should be glad to give them whatever information we could on NATO developments, but, in fact, only the New Zealand and Australian missions have shown any interest. At the time the Committee of Five was established, the Minister sent a special message to the Australian and New Zealand Ministers of External Affairs to reassure them that our Commonwealth associations would not be overlooked in developments relating to the Atlantic Community. After the Rome and Lisbon meetings, officials of the Department made a special point of discussing developments at these meetings with officials of the Australian and New Zealand missions. But we have not established any special or systematic procedure for informing Commonwealth missions, and when we have discussed NATO matters, discussions have been on a bilateral basis. Generally speaking, we have felt that the initiative should be left to Commonwealth missions to seek information, rather than with the Department. You may think it desirable to explain our practice in this regard to the U.K. authorities.

RELATIONSHIP OF AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND AND SOUTH AFRICA TO NATO

Reference: Your letter D.1525 of July 16th, 1952.

I was interested to receive your despatch under reference, together with the copy of the Departmental memorandum of June 10th summarizing the advantages and disadvantages of possible membership of the older Commonwealth countries in NATO. I am in full agreement with the principal conclusion of the memorandum that on balance Canadian interests would not be best served by granting membership in NATO to Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. As the memorandum points out, NATO is a regional organization concerned specifically with the defence of the North Atlantic Treaty area. The defence interests of Australia and New Zealand, on the other hand, are primarily concerned with the defence of the Pacific area, including South East Asia, and the Middle East. South Africa is already committed to assisting in the defence of the Middle East. Further, in the light of the available information, it would appear that Mr. Menzies has not himself raised the question of Australian membership in NATO but, as described in paragraph 2 of telegram WA.1400 of May 23rd from our Embassy in Washington,† wished to have what he called "access to the mind of NATO because discussions in NATO and NATO action had such profound effects all round the world, including areas in which Australia had direct concern." We have not yet received copy of despatch No. 1157 of July 9th to Washington, to which you refer in paragraph 3 of your letter of July 16th. During Mr. Menzies' visit to London, however, I was told by Mr. Alan Watt<sup>63</sup> that the Australian Government fully accepted the view that they should not seek NATO membership, but should concentrate on making a success of the new Pacific Council.<sup>64</sup> Watt also favoured working out appropriate methods of consultation between the new Council and NATO. Such consultation might include not only the exchange of appropriate documentation but also joint meetings of the two Councils when matters of common concern are under discussion. Obviously the Australian position (and the "bridge" between the two regional groups) would be considerably stronger if the United Kingdom could be associated with the new Pacific arrangements, and eventually become full members of the Pacific Council (see paragraph 3 of my telegram No. 1432 of June 21st).†

2. In the circumstances, therefore, I feel that the Departmental memorandum is on the right lines in suggesting that we should adopt a positive, rather than a negative, approach to the Australian interest in NATO, and that perhaps the most effective means of keeping the Australian and New Zealand Governments informed of NATO action would be to work out some arrangement for the exchange of information and for joint consultation between the new Pacific Council, which is to hold its first meeting in Honolulu on August 4th, and NATO. I note from paragraph 2(c) of telegram WA.1755 of July 3rd from our Embassy in Washington† that the State Department has proposed that on the occasion of the first meeting of the new Pacific Council the question of the relationship between the organization to be established under the Tripartite Security Treaty and NATO and other regional organizations should be discussed.

3. So far as the position of South Africa is concerned, I should think that parallel action might be taken as and when the nucleus of the Middle East Defence Organization, which is now under consideration, is established, with parallel arrangements for the exchange of information being worked out between MEDO and NATO.

4. We have spoken to the Commonwealth Relations Office about the question of Commonwealth consultation on NATO affairs, outlining our own practice as summarized in paragraph 4 of your letter under reference. We were told by Neil Pritchard<sup>65</sup> that the United Kingdom authorities have not established any special or systematic procedure for informing Commonwealth missions, although they have been prepared to keep other interested Commonwealth Governments informed in a general way of trends and developments in NATO. Here, too, the only Commonwealth Governments which have shown any signs of interest are the Governments of Australia and New Zealand and, to a lesser extent, South Africa. One development worth noting is that since the transfer of the NATO headquarters to Paris, the Commonwealth Relations Office has included in the general distribution of Foreign Office telegrams now being sent to the four older Commonwealth missions a selection of reports on the activities of the Council sent to the Foreign Office by the United Kingdom Permanent Representative in Paris. These telegrams, which are intended for background information only, give a general picture of the trend of the discussion in the Council and of the principal problems with which NATO is currently dealing. Officials of these Commonwealth missions occasionally visit the C.R.O. or the Foreign Office with queries on NATO subjects.

5. You will recall that some time after the Lisbon meeting the Commonwealth Relations Office proposed informally to this Office that some further steps might be taken in London, as a consequence of the move of NATO to Paris, to keep the Australians, New Zealanders and South Africans in close touch with current NATO developments. At that time the C.R.O. had been thinking of holding periodical and informal meetings at which representatives of these Commonwealth missions would be given general progress reports on NATO developments, and hoped we would, as a Commonwealth member of NATO, participate in such meetings. This matter has not been raised again, and I understand from the C.R.O. that in fact no such general meetings have yet been held. It is quite possible, however, that the suggestion will be made again and you may wish to consider what attitude we should adopt if it is. My own feeling is that providing the meetings are held on an informal basis and at the official level there would be no harm done in occasional meetings called for the purpose of keeping the interested Commonwealth governments, which are not members of NATO, generally informed of the work which is being carried on. The question of the distribution of NATO documents, of course, presents special difficulties, and I do not think this would be an integral part of the scheme. In any event, the need for such meetings would presumably diminish when regular procedures for exchanging documentation and information between the Pacific Council and NATO are evolved.

6. I am sending copy of this despatch to our Delegation to NATO in Paris.

In paragraph 5 of my letter under reference, and in referring to the earlier suggestion made informally by the Commonwealth Relations Office that officials of the older Commonwealth missions in London might hold occasional meetings to receive reports on general NATO developments, I stated that it was our understanding that no such meetings have as yet taken place.

2. In a subsequent conversation with Cleary, Head of the Western and United Nations Department in the C.R.O., we learned that in fact one meeting was held, and that it is hoped to be able to include developments in NATO as one of the subjects which lend themselves to informal meetings at the official level of the kind which I have described. It is the feeling of C.R.O. officials that it is appropriate to restrict meetings on defence subjects (including NATO) to officials of the four older Commonwealth Governments on the ground that India, Pakistan and Ceylon do not at this stage place great emphasis on joint defence arrangements.

3. In the light of the foregoing I should be glad to hear whether you agree that if meetings of this kind are called at the C.R.O. it would be reasonable for us to send a representative.

RELATIONSHIP OF AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND AND SOUTH AFRICA TO NATO

In discussing from the standpoint of consultation between Commonwealth countries the relations to be established between the Pacific and the NATO councils, perhaps we should consider also the machinery which should be developed in Canberra and Wellington to keep other Commonwealth governments informed of trends and developments in the Pacific Council. In taking a positive approach to the Australian interest in NATO, we will be in a better position to expect reciprocal treatment from Australia as regards the Pacific Council.

2. The U.S.A. will be the only country which will belong to both organizations. The U.S. Permanent Delegates on each body will no doubt keep each other informed of developments within their respective organizations and it is probable that, in fact, the U.S. will provide the most important and for all practical purposes a quite effective informal link between the two councils irrespective of the formal machinery which may have to be developed for consultation between the two organizations.

3. If the relationship between the organization contemplated under the Tripartite Security Treaty and NATO is discussed at the forthcoming meeting in Honolulu, some report will probably be made to the NATO Council by the U.S. Permanent Delegate. You might wish even to consider, if no such report is made, whether on a suitable occasion, for instance at an informal meeting of the Council, the U.S. Permanent Delegate might not be invited to advise his NATO Colleagues on any points of interest to NATO which might have arisen at the Honolulu meeting. If this practice were to be developed whereby the U.S. representative would report on developments of significance to NATO in the Pacific Council, the situation would be comparable to that relating to the EDC Interim Committee. Alphand, who happens to be the Chairman of the Steering Committee of the EDC, will now, as you know, report periodically to the NATO Council on developments within the Steering Committee.

4. As regards the exchange of documentation and official liaison between the two organizations, I am not sure to what extent they will, in fact, be required and, in practice, feasible. This is a matter which should be examined carefully, possibly by a Working Group in the Council. I assume that the U.S. delegate will take the initiative in this regard.

RELATIONSHIP OF AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND

We have been considering the question of the Commonwealth meetings which the United Kingdom proposes to call in order to keep members informed on NATO subjects and, in particular, the advisability of Canada House participating.

2. While we can understand why the United Kingdom would think it desirable to limit the attendance at such meetings when some subjects are being discussed, the idea of discriminating between old and new Commonwealth members does not appeal to us. Furthermore, as the main purpose of the meetings would be for the United Kingdom to give information on NATO questions to the non-NATO members of the Commonwealth, there would not appear to be any particular reason why Canada House should attend, for the same NATO sources of information are, of course, open to us as are open to the United Kingdom. Also, since the Council has moved to Paris, Canada House is no longer directly involved in the work of NATO.

3. On the other side of the question, that of Canada providing NATO information to Commonwealth members, as you know we are ready and anxious to contribute and have developed the practice of passing on from here, through the High Commissioners in Ottawa or through our offices in Commonwealth countries, appropriate NATO information which we think would be of interest to them. Therefore, the presence of a Canadian representative at the London Commonwealth meetings would not be necessary in order to give our information to our Commonwealth colleagues.

4. Would you please explain this to the Commonwealth Relations Office and tell them that, because of these considerations, Canada House will not normally be represented at any regular Commonwealth meeting to discuss NATO questions. I am particularly anxious, however, that the Commonwealth Relations Office should understand that we are in complete sympathy with the idea of sharing NATO information with our Commonwealth colleagues and that we, for our part, have been passing pertinent NATO information to the others from Ottawa, and shall continue to do so.

Reference: Your Letter No. 600, August 4.

Your Letter No. 600 of the 4th August raised the question of liaison between the countries participating in the Pacific security arrangements and NATO. At the time of Mr. Menzies visit to Ottawa we had been thinking along the lines of some formal link between Anzus and NATO. An institutional association between NATO and the Pacific security group would have provided a link which would have been identified to those who promote Canadian association with Pacific defence. However, it seems that for the time being at least, there is to be no formal tie between the defence groups in the Pacific and the Atlantic.

The reports on the Honolulu Conference from Washington and from Canberra make it clear that Mr. Acheson's view prevailed, that at the present, any formal cooperative connection between NATO and ANZUS would be impractical. Throughout the meetings, it was stressed that ANZUS was simply a tripartite security arrangement and not a Pacific Pact. Hence, the emphasis on the new title coined by Mr. Acheson.

3. We have learned from Canberra that although the establishment of machinery for an ANZUS Council will enable Australia to cooperate actively with the United States in strategic defence planning, Australia's contact with NATO will not be as close as that Government had hoped. For your information, we are enclosing a copy of the five telegrams listed below:

No.	Date	From
WA-2037 +	August 11, 1952	Canadian Ambassador to the United States
WA-2038 +	August 11, 1952	"
WA-2039 +	August 11, 1952	"
No. 73 +	August 16, 1952	High Commissioner for Canada, Canberra

You will see that no positive procedure for informing NATO of Pacific security arrangements was adopted. In the circumstances, I think an arrangement such as the one you suggest, whereby the U.S. representative on NATO would report significant ANZUS developments, would have to suffice and would probably be acceptable. You might explore this informally with your American colleagues and let me know their reaction. I am sending a copy of this despatch to the Embassy in Washington and asking them to sound out the State Department on what plans they may have for keeping NATO informed of ANZUS affairs.

4. From a review of Mr. Acheson's statements to Mr. Menzies in Washington and the reports of the Ottawa conference one gets the impression that the United States wish to keep their various groups of defence associates, one might almost say customers, separated and unconnected by formal links so that the administration would be free to deal with them as they saw fit and alone be responsible for deciding on the relative priority of the claims of the several areas.

Enclosed for your information is a copy of letter No. 2091 of September 29,† from the Embassy in Washington reporting on conversations in the State Department on the subject of NATO-ANZUS liaison. You will see that Ambassador Draper asked the State Department for instructions on this matter, possibly as a result of your inquiries.

While it does not appear that Mr. Acheson has yet approved instructions on this matter, the State Department line will apparently be that they will argue against Draper reporting to the Council on ANZUS at this time. However, Mr. Acheson in the course of his review of strategic and political problems at the next Ministerial meeting would probably include a reference to ANZUS in general terms.

The State Department recognize that this might not go far enough to meet what we had in mind. However, the delicate situation which has arisen regarding U.K. observers at ANZUS and the Australian and New Zealand desire for closer association with NATO makes it difficult in their judgment to go beyond what they propose at this time.

You will see that Canada and the U.K. are to be kept fully informed on ANZUS developments on a bilateral basis. The State Department have not put aside the possibility of developing ultimately some broader defence arrangements for the Pacific.

Ottawa, December 20, 1952

MINISTERIAL MEETING OF THE COUNCIL: PRESS PUBLICITY<sup>66</sup>

I think it might be useful to comment briefly on one aspect of the recent Ministerial meeting of the North Atlantic Council in Paris which particularly impressed us from the Ottawa end. That was the generally negative and depressing tone of most of the publicity which the meeting received in the Canadian press. Almost without exception the picture painted was that of indigent member countries dragging their feet on defence expenditure and falling short of the minimum effort required to guard against aggression, in spite of dire warnings by the military authorities of the consequences. A number of clippings are attached to illustrate my point.

2. The reasons for this unfortunate publicity can, I think, be summarized as follows:

(a) the contrast between the generalities released to the press on most of the items under discussion and the detailed exposition of the question of infrastructure, thus leading people to expect positive results on this item;

(b) the disproportionate importance which was consequently placed on infrastructure and on the cuts that were made in the recommended programme; and

(c) the constant undercurrent of comment, some of it from representatives of SHAPE and some of it from American officials, which accompanied the meeting and which were designed to emphasize what they deemed it was essential for the meeting to accomplish.

3. The fact that there were few positive results to report on most of the items on the agenda could not of course be helped. It was in the nature of this meeting, coming as it did before the Annual Review could be completed. The general terms of the communiques issued about the various progress reports were in accordance with the agreed line of treating meetings of the Council as normal and unspectacular events. In contrast to this, however, a considerable amount of detail, including the cost estimates of the programmes recommended by the Supreme Commanders, was released on infrastructure. In view of this, and of the fact that shortly before it had been decided to make public a good deal of information on infrastructure which had previously been classified, it is hardly surprising that the press was led to believe that infrastructure was the one question on which great decisions were expected from the Council. In addition it appears that it was not sufficiently clearly explained to the press that the infrastructure expenditures contemplated were a relatively small proportion of the total defence expenditures of the NATO countries.

Noted and agreed. W[ilgress]

4. The large cut that was made in the infrastructure programme for 1953 was therefore misrepresented in many press reports as a general cutback in the defence expenditures of all the NATO countries. It was apparently not explained — or not sufficiently emphasized — to the press that obtaining agreement at this Council meeting to sharing the cost of the next slice of infrastructure was in itself an achievement, since a number of member countries were opposed to approving any amount for this purpose until the Annual Review had been completed and firm force goals for 1953 had been set. Instead of drawing attention to the advantage gained by approving infrastructure expenditures now in order to avoid any delay in making full use of next year's construction season in Europe, the whole stress seems to have been laid on the gap between the amount member countries appeared to be willing to contribute and the amount deemed necessary by the military authorities. The impression of this gap was heightened also by the expectations aroused by early reports of increased defence expenditure next year by NATO countries.

5. This unfortunate emphasis was made repeatedly in statements issued to the press by SHAPE representatives and United States officials during the course of the session. It was of course still further heightened by the interpretation placed by the press on the speech made by General Ridgway to the NATO Defence College after the session had ended. It may be impractical to try to define more closely the terms governing public statements by NATO Commanders but this unhappy incident seems to illustrate the inadequacy of the rather loose arrangement recently agreed between the Council and the Standing Group.

6. I have no particular suggestions as to how these shortcomings might be eliminated in future but merely wish to record the fact that from Ottawa the recent Ministerial meeting of the Council did not appear to make a very favourable public impression.

Ottawa, December 29, 1952

REPORT ON THE MINISTERIAL MEETING OF THE NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL, PARIS, DECEMBER 15-18, 1952

Attached is a memorandum which goes into some detail on the action taken by the Ministerial Meeting of the Council on the various items on its agenda. On the whole, I think it would be fair to say that the meeting was no less successful than we had expected and some features of it were of considerable importance.

2. The meeting gave Ministers an opportunity to see the new International Secretariat in operation. They were put in touch with the Supreme Commanders and other senior commanders who participated in the meetings. An additional infrastructure programme was approved, and in connection with this and with other decisions of the meeting, we saw again how difficult it is to direct the Press to a reasonable appreciation of what the Council is attempting to do. The discussions on political topics of common concern were, on the whole, less productive than they had been on other occasions, but Mr. Acheson's persuasive valedictory speech demonstrated the value of personal contact between Ministers. The French handling of their problem of bringing Indo-China more into the NATO orbit was very sensitive, and the position in which NATO now finds itself on this question calls for careful examination.

3. There was no doubt that the meetings ran more smoothly as a result of their being held at the Permanent Headquarters where the Secretariat was well established. On the other hand, there is some feeling that Lord Ismay is not able to exert the influence and authority which the Secretary-General should have in directing the business of the Council. His duties in this field he seems to leave almost entirely to Coleridge, his Executive Secretary, and Lord Ismay admits almost too readily that he is ignorant about a lot of the matters which the Council must discuss. On the other hand, it is understood that Ismay's influence in building up the esprit de corps of the Secretariat and maintaining the desirable atmosphere and stature of the Council is most valuable.

4. The increased extent to which the Supreme Commanders and other military authorities were brought into touch with the work of the Council was a useful development. On the other hand, the behaviour of General Ridgway in regard to the publication of his address to the Council in secret session was unhappy and despite the efforts which were made to avoid undesirable publicity, had an unfortunate reaction in the Press. The way the incident ended with Ridgway's public speech before the NATO Defence College certainly did not enhance the pre-eminence of the Council, and it would seem necessary to be watchful in the future lest a similar situation develop again and the practice grow of requesting the release of statements made to the Council.

5. Again the Council had to resort to the "Community-Chest-Campaign" techniques for raising funds for the infrastructure programme, and the resolution adopted on this item wisely points to the desirability of arranging somehow for infrastructure to be considered as an integral part of general defence plans and not as an isolated item for independent financing.

6. The amount of publicity, chiefly distorted, which the decision on this subject received can be accounted for, I suppose, by the fact that it was the chief substantive decision of the meeting — certainly the only one which could be expressed in dollars and cents. General Ridgway's forceful and almost intransigent plea for his complete programme, in which he persisted in the face of clear indications of its practical impossibility, gave the Press an opportunity for playing up a division between the Military and the Council and crying failure on the whole defence effort. One would have hoped that Press guidance could have presented the infrastructure decision in a better light as a new undertaking which, although it did not provide for all the Supreme Commanders would wish, was nevertheless an addition to the infrastructure projects already agreed to. As it was, the Press contrived to leave the impression that there had been at least a moral undertaking to provide the full programme and that the decision to subscribe 82 million pounds represented a cut-back of 45% from an earlier commitment or plan.

7. It would not be correct to say that there had been any real discussion on political questions of common concern, but the presentations made by the several Foreign Ministers were not without interest. In particular, the French did not go as far in presenting the case for "NATO-izing" Indochina as we had been led to expect. On the other hand, Mr. Schuman, by not taking the question to the point of suggesting a material undertaking from members, got a very good hearing and unanimous support for a resolution which, although apparently quite innocuous, will probably be used as the framework in which the French will sketch out a plan for much more precise assistance in their Indo-Chinese engagement.

8. It is perhaps worth noting that the Italians gave the impression of being more accommodating both in the Military Committee and in the Council, in particular in their statements about Italian-Yugoslav relations where they were content with asking the Council for understanding of the psychological and political reactions of the Italian public and the reasons why present circumstances unfortunately hindered the possibility of effective co-operation between the two countries.

December 29, 1952

REPORT ON THE MINISTERIAL MEETING
OF THE NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL
PARIS, DECEMBER 15-18, 1952<sup>67</sup>

The first Ministerial Meeting of the North Atlantic Council since the Lisbon reorganization was held in Paris, seat of the Permanent Headquarters, from the 15th to 18th December. Before the Ministers met, the Military Committee held sessions in Paris and also met with the Council and approved several reports which were passed to Ministers for consideration. The agenda for the Ministerial Meeting is attached.†

2. The first meeting of the Ministerial Session was a public one which was opened with an address by Mr. Kraft, the Foreign Minister of Denmark, who is now the Chairman of the Council. Mr. Schuman, the Foreign Minister of France, and Mr. de Gasperi, the Premier of Italy, also addressed the meeting. Their remarks were of a general formal character, Mr. Schuman dealing particularly with the necessity for an equitable division of the defence burden and Mr. de Gasperi accenting the desirability of encouraging the development of the non-military aspects of NATO.

Secretary-General's Report

3. At their first secret session, the Ministers began with a consideration of the first report by the Secretary-General. Lord Ismay had prepared this as a personal report, reviewing the activities of the Council in the light of his responsibilities. He drew particular attention to the five following points. The preparation of the Annual Review survey had placed an extremely heavy burden on the Secretariat and, in Lord Ismay's opinion, they could not continue to work under such pressure.<sup>68</sup>

4. Although progress had been made in establishing an efficient international staff, the Secretary-General considered the conditions of pay to be most unsatisfactory and requested Finance Ministers to give attention to this question which, in his opinion, seriously affected the efficiency of the Secretariat.

5. He drew attention to the section of his report on information policy, where he enlarged on the view he has often expressed to the Council that some Governments are not devoting enough attention to the problem of dispelling public apathy and stimulating public interest in NATO.

6. He mentioned two points of organization which he proposed to put before the Council in the near future in an effort to increase its efficiency. The first concerned the difficulties which arose as a result of the separation of the Standing Group, the principal military advisers to the Council, in Washington from the Council itself at its permanent headquarters in Paris.

7. The second was the lack of adequate contact between NATO and the other free nations.

8. Mr. Lange, the Foreign Minister of Norway, commented on the Secretary-General's report. He concentrated his remarks on the problem of giving more publicity to NATO activities. In his view, this called for better liaison between the military and civilian agencies and for constant supervision of the information policy of all subordinate organs by the Council. He referred particularly to the difficulties which arose from the practice of over-classifying NATO documents. Information which was public in individual countries, when collected and issued in a NATO document, was frequently marked "Secret" with the result that it could not be used by NATO for information purposes.

The following is in the memorandum beside this paragraph:

9. Mr. de Gasperi, the Italian Premier, agreed with Mr. Lange's views and took them a little further in advocating the establishment of a coordinating and directing centre in NATO for political warfare. In making this suggestion, he recognized that each Government should, of course, remain free to decide whether and to what extent it would undertake action in the field of propaganda and counter-propaganda, taking into account the political, economic and psychological characteristics of its people, but he did feel that there was scope within NATO to assist member countries in their individual efforts in countering communist propaganda within the NATO area by providing information material.

10. The report of the Secretary-General was accepted and the views of Norway and Italy noted.

Military Committee Report

11. Item II on the agenda was the report of the Military Committee. This was divided into two sections, one consisting of a number of items which merited particular consideration by the Council, and the other a series of reports not requiring Council action.

12. The Council discussed the question of defensive arming of merchant ships which the Military Committee had not been able to solve. This is a long outstanding problem where the difficulty arises from the desire of some of the smaller powers with large merchant fleets to have others share the burden of their defensive armament. The Council approved the resolution of the Military Committee, which expressed the hope that the United States and perhaps Canada could give sympathetic consideration and due priority to the requirements of these nations under a system of bilateral arrangements. It was recognized that this system would not preclude Canada from seeking the advice of the Standing Group should any armament become available for distribution as mutual aid.

13. General Ridgway and Admiral McCormick<sup>69</sup> had been invited to attend the Council, and on the Chairman's invitation they both addressed the meeting. Copies of their statements are attached.† General Ridgway began his remarks by outlining the principles by which he was guided in carrying out his duties. He recognized, in particular, the inseparable political, economic and financial factors in the problems confronting military commanders and that the responsibility for final decisions rested with the North Atlantic Council. He then went on to describe in forceful language the inadequacy of the forces at his disposal for carrying out his mission. This, of course, was not news to the Council. NATO defence plans had been drawn up in an effort to provide adequate forces by 1954 and there had never been any thought that the forces which would be at the disposal of the Supreme Allied Commander Europe in December 1952 would be sufficient.

Admiral Lynde D. McCormick, Supreme Allied Commander, Atlantic.

14. Admiral McCormick spoke very much in the same vein. He emphasized that the forces at present planned (sic) were not sufficient to insure effective control of the area of his command, and while he recognized the economic strains imposed by the defence effort he felt that it was the duty of the military commanders to place their requirements clearly before the Council.

15. The Chairman informed the Council that General Ridgway wished his statement to be released to the Press as soon as possible and, in fact, had prepared it with publication in view.

16. There could be no objection on security grounds to the release of Ridgway's statement. However, there might be undesirable political consequences from presenting an unbalanced picture. Furthermore, there would be serious objections in principle to agreeing that statements made to the Council in secret session would be made public at the request of the speaker.

17. After some discussion at a subsequent meeting, the Council decided that the gist of General Ridgway's statement would be given in the final communique. When the communique was being prepared, agreement could only be obtained to the inclusion of a short paragraph which did not satisfy General Ridgway, and it was therefore decided that a paraphrase of his remarks would be prepared by the Secretariat and cleared with him and with the (permanent) Council at an early session after the Ministerial meetings were concluded. Before this clearance could be obtained General Ridgway made a public address at the closing of the NATO Defence College which was, in fact, almost the same speech that he had made before the Council. In the circumstances, it was decided that there was no longer any point in releasing his statement before the Council. A further feature of this unfortunate incident was that the Press chose to interpret his remarks as a criticism of the Council. Whereas he used strong language in describing the inadequacy of the forces at his disposal and therefore by implication criticized the members of NATO for not providing larger defensive forces, it does not seem correct to interpret his remarks as a criticism of Council action.

18. The next item on the agenda was the infrastructure programme for 1953. SACEUR and SACLANT described to the Council the urgency and necessity of providing these facilities in order to assure the most effective employment of the forces under their command. A special committee of Ministers was set up to examine the programme which had been approved by the Military Committee and to determine what funds would be available to finance the projects. After several meetings, it was established that only £78.5 million could be subscribed at this time towards a programme priced at £82 million. The Standing Group in consultation with SACEUR and SACLANT approved a programme at this figure. SACEUR stressed that this arbitrary reduction from his proposed programme of £160 million in no way reflects any change in SACEUR's military commitments nor, in his estimate, of the essential infrastructure requirements needed to meet them. He insisted that he could not over-emphasize the importance nor over-stress the urgency of making good at the earliest opportunity those facilities now omitted from his original programme, although he was aware that the present conditions of economic and financial stringency made these reductions necessary.<sup>70</sup>

19. Canada agreed to a contribution of £4.9 million determined on the basis of 6% of the £82 million programme. It was reduced to this figure when it became clear that some countries, notably the U.K. and France, had a definite ceiling on the amount they would contribute irrespective of the size of the programme. For our part, we were prepared to go to 6% of the recommended programme if others would contribute proportionally.

20. Item IV on the agenda was a proposal by the Military Committee to establish a new command organization in the Mediterranean. This was approved by the Council and, as a result, Admiral Mountbatten<sup>71</sup> was designated as Commander-in-Chief Mediterranean. He would come directly under SACEUR and would be responsible for coordinating with Admiral Carney,<sup>72</sup> who continued as Commander-in-Chief South. The day after his appointment was announced, Admiral Mountbatten, with Admiral Carney, came to Paris for consultations with General Ridgway and made formal appearances before the Council.

Exchange of Views on Political Questions

21. Item V on the agenda was Exchanges of Views on Political Questions of Common Concern. The first topic discussed was Indo-China. Mr. Schuman and Mr. Letourneau, Minister of State for the Associated States, gave the Council a full account of French responsibilities and present conditions in Indo-China. They stressed the political, economic and financial effects on France of the war in Indo-China. These effects reacted significantly on what France was able to do within the framework of NATO, and according to Mr. Schuman played a dominant part in the determination of French policy with regard to Germany and particularly in connection with the European Defence Community. The French Government hoped that the Council would be unanimous in recognizing both the common interest of NATO in the struggle being carried on by France with Indo-China and the necessity to take fully into account the efforts France was making in that area with a view to helping her as far as possible in carrying out her difficult task.

22. Mr. Letourneau gave a detailed review of the military situation and concluded by observing that the efforts of France and the Associated States, assisted by the United States, might prove insufficient in view of the weight of the burden that was being carried.

23. Mr. Acheson reaffirmed that the United States would continue to the best of its ability to support the French effort in Indo-China, and several other Ministers spoke with understanding of the French position. The Council then adopted a resolution, the text of which is attached, agreeing that the campaign deserves continuing support from the NATO Governments.† Mr. Schuman informed the Council that he recognized that a resolution of this kind could not affect the commitments of NATO countries under the North Atlantic Treaty.

24. Relations between Italy and Yugoslavia were then described by Mr. de Gasperi, who developed the theme that military cooperation between NATO and Yugoslavia would be difficult so long as the political differences with Italy remained unresolved. He asked that the Council understand the psychological and political reactions of the Italian public and the reason why present circumstances unfortunately hindered effective cooperation between Italy and Yugoslavia. Representatives of Greece and Turkey made short reports on their relations with Yugoslavia. The Council agreed that the fact that this question had been discussed should be withheld from publication.

25. Germany was the next topic for consideration, and Mr. Eden made a statement dealing chiefly with the transition of the East German forces from a para-military police force to an effective military machine. He concluded, however, that this development should not be regarded as representing an immediate military threat to the Federal Republic although the long-term significance should not be ignored. He also mentioned the uneasy political situation in Western Germany and, in particular, such incidents as the speech by Ex-General Ramcke, although he felt that in assessing their significance the large measure of support enjoyed by the two major moderate parties — the Christian Democrats and the Social Democrats — should be kept in mind.

26. Mr. Schuman then reported on the progress towards the establishment of the European Defence Community mentioning that, unfortunately, difficulties of a political, psychological, technical and constitutional nature had made impossible the ratification within the six-month period forecast last Spring. Nevertheless, he confirmed that his Government firmly hoped for a successful conclusion in the next few months to the work of establishing the European Defence Community. The President of the Interim Commission had prepared a report which was presented to the Council outlining the useful detailed work which had been accomplished in preparing the way for ratification. Representatives of the Netherlands, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States spoke in support of early ratification.

27. The Council adopted a resolution along this line, the text of which is attached.†

Article II

28. Item VI on the agenda was the Implementation of Article II of the Treaty. This had been included at the request of the Italian Delegation. Mr.

Pella spoke in favour of a wider development of Article II and, in particular, of the intervention of NATO into the complex field of labour mobility.

29. The Turkish Foreign Minister made the suggestion that NATO activities in the field of economic cooperation should be extended and that NATO should take on those functions of the OEEC which the latter organization, by virtue of its position and nature, was not able to accomplish. A drafting committee was set up to prepare a resolution which was subsequently adopted and given out to the Press with the final communique. The text is attached.†

Soviet Situations

30. The next item on the agenda was the paper which had been prepared by the Council on Trends of Soviet Foreign Policy. The paper received the warm approbation of all Ministers who spoke on this item. Mr. Acheson made a prepared statement, the text of which is attached,† and the Turkish and French representatives made suggestions which were approved for further consideration by Permanent Representatives. The French wished the part of China in Soviet policy to be studied and the Turkish felt that Soviet policy in the economic and commercial conduct of the cold war was not stressed sufficiently.

31. It was agreed, on the suggestion of the United Kingdom representative, that the final communique should stress one aspect of Soviet foreign policy, i.e., Soviet intention to divide the free world.

32. Items VIII, IX and X on the agenda were three papers from the Military Committee. The first was an estimate of Strength and Capabilities of the Soviet Bloc, the second a new paper on Strategic Guidance, and the third a Military Estimate of the Risk. These papers have a direct bearing on the final consideration of the Annual Review, and in the present incomplete stage of that study they could be little more than interim reports. The paper on Strategic Guidance was a new draft to take into account the accession of Greece and Turkey and the consequent extension of the NATO defence area.

Annual Review

33. Item XI on the agenda was a report on the progress of the Annual Review. Three documents were tabled which gave a comprehensive account of what had been done in this study to date, and after considerable discussion the Council approved a paper outlining further action to be taken in this exercise.<sup>73</sup>

34. The remarks of several Ministers gave an indication of the positions their Governments will adopt in the final stage. The Belgian Foreign Minister stressed the desirability of determining the distribution of the defence burden by multilateral rather than bilateral discussions, and it could be inferred from his remarks that the Belgian Government would not be prepared to put up their maximum figure without knowing what others will do.

The following is in the memorandum beside this paragraph:
Minister's copy only.

35. Mr. Eden's remarks, like those of Mr. Lange, the Norwegian Foreign Minister, forecast a possible cut-back in defence efforts for they both mentioned that the economic burden had been underestimated at Lisbon. Mr. Eden also referred to the desirability of concentrating on developing the quality of forces rather than directing attention predominantly to the increase in the number of divisions. This thought has been brought out in the final communiqué.

36. Mr. Eden also referred to the unnecessary statistical detail requested in the Annual Review, a position with which we find ourselves much in sympathy, and expressed doubt that all the preparatory work could be completed by "early Spring".

37. The agenda had provided an item for general discussion concerning the determination of the defence effort, and it had been the expectation that the French Delegation would make a plea here for NATO to take over responsibility for the war in Indo-China. However, no one spoke on this item.

Other Items

38. At the Secretary-General's suggestion, an item had been included to bring up for discussion the existing terms of reference calling for a minimum of three Ministerial meetings each year. This provision had been adopted before the organization had been modified to establish the Council in permanent session, and there was a general feeling that the provision was no longer applicable. However, there was no agreed view on whether it would be desirable to provide for meetings of Ministers at certain fixed times or whether they should only be required to meet when items of importance called for their attention. No decision was, therefore, taken regarding the frequency of Ministerial meetings of the Council. It was agreed that Ministers would meet as early as possible in 1953 to deal with the Annual Review and at that time they would consider this question anew. The Secretary-General would prepare a report on what time of the year would suit most members for a final meeting on the Annual Review.

39. Under the item "Other Business" the French presented a resolution recommending that Member Governments expedite the ratification of the agreement on the status of forces, which had been signed on the 19th June, 1951 but which had to date only been ratified by one country. The resolution was approved after several delegations had described their intention to ratify in the near future. The Canadian position was mentioned and, in particular, the situation regarding our forces elsewhere than in the NATO area, which required Canada to delay ratifying the NATO Agreement.

40. The Chairman then made a farewell speech addressed to Mr. Acheson who, with his colleagues, was making his last appearance at the Council before the change in the U.S. administration. Mr. Acheson's reply was a most persuasive plea for European unity, which he developed in the framework of an historical review of the North Atlantic Alliance. Other Foreign Ministers joined in warm tribute to Mr. Acheson and his colleagues and noted the significant part he has played in bringing the North Atlantic Treaty Organization into being.

41. After the usual wrangle over language the Council agreed on the text of the final communique, a copy of which is attached.†

42. The Chairman then announced that the Council stood adjourned until the next meeting of the Permanent Representatives.

Attention: Mr. J.A. Irwin<sup>1</sup>

Dear Sir:

Your letter of January 10, 1952,† drew attention to the opportunity provided at the forthcoming meeting of the ICAO Council for raising again the question of increasing the maximum contribution to ICAO above its present level of 25 per cent. You enclosed a letter from Mr. Booth in which he stated that he expects Portugal, supported by Brazil, to introduce a proposal to the Council aimed at achieving an increase.

I am pleased to know that some of the other members of ICAO, besides ourselves, are at last showing concern over the unduly low level of the maximum contribution. As you know, we have consistently held that an equitable scale of assessment for any of the United Nations organizations must bear a close relationship to the capacity to pay of the member countries. Although we have accepted the United States argument that no one member should pay too high a proportion of the costs, we have held that a contribution of less than 33⅓ per cent by the United States negates the principle of capacity to pay, and places an unduly heavy financial burden upon the other member countries. At the Fifth ICAO Assembly, Mr. Booth stated the Canadian views on this matter, but lack of interest by other delegations discouraged the Canadian Delegation from formally proposing an increase in the maximum contribution. In his statement Mr. Booth also referred to another unsatisfactory feature of the present ICAO scale, namely, the unduly high per capita contributions of Canada and some other countries in comparison with the per capita contribution of the United States.

An increase in the proportion paid by the United States is now even more justified than at the time of the last ICAO Assembly. Since then, the United States has obtained a reduction in its contribution to the United Nations from 38.92 per cent to 36.90 per cent. This reduction amounts to about $850,000, since annual United Nations assessments total about $42,000,000. (It may be expected that the United States will seek further reductions in its United Nations assessment next year, to bring it down to the 33½ per cent level which Congress has recently established as the maximum to be paid by the United States to the budget of any of the United Nations organizations. In WHO and UNESCO the United States has already succeeded in reducing its assessment to the level of 33½ per cent; in ILO, as in ICAO, the United States pays only 25 per cent; the United States contribution to FAO was raised this year from 25 per cent to 30 per cent.)

The Council appears to be fully competent to increase the maximum, if the majority agrees that this should be done. It is probable, however, that the United States will strongly oppose any increase, and particularly an immediate increase to 33½ per cent. I believe, nevertheless, that the initial proposal should be for an increase in the maximum to the 33½ per cent level. If subsequent discussion reveals that the Council is unable to agree upon an increase to this level at once, the Council might be asked to adopt a smaller increase (say to 30%) as an interim arrangement, provided that a maximum contribution of 33½ per cent were accepted as a principle to be implemented in the near future.

An increase in the maximum contribution would make it easier for the Council to agree to the other principle of assessment for which Canada has been pressing in other United Nations bodies, namely, that no member should contribute, on a per capita basis, more than the largest contributor. It would be desirable if the proposal for an increase in the maximum contribution were also to include a proposal to limit the per capita contributions of member countries and to apply all, or part, of the increase in the maximum contribution toward the relief of countries paying unduly high per capita contributions.

We have in the past refrained from urging the acceptance of the per capita principle by ICAO. As long as the United States contribution is at its present low level, the adoption of this principle would require the transfer of relatively heavy burdens to other countries with lower per capita contributions, such as India and Pakistan. With an increase in United States contribution, however, the "per capita adjustments" would be smaller, and the principle could be implemented without causing hardship for any single member country.

I should like to emphasize the importance which this Department attaches to the acceptance of the per capita principle by United Nations organizations. It is difficult to justify the payment by Canada of a higher per capita contribution than the per capita contribution of the United States, whose citizens enjoy the highest per capita income in the world. United States representatives have themselves recognized the justice of making appropriate "per capita" adjustments to assessments, and have supported the adoption of the per capita principle in the United Nations, WHO and UNESCO. Mr. Booth should feel free to ask the United States representative for his support in gaining the adoption of this principle, and should also seek the support of representatives of the other countries with unduly high per capita contributions (see Annex).†

To sum up, it would be desirable if a proposal were put before the Council providing for the following adjustment in the 1953 scale of contributions:

(1) An increase in the level of the maximum contribution from 25 per cent to  $33\frac{1}{3}$  per cent. If it is impossible to obtain agreement for an immediate increase of this amount, Council should be asked to approve a partial increase (say to 30 per cent), with the adoption of a  $33\frac{1}{3}$  per cent maximum as a principle to be implemented in the near future.

(2) The limitation of per capita contributions so that no member country is required to pay, on a per capita basis, more than the country that pays the largest contribution. In the event that the maximum is not increased fully to  $33\frac{1}{3}$  per cent, this per capita principle might be accepted as a principle to be partially implemented now, and fully implemented when the maximum contribution reaches the  $33\frac{1}{3}$  per cent level.

Mr. Booth has suggested that since Portugal intends to introduce a proposal to increase the maximum contribution, it would suffice for Canada to support Portugal's proposal. If Portugal could be persuaded to include in its proposal a request for the adoption of the per capita principle, we can see certain advantages in having Portugal take the lead. However, if Portugal is not willing to include in its proposal the per capita feature, Mr. Booth should not hesitate to put forward this proposal in the name of Canada.

Yours very truly,

W.C. CLARK

Ottawa, January 26, 1952

Dear Mr. Booth:

Your letter of December 15th, 1951, concerning the scale of contributions to ICAO has been considered by this department and the Department of Finance.

It is our feeling that although there will be a further opportunity at the next General Assembly to raise the question of the maximum contribution, we should not permit the Council's proposed discussions of January 29th to be concluded without a presentation of our views on the subject. This does not mean that we need make complete proposals ourselves. We would be glad to see other members of the Council take the initiative on this question, and you can feel free to support any proposal put forward which accords with our views. If such a proposal does not completely meet our requirements you may, if you wish, try to persuade its sponsors to extend its terms. However, if no other members are willing to put forward a proposal which fully satisfies us, I would be grateful if you would submit one. It might be supplementary to a previous proposal or might present our whole case, whichever you think necessary.

I enclose copy of a letter dated January 23rd, 1952, from the Department of Finance which I think you will find most useful in this matter. You may be guided by the suggestions made in the final two paragraphs of the letter.

Yours sincerely,

*Le représentant auprès de l'OACI
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures Representative to ICAO to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

Montreal, February 13, 1952

Attention: Mr. J.A. Irwin

Dear Sir:

This is a report on action taken pursuant to your letter 72-ADU-3-40<sup>2</sup> of 26th January 1952 concerning the ICAO scale of contributions.

After consulting with the Representatives of Portugal and Brazil, I came to the conclusion that the views set forth in your letter could not be adequately expressed merely by supporting the proposals which they put forward. I therefore made my own proposals to Council:

- 1) That the maximum contribution be increased from 25% to 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ %; and
- 2) That no Member State be required to pay, on a per capita basis, more than the State which pays the largest contribution.

After informal discussions with a majority of Representatives here, I came to the conclusion that it was completely unrealistic to propose that the United States contribution should be raised to 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ % for 1953 and after consultation, by telephone, with Mr. Stone of the Department of Finance and your Mr. Irwin, I made a proposal to Council that the raising of the United States contribution to 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ % should be made in two equal steps for 1953 and 1954.

It was apparent from the discussions in Council that a number of the Representatives had not received instructions from their Governments and were reluctant to take a position on their own initiative. However, I forced to a vote my proposal that we should recommend to the Assembly for adoption as a principle that the maximum contribution should not exceed 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ %. This was resisted vigorously by the United States Representative who stated that, while his Government had accepted the 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ % limit for the United Nations, it had never agreed that this should be the limit in the Specialized Agencies. The main reason for this position was that in UN the United States had a preferred position in certain respects, whereas this was not the case in the Specialized Agencies.

This proposal was adopted on a vote of 11 for, 4 against with 5 abstaining. Those in favour were Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Ireland, Mexico, Portugal, Spain, South Africa, U.K. and Venezuela. Those against were Iraq, Italy, Netherlands and U.S. Those abstaining were Argentina, Denmark, Egypt, France and India. The Netherlands took the most extreme view which was that the highest contribution should not exceed 25%.

72-ADU-3-40 is actually the file number of the letter; see preceding document.

On the question of the U.S. contribution for 1953, there were a number of proposals which, for the purpose of avoiding confusion and also to enable us to have a clear-cut issue, it was agreed would be reduced to two:

- 1) That the United States contribution for 1953 should be 29%; and
- 2) That it should be 27%.

The U.S. Representative had said at an earlier stage that he would be prepared to recommend to his Government an increase to 27% but, when the proposal that the 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ % ceiling should be adopted as a principle was under discussion, he indicated that if it were adopted it might prejudice the attitude of his Government on this question. My proposal for 29% was voted on first and secured the support of only Australia, Mexico and Portugal with ten against and six abstentions. I believe the heavy vote against this proposal was due to the fact that the Americans did a considerable amount of lobbying and also that a number of the States concerned are receiving substantial aid of one kind or another from the United States and their Representatives were afraid to take the risk of prejudicing their relations with United States. The abstentions were mainly due to the lack of instructions. After my proposal had been defeated, the proposal for 27% was put and was adopted by 18 votes in favour with 2 abstentions.

It is my view that a well organized attempt, in the Assembly, to increase the U.S. contribution to 29% would have a fairly good chance of success.

My proposal that we should adopt as a principle that no Member State should be required to pay, on a per capita basis, more than the State paying the largest contribution was fully supported by Australia in the discussion with a little half hearted support from one or two others. It was very vigorously opposed by the U.K. and Denmark with U.S., Argentina, Ireland and a number of others concurring with them. After the decision was taken to recommend an increase to only 27% in the U.S. contribution for 1953, this principle had much less significance at this time and, as it was evident it would be thrown out in any event, I withdrew the proposal and asked that the Secretariat be directed to make a study of the question and report to the Council in the Fall session so that Council Representatives would be sufficiently informed to reach a considered decision. In particular, I asked that information be secured as to the basis on which this principle had been adopted by UN, WHO and UNESCO and the experience of the latter two organizations in its application. However, once again the U.K. (Tymms) was very vigorous in opposition and on the vote only 7 supported the proposal for a Secretariat study, with 11 against.

It would be in order to bring forward this proposal again a year from now but if we do so, it will be essential that I have all the information that can be secured, including the reasons for its adoption by the other Organizations, the experience of WHO and UNESCO in its application and also a clear indication of the consequences of its application to the ICAO scale. Merely to show what the effect would be on the States whose per capita contributions are higher than the per capita contribution of the United States has just the opposite of the desired result. On the basis of present experience, I feel that it will be necessary to make an extremely strong case if we are to have any hope of reversing the present attitude of Council.

In due course the Minutes of the meetings at which these matters were discussed will be available and I will send you copies.

Yours very truly,

C.S. BOOTH

Ottawa, April 22, 1952

Mr. Carl Ljungberg, who has recently taken up his post as Secretary-General of ICAO, will call on you on April 23rd. He has indicated that he will want to discuss with you a request from the Council of ICAO that the Canadian Government reduce the rent paid by ICAO for its headquarters offices in Montreal. A copy of a letter dated April 9th, 1952,† transmitting this request, is attached.

2. The space occupied by ICAO in the International Aviation Building in Montreal is rented by the Department of Public Works from Canadian National Railways who own the building, and is re-let by Public Works to ICAO. Public Works pay Canadian National Railways a rent amounting in all to about $3.44 per square foot of space, and re-let to ICAO at a rate of $2.66 per square foot. The Canadian Government is therefore at present subsidizing ICAO's rent at a rate of 78 cents per square foot. This comes to approximately $67,800.00 per annum. The rent paid by ICAO amounts to $231,473.00 per annum, which constitutes a large item in the Organization's annual budgets of around $3 million. The grounds for ICAO's request for further aid is that other specialized agencies of the United Nations have arrangements with their host governments which keep their rental rates for comparable accommodation far below the rate paid by ICAO.

3. A survey conducted this year by the ICAO Secretariat shows that other specialized agencies are paying rents at the following rates for accommodation comparable to that occupied by ICAO:

FAO in Rome — 32 cents per square foot;

ITU in Geneva — 52 cents per square foot;

UNESCO in Paris — 60 cents per square foot;

WHO in Geneva — 77 cents per square foot.

Certain specialized agencies own their headquarters buildings. The annual cost to some of them is as follows:

WHO in Geneva — $2.35 per square foot (including charges for the use of meeting rooms in the Palais des Nations);

ILO in Geneva — 58 cents per square foot;

UNESCO in Paris — (Place Fontenoy) 92 cents per square foot.

For further comparison, the new United Nations Manhattan Building is costing the U.N. $4.25 per square foot per annum. This figure and the figures for the WHO and ILO buildings and the UNESCO Place Fontenoy Building include amortization charges.

4. The ICAO Council's request for a reduction in rent is directly related to a desire on the part of a number of the Council members that the ICAO headquarters should be transferred from Montreal. Some Latin American member States led by Mexico have been aiming at this since the headquarters was established in Montreal in 1946. Since 1948 they have been joined by a number of the European members who find Montreal an expensive place in which to maintain their offices. I attach a memorandum of April 1st, 1952, prepared by Mr. Booth, our Representative to ICAO, which summarizes briefly previous developments on this question and which lists the present grounds for complaint against Montreal.† Mr. Booth has heard that the Governments of Mexico, Portugal and Switzerland are prepared to make offers of accommodation for ICAO. He believes that during the forthcoming ICAO Assembly, which will be limited to administrative and financial matters, a number of complaints will be registered concerning the high cost of operation in Montreal; that at the next main Assembly, which is due for 1953, these complaints will be followed up by a concerted attempt to transfer the headquarters.

5. There have also been indications under Dr. Roper's<sup>3</sup> régime of dissatisfaction over the privileges enjoyed by the Organization and its personnel since the signature of the Headquarters Agreement; and this dissatisfaction might contribute to the support of a movement to transfer the headquarters.

6. You will recall that the Government, at an early stage of the negotiations, volunteered its good offices to assist ICAO in negotiating an agreement with the Province of Quebec on provincial and municipal privileges, and that the Prime Minister did intervene personally with the Quebec Government on behalf of ICAO. No agreement regarding privileges has however been reached between ICAO and the Province of Quebec, and the Organization last December presented the Quebec Government with a "claim" for some $24,000 representing the refund of provincial and municipal taxes paid by the Organization since its establishment in Montreal. In notifying us of this demand, the Secretary General suggested that if the province declined to meet the claim, it should be paid by the federal government. Apparently it is not based on any undertaking given by the province but merely on the assumption by ICAO that it should enjoy a general exemption from all taxes, federal, provincial and municipal. Some further intercession with Quebec on our part may prove desirable, although the difficulty of such an approach has been increased by the somewhat arbitrary claim in question.

7. ICAO has also renewed the proposals which we declined in 1948 for postal franking privileges and a partial sharing of revenue from the sale of a special issue of stamps. The Deputy Postmaster General is vigorously opposed but has consented to defer a final refusal.

8. In addition, there have been minor difficulties over the question of customs privileges for subordinate personnel. It came to the attention of the Department of National Revenue last year that a considerable number of ICAO minor officials and employees had imported automobiles under New York registration and tourist permits, and were operating permanently on this basis. On our recommendation, National Revenue extended an amnesty to all of these car owners and granted free entry on a "first arrival" basis. Taking this as a precedent, ICAO then proposed that all of its personnel should be granted the free entry of one automobile, with subsequent replacement, although there is no provision for this in the Headquarters Agreement. The initial reaction of the Department of National Revenue is that it has no statutory authority for any customs privileges not covered by the Headquarters Agreement.

9. The Headquarters Agreement could possibly be made more generous with respect to privileges for officials of the Organization. The extension of extraordinary privileges to employees would involve problems vis-à-vis diplomatic missions and consular offices.

10. Currently, the Protocol Division is endeavouring to avoid or at least defer flat refusals of requests for privileges and any consequent pretext for further dissatisfaction over the location of the headquarters at Montreal.

I.C.A.O.

The Minister told me this morning that he was impressed by Mr. Ljungberg, the new Secretary-General of I.C.A.O., who called on him yesterday. The Minister thinks it desirable that efforts be made to make it possible for I.C.A.O. to remain in Montreal. He thinks that Cabinet should over-ride Mr. Turnbull's objections to granting I.C.A.O. certain money-making postal privileges. He is also prepared to raise in Cabinet the question of increasing the subsidy to the I.C.A.O. rent. Finally, he thinks that the Federal Government should probably act on behalf of I.C.A.O. in its dealings with the Provincial Government of Quebec on questions of immunities and privileges, since I.C.A.O. has not even been able to get an answer to the letter it wrote two years ago to the Provincial Government on this subject.

2. On the latter point I said that perhaps, as a first step, Mr. Lesage might be asked to speak to Mr. Rivard<sup>4</sup> when next Mr. Lesage visits Quebec City. The Minister thought this might be a good idea and that Mr. Lesage might make it clear through Mr. Rivard to the Quebec Government that the failure of the Province to meet the requests of I.C.A.O. would be one of the considerations which might lead I.C.A.O. to decide to leave Montreal.

3. Would you be good enough to prepare a memorandum for the Minister on the three points raised above so that he may raise the matter in Cabinet.

INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZATION;
CONCESSIONS IN RESPECT OF HEADQUARTERS IN MONTREAL

18. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said there was dissatisfaction in the International Civil Aviation Organization on the location of the Council Headquarters at Montreal, and certain members had expressed their desire that they be moved elsewhere. The I.C.A.O. Council had requested the Canadian government to reduce the rent now paid by the organization for the space occupied by its headquarters. In addition to the rental problem, there were several other objections advanced by the Council to location in Montreal.

Both the U.K. and U.S. governments were opposed to a transfer and had expressed the hope that the Canadian government would take steps to reduce the cost of maintaining the organization in Montreal. In the circumstances and in view of the desirability from the Canadian point of view of maintaining I.C.A.O. headquarters on Canadian soil, it was recommended that, in addition to the average annual government subsidy of $68,000 now granted on rental paid by the Organization, a further reduction of not more than $131,000 per annum be approved. The total average reduction of $199,000 would thus reduce the rental to $1.16 per square foot. It was further recommended that an effort be made to reconcile some of the differences which existed between I.C.A.O. and the government of Quebec and that the Post Office Department be requested to review their objections to the postal concessions requested by the Organization.

(a) the Secretary of State for External Affairs offer the International Civil Aviation Organization a further reduction of $131,000 in the annual rental now paid for the space occupied by the Organization in the International Aviation Building in Montreal;

(b) the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in consultation with the Prime Minister, explore the existing situation between I.C.A.O. and the government of Quebec and exercise his good offices with a view to improving that situation; and,

(c) the Secretary-General of I.C.A.O. be informed that the government reserved its decision on the Council's request relating to postal concessions pending a review of the situation which existed in respect of similar international bodies in other countries and, in particular, the present position of the United Nations Headquarters in New York.

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. PLUMPTRE

LOCATION OF THE HEADQUARTERS OF ICAO

I attach a brief account<sup>5</sup> of what happened at the opening plenary of the ICAO Assembly<sup>6</sup> yesterday. Should you wish to send this to the Acting Under-Secretary, there is also attached a covering memorandum for your signature.

2. The events of the day, while disappointing, make clear that we did not overestimate the seriousness of the move to transfer the Headquarters. A full-scale attack on Montreal had evidently been planned, and efforts will still be made to press it.

3. I think that this may require us to soften our line on two points covered in our instructions to the delegation. The first is the instruction that the delegation should oppose vigorously the holding of the 1953 Assembly in Geneva. If we were to take a really vigorous line on that subject, we might alienate some European votes which may be marginal on the Headquarters question.

4. The second is the question of the United States contribution. The United States have agreed that their contribution should be raised from 25 to 27% in 1953. We have instructed the delegation to press for an increase to 33½%. The United States will be one of our strongest and most influential supporters on the Headquarters question, and on this account perhaps we should not raise doubts in their minds by taking after them on contributions while the Headquarters question is undecided. There is always another year in which to campaign for an increase in their contribution, and after all, we have already obtained a 2% increase for 1953.

5. I do not think we need change our voting on those questions. My suggestion is that we should not take a lead on either. As far as the United States contribution is concerned, it now seems doubtful whether any other delegation will raise the point, and so we might confine ourselves for this year to a statement of views which will not call for discussion.

6. Our instructions on both these points were formulated in the Department of Finance. If you agree with the above suggestions, perhaps you would have a word with John Deutsch on the telephone. Baldwin feels as I do, and said that he also would speak to him. If Finance agree, we could pass the word to Booth to go easy.

SIXTH ASSEMBLY OF THE INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZATION

The question of moving the ICAO Headquarters came immediately into the open at the first plenary session of the Assembly, and there was little else mentioned in the five speeches which made up the programme for the afternoon.

2. Mr. Chevrier raised the question directly in his speech of welcome, and after announcing the decision to increase the subsidy on rent as an indication of the Government's good intentions, asked for more time to consider what might be done in other ways, for instance, in the way of postal privileges. Referring generally to issues between ICAO and the municipal and provincial governments, he expressed the Federal Government's hope that mutually satisfactory settlements would soon be reached. (He had said pointedly, earlier, that the City of Montreal and the Province of Quebec were the main beneficiaries from the presence of ICAO in Canada.)

3. This last statement evidently put Mayor Houde<sup>7</sup> off balance, and before he recovered he had (a) reassigned the responsibility for practically everything connected with ICAO to the Federal Government, and (b) suggested vaguely the establishment of a fund (mainly from Federal resources) to make life pleasanter for visiting delegates in Montreal. However, there were indications throughout his speech that he was anxious to keep ICAO in Montreal, and also to do something about the water tax which I believe is the one big issue between the Organization and the City.

4. The Portuguese Representative's speech was straight propaganda for a move of the Headquarters to Lisbon. In brief, his argument was:

(a) that high costs in Montreal due to lack of tax exemptions, high rents, high cost of living, and cost-of-living bonuses for employees had raised the ICAO budget to a point where many states could not afford to pay their contributions or to send delegations to Montreal;

(b) that to keep down its budget, ICAO would be forced to either reduce its work programme or to move to a place where the cost of living and salaries were low, where full facilities and low rents would be made available, and where full diplomatic privileges would be granted. Faced with these alternatives, ICAO, in his view, would have to move;

(c) that he was authorized by his Government to offer Lisbon as a new site and to promise that all the requisites would be made available. He called on other delegations interested in having ICAO in their capitals to make similar bids.

5. The Mexican delegate had more time to adjust himself to the new situation created by Mr. Chevrier's opening speech. While he appreciated the Canadian Government's action on rent, the real problem was the high and rising cost of living in Montreal about which the Canadian Government could do nothing. The Organization had to face the fact that it would have to either leave Montreal or cut out important parts of its programme. He hoped that the Assembly would direct the Council to study whether a move was desirable and to make recommendations to the 1953 Assembly.

6. The Italian delegate avoided the subject and spoke briefly. He said that in spite of financial difficulties his Government remained interested in ICAO.

7. Mr. Chevrier's speech was excellent and its timing most fortunate. It should take some of the force out of the attack on Montreal. But it became clear yesterday that the anti-Montrealers had planned to carry the issue very far at this Assembly, and that they will not drop it because of our concession on rent. They will have to take another basis — the high cost of living — for their attack, and while, in our view, they may not find firm ground, it remains to be seen what the sentiments of the Assembly will be.<sup>8</sup>

Dear Mr. Baldwin:

I have your letter of May 28, drawing attention to the possibility that efforts of the Canadian Delegation at the ICAO Assembly to obtain an increase in the United States contribution may have the effect of reducing United States support for the retention of the ICAO headquarters in Montreal. You suggest that it might be desirable to soften the text of the draft statement prepared in this Department for the head of the Canadian Delegation on the question of the United States assessment.

Although it is evident that there are a variety of motives behind the proposal for removing the ICAO headquarters to another location, it was our hope that a concession by Canada on the question of rental would enable the problem of headquarters location to be settled satisfactorily, and in advance of the discussion of 1953 assessments. It was also our hope that the United States would not be tempted to influence our efforts to adjust the scale of contributions so as to provide for a fair United States share of the expenses of the Organization by threatening withdrawal of support on the question of headquarters location.

I appreciate, however, the importance attached to the maintenance by ICAO of its headquarters in Montreal, and agree that it would be desirable to have the full support of the United States on this matter. In the circumstances, I agree with your suggestion that the head of the Canadian Delegation should have discretionary authority with regard to the efforts he should make to obtain an increase in the United States contribution. I feel, however, that he should maintain support for the Council's recommendation for an increase in the ceiling on contributions from 25 to 33⅓ per cent, and for an immediate increase in the United States contribution to 27 per cent. He should also, I feel, make it clear that Canada regards the proposed increase to 27 per cent as only a step towards raising the United States contribution to the new ceiling, and include in his statement an expression of Canadian views on the importance of the ultimate adoption by ICAO of the per capita principle. We are prepared, of course, to leave it to the head of the Delegation to determine how best to make known these views having in mind our interest in retaining U.S. support for the continued location of ICAO in Montreal.

Yours very truly,

Ottawa, June 12, 1952

POSTAL ACTIVITIES OF UNITED NATIONS AND SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

At the Universal Postal Congress presently in session at Brussels, and at ECOSOC meeting in New York, draft resolutions have been introduced to limit further postal activities in the United Nations and Specialized Agencies to those recommended by the General Assembly after consultation with the UPU.

2. Our Delegation to the Postal Congress has stated in their despatch No. 3 of May 29† that they will support such a resolution in the absence of further instructions. Our Delegation to ECOSOC has said in their letter No. 11 of June 6,† that in the Co-ordination Committee they have already expressed agreement with the principles of the resolution. If the Canadian Delegations to UPU and ECOSOC support these proposals, such action would be inconsistent with any further endeavours to obtain Cabinet approval for special postal arrangements for ICAO.

3. Mr. Reid wrote a memorandum for the Economic Division on April 25 in which he mentioned your view that Cabinet should override the objections of the Deputy Postmaster General to granting ICAO certain money-making postal privileges. You will recall your recommendation in a memorandum to Cabinet dated May 14, 1952 "that the postal authorities be asked to review their objections to the postal concessions requested by ICAO. . . ." It is understood that Cabinet reserved its decision with respect to this recommendation.

4. In your letter of May 30 to the Postmaster General you urged him to give favourable consideration to the proposed postal arrangements for ICAO. However, on June 9, the Postmaster General replied that "if it is imperative that something be done to further improve the financial condition of ICAO, that we should pursue some other course, rather than to depreciate a practice which has hitherto been unquestionably beyond criticism or censure." The Postmaster General expressed full agreement with the principles embodied in the draft resolution now before the UPU Congress and implied approval of the similar draft resolution which has been introduced at ECOSOC.

5. In order to prevent action by Canadian Delegations at UPU and ECOSOC which might be inconsistent with domestic action with respect to ICAO, it appears that one of the following courses might be pursued:

(a) if it is your intention to raise this matter again in Cabinet, our Delegations to UPU and ECOSOC might be instructed to abstain when the relevant resolutions are put to the vote. Such instructions would not, of course, be to the liking of the Head of our Delegation to UPU, who is the Deputy Postmaster General; and our Delegation to ECOSOC might be somewhat embarrassed because they have already, in the Coordination Committee, agreed in principle with the resolution which is before them. Instructions to abstain would have to be sent on the sole authority of the Department of External Affairs as it is unlikely that the Post Office Department would agree in view of the opinions expressed by the Postmaster General in his letter to you of June 9; or

(b) as the principles of coordination embodied in the resolutions before UPU and ECOSOC are supported by our Delegation to UPU, as well as by the Delegations of the United States, the United Kingdom, and France; and as our Delegation to ECOSOC has already expressed publicly its approval of the same principles, it might be decided that the recommendation to Cabinet for special postal arrangements for ICAO should be dropped. If this is done, it would not be necessary for us to send further instructions to the UPU Delegation as they have said that they will support the relevant resolution unless they are instructed to the contrary; and our Delegation to ECOSOC is also giving its approval to the similar resolution before that body.

6. If course (b) is followed, we may have to face criticism from ICAO and further pressure for the removal of the headquarters of that Organization from Canada. However, there might also be criticism if it should become apparent that Canada has withdrawn support for coordination measures in the international sphere because of domestic interests. If the resolutions before UPU and ECOSOC are approved, and the principles embodied therein are subsequently adopted by the General Assembly, the matter of special postal arrangements for ICAO will then be out of our hands and this will be an answer to any subsequent criticism which may arise in ICAO circles.

7. May we have your advice please as to whether course (a) or course (b) should be followed? We do not know when the resolution is to be put to the vote at the Universal Postal Congress and this could happen at any moment.<sup>9</sup>

LOCATION OF THE ICAO HEADQUARTERS

A Portuguese motion leading toward a transfer of the Headquarters from Montreal was debated in the Executive Committee of the ICAO Assembly on June 9th and was defeated by the very close vote of fourteen to thirteen. The motion would have directed the Council to study the relative advantages of alternative sites and report to the 1953 Assembly. An ICAO Working Paper with the text of the Portuguese resolution is attached.†

2. The same motion, somewhat modified, was re-introduced in the final plenary session of the Assembly on June 12th. This time, it was defeated by 17 votes to 13, with 5 or 6 abstentions. The Head of our Delegation to the Assembly has told us that the additional strength on the side of Montreal in this vote was due mainly to lobbying by the United States Delegation.

3. The Headquarters issue overshadowed all the proceedings of the Assembly and there was a sharpness in the tone of the debates hardly in keeping with the rather pedestrian questions of finance and administration which filled the order papers. We had a preview of the debates on this issue when, earlier in the proceedings, the Executive Committee discussed the location of next year's Assembly. The group who wish to move the Headquarters were determined to hold the 1953 Assembly outside of Montreal. Opposition came from the United States, Ireland and the Commonwealth Delegations, with the exception of India. The Australian Delegation took advantage of this debate to attack the motives of the anti-Montreal group. He said that everyone was aware that a critical issue — the location of the Headquarters — was going to come up at the 1953 Assembly and, in the view of his Government, it was "hardly frank, hardly straightforward" and certainly not in the interest of the good name of ICAO that the debate on this question be held outside the host country. This brought a furious though equivocating reply from the Mexican Delegate, who is one of the founder members of the anti-Montreal group. The vote was 20 to 9 in favour of holding the 1953 Assembly outside of Montreal.

4. Of our friends on the Headquarters question, the United States has certainly been the most active and probably the most influential. The United States Government made tentative approaches through its diplomatic missions to some Member States, and its delegation at Montreal lobbied energetically. The United Kingdom Delegation were also lobbying. We had firm support from the Australian, New Zealand, South African and Irish Delegations.

5. The Delegations of Egypt, Iraq and Israel came down on our side. For these votes we can probably thank the United States and United Kingdom Delegations.

6. Leaders of the anti-Montreal faction were the Portuguese and Mexican Delegates, strongly supported by the French, Dutch, Belgians and Indians. All of the Latin American Delegations and all of the other Western European Delegations, except Norway, Italy and Sweden, supported them. Sweden abstained.

7. We can hardly hope that the close vote in this year's Assembly will dispose of the issue for good. It will probably be revived in one form or another next year unless something occurs to discourage the anti-Montreal group. If we remain anxious to keep the Headquarters in Montreal it is clear from our experience of this year that we should continue doing what we can to eliminate the grounds for anti-Montreal propaganda. Settlement in favour of ICAO of the questions of postal privileges and Quebec provincial taxes would help considerably and would no doubt be welcomed by the other Governments who are working to keep the Headquarters in Montreal. Of these, the postal privileges are obviously of lesser value to ICAO but they are being emphasized by some delegates out of proportion to their importance. The Delegate of Portugal offered what he called "full" postal privileges for the Organization at Lisbon, and the Mexican Delegate offered franking privileges if the Organization should go to Mexico City.

8. Also, we might consider making direct approaches some time during the next nine months to some of the Governments whose delegates voted against us.<sup>11</sup> A good many of these delegates are Council members living permanently in Montreal, and we think that some of them at least are operating mainly on grounds of personal preference. They find life expensive in Montreal, and anyway, prefer to live in Western Europe. We might gain the votes of some of them by making clear to their Governments our interest in retaining the Headquarters. A case could be made on the grounds that, with the exception of ICAO, all of the Specialized Agencies which can be moved are now in Western Europe and that in fairness ICAO should be allowed to remain in North America where such a large part of the world's civil aviation activities are carried on. If we decide to do something along this line, we should probably concert beforehand with the United States and United Kingdom Governments on timing, and the arguments to be used. They will most probably be willing to make similar representations in support of Montreal.

9. One cheerful note to be added is that the City of Montreal is apparently about to grant ICAO a remission of water taxes. According to an ICAO official, the cut will reduce the Organization's water bill from $16,000 to about $4,000 annually. If the Quebec Provincial Government could see its way clear to doing something similar about sales taxes and automobile licenses, our cause would be aided considerably.

4. ADMINISTRATIVE COMMISSION

The Administrative Commission met eighteen times between the 28th of May and the 12th of June. The main subjects discussed were the budget, the site of the Seventh Session of the Assembly, the apportionment of expenses and the method of financing the Organization.

Apportionment of Expenses

The Commission considered the principles and methods to be employed in constructing the scale of contributions for 1953. The discussion was based on the report of the Council on this matter.<sup>12</sup> The most important point discussed was the method of distributing the difference between the maximum contribution obtained by application of the approved principles and the fixed maximum contribution (under the present ceiling of 27% for the U.S.) among the remaining Contracting States. In previous years, this amount was allocated by a power curve which worked to the advantage of the larger contributors. A group of the smaller States, lead by Portugal and Egypt, proposed that the difference should be distributed by the pro rata method. After considerable debate, the Commission approved the Council's compromise proposal that the difference be distributed according to a formula which would be approximately the mean between the power curve and the pro rata distribution. The Commission also endorsed the other recommendations regarding principles and methods of assessment made by the Council.

Following this action, the Commission referred the scale of assessments prepared by the Secretary General to a Working Group made up of members nominated by Brazil, Denmark, France, Republic of the Philippines and the United States. The Working Group made a few unimportant changes in the scale recommended by the Secretary General. The draft resolution submitted by the Working Group was approved by the Commission, with the exception of the assessment for Bolivia which was reduced from 3 to 2 units.

The Commission later discussed the principles and methods to be used in preparing the scale of contributions for 1954. In this case it accepted the Egyptian/Portuguese proposal and decided that the difference between the maximum contribution obtained by application of the approved principles and the fixed maximum contribution should be distributed by the pro rata method. In addition, the Commission rejected an American proposal to delete any mention of a 33⅓% ceiling on contributions.<sup>13</sup> In view of the reluctance of other delegations to oppose the United States, the Canadian Delegate found it necessary to speak first in opposition to the U.S. proposal. It can be assumed that next year the U.S. contribution will be further increased by approximately 10%.

The Commission also authorized the Council to study:

(a) the basis of evaluation of Interest and Importance in Civil Aviation, taking into account the extent of the aircraft industry, the extent of non-scheduled operations, the distribution between international and domestic operations, the investments in aviation facilities and the traffic utilizing such facilities and any other factors which it considers relevant, with a view to determining a more satisfactory basis than the previously used and report thereon to the next session of the Assembly;

(b) the per capita principle on the basis of all available information, including the reasons for its adoption, the methods of application and the results achieved by the UN, WHO and UNESCO; and to report thereon to the Seventh Session of the Assembly.

A proposal for a study by the Council of the per capita principle was put forward by the Canadian delegation and adopted. Members of the Canadian delegation had to do considerable spade work among delegations directly affected in order to whip up sufficient interest to secure the necessary support. The U.S. delegation were extremely cool to the proposal on the ground that it was premature and abstained on the vote.

In the final Plenary Meeting, the United Kingdom Delegation proposed that the apportionment of expenses should also take account of the benefits conferred on civil aviation by a Member State.<sup>14</sup> This proposal was adopted by the Plenary.

As a result of the strong attempts that were being made to lay the ground work for moving the Headquarters from Montreal and the need for American support to defeat these attempts, the Canadian Delegation came to the conclusion that it would be unwise to adhere fully to the instructions on contributions. The instructions indicated that the Delegation should press for an increase in the American contribution above the 27% recommended by the Council and the adoption of the per capita principle. A fairly thorough canvass of delegations disclosed that a proposal to increase the American contribution above 27% would receive very limited support. The same canvass indicated that very few delegations were prepared to accept the per capita principle. In addition to these factors, the American Delegation made it clear that strong attempts on the part of Canada to increase their contribution might "destroy the solidarity on the Headquarters issue." After weighing these factors, it appeared to the Canadian Delegation that the most they could hope to achieve at this Assembly was a recommendation that Council study the per capita principle.

LOCATION OF THE ICAO HEADQUARTERS

On June 16 you approved the proposal that, after consultation with the United Kingdom and the United States, direct approaches be made to some of those Governments whose delegates voted against us on the Portuguese motion which, if passed, would possibly have led toward transfer of the ICAO Headquarters from Montreal.

2. [H.O.] Moran and Baldwin, Chairman of the Air Transport Board, met with United States officials in Washington on July 21 to consider the best method of approaching some of those countries in order to persuade them not to support any further move which might lead to the removal of ICAO from Montreal.

3. It is likely that this question will be raised again in the course of the ICAO Council meeting set for September 9, and in any event, it is almost bound to be reopened at the next Assembly.

Text of this Amendment contained in A6-WP/51.

4. These officials were of the opinion that, due to the imminence of the Council meeting and to the fact that eleven of the twenty-one countries represented on the Council voted in favour of removal, action should be taken without delay, and that representations should be made to those countries on the Council that previously voted for removal, drawing attention:

(a) to the importance of maintaining a balance in the location of the Headquarters of the Specialized Agencies of the United Nations (FAO, UNESCO, WHO, ILO all have their Headquarters in Europe) and,

(b) to the argument that it would not be fitting for the Council to reconsider the decision of the whole Assembly to reject the resolution to move the ICAO Headquarters.

It was agreed that approaches should not be made to countries which had not supported removal nor to Latin American countries.

5. Moran suggested that approaches be made by Canadian representatives in countries that are members of NATO as well as of ICAO with the exception of Portugal and the addition of Sweden. These countries would be Belgium, Denmark, France, The Netherlands, Norway and Sweden. He also thought that it might be useful for our High Commissioner in New Delhi to raise the question with the Indian authorities. The United States officials believed that they could approach Belgium, France, The Netherlands and Portugal and possibly also Venezuela. The meeting agreed that the United Kingdom might be asked to make representations in the three Scandinavian countries, which will be represented by Denmark at the Council meeting.

6. Should these proposals be approved, it is felt that since both Canadian and the United States Missions in Belgium, France and The Netherlands would be approaching the Government to which they are accredited, the Canadian Head of Mission should first raise the question with the Governmental authorities concerned and that the United States Head of Mission would soon after make similar representations. Moran suggested that any representations made by Canada abroad would also be accompanied by parallel representations through our United Nations delegate to the United Nations delegate of the country approached.

7. Thorp<sup>15</sup> of the State Department said that, although the United States would not be making representations in Latin American capitals with the possible exception of Caracas, consideration would be given to the desirability of having the United States delegate to the United Nations approach his Latin American colleagues, stressing the procedural point that the possibility of moving the Headquarters had been fully considered by the ICAO Assembly and that, therefore, the matter should not be reopened again by the Council.

8. Even if the Council does not consider the Assembly's decision, there seems little doubt that the Headquarters question will be raised again at the 1953 Assembly in view of the close vote at the last meeting and the apparent dissatisfaction with Montreal on the part of members of the Council. Further representations may well be necessary before the 1953 meeting.

9. If you agree, we would propose that, in concert with their United States colleagues, our Heads of Mission in Belgium, France and The Netherlands make representations to the Government to which they are accredited along the lines of paragraph 4, and that our Head of Mission in India make similar representations unilaterally. We would also propose that the United Kingdom be kept fully informed of the steps we intend taking and asked to make similar representations in Denmark, Norway and Sweden in concert with our Heads of Mission in those countries.<sup>16</sup>

In a message from New York, Moran has suggested that Mexico be included among those countries to which we are making representations in connection with the campaign to move ICAO Headquarters from Montreal.

When he called on the Mexican Foreign Minister, Moran was told that Mexico had supported the Portuguese motion in the ICAO Assembly which could have led to a move of the Headquarters because the Mexican authorities had been informed by their Council member that the Canadian Government was not interested in retaining ICAO in Canada.

When assured that we wished to retain the organization in Canada, Señor Tello said his Government would oppose a move if the question were raised again in the Assembly.

All the Latin American delegations strongly supported the Portuguese motion, and the Mexican delegation was the leader of the group. It is considered that the solidarity of the Latin American countries on this question would be broken if Mexico declared itself in favour of ICAO remaining in Montreal.

We have consulted the United States authorities to see if they would be willing to instruct their Ambassador in Mexico City to make representations in concert with our Head of Mission there similar to those proposed for the other countries.

We have now been informed that the United States authorities believe that such representations by their Ambassador in concert with ours would do our cause more harm than good. Apparently relations in air matters between Mexico and the United States have been severely strained lately because of difficulties in the current negotiations for a bilateral air agreement between the two countries.

Consequently since Moran seems to have received a cordial reception from the Mexican Foreign Minister and since there is no indication of strain in our relations with the Mexican air authorities it seems to me that representations might be made unilaterally by Mr. Hébert.<sup>17</sup> Do you agree?<sup>18</sup>

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, November 27, 1952

Dear Brigadier Booth:

Following our telephone conversation of October 15 and subsequent discussion in my office, I have, as you suggested, examined your personal letter of October 17, 1950, to Mr. Blouin, with the attached Draft Agreement for negotiation between the Province of Quebec and ICAO. I have also discussed this draft with the interested divisions.

We all share your view that a large part of this draft was unnecessary and might better have been omitted. In fact, I am inclined to think that presentation of the draft was itself a tactical error. It is a rather formidable document and goes far beyond the field of provincial jurisdiction. I can well believe that the Quebec authorities were embarrassed and disturbed at the prospect of such sweeping undertakings, and this may in part account for their subsequent unresponsive attitude.

We are in full agreement with you that you should not yourself intercede even informally with the Quebec authorities on behalf of the Organization. However, I do think that it could be of great assistance if you would suggest to the Secretary-General informally that a much less conventional approach to the whole question of this Quebec Agreement might be more fruitful. My own impression is that the best chance of making progress in this matter would lie in canvassing verbally with the Quebec authorities the whole question of the Organization's actual needs and the ability of the province to satisfy them, leaving written communications to a later stage when some sort of entente has been arrived at by discussion. It is even possible that a written agreement could

We have endeavoured to make it clear at all times that within the provincial jurisdiction the province is its own mistress, and I think that the ICAO representatives in these negotiations should keep it in mind that the form of agreement concluded with the Federal Government will not necessarily be accepted either as a precedent or a pattern by the provincial authorities.

Our Legal Division is hesitant about offering detailed comments on the text of the Draft Agreement as it feels that it would be more profitable for the Organization in its negotiations to concentrate on a brief summary of what is wanted and the possibility for the province of implementation by administrative direction under existing legislation and, if possible, to avoid any discussion of a formal agreement.

I think it should be added that in our view the whole question of inviolability and immunity from legal process has already been covered by the Headquarters Agreement with the Federal Government and lies within the federal jurisdiction. The same is of course true of the admission free of duty and taxes of articles purchased by the Organization or its privileged personnel. While the cooperation of the provincial authorities in protecting the rights conferred by the Headquarters Agreement is necessary, I do not think that matters which have already been determined by the Headquarters Agreement should become the subject of a separate formal agreement with the province. I believe in fact, and I think you agree, that it would be unwise to submit a new draft of any sort to the Quebec authorities at least until there have been further consultations with them and a firm understanding has been reached on the whole subject.

This letter is, of course, quite unofficial and informal. I should be glad to know whether it meets with your views and I should, of course, be glad to discuss the whole matter further with you if you think that would be useful.

Yours sincerely,

H.F. FEAVER

Our representative on the Council of I.C.A.O., Brigadier Booth, states that no progress whatever has been made in the effort of I.C.A.O. to arrive at an agreement with the Province of Quebec regarding privileges. Discussion of a possible transfer of I.C.A.O. headquarters away from Canada is almost certain to be renewed at the next meeting of the Assembly and the chief remaining sense of grievance seems to be based on what the Organization regards as an attitude of indifference on the part of the Quebec authorities. Brigadier Booth feels, and I agree, that some friendly intervention from Ottawa at the earliest opportunity seems desirable.

You may recall that the Cabinet last June left the question of any such intervention to me in consultation with yourself. I do not know whether you may wish to exercise your own good offices, possibly during the holiday season. In the alternative, it has been suggested that Mr. Lesage might be asked to discuss with Mr. Duplessis the very real risk of our losing the I.C.A.O. headquarters.

If you would care to indicate your wishes in this matter, I should be glad to have any necessary factual material prepared. I attach a copy of Brigadier Booth's letter of December 5+ on this subject.<sup>19</sup>

LOCATION OF ICAO HEADQUARTERS

Reference: Your despatch No. 1548 of October 4, 1952.+

ICAO Council decided this month on Brighton, England, as the site for the 1953 Assembly. We understand that the debate on the issue was tense though restrained; for some time the Council vote was evenly split between Paris and Brighton. The question was settled only after the United Kingdom and French civil aviation authorities had conferred privately with the result that the French bid for the Assembly was withdrawn.

2. We had considerable sympathy for the French desire to have the Seventh Assembly in Paris and might well have supported it if certain considerations had not intervened. But the French representative and some other representatives on the Council who supported Paris have previously been prominent among those who have aimed at transferring the ICAO Headquarters from Montreal. The United Kingdom, the United States and, speaking generally, the representatives who supported London, have been on our side on that question. The United States representative, in particular, felt that the Headquarters question is likely to be raised again, directly or indirectly, at the next Assembly and that some of the representatives supporting Paris were doing so because they hoped that the holding of an Assembly there would provide advantages for further attacks on the Montreal location of the Headquarters. In the circumstances we were forced to conclude — though we did so reluctantly — that we must support the United Kingdom bid.

3. I think it would probably not be wise to advise the French authorities officially of our reasons for supporting Brighton. However, should the question be raised with you again you might be glad to have as background the information given above, and also the following, which is by way of comment on the French note of October 4th and your despatch No. 1548.

4. The existence in the ICAO Council of a group who for reasons which we do not think have much validity wish to move the Headquarters from Montreal, sometimes make our position difficult. It is possible that our vote on the site of the Seventh Assembly would have been different if the Headquarters question had not existed. We have considerable sympathy for France and other Western European countries who wish to strengthen their influence in ICAO and to increase their national representation in the Secretariat and we would welcome the achievement of a broader and more equitable national representation in the Secretariat, always providing that present levels of competence are not thereby sacrificed. But we regret the employment in the Council of “bloc” tactics by some Western European and Latin American members. We would certainly oppose the extension of this tendency to the Secretariat, or, for that matter, any attempts to use elements in the Secretariat either to advance national interests or to counteract the influence of other member nations in ICAO affairs. In our view it should be quite possible, given the generally technical character of ICAO’s activities, to maintain a disinterested and impartial attitude within the Secretariat. It seems to us highly important for the prestige of ICAO and the morale of the Secretariat that such an attitude be maintained.

5. Concerning the election of the Secretary-General in 1951, our vote was influenced to some extent by the fact that the previous Secretary-General was a Frenchman. At the same time we were strongly impressed by LJUNGBERG’s qualifications for the post. Since ICAO employs a salaried president of the Council who is the senior official of the Organization and who looks after all “political” responsibilities, the duties of the Secretary-General are very much administrative in character. LJUNGBERG impressed us as being particularly strong in the administrative field. His previous experience as Director-General of civil aviation for the Swedish Government had been administrative rather than political; also, he possessed quite a lot of experience in ICAO affairs.

6. We were glad to have Parodi's<sup>20</sup> assurances on the Headquarters question and hope that they are an indication of what attitude we can expect from the French if the question is revived at the Seventh Assembly. For our part we would be glad to give the most careful consideration to what candidates the French authorities may put up for posts in ICAO, though of course we can make no commitments in advance on that subject.

Ottawa, January 23, 1953

Following my memorandum of December 23 I understand that the Prime Minister requested Mr. Emery Beaulieu, Q.C., to speak to Mr. Duplessis on the subject of provincial privileges for ICAO. I do not know whether Mr. Beaulieu has yet acted on this request.<sup>21</sup> I have learned, however, that the Secretary General of ICAO intends to re-open his correspondence with Mr. Duplessis in the immediate future, and it seems desirable that any good offices on behalf of the Prime Minister should be exercised at the earliest possible opportunity.

LOCATION OF ICAO HEADQUARTERS

As requested by the Chairman, herewith a statement summing up action taken last autumn by Canada in concert with the U.S. and the U.K. in an attempt to persuade certain countries not to support any further move which might lead to the removal of the ICAO Headquarters from Montreal.

First, a word about what happened at the 1952 Assembly. The anti-Montreal faction, consisting mainly of Latin-American and west European representatives at ICAO, which has been agitating for the past three years for the transfer of the ICAO Headquarters from Montreal, put to a vote a Portuguese proposal calling for a study of alternative sites. This was considered an important step preparatory to a final decision at this year's Assembly. The proposal was defeated, but only by the narrow margin of 14 to 13 votes in the Executive Committee and 17 to 13 votes in the final Plenary. The following are the particulars of the vote (the countries that changed their position in the second vote are underlined):

Executive Committee

For: Argentina, Belgium, Brazil, Cuba, Denmark, Dominican Republic, France, India, Mexico, the Netherlands, Portugal, Spain and Venezuela. (13)

Against: Australia, Canada, Egypt, Greece, Iceland, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, New Zealand, Norway, Philippine Republic, United Kingdom, Union of South Africa, and the United States. (14)

Abstentions: Austria, Indonesia, Italy, Liberia, Sweden, Switzerland, and Thailand. (7)

Plenary

For: Argentina, Belgium, Brazil, Cuba, Denmark, France, India, Mexico, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain and Venezuela. (13)

Against: Australia, Austria, Canada, Egypt, Greece, Iceland, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Liberia, New Zealand, Philippine Republic, Turkey, United Kingdom, Union of South Africa and the United States. (17)

Abstentions: Indonesia, Sweden, Switzerland and Thailand. (4)

As it appeared likely that the issue might be raised again in the ICAO Council during the course of its fall session, Mr. Baldwin and Mr. Moran met United States officials in Washington last July to discuss the matter and make plans to stave off any further attempt to move the headquarters from Montreal. It was agreed that as a first step, representations should be made to those governments represented on the ICAO Council who had voted in favour of the Portuguese proposal in the 1952 Assembly. Accordingly,

Canada undertook to approach the governments of the following countries: Belgium, Denmark, France, India, Mexico, the Netherlands, Norway and Sweden.

The United States agreed to make similar representations in: Belgium, France, the Netherlands, Portugal and Venezuela.

The United Kingdom was to be asked by Canada to instruct their Heads of Mission in Denmark, Norway and Sweden to make representations in concert with their Canadian colleague. In addition,

a) representations made by Canada abroad were to be accompanied by parallel representations through the Canadian representatives at the UN Headquarters to the UN delegate of the country approached;

b) the United States were to request their delegate to the UN to approach his Latin-American colleagues.

The Canadian representations were made last September with the following results:

Belgium

The Belgium Government showed sympathetic consideration to our representation and later informed that they had instructed their representative at ICAO "to vote in present circumstances in favour of maintaining the seat of this Organization in Montreal."

Denmark

The Danish attitude was that while they favoured a study being made of other possible sites, they were not necessarily against the Canadian desire to retain the headquarters in Montreal. Moreover, in view of the adverse vote in the 1952 Assembly, their representative on the ICAO Council had been instructed to oppose reconsideration of the matter by the Council at this time.

France

The French representative at ICAO was instructed by his Government not to support any suggestion that the question be discussed in Council at this stage. We were also informed, however, that the French authorities did not wish to commit themselves as to the attitude of the French Government should the location of the ICAO Headquarters come up for discussion at the 1953 Assembly.

India

The Indian authorities seemed to think that one's attitude to this question would depend on one's geographical location and how much hard currency one had. While sympathetic to the Canadian desire to maintain the headquarters in Montreal, they were not prepared to do more than to promise to give the matter "close consideration."

Mexico

The Mexican Government assured us that instructions would be sent to their delegates to oppose any proposal to transfer headquarters from Montreal, both in the Council and at the next meeting of the Assembly. The Mexican authorities were not prepared, however, to instruct them to oppose a motion in the Council, should it be presented, to study the merits of alternative sites.

Netherlands

The Dutch attitude may also be summed up as being a neutral one. The lack of cooperation from Quebec provincial authorities was especially mentioned; it was felt that a favourable and early decision by the Quebec Government would go a long way to strengthen the position vis-à-vis the Dutch and other delegations.

Norway

The Norwegian authorities indicated that they did not wish the question to be raised again in the ICAO Council and that if it were, they would vote against on grounds that the Council should not reconsider Assembly decisions.

Sweden

The Swedish position was the same as that of Norway. The Swedish authorities added, however, they were not interested in having the question raised at the 1953 Assembly.

With regard to the U.S. and U.K. representations, there is not a great deal of information on file. We have some indication that a number of contacts were made by the U.S. and we may assume that what they agreed to do last autumn was actually carried out. Our file does not disclose, however, whether the U.K. supported our representations in the three Scandinavian countries nor does it disclose what the results of the U.S. and U.K. (if any) representations were. I have checked with Miss Wilson of the U.S. Embassy and Mr. Hyndman of External to ascertain whether they have some information on the results of the representations made by the U.S. and U.K. governments. Miss Wilson has no more information than we have; Mr. Hyndman has promised to look this up and let me know.

It will be noted that the approaches we made last September were confined to a certain number of countries represented on the ICAO Council. Moreover, these representations had the limited aim of preventing the headquarters question from being raised in the Council. With this in mind, it may be said that the effort was successful since the question was not raised in the Council. There seems little doubt, however, that the matter will be discussed again at the 1953 Assembly in view of the close vote at the last meeting and the apparent dissatisfaction with Montreal on the part of a number of States. Therefore, further representations on a broader scale might well be necessary before the 1953 meeting.

Following for Moran from Heeney, Begins: I understand that before you left Ottawa the Chairman of the Air Transport Board asked you to take some sounding in Mexico City, Lima,<sup>22</sup> and Rio de Janeiro about the possibility of obtaining traffic rights for a Canadian airline at those points. I see no objection to your making informal enquiries and would be glad to hear of your plans on the matter. The following information may be useful to you.

2. The Air Transport Board are thinking in terms of bilateral agreements to provide for services by a designated Canadian airline from Vancouver to Mexico City and onward to Lima and Rio de Janeiro. They would not, repeat not, seek Fifth Freedom Rights<sup>23</sup> in the United States but would wish to obtain such for traffic between the above-mentioned points. As a temporary measure they might wish to obtain permission for a designated Canadian airline to obtain charter flights to the three cities over a period of six months in order to explore traffic possibilities. If agreements are negotiated they may decide to include rights for a Canadian airline from Montreal to Mexico City and Rio de Janeiro. A decision on this point would depend on TCA views which are not yet known and on what reciprocal demands are made.

3. We have previously had inconclusive negotiations with Brazil and Peru on civil aviation agreements. In January 1950 we approached Mexico and Peru concerning CPAL<sup>24</sup> plans to operate charter flights from Vancouver. You will probably find sufficient details for your purpose on our Missions' files.

Before reopening the question even informally with the Mexican authorities, I should like to know why the proposed negotiations were not carried out at that time.

With reference to the exchange of telegrams of January 9th and January 14th, 1950, on the possibility of Canadian Pacific Airlines operating charter flights between Vancouver and Mexico, was anything further done?

In 1948 the Mexicans requested negotiations, but when we offered them a draft for an agreement they did not reply. We were not then sufficiently interested to revive the matter.

2. Our enquiry of January 9th, 1950 was made at the request of Canadian Pacific Airlines. Their plans were tentative and they apparently decided not to proceed with them at that time.

3. With this, you will have as much information as is available here. You will note that at present we simply wish to explore the possibility of obtaining a route from Vancouver to Mexico City and points beyond. We will not raise the question of a route from Eastern Canada now but we might do so later on if negotiations develop on a bilateral agreement.

4. It might suit us best if, as a temporary arrangement, the Mexican authorities agreed to permit a Canadian airline to fly a series of flights between Vancouver, Mexico City and points beyond to test traffic potentialities. The flights would be on a scheduled basis of one a week or less and would continue for some months. They would help us to decide whether a formal agreement is likely to be worthwhile. Would you please find out what the chances are of obtaining such an arrangement.

5. If the Mexicans insist on having a formal agreement before granting any traffic rights, we will probably wish to negotiate.

As Mexican Minister of Communications absent in United States, I delegated Blanchette<sup>25</sup> to call on Director General of Civil Aviation concerning your proposal.

2. Much to our surprise the Director General agreed in principle to scheduled, repeat scheduled, flight between Vancouver and Mexico City for designated Canadian air lines to explore traffic possibilities and gave verbal assurance of Mexican readiness to negotiate Civil Air Agreement if necessary. He promised to confirm these statements in writing after consultation with his Minister.

3. Director General asked what "points beyond" were concerned in our request but did not press the matter. He added he did not think traffic possibilities would be great between Mexico City and Vancouver. For your information he also told Blanchette that Mexican Government would approach United States Government with a view to re-negotiating current Civil Air Agreement.

negotiation. You might say that we would be glad to consider any changes they may wish to see made in it.

2. You will note from the terms of our draft that the actual rights to be exchanged will depend on what routes are laid down in the schedule to the Agreement. If the Mexican authorities can accept the general form of the draft, our further negotiations with them will be concerned mainly with the question of route designation. Though we are not yet entirely clear on what we will ask for, you may inform them as a preliminary indication that we are primarily interested in a route from Vancouver to Mexico City with onward rights to Peru and Brazil. If Canadian Pacific Airlines are authorized to operate over such a route, they could probably begin services in 1953. We will not be interested in an intermediate stop in the United States.

3. Further, we might wish to exchange rights on a route from Eastern Canada to Mexico City. On the Canadian side, such a route would probably be operated from Montreal or Toronto by Trans-Canada Airlines as an extension of one of their present Caribbean routes. Again, we would not be interested in intermediate rights in the United States.

4. We would be glad to hear of anything you may learn about what rights the Mexican authorities would be likely to ask for in exchange.

Dear Mr. Hébert,

The President of Trans-Canada Airlines, Mr. Gordon MacGregor, has reported to me a conversation which he had on April 9, with a representative of Aerovias Guest, S.A., and whose name he understood to be Montero. The story told by Montero is that recently a Dutch delegation headed by Prince Bernhard and including representatives of KLM<sup>26</sup> called upon the President of Mexico and asked for Mexican traffic rights for two distinct KLM services: the one between Mexico City and Caracas and other between Canada and Mexico City, via Monterey (the Monterey stop being introduced for operational reasons, due to the elevation of Mexico City).

2. According to Montero, the Dutch delegation told the President of Mexico that Canada was not only agreeable to, but enthusiastic over the prospect of KLM operating between Canada and Mexico City.

3. It is understood that the President turned down the Caracas-Mexico City application but, because of the unlikelihood of a Mexican carrier operating to Canada in the foreseeable future and in view of the reputedly favourable attitude of Canada toward the application, the President told the Dutch delegation that he would approve the Canada-Monterey-Mexico City application.

4. You should know that KLM has made no approach to us on this matter and consequently there has been no reason for the Canadian authorities to consider or express an opinion on the Canadian attitude. It would be helpful if, on some appropriate occasion, you could mention to the Mexican authorities that you had heard something of the representations made by KLM and point out that this question has never been considered in Canada nor were we aware that such an approach to the Mexican Government would be made by the Dutch. It would be quite inadvisable to mention the source of our information. In fact, I think you should take the line that this information had come to us indirectly and that while there may be no foundation for it, you nevertheless felt that the Mexican authorities should know that Canada was not even considering let alone supporting the KLM application.

Yours sincerely,

H.O. MORAN

Blanchette saw the Director General of Civil Aviation this morning and left with him your draft agreement and aide memoire about the proposal contained in the aforesaid despatch.

The Director General promised to study both and to reply in writing soonest. However his initial reaction to the proposal was completely negative. Upon learning that Lima and Rio were the ultimate destination of the flights out of Vancouver he said that the Mexican Government would "probably not" agree to intermediate rights here. About the proposed TCA route he said that the Mexican Government would "certainly not" grant rights. Think Pan American, through the Mexican officer of its Mexican subsidiary, has powerful enough influence in government circles to block the request for traffic rights in competition to its existing quasi monopoly on traffic south and east out of Mexico.

Despatch follows as soon as formal reply received.

Dear Mr. Moran:

Your letter of April 19th has been read here with considerable interest and no little surprise. You have perhaps seen by now my despatch No. 151 of April 16th about the concession recently granted to KLM by the Mexican Government,† as well as my telegram No. 4 of April 21st about our own negotiations. Since the views expressed in my despatch may have in turn come as a surprise to you, the following background may be of interest to you.

When Blanchette called on Martin Perez, Director General of Civil Aviation here, he brought up the question of KLM's recent concession during the discussion of our own proposals. Martin Perez told him that at first KLM's negotiators asked for permission to fly from Amsterdam to Mexico City via Bermuda. Later, presumably because Mexico would not agree to a Caribbean to Mexico line, in competition with CMA,<sup>27</sup> Montreal was proposed as an intermediate point. Martin Perez had at the time assumed that KLM had obtained the Canadian Government's concurrence and had not questioned the Dutch about this. He then went on to ask what the Canadian Government had secured from the Dutch Government in exchange and whether KLM had in effect approached the Canadian Government at all. As the Embassy had not been informed of any negotiations between KLM and the Canadian Government, Blanchette replied frankly that he did not know.

A few days before Blanchette's call on Martin Perez, we had been told by the Dutch Minister here that KLM had insisted on a stop in Montreal with fifth freedom rights there in order to make the new concession pay. As we had no reason at the time to doubt the truth of his statements, I quoted them in my despatch under reference.

The Dutch are still negotiating an air agreement with the Mexicans. What happened, I gather, was that the schedule to the agreement was approved before the agreement itself. What will happen now, I do not know. However, as Martin Perez had asked specific questions about the alleged KLM stop in Montreal, I felt that Blanchette might bring the substance of the last paragraph of your letter to his attention. He has already done so without, of course, revealing the source of his information.

If we hear further about this, I shall write again.

Yours sincerely,

We would be glad if you would try to get a definite answer soon on whether the form of our draft agreement is acceptable to the Mexicans and whether they will entertain granting Fifth Freedom rights for CPAL between Mexico City and Lima and Rio de Janeiro.

2. For your own information, if they are unwilling to grant Fifth Freedom rights, we will probably be prepared to settle for traffic rights between Vancouver and Mexico City only (Third and Fourth Freedoms) with the right to route flights onward to Lima and Rio. However, we do not wish to propose this unless they refuse Fifth Freedom rights. The first step will be to obtain a definite reply on the form of our draft and, if possible, their agreement to Fifth Freedom rights.

Following for Moran, Begins: Last week Blanchette called on Director General of Civil Aviation to discuss draft agreement. He was on the occasion accompanied by Main, McGregor, and Budd of the Canadian Pacific who were seeking Mexican views about Fifth Freedom Rights South to Lima.

2. Apparently complete change of policy has occurred since last telegram. Mexicans now seem willing both to accept the air agreement with Canada and to grant Fifth Freedom Rights to Canadian Pacific South of Mexico City provided, however, that in reciprocity Canadian Government will agree to Mexican concessions from Mexico City to Montreal through either New Orleans or Miami and New York with Fifth Freedom Rights at each intermediate point on route.

3. Director General hinted to Blanchette that United States authorities might not be averse to Fifth Freedom Rights at either New Orleans or Miami and New York if Mexicans prepared to allow Eastern, Trans World and United to come into Mexico City.

4. He also said Montreal would be terminal point for the time being but that North Atlantic extension might eventually be sought. He told McGregor privately that no extension out of Montreal would ever be requested. Blanchette hopes to clarify this contradiction during forthcoming interviews.

5. Designation of Mexican operators would be neither Guest or CMA but a new "government owned and operated" air line now being formed. Suspect this line may merely be another PAA agency in Mexico or CMA in disguise.

6. Mexican comments on draft agreement now before President of the Republic for approval. Blanchette will see Director General about this later this week. Will report developments. In the meantime McGregor hopes call on you towards the end of the week. Ends.

Memorandum from Chairman, Air Transport Board, to Minister of Transport

Ottawa, June 27, 1952

The Netherlands Ambassador together with a representative of KLM of the Netherlands Civil Aviation Department called upon Mr. Moran this morning to raise the question of 5th Freedom rights for KLM between Montreal and Mexico City and at that time submitted the attached memorandum.† I was present at the discussions.

Basically the Dutch proposal was to substitute a Montreal-Mexico-Caracao route for their present Montreal-Mexico-Cuba route with 5th Freedom rights which they presently do not have being available between Montreal and Mexico City. A formal reply to the memorandum will be required.

The Netherlands arguments are covered in the memorandum and need not be repeated although a suggestion was made that because of the fact that we were considering a Mexican route for TCA in the indefinite future we might grant KLM temporary rights until a Canadian airline was established, the situation to be reviewed when TCA started service.

The Netherlands representatives claim that the Mexican government was anxious to have these traffic rights granted to KLM. Since our understanding here was to the contrary, Mr. Moran suggested that they might wish to obtain confirmation of this from the Mexican authorities directly to Canada; and after the meeting indicated that he would check on this point through the Canadian Ambassador as well since KLM would undoubtedly put it up to them that Canada wished Mexico to support KLM in this; and the Canadian Ambassador should be warned to inform the Mexican authorities that we were not behind the KLM request.

My own opinion is that in view of the negotiations presently underway with Mexico it would be unwise to grant the Netherlands request at this time. If we fail to achieve a bilateral with Mexico and there is no possibility of a Canadian airline operating, the KLM request would have to be considered in the light of those circumstances. If, on the other hand, we do get authority for a service from Montreal to Mexico we should not prejudice that service by granting rights to KLM. Much too would depend on how soon TCA would find itself in a position to operate this route.

The route is worthy of serious consideration. Traffic from Canada to Mexico is going mostly by U.S. airlines out of New York or Chicago at present. TCA is presently giving consideration to this route I understand.

It is my recommendation that the answer should be that we can not see our way clear to grant this request for the present even on a temporary basis until our negotiations with Mexico have advanced and we see what is likely to emerge in the way of Canadian or Mexican operations between the two countries.

Ottawa, July 3, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

BILATERAL AIR AGREEMENT WITH MEXICO

Reference: Your Telegram No. 40 of June 16th, 1952.

We were pleased to learn that the Mexican Government may be willing to consider granting Fifth Freedom traffic rights and is interested in an eastern route to Montreal. Since Trans-Canada Airlines is also interested in such a route, we would be glad to extend the scope of the negotiations to cover it.

2. It now appears that Canadian Pacific Airlines may be able to obtain temporary permits to operate to Lima, Rio de Janeiro and Sao Paulo, pending the negotiation of agreements with Peru and Brazil. However, they feel that, as far as Mexico is concerned, an agreement should be concluded before services are commenced. In addition, we have in mind that the forthcoming elections in Mexico and possible resulting political changes could cause delay if an agreement is not reached soon. For these reasons, we would be glad if you would carry the negotiations forward as quickly as possible.

3. Our proposals for a route pattern which you may put before the Mexican authorities are contained in the enclosed paper.† They provide for two routes; a Western route which would be identical for the carriers in both countries; and Eastern routes on which there would be an exchange of rights which are reasonably reciprocal.

4. Concerning the No. 1 Canadian route (Vancouver to Mexico City) we would like you to explore the Mexican reaction to our tentative inclusion of an intermediate traffic stop in the United States. The enclosed paper lists two alternative ways of providing for such a stop. The first is to name San Francisco specifically, the second and less preferable is to leave the question open by using the formula "points in the United States to be mutually agreed —." This proposal for a traffic stop in the United States is new. In explanation, you might say that while CPAL have no plans at present for exercising traffic rights in the United States on the Vancouver-Mexico City route, we think that both CPAL and whatever Mexican carrier is designated might in future find such a provision useful. We would prefer that it be included if the Mexican authorities do not object, but if they do, we would be willing to drop the proposal.

5. Concerning the No. 2 Canadian route, please explain that Tampa-St. Petersburg constitutes one stop, at an airport which serves both cities.

6. The No. 1 Mexican route is identical with the No. 1 Canadian route and should not create difficulties. Please ascertain whether the Mexican Government will in fact want this route to be included for their carrier.

7. Our proposals for the No. 2 Mexican route will require some explanation since they do not include all the concessions which the Mexican authorities mentioned and which you listed in paragraph 2 of your Telegram No. 40. Concerning them, you might say that we are interested in maintaining the principle of equal treatment in intergovernmental exchanges involving Fifth Freedom rights. In our view, it would not be a fair exchange if Mexico were to obtain intermediate stops at all of Miami, New Orleans and New York while Canada was seeking and getting only one such stop, presumably at Tampa-St. Petersburg. We would have no objection to a Mexican stop at either Miami or New Orleans, but at this stage would prefer not to commit ourselves concerning New York because of the difficult precedent this would create for us in dealing with numerous requests from European airlines for similar privileges. We think that the Mexican authorities will appreciate the difficulties we face in this respect. For your own information, we doubt whether the Mexican Government could obtain traffic rights at Miami from the United States Government, and on this account think that it would be more practicable to name New Orleans.

8. In any event, it seems undesirable to designate a number of intermediate points in the United States at a time when it is by no means clear whether the consent of the United States Government can be obtained. Under these circumstances, we would recommend the formula we have used in the enclosed paper for the future naming of additional intermediate stopping points by mutual agreement.

9. A final point about the route pattern concerns Mexico City itself. We understand that because of altitude and climatic conditions, operational use of the Mexican City airport may not always be feasible, and that the use of Monterey as an alternate or transit stop is desirable and is, in fact, quite general. Lacking more definite information, we are not clear whether this should be provided for specifically in the bilateral agreement. We would be glad if you would explore this point with the Mexican authorities with a view to making suitable provision for the use of Monterey if this appears to be necessary.

10. The information contained in your Telegram No. 40 about a possible Mexican operator for the Canadian routes was interesting to us. We assume that the Mexican Government is fully aware that in concluding bilateral air agreements we adhere firmly to the principle that substantial ownership and control of a designated airline must be vested in the country of its nationality.

11. Thank you for the careful attention you have given to this question. I would be glad to have a brief report from you by telegram after you have discussed our proposals with the Mexican authorities; in particular, you might let me know whether the prospects warrant an early visit to Mexico City by a civil aviation official from Ottawa. The Air Transport Board have said that they would be willing to arrange such a visit if it appears that this would assist you to conclude the negotiations successfully.

KLM REQUEST FOR TRAFFIC RIGHTS MONTREAL-MEXICO CITY

On July 2nd the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs informed the Netherlands Ambassador that no decision could be reached on the KLM request until more definite information was available concerning projected Canadian operations to Mexico City and the present negotiations with Mexico in that regard; and that it was impossible to state how soon this situation would be clarified.

KLM representatives then put forward a modified request asking for fifth freedom for KLM from Montreal to Mexico immediately on the understanding that these traffic rights could be terminated at any time on three months notice so that if a Canadian operation should be established Canada could withdraw KLM's rights at that time if it so desired. In theory this offers some merits in providing a direct air connection but in practice has the very serious danger of the "foot in the door" idea since from experience we know how difficult it is to withdraw anything once it has been established, even though provision has been made for its withdrawal.

External however undertook that this modified proposal would be submitted at Ministerial level to see whether it would be acceptable. My personal recommendation is that it should not be granted at the present time and that we should take the same line, i.e. that we want to carry forward our own negotiations with Mexico.<sup>28</sup>

It is interesting in this connection that whereas negotiations with Mexico appeared to have taken a favourable turn a few weeks ago and it was understood at that time that the Mexicans definitely were interested in their own airline operation to Montreal, we now have a communication from the Mexican Ambassador supporting the KLM request, clear evidence as to some confusion as to how far we are likely to get with Mexico and what their own position is.

External has pointed out that it would be inadvisable to reject completely the KLM request (preferring rather to hold it in abeyance) because of the fact that direct air service from Montreal to Mexico would be advantageous in view of growing traffic and that if it is not possible to establish a Canadian operation there might be a case for allowing this service in the public interest. It is theoretically possible in this connection that if the Mexicans themselves are not interested in a Mexican operation on the route, they might ask permission to designate KLM as the Mexican operator on the route in return for granting a route to Canada, although there has been no suggestion of this as yet.

Would you approve the proposed further reply to the further KLM request as above?

CIVIL AIR AGREEMENT

Reference: Your despatch No. 224 of July 3rd.

Following for Moran, Begins: Director General Civil Aviation emphatically told Blanchette this morning that under no circumstances will Mexico be willing to consider negotiating agreement based on proposal made in despatch under reference. Negotiations must be restricted, he said, to proposal made last March and it must be that or nothing else. He added that no Canadian carriers coming into Mexico from the east will be acceptable and that no intermediate stops in United States on western route can be countenanced now. Apparently P.A.L.<sup>29</sup> negotiations are breaking down on the same points owing to Mexican intransigence. He stressed that if the Canadian Government is unwilling to negotiate on original basis immediately it will be useless to try to do so after mid August owing to change in administration. It occurs to us trying subsequent administration could hardly be less amenable.

He also brought up question of KLM fifth freedom rights Montreal emphasizing that President is keenly interested therein and that if KLM request for Montreal refused he can not guarantee President will grant identical rights to CPAL here in the event of air agreement between Canada and Mexico on original basis. He answered however that CPAL could come in immediately on provisional third and fourth freedom basis. Mexicans want Canadian decision about KLM within next few days.

before falling back on a provisional arrangement between CPAL and the Mexican authorities.

2. Baldwin would be glad if you would use your own discretion in trying to find a mutually agreeable basis for an agreement. He suggests that you might explore the possibility of listing only the western route with some formula for later negotiation of additional routes. As an alternative, if the Mexicans are sticking on intermediate points for a Canadian carrier on the eastern route, we might accept a route naming only Montreal and Mexico City with provision for the later negotiation of intermediate points.

3. As you know, it would not be easy for us to make a straight trade of an eastern for a western route but if this is the only basis on which the Mexicans will negotiate we will have to consider it. In that event, our decision would probably be to let CPAL make their own arrangements with the Mexicans.

4. Mr. Chevrier has decided that we should reject for the present KLM's request for rights at Montreal on a temporary basis. KLM should probably be kept out of the picture in talks with the Mexicans. However, we would be glad to know if the Mexicans show a disposition to trade rights for Canadian carriers in return for concessions by us to KLM.

Following from Moran, Begins: Today I saw Martin Perez, Director of Civil Aviation, and from our discussion it is clear that:

(a) There is nothing to delay signature of a bilateral civil aviation agreement provided agreement can be reached on routes to be included in the schedule. Our draft agreement has been examined and only minor drafting changes will be suggested.

(b) Mexico will grant immediate traffic rights to CPA on a route Vancouver-Mexico City and points beyond in return for rights for a Mexican carrier on a route Mexico City, a point in the United States (perhaps New York) and Montreal. There appears no possibility of traffic rights being rented to a Canadian carrier on a Montreal-Mexico City route.

(c) When told it was most improbable that Canadian Government would grant the rights at Montreal to a Mexican company and to KLM, Perez withdrew Mexican request that Canada approve the KLM application. Sponsorship of KLM at this end stems from friendly relationship between President Aleman and Prince Bernhard.

2. Perez explained that Mexican policy avoids competition on routes operated by Mexican carriers. Normally, Mexico grants traffic rights to another country only in return for exclusive rights to a Mexican carrier on another route. For example, United States were granted traffic rights San Francisco to Mexico City in return for exclusive rights to Mexican carrier on route Los Angeles to Mexico City. Another example is exclusive rights to Guest Airways between Mexico and Florida route. In these circumstances, they would expect to have Montreal-Mexico City route reserved for Mexican carriers if they grant CPA rights Vancouver to Mexico City.

3. I told Perez that acceptance of this proposal would depend largely on TCA<sup>30</sup> desire and intention regarding operations into Mexico. Considering that TCA was anxious to commence Montreal-Mexico City service they would urge Canadian Government not to accept an arrangement which gave a Mexican company sole rights on route. Therefore, TCA intentions should be determined immediately and a government policy decision made unless TCA operations to South America are to be held up indefinitely.

4. The Mexicans had obviously hoped to obtain in return for privileges for CPA, rights on Montreal-Mexico City route for both a Mexican carrier and KLM. I think it is realized now on official level that this will not be possible and if, following consultation with the President, the Mexican authorities raise it again I suggest a firm stand by us will end the issue permanently.

5. If TCA is not to operate to Mexico City except under an agency arrangement with Guest Airways for which Mexican Government approval is not needed then it would, in my opinion, be much more in the Canadian interest to have KLM than a Mexican company fly to and from Montreal. It seems to me that such an arrangement would also be in the Mexican interest because the Canadian public is familiar with KLM and is more likely to use its services than a Mexican company whose reliability will not have been established in our country.

6. It would now seem possible to tell the Netherlands Ambassador that regardless of whether TCA is to seek traffic rights Montreal to Mexico City it is not possible for us to deal with the KLM application because Mexican Government does not wish it to take priority over rights for a Mexican company and Canadian Government would not likely grant traffic privileges at Montreal for two foreign carriers on this route.

CANADIAN PACIFIC AIR LINES; SERVICE TO LATIN AMERICA

The Cabinet recently decided that Canadian Pacific Air Lines would be the designated Canadian carrier for operations generally within the Pacific area. Canadian Pacific Air Lines has expressed the desire to initiate scheduled service from Vancouver to Mexico City to Lima, Peru and thence to Brazil. The main purpose of the route is to develop a direct through connection between the Orient, and particularly Japan, to these Latin American countries where there are substantial centers of Oriental population and growing trade and immigration movements with the Orient. To obtain the necessary authorizations from these countries designation of Canadian Pacific Air Lines by the Canadian government for this route is necessary. It is recommended therefore that government approval be given to the designation of CPA for development of this route providing satisfactory arrangements can be made with the countries concerned.

In the case of Peru and Brazil no difficulties are foreseen and it is expected that these countries will grant provisional permits to CPA for the route pending conclusion of formal bilateral agreements with Canada.

In the case of Mexico, greater difficulties have arisen. It is apparent from experience in Mexico that a foreign airline is not normally given a permit unless it makes use of the appropriate legal firm designated by the Mexican government and pays a very high agreed fee in this connection. Apparently where such direct arrangements are made it is possible subsequently to get the route confirmed in a bilateral agreement but otherwise there is virtually no prospect of a bilateral agreement. However, a provisional permit obtained on this basis may be of questionable value unless subsequently confirmed by bilateral agreement.

We have now been informed through CPA that without any prejudice to the negotiation of a bilateral agreement and the routes to be included therein the Mexican authorities would be prepared to grant a provisional permit to CPA for its route from Vancouver if in return the Canadian government would be prepared to inform the Mexican government that if desired, it would issue to a Mexican airline a similar provisional temporary permit for operation into Montreal.

These routes would then subsequently have to be incorporated in a formal bilateral agreement in the negotiation of which Canada would have to raise the question of obtaining a route for TCA from Montreal or Toronto to Mexico. There is no certainty that this can be obtained but it is not likely unless the usual procedure of obtaining a provisional permit or payment of the "legal fee" is followed.

If the government wishes to authorize CPA to develop the route described it appears that we should accept the provisional permit exchange referred to above and subsequently seek conclusion of a bilateral agreement. The question of what should be done about a route for TCA in view of the procedures used by Mexico is obviously one for governmental consideration.

CANADIAN PACIFIC AIR LINES; SERVICE TO LATIN AMERICA

7. The Minister of Transport reported that Canadian Pacific Air Lines wanted to initiate scheduled service from Vancouver to Mexico City and thence to Peru and Brazil. The main purpose of the route was to develop direct through connections between the Orient, particularly Japan, and the Latin American countries. To obtain the necessary authorizations from these countries, designation of Canadian Pacific Air Lines by the Canadian government for the route was necessary.

It was thought that provisional permits for Canadian Pacific Air Lines could be obtained without any difficulty from Peru and Brazil. In the case of Mexico, it was expected that an agreement could be worked out since that country was interested in obtaining a Canadian permit for the Mexico City-Montreal route. In view of the fact that it had been agreed some time ago that C.P.A. should be the designated Canadian carrier for operations generally within the Pacific area, it was recommended that approval be given to its designation for the development of the proposed route, providing satisfactory arrangements could be made with the countries concerned.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, August 5, 1952, Cab. Doc. 232-52)

8. The Acting Prime Minister thought, in view of the decision that, generally speaking, C.P.A. should be the designated Canadian carrier for Pacific operations, there would be no objection to allowing the line to establish a schedule service from Vancouver to Mexico, to Peru and even to Chile. He doubted, however, that it would be advisable to allow an extension to Brazil as it was in the Atlantic area in which Trans-Canada Airlines had been accepted as the Canadian carrier. If Mexico were granted a permit to operate into Montreal as a result of the proposed C.P.A. service between Vancouver and Mexico City, this might prejudice the likelihood of T.C.A. later obtaining a permit to establish a service into Mexico City from Toronto or Montreal. However, this did not appear to be a serious objection.

9. The Secretary of State for External Affairs thought it would be useful to obtain T.C.A. views before designating C.P.A. for the proposed route.

10. Mr. Chevrier said if the Air Transport Board were informed that the government had no objection in principle to C.P.A. being designated for the proposed new route the Board would hold hearings at which the views of T.C.A. could be ascertained and reported to Cabinet for a final decision.

11. The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that,

(a) the Air Transport Board be informed that the government had no objection in principle to Canadian Pacific Air Lines being designated for the development of a scheduled service from Vancouver to Mexico City, Peru, and Chile but not to Brazil; and,

(b) a final decision as to the designation of C.P.A. for the line be deferred pending a report on the views of Trans-Canada Air Lines.

On August 6 last Cabinet accepted a recommendation from the Minister of Transport that temporary rights be granted to a Mexican Airline on a Montreal-Mexico City route in return for similar rights for C.P.A.L. on a Vancouver-Mexico City route. Cabinet also approved the designation of C.P.A.L. to operate services to Mexico, Peru and Chile but not to Brazil. Later, in the discussions between Ministers, it was agreed that the reservation on Brazil might be modified to permit C.P.A.L. to operate there on the condition that, in whatsoever arrangement is made with the Brazilian Government, provision would be made for T.C.A. to also operate to that country. Our Embassy in Rio de Janeiro has been asked to find out whether the Brazilian Government will agree to such an arrangement.<sup>32</sup>

2. The C.P.A.L. decision to delay for the time being the conclusion of its negotiations in Mexico City stems from this Cabinet decision. Obviously, the company will not wish to complete its arrangements in Mexico until it is quite sure what rights it will be allowed to exercise at points further south.

3. If you think it would be useful you might let Perez know informally that as things now stand, we will probably be willing to grant temporary rights at

AIR AGREEMENT WITH MEXICO

Reference: Our Air Telegram No. 6 of September 9, 1952.

1. After further consideration by Cabinet we have been authorized to notify the Mexican government officially as follows:

2. If the Mexican government issues a permit to Canadian Pacific Air Lines for service from Vancouver, the Canadian government would, if requested by the Mexican government, be prepared to issue a provisional permit to a Mexican airline to operate from Mexico to Montreal. This action will be taken on the understanding (a) that subsequently the two governments will proceed to negotiate a bilateral air agreement in which these routes would be incorporated; (b) that the Canadian authorities wish to have included in this bilateral agreement a route for TCA from eastern Canada (possibly from Toronto) to Mexico and would be prepared to offer to Mexico some concessions in return, such as a route to western Canada if desired; and (c) that continuation of this provisional permit arrangement will be contingent upon the negotiation in due course of a bilateral agreement along these lines.

3. While the foregoing should constitute the content of your official communication, you may explain informally that we cannot, in the arrangements for CPAL, prejudice in any way the possibility of obtaining a route for TCA as well. TCA is not in a position to operate to Mexico now and would not be ready for such an operation before 1954, — and quite possibly not until a later date. If, however, by the time TCA is ready to operate we have not been able to conclude a satisfactory reciprocal agreement with Mexico along the lines described it would obviously be exceedingly difficult for us to continue the provisional permit arrangement.

4. You should not in the official communication make any reference to intermediate stops in the United States for the Mexican airline coming to Montreal since we cannot make any commitment concerning such stops at the present time. While not opposed to considering the possibility of such stops, we have not asked Mexico for any intermediate stops in the United States for Canadian Pacific Airlines on its route from Vancouver. Moreover, the Mexican government has not been granted any traffic rights at intermediate points in United States territory by the United States government and the whole question of a bilateral air agreement between Mexico and the United States is up for discussion at present. It would be meaningless on our part to designate specific intermediate stops in United States territory at the present time and the matter could much better be dealt with at a later date when the situation as regards traffic rights granted by the United States is somewhat clearer. This matter of intermediate stops should not be mentioned to the Mexican authorities unless they raise it, but should they inquire you may answer them informally along the foregoing lines.

5. We understand that CPAL will be taking prompt action to obtain its provisional permit and that either Mr. McConachis or Mr. McGregor of CPAL will in all probability go to Mexico City shortly for this purpose. Because of this we would be glad if you could convey the official message to the Mexican authorities as soon as possible.

6. We have been considering whether we should now press vigorously for negotiation of the formal bilateral agreement or whether it would be better to let this matter stand until the new government has taken office on December 1st and take it up thereafter. We would welcome your comments and advice on this point.

1. Enclosed are copies of air telegrams No. 11 and No. 12 of November 3 and 4, respectively, and telegram No. 75 of November 7, 1952, from Blanchette, concerning Canadian Pacific Airlines negotiations in Mexico City.† The permit has been signed; CPAL have received what we hope will prove to be value for money; and the final settlement seems not to have reflected the suspected machinations of KLM, unless the loss of rights between Mexico City and Lima for CPAL can be attributed to their influence.

2. KLM may not yet be out of the picture and since they must by now have a considerable investment in the present Mexican administration, they may be anxious to complete any projected deals before the administration goes out of existence on December 1st. There is good evidence in the enclosed telegrams that the administration itself is anxious for business and its prices may come down before it finally shuts up shop. Possibly KLM might try to buy up on a "temporary" basis the rights which we have agreed to grant to a Mexican carrier at Montreal.

3. One impression we have gained during the recent negotiations is that if TCA have any serious intentions of operating to Mexico City it would be dangerous to allow KLM to begin a Canada-Mexico service before we had obtained all the rights needed by TCA in Mexico. KLM seems to be well stocked with the sort of arguments which impress the official mind in Mexico. Should they be allowed to begin operating alone, they could make it extremely difficult for TCA to come into competition with them.

4. At the same time continued KLM interest in the Montreal-Mexico City route could prove of some advantage to us. Our instructions to the Embassy in Mexico City were that they should offer rights at Montreal for a Mexican airline in return for a licence for CPAL. Presumably there is no obligation on our part to accept KLM in place of a Mexican airline, and if the question is raised, we could state as our price traffic rights for TCA at Mexico City from Toronto or Montreal to be embodied in a bilateral agreement. Then, if KLM wanted the route badly enough, they would be in the position of having to persuade the Mexican authorities to accept our terms. This suggestion is of course offered tentatively for your consideration. If events were to develop along the lines of our speculations, we would think it should be referred to the ministers concerned before action is taken.

[Ottawa, May 30, 1952]

NOTES ON TRANSIT RIGHTS FOR CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES IN NEW ZEALAND

(1) In November, 1950, the New Zealand Government replied to our request for stopover rights for CPAL at Auckland. They stated that they were willing to grant transit rights only and on the basis of an exchange of notes.

(2) We replied that in our view we already had the right to fly in transit through New Zealand because New Zealand and Canada were both parties to the Air Services Transit Agreement.<sup>34</sup> Therefore, we were not willing to exchange notes.

A.D. McLean, Air Transport Board.

(3) The New Zealand authorities, while not accepting our position, decided (a year later) to let CPAL exercise transit rights on a temporary basis while they studied the question.

(4) We now doubt whether we can reasonably claim transit rights through New Zealand on the basis of the Air Services Transit Agreement. In fact, it seems fairly clear that we can not.

(5) If we can be entirely certain on this point, it would seem best to tell the New Zealand Government that we now feel that the Air Services Transit Agreement does not cover the situation at Auckland and that we are ready to exchange notes. Unless the New Zealand authorities have changed their minds about granting transit rights, that should liquidate the problem. Concerning the parallel problem which has arisen with the United Kingdom, such an admission should not prejudice our interests there if we are bound to say the same thing to the United Kingdom.

(6) However, if any doubt remains in our minds concerning the interpretation of the Air Services Transit Agreement, we might tell the New Zealanders that the question has arisen in similar form with the United Kingdom authorities; that we are about to discuss it with them and hope that general enlightenment will result; that we would be gratified if New Zealand would extend its temporary permission for transit rights until such time as we can carry the question further and make some statement on the legal points involved.

(7) There seems to be no advantage to opening up the bilateral agreement with New Zealand. If we are sure that our previous interpretation of the Air Services Transit Agreement was wrong, the New Zealand suggestion for an exchange of notes provides a quick and satisfactory solution. If, on the other hand, we are not so sure, it would probably be best, for the time being, to avoid doing anything definitive which might compromise our claim for rights under the Air Services Transit Agreement.

1. For the purposes of the record it should be stated that the appearance of senior officials from Canada at the 6th Meeting of the S.P.A.T.C.<sup>35</sup> and then in New Zealand has been a tonic for New Zealand-Canadian relations in the sphere of civil aviation. It is probably true to say that New Zealand civil aviation officials have been distrustful of Canada's attempts to obtain special rights in this country. It is also probably true to say now that the distrust has evaporated as a result of the conversations held by Messrs. Robertson and Scott with their opposite numbers and by Mr. McLean with the Minister of Civil Aviation and the Secretary and Deputy-Secretary of his Air Department and with other leading figures in civil aviation here.

2. The improvement in the situation can be attributed to personalities, but the friendly interest shown by these men in New Zealand's aviation problems has been equally important. Leaving this aspect, however, it is to be recorded that in the negotiations for "transit rights" and discussions about stop-over rights, the Minister and Mr. Barrow showed themselves to be downright friendly and co-operative and most willing to accept our points of view for "consideration" at the very least.

3. In order to have some record of the conversation that Mr. McLean had with the Minister and Mr. Barrow, and to provide them with an informal record of his views, Mr. McLean wrote a letter to Mr. MacDonald,<sup>36</sup> two copies of which were sent forward with letter No. 370 of July 11, 1952.† It was hoped that the letter and the discussion would provide us with full information on the New Zealand attitude towards stop-over rights. During the discussion, incidentally, it became evident that there was some confusion in thought here: Mr. MacDonald evidently thought that we were asking for fifth freedom rights and on being reassured about this became quite receptive to the argument put forward for stop-over rights. Both the Minister and Mr. Barrow showed alarm about Pan American World Airways especially, and other air lines generally, if the door to fifth freedom rights here were to be opened even a little. It is possible that they may have been partially disabused of the idea that stop-over rights would be the salesman's shoe. Unfortunately, during the Minister's second conversation with Mr. McLean, it was made clear that stop-over rights could not be granted and Mr. McLean's hope about "revised thinking" in his telegram to Mr. Baldwin has not been realized. This should be counted as a partial failure only; the chances of our getting these rights have improved beyond measure.

4 It is significant, I think, that Mr. McLean obtained approval in principle for an Exchange of Notes in a matter of minutes once he had noted as his own judgement that C.P.A.L. aircraft were not divisible and that accordingly our legal argument, so far as he was concerned, was invalid. His suggestion that "privileges" and "similar privileges" be substituted for "transit rights" seemed to be based on the reality of the situation and followed the wording of the New Zealand note of November 14, 1950, in which the sub-paragraphs begin "the privilege". It was readily accepted by Mr. Barrow.

5. The delay of a week in getting final agreement from the New Zealand authorities is not fully understood, but it may be the clue to the New Zealand amendment to paragraph 1(a)(i). Since this concerned the designation of Sydney as the terminal point, it is probable that it was put forward after consultation with the Australian authorities.

6. The Exchange of Notes has been further delayed by the Legal Adviser, who had not approved the New Zealand note of November 14, 1950 and saw objection to its form. We have been assured that no alteration of substance is contemplated.

7. One final word seems necessary. At your request the facilities of the mission were made available to Messrs. McLean, Robertson and Scott during their visit. When possible, the official vehicles were at their service, although we were hampered somewhat by their arrival on the July 1 weekend, normally one of the busiest times of the year in the office.

8. Although the Acting High Commissioner gave a reception in their honour, it should be noted that New Zealanders had their entertainment well in hand. Mr. McLean was flown to Christchurch and back by National Airways Corporation and was given a drive to Masterton to inspect an aerial top dressing service. He sat for an afternoon with the New Zealand Air Services Licensing Authority and has lunched with Sir Leonard Isitt,<sup>37</sup> Sir Arthur Nevill<sup>38</sup> and the Chief of the Air Staff, et al. We could not have wished for a better travelling ambassador.

Wellington, August, 1952

My dear High Commissioner,

I refer to recent discussions in Wellington between representatives of the Government of Canada and the New Zealand Air authorities regarding a modification of the provisions of the Agreement dated 16 August 1950 between the Government of New Zealand and the Government of Canada relating to Air Transport.

The Government of New Zealand agrees that the said Agreement dated 16 August 1950 should be modified in the following way:

"1. The airline designated by the Government of Canada under the provisions of the Agreement dated 16 August 1950 between the Government of New Zealand and the Government of Canada relating to Air Transport may exercise, on the conditions specified below, the following privileges in addition to those conferred by Section 2 of the Annex to the said Agreement:

(a) In respect of the service from Vancouver to Auckland:

(i) the privilege to operate the service beyond Auckland to Sydney, the western terminal point in Australia;

(ii) the privilege to carry through Auckland international traffic in passengers, mail and cargo coming from Canada or points beyond, or coming from the territory of a third country on the route between Vancouver and Auckland, and destined for Sydney;

(b) In respect of the service from Auckland to Vancouver:

(i) the privilege to operate the service from Sydney as the starting point;

(ii) the privilege to carry through Auckland international traffic in passengers, mail and cargo coming from Australia and destined for Vancouver or points beyond, or destined for the territory of a third country on the route between Auckland and Vancouver.

2. The airline designated by the Government of Canada may not take on or discharge at Auckland international traffic in passengers, mail or cargo destined for or coming from Australia.

3. Passengers carried through Auckland in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 above shall not be entitled to stopover at Auckland (being an interruption of the journey at a point between the place of departure and the place of destination). Tickets for travel issued to such passengers by the designated airline shall exclude stopover rights at Auckland.

4. The airline designated by the Government of New Zealand may exercise, on the conditions specified above and in addition to the privileges conferred by Section 1 of the Annex to the said Agreement, the privileges conferred by the present modification on the airline designated by the Government of Canada.

5. It is understood that the application of the provisions of Sections 4, 5 and 7 of the Annex to the said Agreement to the return service described in Sections 1 and 2 of the said Annex shall not be affected by the provisions of the present modification."

If the Government of Canada is agreeable to the foregoing modification of the said Agreement of 16 August 1950, I suggest that this letter, and your reply in similar terms, should be regarded as placing on record the agreement of our two Governments.

DESPATCH No. E-59

Ottawa, March 21, 1952

BILATERAL AIR AGREEMENT WITH PERU

You will recall that at the time of Mr. H.O. Moran's visit to Lima early in January of this year, there was some discussion with the Peruvian authorities on the possibility of concluding a bilateral air agreement between Peru and Canada. This followed on a proposal by Canadian Pacific Airlines that they institute air services between Vancouver and Latin America on a route which would include Mexico City, Lima and Rio de Janeiro or Sao Paulo. We understand that the Peruvians gave some indication that they would be in favour of such an agreement.

2. I would be glad if you would now make a formal proposal that negotiations be commenced. Three copies of a draft agreement are enclosed,† two copies of which you should forward to the Peruvian authorities. Please ask them whether they are willing to accept this draft as a basis for negotiation, and let them know that we will be prepared to consider any changes they might like to see made in it.

3. Our draft follows a standard pattern which we like to adhere to in our bilateral air agreements. The actual rights to be exchanged will be listed in a schedule to the agreement and will be largely determined by the routes to be laid down in the schedule. You will note that the part of the schedule dealing with routes has been left blank.

4. If the Peruvians are willing to negotiate and can accept our draft as a basis, we will then take up with them the question of route designation. We have not yet definitely settled on what we will ask for, but you can let them know as a preliminary indication that we are primarily interested in a route from Vancouver to Lima via Mexico City and onward to Rio de Janeiro or Sao Paulo, or perhaps both. We will not require an intermediate stop in the United States. If Canadian Pacific Airlines are authorised to operate this route, services could probably begin in 1953.

5. We would be interested in knowing what rights the Peruvians are likely to ask for in return.

Lima, June 7, 1952

AIR AGREEMENT WITH PERU

Reference: Our telegram No. 19 of June 2, 1952.

Two officials of the Canadian Pacific Airlines, Mr. H.B. Main, General Traffic Manager and Mr. F. Maurice McGregor, Director of Development, arrived in Lima on May 31 and were joined by Mr. W. Budd, Traffic Manager, on June 2. I met the two former gentlemen at the airport and in accordance with Mr. Moran's letter of May 12, arranged for them to discuss aviation matters with Peruvian officials and representatives of airlines and travel agencies operating here. On June 3, a meeting was held with the Minister of Aviation, H.E. Lt. Col. Mario Saona; the Director General of Civil Aviation, Major General Flores Silva; the Legal Advisor of the Directorate of Civil Aviation, Dr. Marchena Errol; and Mr. Gonzalo Pizarro, Director of the Political and Diplomatic Division of the Peruvian Foreign Office. I, as well as Mr. Dougan, attended this and subsequent meetings.

F.M. McGregor, Director of Development, Canadian Pacific Airlines.

2. The officials of C.P.A. explained to the Minister of Aviation the desire of C.P.A. to inaugurate an air service between Vancouver and Lima and onward to Rio de Janeiro as soon as possible. They mentioned that C.P.A. was not certain at this time whether the route would be via Mexico or Cuba as it wished to explore traffic possibilities in both countries before arriving at a definite decision. The Minister of Aviation, who gave us a most cordial reception, stated that pending the conclusion of a bilateral air agreement between Canada and Peru he thought it would be possible to grant C.P.A. without delay a temporary operating permit in order that it might survey traffic possibilities. Such a permit would initially be granted for a period of six months but could be renewed up to a maximum period of two years.

3. On June 4 a further meeting was held with the Director General of Civil Aviation at his office in which the procedures and requirements for obtaining a temporary operating permit were discussed. The Legal Advisor of the Directorate of Civil Aviation later provided the C.P.A. officials, through the Embassy, with a draft form which C.P.A. should follow in making application. I attach for your information a copy of this in Spanish with English translation.† Presumably if the Canadian Government authorizes C.P.A. to apply for a temporary license the latter will then deal directly with the Minister of Aviation. Before this is done, however, it will be necessary to officially advise the Peruvian authorities that C.P.A. has been designated by the Canadian Government as the Canadian airline authorized to request a temporary operating permit.

4. Further discussions were held on the afternoon of the same day, after a luncheon which I gave in honour of the C.P.A. officials. This luncheon was attended by the Director General of Civil Aviation and his Legal Advisor; the Chinese Ambassador to Peru, H.E. Dr. Pao (Nationalist); two high officials of the Peruvian Foreign Office, Mr. Pizarro, Director of the Political and Diplomatic Division and Dr. Letts Sanchez, Director of Organisations and International Conferences; Mr. C.J. Tippet, Director, South American Office, ICAO; Mr. E.A. Lough, Manager of the Lima Branch of the Royal Bank of Canada; Mr. Paul Lambright, Vice-President and General Superintendent of the International Petroleum Company; Mr. Folger Athern, Manager of Braniff Airlines in Peru; and Mr. Dougan, Second Secretary of the Embassy.

5. You will recall that in my note No. 32 addressed to the Minister of Foreign Affairs, forwarded to you under cover of my despatch No. 78 of April 3, I asked, as requested by you, whether the Peruvian Government was interested in negotiating a bilateral air agreement. In a note dated June 5, a copy of which with English translation is attached,† the Minister of Foreign Affairs states that he has been advised by the Minister of Aviation that his Department would be glad to begin conversations immediately toward the conclusion of such an agreement. You will note, however, that the Minister of Foreign Affairs suggests that negotiations should be initiated directly with the Peruvian Permanent Commission on International Conventions and Agreements on Aviation. With regard to this, I should be grateful if you would inform me if it is the intention of the Canadian Government to send an aviation expert from Canada to conduct the negotiations or if I should approach the Commission in order to obtain the Peruvian proposals, if any, for transmittal to you for your consideration.

6. Apart from the reply of the Minister of Foreign Affairs, however, the Minister of Aviation had previously informed me orally of Peru's interest in concluding an agreement and also that he envisioned no difficulties from the Peruvian side in negotiating such an agreement. I was also assured that pending the signing of a bilateral agreement, the Peruvian Government would readily extend a temporary operating permit to C.P.A.

7. I understand that Mr. McGregor will be in Ottawa in the near future and will be calling upon Mr. Moran and also Mr. Baldwin of the Air Transport Board. Until I obtain specific instructions from you, therefore, I shall not enter into further official discussions concerning the granting of a temporary operating permit with the Peruvian authorities.

DESPATCH No. E-116

Ottawa, June 14, 1952

AIR AGREEMENT WITH PERU

Reference: Your Despatch No. 136 of June 7th, 1952.

Your Despatch No. 136 has been read with interest here and we were pleased to see that the Peruvian authorities are willing to begin negotiations, apparently on the basis of the draft agreement we presented to them.

2. The Air Transport Board has not contemplated sending an expert to Lima to assist you with these negotiations, though I am sure they would be willing to consider doing so if this should appear necessary at a later stage. In the meantime, we would be grateful if you would carry the question forward with the Peruvian authorities.

3. There are two steps which you might now take. The first is to obtain definite approval from the Peruvian authorities for the text of our draft agreement or, alternatively, to obtain their proposals for its amendment. We would, of course, prefer that they accept our draft without major amendment because it follows a pattern which has been developed over a period of years and which, in our view, meets most satisfactorily the requirements of a bilateral air agreement of the type we propose. However, we will certainly be willing to consider any amendments the Peruvians may wish to put forward.

4. The second step is to submit to the Peruvian authorities a draft for Section II of the schedule to the agreement describing the route to be operated by the Canadian airline. As you know, there are two questions about this route still to be decided on our side. We do not yet know whether CPAL will wish to operate to Lima via Mexico City or via Havana, and whether they will wish to terminate at Sao Paulo or Rio de Janeiro. However, if the Peruvians agree, Section II could be written to cover all the alternatives as follows:

“Routes to be operated in both directions by designated airline or airlines of Canada

Point of Departure	Intermediate Points (any one or more of the following if desired)	Destination in Peru	Points Beyond (Any one or more of the following if desired)
Vancouver	Mexico City and/or other points which may be agreed by the two contracting parties	Lima	Rio de Janeiro, Sao Paulo and/or other points which may be agreed by the two contracting parties.”

5. As for Section I of the schedule which lays down the Peruvian route, we would be glad to see an equivalent route entered in reverse or if the Peruvians do not see their way clear to entering this field at the present but still wish that some reference to a Peruvian route be included, Section I might take the following form:

“Routes to be operated in both directions by the designated airline or airlines of the Government of Peru

Point of Departure	Intermediate Points (any one or more of the following if desired)	Destination in Canadian Territory	Points Beyond (Any one or more of the following if desired)
Lima	Points which may be agreed by the two contracting parties	Vancouver or other points which may be agreed by the two contracting parties	Points which may be agreed by the two contracting parties.”

6. We will try to let you know in due course whether any action is required concerning a temporary permit for CPAL. In the meantime, we will be glad to learn what progress you are able to make towards the conclusion of the agreement.

DESPATCH No. 192 Lima, August 22, 1952

AIR AGREEMENT WITH PERU

Reference: Your Despatch No. E-116 of June 14, 1952.

On August 20 the Peruvian Directorate of Civil Aviation unofficially gave us a copy of their draft proposals for a bilateral air agreement with Canada. This draft has yet to be submitted for the consideration of the Legal Counsel of the Peruvian Department of External Affairs, who, along with the Director of Civil Aviation and the Legal Counsel of that Directorate, is a member of the Peruvian Permanent Commission on International Conventions and Agreements on Aviation. Dr. Marchena, the Legal Counsel of the Directorate, informed us that the Directorate would welcome our comments concerning their proposals at our earliest convenience, if possible before the draft is considered on the ministerial level.

2. The form of the Peruvian draft follows exactly the Canadian draft agreement submitted for their consideration. In substance it incorporates only a few counter-proposals. Their draft, which is in Spanish, has been checked closely against the Canadian draft agreement and, in order to save time, only the sections where the Canadian text has been amended, have been translated. You will find the text of the appropriate sections, with English translations, attached.†

3. I also attach a translation of the proposed route schedules drawn up by the Directorate.† Section I, governing the route to be operated by the designated airline of the Government of Canada, follows substantially the form of route designation that we requested. The only variation has been that, with respect to the intermediate points, Havana has been listed by name as an alternate to Mexico City. This does not conform exactly with the route designation suggested in paragraph 4 of your Despatch No. E-116 of June 14.

4. Section II of the schedule lists the route to be followed by the designated airline of Peru. The form of route designation outlined in your despatch mentioned above had been suggested, but apparently it is the Peruvian wish that specific points be included in the agreement. Concerning this the Legal Counsel of the Directorate informed us that Peru had an air agreement with the United States to operate an airline to Washington, D.C. and New York City, points which, you will note, are listed in their proposed schedule.

5. I should be grateful to receive your comments regarding the Peruvian draft proposals and the schedule of route designations at your earliest convenience, in order that I may inform the Directorate of Civil Aviation as to their acceptability.

1. The Peruvian changes in our draft bi-lateral are under study and we hope to let you have our comments at an early date. The Peruvian proposal relating to route descriptions in schedule also requires further discussion and this question might be taken up with the Peruvian authorities immediately.

2. The Peruvian request for a route to Montreal in return for a Canadian route from Vancouver raises an issue of some difficulty for us. It means that in order to obtain a route for Canadian Pacific Air Lines we must give Peru a route which enters directly into the area normally served by TCA since any southbound routes out of Montreal or Toronto to Latin America would fall within the area marked out for TCA by government policy. We had hoped that the Peruvian authorities would be interested in a reciprocal route to Vancouver as a direct offset to a Canadian route from Vancouver. If, however, the Peruvian authorities insist that they must have a route to Montreal in exchange for a route from Vancouver the matter will have to be referred for Ministerial consideration here.

3. In the circumstances if Peru is insistent on a Montreal route, it is desirable to ascertain whether the Peruvian authorities would agree to inclusion in the schedule of a similar Canadian route from Montreal or Toronto to Peru as well as the Vancouver route. We would, of course, be quite prepared in this case to add the Vancouver route for Peru as well. This would preserve a balance as between TCA and CPAL interests even though, for equipment and other reasons, TCA would be unlikely to operate an eastern route, at least for a considerable time.

4. In addition, we note the Peruvian desire to designate intermediate points in the United States in their route. We omitted the mention of intermediate U.S. points in the Canadian route so as to avoid raising complications in the matter of 5th Freedom rights in United States for either country and we strongly prefer our formula by which the idea of intermediate points may be recognized but the points left for specific designation by mutual agreement when the route is to be operated. You should ascertain whether Peru insists on specific designation of these intermediate points, particularly in the United States. If they do, we will have to reconsider the description of our own route or routes with a view to possible designation of intermediate U.S. points as well.

5. Please consult the Peruvian authorities with regard to these questions and inform us of their views so that the matter may be submitted for government decision here.

BILATERAL AIR AGREEMENT WITH PERU

On September 26, at the Ambassador's request, I called upon Major-General Carlos Washburn Salas, who recently replaced Major-General Flores Silva as Director-General of Civil Aviation. General Washburn, previous to his new appointment, was Chief of Staff of the Peruvian Air Force.

2. I explained to him the difficulties raised by the proposed Peruvian route designation and emphasized it had been our hope that Peru would be interested in a reciprocal route to Vancouver, or alternately, would agree to leave the question of their route designation open for future settlement after the conclusion of the agreement, along the lines of the proposals contained in paragraph 5 of your Despatch No. E-116 of June 14.

3. General Washburn, although he obviously was not familiar with all aspects of the negotiations to date, seemed to be genuinely interested in these proposals. He expressed the opinion that, in his view, it would be very difficult for a Peruvian airline to compete successfully with already-established airlines on the Eastern route — Lima, via intermediate points to New York and beyond to Montreal. I was left with the impression that he might be prepared to recommend reconsideration of the route previously proposed by Peru. He stated, however, that he was not able to give a definite answer until he had had an opportunity to discuss the question with Dr. Marchena, the Legal Counsel of the Directorate, who is presently on vacation and is not expected back until about October 15.

Peruvian route designation. Copies of this letter were sent to the Ministers of Aviation and Foreign Affairs.

2. In a reply dated November 10, 1952, an English translation of which is attached,† the Director-General implied that Peru is prepared to either request a reciprocal route to Vancouver, or to leave the question of Peruvian route designation open for future agreement. The matter is now before the Peruvian Permanent Commission on Conventions, which should reach a decision at their next meeting on Friday, the fourteenth of this month.

3. This is a definite step forward and I hope that it will be possible to conclude the Air Agreement in the near future. Once the question of route designation is settled, I assume that you will then be in a position to let me have your comments concerning the Peruvian changes in the text of our Draft Bilateral. I think it is very important that we present our counter proposals, if any, as soon as possible, so that no opportunity is provided for the negotiations to lag.

BILATERAL AIR AGREEMENT WITH PERU

Reference: Your despatch No. 259 of November 13, 1952.

1. In our air telegram No. 2 of September 10, 1952, we promised to let you have as soon as possible our comments on the Peruvian amendments to the text of our draft Agreement. The Air Transport Board have now completed their study of the proposed amendments. For your information and use I quote their comments in full. You will note that they are prepared to accept the Peruvian amendments to two out of the four articles affected. As for the other two, they recognize that the Peruvian authorities have reasonable grounds for seeking amendments and while not able to accept the proposals in full, they have provided redrafts which will clarify the Canadian intentions and which they hope will meet the Peruvian views.

"1. Article II (1) as amended (the Peruvian insertion being underlined) reads as follows:

(1) Each contracting party grants to the other contracting party the rights specified in this Agreement for the purpose of establishing the commercial international air services to be operated by virtue of the said Agreement on the routes specified in the appropriate section of the Schedule thereto (hereinafter called the 'agreed services' and 'the specified routes').

Note: There is no objection to the Peruvian amendment.

"2. Article II (2)

The Canadian text reads as follows:

(2) Subject to the provisions of this Agreement, the airlines designated by each contracting party shall enjoy, while operating an agreed service on a specified route, the following privileges:

- (a) to fly without landing across the territory of the other contracting party;
- (b) to make stops in the said territory for non-traffic purposes; and
- (c) to make stops in the said territory at the points specified for that route in the Schedule to this Agreement for the purpose of putting down and taking on international traffic in persons, goods and mails coming from or destined for other points so specified.

"The Peruvian text reads as follows:

"(2) Subject to the provisions of this Agreement, the airlines designated by each contracting party shall enjoy, while operating an agreed service on a specified route, the following privileges:

- (a) to fly without landing across the territory of the other contracting party only in the case that while making a flight to the said territory landing was not possible.
- (b) to make stops in the said territory at the points specified for that route in the Schedule to this Agreement for the purpose of putting down and taking on international traffic in persons, goods and mails coming from or destined for other points so specified.

"Note

"Reconsideration of Article II(2) leads to the conclusion that the Canadian text is defective, should be redrafted and a new text of the Article submitted to Peru.

"(a) and (b) of the Canadian text are, as written, merely statements of Freedoms 1 and 2 as set out in the International Air Services Transit Agreement to which both Peru and Canada are parties. Restatement of the Freedoms in the bilateral agreement is unnecessary and redundant. Taken out of the context of the International Air Services Transit Agreement they are likely to create confusion.

"Read in conjunction with the opening paragraph of the Article, the intention of (a) is certainly not clear because it is difficult to see how 'while operating an agreed service on a specified route' an airline can fly over the territory without landing. The Peruvian amendment, therefore, appears to be well merited but it does not provide for the case of over-flight when no traffic offers.

“As for sub-article (b), once again there is an apparent inconsistency with the opening paragraph of the Article and in the Board’s view this paragraph should be re-drafted to convey our real meaning. What we want is the right to carry without the exercise of traffic rights, traffic to and from third countries beyond, on flights operating on the agreed services. The Board’s present opinion is that the text of the Canadian draft does not achieve the purpose desired. It is suggested, therefore, the text be re-drafted as follows:

(2) Subject to the provisions of this Agreement, the Airlines designated by each contracting party shall enjoy, while operating an agreed service on a specified route, the following privileges:

(a) to fly without landing across the territory of the other contracting party only in cases where, while making a flight to the said territory landing is not possible or where there is no traffic to be set down or taken up; and

(b) to make stops in the said territory at the points specified for that route in the Schedule to this Agreement for the purpose of putting down and taking on international traffic in persons, goods and mails coming from or destined for other points so specified.

(c) On any flight which makes a stop at any of the said specified points, to carry into and out of the said territory on the same flight, international traffic not originating in or destined for a point in the said territory.

“3. Article III (1), (2) and (3)

The Canadian text reads as follows:

(1) Each contracting party shall have the right to designate in writing to the other contracting party one or more airlines for the purpose of operating the agreed services on the specified routes.

(2) Each contracting party shall have the right by written notification to the other contracting party to withdraw the designation of an airline and to substitute the designation of another airline.

(3) On receipt of the designation, the other contracting party shall, subject to the provisions of paragraph (4) and (5) of this Article, without delay, grant to the airline or airlines designated, the appropriate operating authorization.

The Peruvian text reads as follows:

(1) Each contracting party shall have the right to designate in writing to the other contracting party one airline of its nationality that shall enjoy in the territory of the other contracting party the right of operating the agreed services on the routes established in this Agreement which are specified in the attached Schedule.

(2) Each contracting party shall have the right by written notification to the other contracting party to withdraw the designation of an airline and to substitute the designation of another airline of its nationality.

(3) On receipt of the designation of one airline of one contracting party, the other contracting party shall, subject to the provisions of paragraph (4) and (5) of this Article, without delay grant to the airline designated the appropriate operating authorization.

"Note

The change in (1) made by Peru limits the operation to one airline of each contracting party instead of permitting one or more airlines as provided in the Canadian text. This is not acceptable to us because of the necessity of providing for an entry by T.C.A. as well as C.P.A.L. We could, however, probably agree to one designated airline for each specified route, provided we are not required to designate one airline to operate all routes allotted to Canada, and the wording we have suggested below is designed to express this viewpoint.

"The use of the words 'of its nationality' suggested by Peru is also not acceptable. Article III (5) makes such a qualifying phrase unnecessary and the words themselves are open to the objection that they require definition. The phrase is also used in the Peruvian amendment to (2) and is objected to on the same grounds.

"The change by Peru of (3) is acceptable if our further amendment of (1) is satisfactory to Peru, subject to substitution of the words 'an airline' for the Peruvian words 'one airline' in the first line.

"It is suggested that Article III (2) remain as it appears in the Canadian text and that (1) and (3) be re-drafted as follows:

(1) Each contracting party, with respect to each route established in this Agreement which is specified in the Schedule thereto for operation by an airline of such contracting party, shall have the right to designate in writing to the other contracting party, one airline for the purpose of operating the agreed service on the said route.

(3) On receipt of the designation of an airline of one contracting party the other contracting party shall, subject to the provisions of paragraphs (4) and (5) of this Article, without delay, grant to the airline designated the appropriate operating authorization.

"4. Article XIII

"The Canadian text reads as follows:

"This Agreement and any Exchange of Notes in accordance with Article XI shall be registered by the Government of Canada with the International Civil Aviation Organization.

"The Peruvian text reads as follows:

"This Agreement and any Exchange of Notes in accordance with Article XI shall be registered by the Governments of Canada and Peru with the International Civil Aviation Organization.

"Note

There is no objection to the Peruvian amendment."

DESPATCH No. 283

Lima, December 29, 1952

BILATERAL AIR AGREEMENT WITH PERU

Reference: Your despatch No. E-217 of December 2, 1952.

I enclose a copy of a letter, with translation, from the Director General of Civil Aviation of Peru, concerning the route designation proposed by Peru for inclusion in the draft bilateral air agreement.†

2. You will note that although Peru requests a reciprocal route from Lima to Vancouver, it also wishes to make formal provision in the agreement for a second route from Lima to Montreal or Toronto. This latter route would be available to both Peru and Canada and the intermediate points would be determined by future agreement when either of the participating countries desires to commence operations on the route.

3. As I mentioned in my despatch No. 192 of August 22, 1952, Peru has an air agreement with the United States to operate an airline to Washington, D.C. and New York City. It is anxious to make provision, in the bilateral air agreement with Canada, therefore, for the extension of the route to Montreal or to Toronto. The actual operation of such a route, however, is still a matter of future speculation. As you know, Peru does not possess an international airline at the present time, nor, from the information which we have been able to gather, does it appear that there is any possibility in the near future of the formation of a Peruvian international airline which would meet the requirements outlined in Article III (5) of the draft agreement.

4. The comments and amendments contained in your despatch No. E-217 of December 2, 1952, concerning the text of the proposed agreement, have been discussed with Dr. Marchena, the Legal Counsel of the Directorate of Civil Aviation. He thought that all of the proposals of the Air Transport Board would be acceptable to Peru with the possible exception of paragraph (a) of Article II (2). He was doubtful whether CORPAC, the Peruvian Government agency responsible for the operation of Lima's principal airport, Limatambo, would agree to a Canadian aircraft on a scheduled flight not landing in the event that "there is no traffic to be set down or taken up." Presumably, the question is one of the collection of landing and other fees. The Peruvian acceptance of the other changes proposed by the Air Transport Board in the text of the agreement, however, should not be considered as final until we have received written confirmation.

5. I should be grateful to receive your comments concerning the proposed Peruvian route designations at your earliest convenience, as the Directorate of Civil Aviation is anxious to obtain our comments as to their acceptance as soon as possible.

COMMONWEALTH CONSULTATION

In connection with the Korea armistice talks, a very confidential approach was made to the United Kingdom Government by the United States Government, who asked that the discussions should be kept on a strictly bilateral basis. The United Kingdom Government, while naturally very much welcoming this approach, were anxious for their part that other Commonwealth Governments outside Asia should have knowledge of it. The question thus arose of how to reconcile the United States request for strictly bilateral consultation with the United Kingdom desire to keep in touch with other Commonwealth Governments on the issues involved. At first it was feared that some difficulty might be encountered on this score, but fortunately our position was readily understood by the United States and the issue was happily resolved through the United States entering into direct consultation with Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, as well as with ourselves.

2. Nevertheless, it must be expected that the same kind of situation will arise over other matters from time to time in the future. Some thought has been given by the United Kingdom Government to the considerations which should determine our procedure in such circumstances, and it is felt that it would be most helpful to exchange views now, in advance of the event, on the best method of handling any problem of this kind which may arise. An analysis of the considerations involved is contained in the annexure to this memorandum, and the United Kingdom Government would very much appreciate any comments on the suggestions put forward.

[ANNEXE/ANNEX]

Ottawa, December 31, 1951

1. It is the aim of the United Kingdom Government both
  - (a) to carry out our long established practice for the exchange of information and views with other Commonwealth Governments, and
  - (b) to encourage the United States to take us fully into their confidence.
2. It is hardly necessary to repeat that the United Kingdom Government attach the highest importance to consultation with other Commonwealth Governments and intend to carry out their obligations to other Commonwealth Governments to keep them fully and currently informed of developments on all major issues.
3. There can also be no question about the great importance of encouraging the United States to consult with us on all major issues fully and while their ideas are taking shape. All Commonwealth Governments wish to see the development of the greatest possible measure of mutual confidence between members of the Commonwealth and the United States, and it must be a first objective to do everything possible to build it up. In Korea, as we all know, one of the greatest dangers has always been that of the United States taking the bit between their teeth and going ahead without consulting any of their allies on steps which may have consequences affecting us all.
4. These two objectives — consultation with other members of the Commonwealth and consultation with the United States — are not incompatible, but it would be wrong to disguise from ourselves that difficulties will arise on occasions. In asking for a purely bilateral exchange of views with the United Kingdom on the issue of a warning following an armistice in Korea, the United States were, we believe, actuated to a large extent by the consideration that in this and in other similar cases they could be seriously embarrassed if their preliminary consultation with the United Kingdom led directly to approaches being made to them at that early stage by representatives of other members of the Commonwealth. The United States have, of course, their own obligations in respect of other foreign countries (e.g., in relation to Korea they have special obligations towards all countries with forces in Korea), and it is understandable that they may feel themselves in a difficulty in opening the door to consultations with five Commonwealth Governments while refraining from saying anything to foreign countries such as France.
5. We must avoid a position in which the United States might seek to impose an embargo on our conveying information to other Commonwealth Governments or else withdraw their confidence from ourselves. At present there are welcome signs that the United States are anxious to exchange views with us very fully at an early stage in their thinking. It is felt that other Commonwealth Governments will agree that in the common cause it is most desirable to encourage this and that everything possible should therefore be done to meet United States difficulties and susceptibilities.

6. The problem would be greatly eased if, when particularly delicate issues are under preliminary discussion between ourselves and the United States (of which we shall certainly wish to keep other Commonwealth Governments informed), other Commonwealth Governments could refrain from initiating direct enquiries or discussion on those particular issues with the United States in the early stages. This is a position which the United Kingdom Government are very ready to accept for their part — namely that, if another Commonwealth Government is in preliminary discussion direct with the United States, the United Kingdom Government, while kept informed, would themselves refrain from opening up discussion on the subject with the United States until they had received an indication from either the United States or the other Commonwealth Government concerned that the way was clear for such an extension of the discussion.

7. In any bilateral discussions between the United States and ourselves we would of course always be prepared, if so requested, to pass on to the United States any views which another Commonwealth Government might wish to offer. But normally, no doubt, other Commonwealth Governments would prefer to make their views known to the United States direct. The problem is one of timing — as was exemplified in connection with the recent telegrams on Korea. What is essential is that other Commonwealth Governments should be brought into direct consultation by the United States in such a way and at such a stage in the discussions as to enable their views to be considered in time to affect the final outcome. We would wish to help to secure this whenever the United States comes to us first on a bilateral basis.

COMMONWEALTH CONSULTATION

The Canadian Government attach the highest importance to the continuation of the present practice of exchange of information and consultation between Commonwealth governments. The Canadian Government also attach great importance to the exchange of information and consultation between Commonwealth governments and the Government of the United States. In these respects, the Canadian Government share the views stated in the United Kingdom Government's memorandum of December 31, 1951.

2. The Canadian Government are fully in accord with the United Kingdom Government in wishing to see development of the greatest possible measure of mutual confidence between members of the Commonwealth and the United States; they agree upon the importance of encouraging the United States Government to consult with Commonwealth governments at an early stage on major issues. For this reason, the Canadian Government welcomed the recent exchanges between London and Washington concerning the Korean armistice negotiations.

3. The Canadian Government are conscious of the difficulty referred to in the United Kingdom Government's memorandum in relation to discussions between a Commonwealth government and the Government of the United States. For their part, the Canadian Government are anxious, too, to avoid situations in which the United States Government will arrive at decisions of importance to Commonwealth governments without adequate prior consultation. The Canadian Government are also aware of the risk of the United States arriving at agreement in such matters following prior consultation with one Commonwealth government and the subsequent use of such agreement to secure the support of other governments of the Commonwealth.

4. There may be times when, particularly delicate issues being under preliminary discussion between one member of the Commonwealth and the United States, an attempt to include other countries from the beginning would be seriously embarrassing. The Canadian Government realize that, in such a situation, an effort to extend the discussions might lead the United States Government to take a less forthcoming attitude on consultation; this would have unfortunate effects for all Commonwealth governments.

5. These difficulties of consultation are also present in any normal alliance. The Canadian Government are doubtful whether it is feasible or indeed desirable to attempt to reduce to a precise formula the rules which should govern the behaviour of Commonwealth governments in such matters. Certainly, it would not be desirable or indeed possible for Commonwealth governments to tie their hands in such a way that they would be precluded from raising with the United States Government, at any time, any issue in which they had an important interest.

6. The Canadian Government are, however, prepared, now as in the past, to treat with entire confidence information received from any other Commonwealth government and, when specifically requested so to do, to refrain from using such information or mentioning that it had been received in discussions with the Government of the United States. Naturally, any Commonwealth government having bilateral discussions with the Government of the United States would bear in mind the interests of other members of the Commonwealth and encourage the United States Government to consult other Commonwealth governments at an early stage on issues which concern them.

THE COMMONWEALTH

Commonwealth Finance Ministers' Meeting

7. Mr. Plumptre. Commonwealth finance officials have now completed their preliminary discussions and have prepared a report for Ministers. This report notes that if the loss of gold reserves continues at the rate implied by the forecasts received, the reserves might be reduced to around $1,540 million by the end of June — a level equivalent to financial catastrophe. It recognizes that the root cause of the Sterling Area's difficulties has been that since the war nearly all members have been making greater demands for goods and services than could be met from their resources and borrowing. The report notes that anti-inflationary domestic policies are of vital importance in dealing with the balance of payments problem and that the measures so far announced are insufficient. However, apart from the United Kingdom, each of the official representatives has explained how difficult it would be for his particular country to go further than it had already gone. Ministers may be prepared to go further. The report suggests that further emergency import restrictions may be necessary, but recognizes that this type of action can only be a palliative. The long-term aim should be the convertibility of sterling and this would require that the Sterling Area achieve a surplus with the rest of the world and so build up its central reserves. Even with a considerable improvement in the reserve level, it is stated that the eventual move to convertibility would require the co-operation and assistance of the United States and Canada. The report notes that the communique to be issued at the end of the ministers' conference will be of major importance in its effect on confidence in sterling and that it should, therefore, set forth a defined and positive course of action and policy for the Sterling Area.

THE COMMONWEALTH

8. Mr. Plumptre. The lead in the Ministerial meetings has been taken by the Chancellor of the Exchequer who has proposed a programme of immediate measures to halt the drain on the sterling area central reserves by the middle of the year. He has suggested that the Sterling Area must attain a payments balance with the rest of the world during the second half of the year and must move into surplus in the first six months of 1953. To bring about a balance in Sterling Area accounts in the last six months of 1952, he has proposed specific payments objectives for each of the Sterling Area countries and that these should be attained by one or other, or a combination, of import cuts, increased exports, tighter fiscal and monetary policies or borrowing from outside the Sterling Area. The other Sterling Area Finance Ministers have all agreed on the need to meet Mr. Butler's targets in the aggregate, but with certain reservations in individual cases. It seems likely that the objectives for the different countries will not be definitely accepted at the present meeting but will constitute recommendations of the conference which the Ministers will do their best to have their governments carry out. On the longer term problem the Australian Finance Minister has been trying to obtain agreement on a definite time-phased programme for the attainment of convertibility. While there seems to be little disagreement with this ultimate objective, there are considerable differences of view about how and when the move to convertibility should be made. This and the question of the speeding up of the development of Commonwealth sources of food and raw materials are to be discussed by a post-conference working party. The statement to be issued at the end of the conference will, however, contain a reaffirmation of the objective of convertibility. It is expected that the statement will be approved at a final meeting to be held today.

10. Miss Meagher. The Commonwealth Finance Ministers concluded their deliberations on January 21st. Their communique faithfully represents the tone and accomplishments of the meeting.<sup>2</sup> It remains to be seen to what extent Sterling Area Governments will prove willing to take the measures which have been recommended to overcome the Sterling Area's economic and financial difficulties. So far as the long-term is concerned, two working parties have been established. The first, under the chairmanship of Sir Arthur Salter, is to report on the conditions which must be created before sterling can become convertible and to suggest what successive steps should be taken to create these conditions. The second is to examine the opportunities for increasing the productive power of the Sterling Area, paying particular attention to the possibilities of higher production of food, raw material and other essential goods. In this connection special consideration is to be given to the capital equipment needs of Sterling Area countries.

Ottawa, February 21, 1952

UNITED KINGDOM AND STERLING AREA ECONOMIC POSITION

We have repeated to you the various telegrams received from our delegation to the recent meeting of Commonwealth Finance Ministers and are sending you copies of the more important documents of the meeting and of the Working Parties set up on convertibility and on development. In addition, I think you will be interested to hear something of subsequent discussions here between members of our Economic Division and other officials regarding the long-term prospects of the Sterling Area and the possibility of an eventual move to, or substantially towards, convertibility.

2. Mr. Deutsch apparently concludes from his discussions and observations overseas that it is a question whether the United Kingdom will pull through 1952 without another and more severe crisis. The delay in tackling the present crisis, occasioned by the election and the time taken for new ministers to come to grips with their responsibilities, was unfortunate and resulted in the emergency being tackled several months later than it should have been and with the reserves many hundreds of millions of dollars lower than might otherwise have been the case. The resultant tightness of the situation naturally has made remedial action more difficult. Given the measures which the United Kingdom has already announced and the recommendations made to Sterling Area Governments, it seems that the action which the United Kingdom Government takes through the Budget, which is to be brought down in March, will be crucial. There is some possibility that the "right" budget might restore confidence in sterling sufficiently to allow other measures to exercise their effect and eventually reverse the trend of reserves which is still steeply downwards.

3. You will be aware that the discussions, both in the meeting of Finance Ministers and subsequently in the working party, chaired by Sir Arthur Salter,<sup>3</sup> revealed fairly considerable differences, between Australia and Ceylon on the one hand and the United Kingdom on the other, about the preconditions and timing of any major step towards convertibility. Mr. Deutsch has told us that the more conservative attitude of United Kingdom spokesmen arises from a variety of factors in addition to the more cautious approach which one would expect from the guardian of the Area's reserves. There are, apparently, differing opinions amongst United Kingdom ministers and officials about the long-term objectives and their attitude is conditioned by the desire for more time in which to form a firm view about the direction in which the Sterling Area should move once the immediate crisis is overcome. Apparently some of the more responsible officials, including Sir Leslie Rowan,<sup>4</sup> believe that the United Kingdom should take stringent measures to meet the immediate crisis, but that no definite commitments should be made regarding long-term objectives, particularly regarding the time at which these objectives should be achieved. Others are, at the moment, in favour of the immediate announcement of long-term objectives such as convertibility (perhaps forgetful of the experience of 1947). Still others believe in the desirability of building up a self-sufficient Sterling Area and the abandonment of any attempt at convertibility and non-discrimination.

4. The Australian attitude is that convertibility cannot wait on the achievement of all the desirable pre-conditions such as a high reserve level, a continuing Sterling Area surplus with the rest of the world and a rough payments balance between the United States and all other countries; indeed, that the attainment of such pre-conditions is most unlikely while sterling remains inconvertible. Very briefly, the Australian view is that convertibility should be introduced at the earliest possible moment after the present trend is reversed and that convertibility could be maintained without discriminatory import restrictions through the adoption of sufficiently strict and realistic monetary and fiscal policies by the members of the Sterling Area.

5. These views have been put forward very strongly by the able Australian spokesman in the Convertibility Working Party, Mr. E.G. Melville. It is not clear, however, that the Australian Government would be prepared, in the event, to go as far as he proposes, since the deflationary policies which he advocates would clearly be unpalatable to large sections of Australian opinion. The Australians seem to be in somewhat of a dilemma. They feel that the Sterling Area cannot hold together if there is to be a financial crisis every two years and they are, therefore, anxious to announce that the pound will be made convertible within a foreseeable period of time. On the other hand, Australia constitutes, at present, a very heavy drain on Sterling Area resources and because of the nature of its exports and the need for imports is not in a particularly good position to put its own house in order — at least not very quickly.

6. The Australian position is perhaps symptomatic of the difficulties facing the Sterling Area in keeping itself in balance or surplus over the long-run with the rest of the world. While the reserves are held centrally there will be a tendency for individual countries of the Sterling Area to overdraw on their earning power in the hope that somebody else will be in surplus. In this situation there will be mounting pressure from countries in a surplus position much as the Colonial areas and Pakistan to retain their earnings on the ground that they should not be asked to indulge in restrictions of various sorts merely for the benefit of their Sterling Area partners. On the basis of the experience since the war of over-spending by Sterling Area countries, including itself, the United Kingdom's caution in accepting the Australian's thesis seems understandable. What guarantee can there be that independent governments within the Sterling Area in circumstances other than those of crises would be prepared (given the social and development needs which exist) to live within their individual means or within their aggregate means when the possibility exists of drawing on a central reserve?

7. None of the officials here is too hopeful that the measures which it has been agreed to recommend to Commonwealth Governments either will be implemented or, if implemented, would be effective in preventing a recurrence of crisis. Mr. Rasminsky is particularly concerned that, in their consideration of the problem, Sterling Area countries do not appear to have attached sufficient importance to the effect on their overall position which the running of deficits within the Sterling Area can entail. His view, of course, bears on the existence of substantial sterling balances in London. If all these balances are left to reinforce demand in the Sterling Area, the internal measures taken by the various countries could be frustrated and there would be a tendency to maintain or increase uneconomic production, for prices to rise relative to the world level and for resources which should be earning external currencies to be dissipated in the Area. Mr. Deutsch has something of the same feeling (although he is perhaps less pessimistic than Mr. Rasminsky) and both of them consider that it may require another crisis or near crisis before the Sterling Area countries are prepared to take all the steps which are necessary to rectify their present over-extended positions. For this reason it is the general view here that the discussions in the Working Party on Convertibility will not be immediately productive (although providing a good occasion for the countries concerned to take a first measure of the real size of the problem).

8. On the basis of this assessment of the position it seems pretty well agreed that it would be inopportune for Canada, at this stage, to play an active role in suggesting policies to be adopted by the Sterling Area countries which we may think are right for them and which, at the same time, would advance our cherished long-term objectives of multilateral trade, non-discrimination and convertibility. Apparently it would have been fairly easy for Canadian representatives at the recent meeting of Finance Ministers to take such a lead and to have rallied support from all Sterling Area countries except the United Kingdom and possibly New Zealand. Such an initiative on our part, if followed through, might have broken the Sterling Area and would hardly have served our long-term interest, quite apart from the damaging effect which it would have had on Canada-United Kingdom relations. There seems to be no doubt that the better policy is to let the pressure of events bring about the kind of atmosphere and policies which the situation in our view appears to demand. This is not to say that we are unsympathetic or unwilling to be helpful when our help can be put to good use.

9. In the recent discussions here, Mr. Rasminsky had some interesting things to say about the actions which might be taken by creditor countries when the time is ripe to lend assistance to the United Kingdom and the Sterling Area, that is to say, when there can no longer be any doubt about the full range of actions which Sterling Area countries and the United Kingdom must take and when they are willing to take them. This combination of circumstances might arise either when a further crisis is approaching or, on the assumption that Sterling Area countries now take the necessary measures to bring themselves into balance with the rest of the world, when, as seems less likely, the reserves are building up and Sterling Area countries themselves feel that it is timely to move in the direction of convertibility and non-discrimination. Assuming that it is a deepening crisis that brings the situation to a turning point, Mr. Rasminsky would not rule out the possibility of assistance from the Fund (which is steadily liberalizing its outlook), the Federal Reserve Bank and commercial banks in the United States.

10. In extending assistance in the circumstances foreseen, it would probably be possible to attach certain conditions about the policies to be adopted by the United Kingdom and other countries, notably with respect to the use of sterling balances (and trading policies), which, in Mr. Rasminsky's view, are prerequisite to the resolution of Sterling Area difficulties. We gather from Mr. Deutsch that in the hypothetical circumstances outlined, the Department of Finance might also be prepared to consider recommending the extension of Canadian assistance (perhaps by way of a loan to fortify Sterling Area central reserves). It is, of course, recognized that even in the situation envisaged it would be difficult for the United Kingdom to do much unilaterally about the new and old sterling balances and that any freezing, writing down or funding would probably have to be done by agreement with the holders, which would be very hard to obtain. Moreover, there is no doubt a point beyond which it would be impracticable, and indeed undesirable for political and social reasons, to limit the access of Sterling Area countries to the funds they hold in London, particularly those which represent post-war earnings.

11. For the present, as noted above, it is not proposed to take any positive action on Sterling Area problems. It is not considered desirable to launch another import campaign designed to stimulate United Kingdom and Sterling Area sales in Canada since, at least in the short-run, the policies recommended by the Commonwealth Finance Ministers or what is more to the point the measures they are, in fact, likely to adopt, seem as likely to reduce the availability of Sterling Area goods and increase their price as the reverse. This is particularly true while the sterling balances are pretty freely available and capital movements are unrestricted within the area. Besides there is a limit to the amount of propaganda it is desirable to direct in Canada to the stimulation of purchases from any one group of countries. However, we will naturally do nothing to discourage Sterling Area imports and our trade representatives abroad will continue to point out, when appropriate, that pre-emptive buying within the Sterling Area limits foreign earnings and thereby the achievement of the objectives which have been established. The Department of Trade and Commerce is likely, according to Mr. Isbister, to be sending out a directive along these lines.

12. Any comments of your own, or of others in Washington, on the matters covered by this despatch would be much appreciated.

COMMONWEALTH ECONOMIC CONFERENCE,
LONDON, NOVEMBER, 1952

The United Kingdom proposal, as set forth in Commonwealth Relations telegram, Circular W, No. 106 of June 25, 1952,† for the holding of a Commonwealth Economic Conference in London next November confronts the Canadian Government with some difficult policy decisions.

The first decision has already been taken, which is to participate in the conference. This decision is correct, not only because our reluctance to participate would be misunderstood in the other Commonwealth countries as well as in Canada, but also for the very important reason that by participating we can help to influence the direction in which the discussions at the conference proceed and the eventual outcome of the conference. Although the fact that we are not a member of the sterling area places us apart from the other Commonwealth delegations in economic discussions, the experience of the last conference of Commonwealth Finance Ministers demonstrated clearly that our views are listened to with respect, and the detached attitude we are able to adopt towards certain of the problems enables us to exert considerable influence over the discussions. Fundamentally this is because no member of the Commonwealth wishes to see Canada placed in a position where its membership in the Commonwealth proves to be an embarrassment.

The other difficult decisions of policy with which Canada will be faced are indicated by certain of the factors which the United Kingdom Prime Minister has used to justify the calling of the conference. For instance, he refers to the importance of discussions with the Government of the United States soon after the November election and the necessity of Commonwealth countries adopting a common outlook towards issues arising in such organizations as the Fund,<sup>6</sup> the Bank,<sup>7</sup> GATT and ECOSOC. It has been our policy to avoid giving the United States justification for regarding the Commonwealth as a medium for "ganging up" against the United States. Moreover, our special ties with the United States and the fact that we are not a member of the sterling area makes it often difficult for us to find common ground with other Commonwealth countries in the approach to economic problems.

The conference is being called in answer to a rather insistent demand on the part of a section of the Conservative Party in the United Kingdom. This section is perhaps more vocal than influential, but it has the powerful support of Lord Beaverbrook, Lord Camrose and Lord Kemsley and the papers which they control. This group have been urging the closer economic consolidation of the Commonwealth as an exclusive trading block. More specifically, they have directed their attack against the provisions of GATT which preclude the increase of existing preferences or the introduction of new preferences. In other words the policy they advocate is the extension of the system of preferences which were originally sponsored by Canada and found widespread application in the decisions of the Imperial Economic Conference held at Ottawa in 1932.

The movement towards closer economic cooperation among the Commonwealth countries finds a ready response in Australia and New Zealand and also to some extent in South Africa but it is clear that doubts about the feasibility of such a policy are widely held among responsible circles in the United Kingdom and among an influential group of Australian officials.

In some cases these doubts spring from a realization that trade rivalry is the factor most likely to introduce discord into the Anglo-American alliance. Good relations between Commonwealth countries and the United States are greatly facilitated if controversial trade questions can be kept in the background. GATT has been successful in achieving this objective. In other cases the doubts arise from a realization that the building-up of an exclusive trading block for the purpose of sheltering Commonwealth industries from American, German, and Japanese competition is unsound economically and likely to defeat the ultimate objective of the convertibility of sterling.

The recent repudiation by the United States Congress of the State Department policy directed towards the freeing of trade barriers is undermining the support for GATT in many Commonwealth countries, including Canada. There is only need to mention in this connection the failure of the United States Congress to pass the Customs Simplification Bill and the passing of the Andresen Amendment to the Defence Production Act which imposed quotas on the import of dairy products into the United States. These actions by Congress inconsistent with the policy of the State Department have meant that the United States has forfeited, for the time being, its leadership in the movement towards freer world trade.

The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) itself is not a very secure instrument in that it is receiving only provisional application to the extent consistent with the existing legislation. Accordingly it is difficult to defend GATT as the basis for the further development of freer world trade. However, the standstill on the increase of preferences is the effective quid pro quo which the United States received for reductions in United States duties and it is inconceivable that the new administration could maintain the reduced duties granted to Commonwealth countries in the face of a repudiation of the main concession received by the United States. More than any Commonwealth country Canada would suffer from the general break-up of GATT and the restoration of United States duties to the Hawley-Smoot level.

Apart from GATT, it must also be admitted that the Fund, the Bank and ECOSOC have failed to fulfil the high hopes originally held for them. Accordingly, a new initiative in the direction of more liberal international economic policies is desirable. The important questions to be resolved are the timing and method of such an initiative. From this it follows that the Canadian role at the forthcoming Commonwealth Economic Conference should not only be negative but also positive. Besides resisting any tendency to form all or some of the members of the Commonwealth into an exclusive trading block, we should endeavour to direct the discussions towards the manner in which an approach might be made by Commonwealth countries to the United States whereby existing international economic agencies could be re-constituted so as to be more effective instruments for the freeing of international trade. This approach to the United States should not in any sense take the form of a "ganging up" of Commonwealth countries. It should rather be a constructive approach by which those elements in the United States who realize the obligations of that country as a creditor nation may exert an influence towards having the United States once more assert its leadership in the field of international economic cooperation.

It is encouraging that the Acting United Kingdom High Commissioner's letter, transmitting the telegram, refers to the fact that the proposed economic conference will supersede the Finance Minister's conference scheduled for next January and also that the two working parties on convertibility of currencies and economic development within the Commonwealth will be continuing their meetings and presumably reporting to the conference. It would be sound policy for Canada to treat the economic conference as in every way stemming from the Finance Ministers Conference with the change in name being mainly for the purpose of embracing a wider range of Commonwealth economic problems, including those of trade. If this course is followed it would be easier to define our objectives as those of leading the Commonwealth towards sound economic policies, which could provide a basis for the eventual convertibility of sterling and an approach at the appropriate time to the Government of the United States for a new initiative towards freer world trade.

If these general objectives meet with approval, it is recommended that a suitable group of Canadian officials should be assigned the task of preparing the ground for the conference, particularly with a view to securing instructions from the Government prior to the meeting of Commonwealth officials which is to be held for the purpose of preparing for the conference.<sup>8</sup>

Following for Wilgress from Robertson, Begins:

1. I have been asked to see Salisbury and Liesching on Tuesday, July 22. I believe the purpose of the meeting is to try to get some preliminary and private appreciation of the Canadian approach to some of the questions raised by the forthcoming Commonwealth Economic Conference.

2. I understand acceptances have been received from all the Prime Ministers except Nehru and Malan, who will each be represented by colleagues. I expected that there would be a public statement about the conference before this, but it may be that they have decided to hold it for the forthcoming parliamentary debate on this country's financial and balance payments position which is to take place before the August adjournment. If there are any particular points about the conference arrangements or procedures which you would like to have the United Kingdom Government keep in mind, this meeting might afford an opportunity of bringing them forward. Ends.

COMMONWEALTH ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Reference: Your telegram No. 1614 of July 18th.

Following from Reid, Begins: So far as Conference arrangements or procedures are concerned, we have nothing to add at this stage to the Prime Minister's reply to Mr. Churchill.

The substance of the Conference has been discussed only briefly by Ministers and in a very preliminary way in the Inter-Departmental Committee on External Trade Policy, on the basis of a memorandum prepared by the Under-Secretary. There does seem, however, to be fairly general agreement on the following points which you may wish to bear in mind in your talk with Salisbury and Liesching tomorrow:

(a) We should endeavour to represent the Conference as stemming naturally from the meeting of Finance Ministers and not as some new departure from which striking and immediate results can be expected.

(b) Every effort should be made to avoid giving the impression during the Conference or subsequent to it that the Commonwealth is "ganging up" on the United States.

(c) In the circumstances which have prevailed since their inception, Canada has been, on the whole, satisfied with the progress made by the Fund, the Bank and, perhaps to a lesser extent, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

These institutions will undoubtedly be discussed in the Conference and we should endeavour to ensure that any changes in them which other members of the Commonwealth may propose, should be in the direction of freer world trade and payments and should not facilitate resort to further restrictionism.

3. Incidentally we assume that the United Kingdom will shortly be circulating a draft agenda for the conference and that this will be received in good time before the proposed preliminary meeting of senior officials. Ends.

Reference: Your telegram No. 1446 of July 21.

Your telegram under reference arrived after I had seen Salisbury and Liesching but our conversation covered point (a) and (b) pretty adequately. We did not get around to mentioning the Fund, the Bank or, except in very general terms, GATT.

2. Salisbury confirmed that it was Mr. Churchill's intention to make an announcement about the forthcoming Commonwealth economic conference during the debate on the general economic and financial situation which is now fixed for July 28. He will be consulting you and the other Commonwealth governments about the timing of the announcement so that simultaneous releases can be made in other Commonwealth capitals. He did not think it would be practicable to carry out consultations with all the Commonwealth governments between now and July 28 to determine an agreed text of the announcement. So far as the United Kingdom is concerned, they hope that Mr. Churchill's statement will be brief and general and will not attempt to outline the agenda of the conference or to anticipate what its outcome might be.

3. I expressed some misgivings about the possible variations on a common theme which might arise if everybody was left free to embroider it at will. One of the real dangers in the forthcoming conference was that its announcement might encourage hopes of a sudden and miraculous change of climate, both here and in other Commonwealth countries. To lessen this risk and put the meeting in its proper context, I suggested that in the statement announcing the meeting it might be linked with the finance ministers' meeting in January last; a few useful phrases from the agreed communique issued at the close of that meeting might be worked into the United Kingdom announcement. Salisbury will try to make this point with his Cabinet colleagues.

4. I enquired whether the United States had yet been told of the plans for the meeting and said I thought this should be done as far as possible in advance of the public announcement. Salisbury and Liesching were not sure whether anything had yet been said to the United States but ascertained from the Foreign Office that, in fact, nothing had been said. Washington will be informed right away of their plans, probably through the United States Ambassador here.

5. We had a little general sparring about what I thought was a rather defeatist United Kingdom approach to the American market — a disposition to be frightened off the moment any United States manufacturer applied to the United States Tariff Commission for an increase in rates or the application of an escape clause. I thought they should be readier to recognize the very real efforts that President Truman and his administration were making to fit American commercial policy to the facts of America's creditor position. Progress was slow but the direction was right. It should be their aim, as it was ours, to facilitate and encourage every American effort in this direction. The risks involved in a positive policy of co-operating with the North American countries might be real but they were small compared with the political and economic risks of trying to live without the United States.

6. Salisbury, who is a member of the Cabinet Committee under Eden's chairmanship which will be responsible for preparations for the conference, said that a good deal of preliminary work had been done but that none of its results had yet come to Cabinet. He hoped that they would have been able to thresh out the main lines along which the United Kingdom would approach the conference in time for the preliminary meeting of officials to begin in London about September 22. This meeting, which will have to be sandwiched in between the Fund meeting in Mexico in early September and the GATT meeting in Geneva in October should, Liesching thought, last about a month. This would give ministers about a month to consider the agenda in the light of the preliminary discussion between officials before the Prime Ministers assemble on November 25. The Prime Ministers' meeting might last about three weeks.

7. I thought it would do no harm to remind them that the dates proposed for the meeting would not be very convenient dates for Mr. St. Laurent. It was true that he had been the first to accept Mr. Churchill's invitation and was expecting to be present himself for part at least of the meetings. Our House, however, would probably be reassembling on November 20 and it was important to get in a month's work before Christmas if Parliament was to rise early enough to permit ministers to be present at the coronation.

Following from Pickersgill for Robertson.

1. Your telegram arrived at the same time as a message from Mr. Churchill for the Prime Minister transmitting the text of a proposed announcement to be made on Tuesday, July 29th, about a Commonwealth Economic Conference.

2. I am trying to arrange to go to St. Patrick to see the Prime Minister tomorrow and there are no other Ministers available for consultation before the beginning of next week, but I can give you my own reaction which I believe reflects the official view, and I imagine will be shared by Ministers.

3. The Prime Minister's reply to Mr. Churchill of June 26th stated "we feel that no definite date should be set until we have seen a tentative agenda, prepared in adequate detail, so that we may be sure that the Conference will have something tangible to deal with on which there is some reasonable prospect of reaching useful conclusions." We are therefore surprised that, a whole month later, the U.K. government should decide that an almost immediate announcement is necessary in total disregard of the express view of our government, and we still think the setting of a date and the formal announcement should be withheld until there is some agreement on an agenda which we believe would justify a conference.

4. Assuming we are absolutely alone in this objection, and that we do not wish to take the responsibility for holding up something other Commonwealth Prime Ministers are willing to agree to, should we not at least insist on certain changes in the proposed announcement by Mr. Churchill:

(i) to make it clear that the proposed conference is a successor of the last meeting of Finance Ministers, and is to replace the meeting proposed for next January, but that its scope is being broadened to consider a wider range of economic questions as suggested in Mr. Churchill's original message;

(ii) to amend the phrase which refers to pressing issues which are common to our several countries and the development of a constructive approach and, indeed, to make sure that there is no phraseology which suggests, or can reasonably be construed to suggest, that the Conference is for the purpose of establishing a common economic front or ganging up against anyone. We are all particularly concerned to make it clear that Canada is not prepared to join in formulating any single Commonwealth policy with respect to the Fund, the Bank and GATT.

5. In this connection, I personally think it would be desirable to have the reference to representation of colonial territories amended. As it stands it is bound to create a poor reaction in the United States and would look to many Canadians like a revival of the old lion-cub theory of Empire.

6. If the Conference is to be held in November, it would obviously suit Mr. St. Laurent much better to have it begin on the 27th than on the 25th. That would enable him to remain in Ottawa to speak on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne on the 24th and still be in London for the opening of the Conference. Perhaps this point should be made immediately. I am horrified, and I am sure the Prime Minister will be by the suggestion that the meeting should last three weeks. Surely ten days would be an absolute maximum and even that would carry it to the 5th or 6th of December.

7. I thought it useful to send this telegram immediately and to have a copy to show the Prime Minister so that if he agrees with its general terms, I can send you a brief message tomorrow night after my return. I shall also inform Earncliffe of the Prime Minister's views, but I feel sure he will wish to have you take the initiative in putting his position in London. Ends.

1. Pickersgill has shown me his telegram No. 1477 of July 25th and the incoming messages to which it refers.

2. I have asked him to hand the following reply to the U.K. Acting High Commissioner in Ottawa:

"I have shown the Prime Minister Mr. Churchill's message which you transmitted to me on July 24th, and the draft of a proposed announcement of a Commonwealth Economic Conference.

Mr. St. Laurent has asked me to let you know that he has asked our High Commissioner in London to see Mr. Churchill and communicate our views to him. This course was considered desirable because Mr. Robertson has been asked to discuss some of the points about which we are concerned and to determine them on the spot.

Would you let your Prime Minister know that he may expect Mr. Robertson to ask for an opportunity to see him on Monday, July 28th."

3. I should be grateful if you would arrange to see Mr. Churchill as early as possible on Monday and put to him the points set out in Pickersgill's telegram, with such modifications and amplifications as, in your judgement, are desirable.

4. I suppose Mr. Churchill is determined to make this announcement in the forthcoming debate and nothing short of our refusal to participate would be likely to cause postponement of an announcement at this time. Desirable as a postponement would be until we can determine the agenda, I do not think, in view of local opinion here, we would be wise in going that far.

5. I feel, however, we should be most insistent on the modification of the proposed announcement so as to remove any impression that the Commonwealth is seeking to create a common front against the United States or anyone else.

6. I assume there should be no difficulty about having the opening date fixed not earlier than November 27th and that there is no serious thought of the Conference lasting three weeks. In any event I could not undertake to be present before November 27th nor to remain away from Ottawa for as much as three weeks. Ends.

Following for Pickersgill from Robertson, Begins:

1. In United Kingdom view main topic for discussion at Prime Ministers' meeting will be those indicated in Mr. Churchill's message of June 25. They have not yet been able to get an agenda paper before Cabinet and fear they cannot do so before Wednesday or Thursday at the earliest. They aim now to circulate a preliminary agenda paper for observation of other Commonwealth Governments about the end of next week. The view of the officials who I saw this morning is that the real agenda programme for the Prime Ministers' discussions will have to be threshed out at the officials' meeting set for September 22.

2. The parliamentary timetable for this last week of the current session is extremely tight and the government have given two days, Tuesday and Wednesday, for a discussion on the general economic-financial situation. They feel they have to make a statement about the Commonwealth economic meeting in the course of this debate, preferably at its beginning, hence the urgency of agreement on what is to be said before Tuesday, July 29.

3. In the light of your telegram and in the hope of securing agreement on something tolerably innocuous quickly, I have suggested following drafting changes in United Kingdom Prime Minister's proposed statement:

(i) First sentence might be revised to read as follows: "Some little time ago, I communicated to my fellow Prime Ministers in the Commonwealth the proposal that we should meet in London in the latter part of November and review together the pressing issues of financial, commercial and economic policy with which our several countries are faced, some of which have been the subject of continuing consultation since the Finance Ministers' meeting in January of this year. It was our hope that out of such discussions we could develop (or work toward) a constructive approach to the economic problems of the free world."

(ii) In last phrase of next sentence, I have suggested inserting "in the last week of November" instead of "November 25" and expect agreement without too much difficulty can be reached on November 27 but probably not before Tuesday's statement.

4. I did not think it reasonable or practicable to object to a reference in the statement to the representation of colonial territories and hope this point will not be pressed in the Prime Minister's reply. I do not see any harm in phrase "constructive approach to the economic problems of the free world" in fact, each word in it helps to put the forthcoming meeting in the wider context which some of the proponents of exclusively Commonwealth co-operation are apt to deny. To this extent it is a saving clause rather than one to which we should object.

5. If a gloss is needed on the suggestion that we should object to the word "common" in the United Kingdom draft but could accept the alternative language, it would be that in fact our countries all are "facing" such issues as the inconvertibility of the pound sterling though from opposite sides of the fence.

6. On the question of ganging up (I do not know whether your stenographer or the cypher operator made the very happy mendation "gangling up") I feel the United Kingdom have been slow in discussing the initiative they are taking with the United States. I prodded them on this point a week ago. They claim the United States Embassy in London has been kept generally informed and that they are formally notifying the Ambassador here on Monday. I think it would be helpful if Wrong could find an early opportunity of talking to the State Department about our general approach and attitude toward the forthcoming meeting. It might also be worth suggesting to the State Department that their Embassy in London keep in touch with Canada House on developments in this general field.

7. I might add by way of extenuation of the rather disconcerting alternation of speed and slowness in the United Kingdom's handling of arrangements for this meeting that Eden, who is Chairman of the Cabinet Committee on the subject, has been ill and absent from office for the better part of the last three weeks. Following for Pickersgill from Robertson, Begins:

1. I have not yet been able to see Mr. Churchill but I have seen Lord Salisbury and have gone over the points of concern to us with him. He regretted the delays on their side that had made this last-minute rush unavoidable, and hoped very much that the modifications he was ready to recommend in the draft parliamentary statement would make it acceptable to Canada. At this stage it would be physically impossible to circulate a tentative agenda prior to the parliamentary statement. On the question of circulating an agenda he did not do more than repeat what I reported in paragraph 1 of my telegram No. 1669 of July 26.

2. Lord Salisbury has agreed, subject to Mr. Churchill's concurrence, in the textual changes in the parliamentary statement reported in my telegram under reference. The statement will, however, have to be still further recast to meet (a) a joint South African and Indian objection to their countries being bracketed in a single sentence, and (b) an Indian objection to the reference to "the free world." The CRO have suggested meeting the Indian difficulty by a reference to "the economic problems of the countries of the Commonwealth and of the other nations that are associated with them." I thought this clumsy and open to some substantive objection on our part, and suggested it might meet Indian susceptibilities and at the same time keep the discussions in the context in which we think they belong by simply referring to "the economic problems that beset the world."

3. Text of statement as finally established may reach you through Earnscliffe more quickly than from Canada House. I will send you further word when I have heard from Mr. Churchill. Ends.

COMMONWEALTH ECONOMIC CONFERENCE;
AMENDMENTS TO PROPOSED AGENDA

1. The Acting Prime Minister said the United Kingdom High Commissioner's office had on August 5th, 1952, transmitted the agenda which the U.K. government proposed for the Commonwealth Economic Conference in November. It had been considered by the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy, which was of the view that it tended to direct attention too much toward problems outside the countries of the sterling area and to afford insufficient scope for discussion of their internal policies which the Canadian government thought to be of primary importance if any real solutions were to be found to the sterling area difficulties. The Interdepartmental Committee had recommended a number of amendments, principally to the commentary on the agenda which served to indicate the character of matters for attention under the various items. If the proposed amendments were approved it was intended to have them submitted to the Prime Minister for his consideration and thereafter transmitted to the High Commissioner in London for communication to the U.K. government.<sup>10</sup> In the telegram of transmittal the purpose of the modifications would be explained.<sup>11</sup> The High Commissioner would also be informed that the Canadian government did not favour publication of any detailed agenda in advance of the Conference. It would be suggested that, as an alternative, a general statement concerning the purposes of the Conference might be issued after consideration by the participating governments.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

2. The Minister of Finance agreed with the proposed modifications. At an early date consideration would have to be given to the line to be followed by the Canadian representatives at the official meetings in September and at the Conference itself. On earlier occasions, Canada had indicated some of the measures it was thought had to be taken by the sterling area countries but the points had been put forward with some restraint and diffidence. It was for consideration whether the Canadian position should be put more directly at the coming Conference.

3. The Secretary of State for External Affairs also agreed with the general character of the modifications. While they would not commit the government specifically, they did indicate a line that Canada would be expected to follow after having made the suggestions.

4. Mr. Howe said it seemed probable that the U.K. government would be suggesting an increase in reliance on imperial preferences and a withdrawal from certain of the principles and obligations of G.A.T.T. Any such line of development would be contrary to the interests of Canadian trade. He agreed that consideration should be given to the line to be followed at the meetings. The Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy would be considering the matter at meetings on August 15th and August 22nd and would have a report for consideration by the Cabinet on or about August 26th.

5. The Cabinet, after discussion, approved the recommendations of the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy for amendments to the

DRAFT AGENDA FOR THE

Presumably you will by now have received copies of the draft Agenda proposed by the United Kingdom Government for the Commonwealth Economic Conference, together with letter of transmittal from Thomson to Pickersgill.† We have considered the expanded draft Agenda contained in Annex B and are proposing a number of changes, principally in the explanatory text. Our amended version is contained in the immediately following telegram. It has been approved by the Cabinet and also by the Prime Minister who is at present absent from Ottawa. I would be grateful if you would transmit the proposed amendments to the United Kingdom authorities.

Publicity

2. We are not in favour of publishing any detailed Agenda such as that suggested in Annex A to Thomson's letter. As you know, it has not been customary in the past to publish an advance agenda for Prime Ministers' conferences. Furthermore, we feel that in this instance, publication of the bare bones of an itemized agenda might lead to a misinterpretation of the purpose of the Conference and of our role in it. If some kind of an advance release is considered desirable, we feel that it should take the form of a suitable general statement. We would like to see any such statement before it is released.

Proposed Amendments to Draft Agenda

3. Generally, the U.K. draft seems to us to place an undue and almost exclusive emphasis on the factors external to the Sterling Area. It is far too outward looking and does not appear to provide adequate basis for the examination of the developments inside the system. We have therefore proposed, as you will see, a number of amendments to the explanatory text which should provide an opportunity for more realistic examination of the whole problem in its wider aspects.

4. Another unsatisfactory feature of the United Kingdom draft is the excessive emphasis on the possibility of a joint Commonwealth approach. There is a strong implication that the Conference should aim at the development of an agreed Commonwealth line on economic and commercial policy matters which are of wide international importance. The reference to "the question of modifications to international institutions such as the I.M.F. and GATT" is particularly important in this respect. When the announcement of the Conference was being considered we referred to the importance of avoiding any suggestion of "ganging up". (Our telegram No. 1477 of July 25.) We are proposing amendments that are in line with that view.

5. We have attempted to incorporate our amendments without altering too much the general structure of the United Kingdom draft. With one exception, the main headings have been left unchanged. We would like to avoid, if possible, serious controversy over the Agenda. However, we regard our proposed amendments as important if it is desired that we be completely frank in our appraisals of the present situation and our real views about what we regard as serious contributing factors.

DETAILED AGENDA FOR COMMONWEALTH ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Reference: My immediately preceding Telegram No. 1571 of today's date.

Proposed Canadian changes in Annex B of draft agenda suggested by United Kingdom Government are set forth below. The British and Canadian versions of the draft are shown under each heading. With the exception of Item 5, the main headings are unchanged. The underlining indicates where the principal changes are proposed. Begins:

1. The lessons to be drawn from experience since the war

British version:

This would deal with the assumptions underlying postwar agreements such as the I.M.F. and G.A.T.T. and the extent to which those assumptions have been falsified by events.

Canadian version:

This would review trade and payments developments and objectives since the war and would analyze the external causes and the internal causes of the difficulties encountered by Commonwealth countries. It would include consideration of the assumptions underlying postwar agreements such as the

I.M.F. and G.A.T.T. and the extent to which subsequent events and policies have affected the validity of those assumptions.

2. The likely tendencies and characteristics of the world economy during the next few years

British version:

This would deal with the extent to which the unforeseen features of the postwar economy and particularly the world dollar shortage are likely to persist.

Canadian version:

This would deal with the extent to which the unsatisfactory features of the postwar economy and particularly the payments difficulties, are likely to persist, and the extent to which they might be alleviated by the adoption of appropriate policies by the countries concerned.

3. Objectives in external economic policy

British version:

This would aim at the formulation of a long-term policy for the Commonwealth in the field of international trade and payments, taking as a start the statement issued at the conclusion of the Commonwealth Finance Ministers' meeting in January, 1952.

Canadian version:

This would attempt to determine the external objectives of economic policy, taking as a start the statement issued at the conclusion of the Commonwealth Finance Ministers' meeting in January, 1952.

4. Aspects of these objectives and of the means for achieving them

British version:

- (a) External financial policy
- (b) Economic development
- (c) Trade policy

Canadian version:

- (a) Domestic economic policies affecting the external position
- (b) External trade and financial policies
- (c) Economic development

British version:

(a) and (b) would continue the examination of the issues considered and in a preliminary way in the interim reports of the Commonwealth Working Parties on convertibility and development. (For this purpose it is hoped that all Commonwealth Governments will have been able to complete by 22nd September various studies called for in these two interim reports.) (c) would involve discussion of the further steps in the trade field that Commonwealth Governments jointly and severally would need to take to achieve their objectives. (Preferences and quantitative restrictions would be considered on this item.)

Canadian version:

(a), (b) and (c) would continue the examination of the issues considered and in a preliminary way in the Commonwealth Finance Ministers' meeting and in the interim reports of the Commonwealth Working Parties on convertibility and development. (b) would involve discussion of the steps that Commonwealth Governments might take to achieve their objectives including, among other things, the effect of preferences and quantitative restrictions.

British version:

(d) commodity policy

This would discuss means of creating greater stability in trade in primary commodities but would not involve an attempt to work out detailed plans for particular commodities.

Canadian version: No change.

British version:

(e) international institutions

This would be concerned with the question of modifications to international institutions such as I.M.F. and G.A.T.T. to take account of 1, 2 and 3 above.

Canadian version:

(e) international institutions

This would be concerned with the role of international institutions such as I.M.F. and G.A.T.T., taking account of 1, 2 and 3 above.

5.

British version: Co-operation with non-Commonwealth countries.

Canadian version: Co-operation with other countries.

British version:

This would be concerned particularly with problems arising from the need to co-operate with the United States and O.E.E.C. countries and with the responsibilities of debtor and creditor countries respectively.

Canadian version:

This would be concerned with the desirability of achieving more effective international co-operation, particularly with the United States and O.E.E.C. countries, and with the responsibilities of debtor and creditor countries respectively.

6. The short-term balance of payments prospects of the sterling area and policy for 1953

This would be an examination of immediate problems on the lines of that normally carried out at meetings of Commonwealth Finance Ministers.

(No change.)

CANADIAN AMENDMENTS TO DRAFT AGENDA FOR COMMONWEALTH
ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Reference: Your telegrams Nos. 1571 and 1572 of August 18.

We transmitted your proposed amendments in the form of an aide memoire (the main paragraphs of which are reproduced below) to the Commonwealth Relations Office (Alec Symon) late yesterday afternoon.

2. Symon could not, of course, comment officially on our proposed amendments. Nor could he tell what procedure might have to be adopted to finalize a first draft of an agreed agenda, e.g. such as circulating all proposed amendments to other Commonwealth Governments and perhaps holding a meeting of officials here at an early date to discuss them.

3. So far, only the Indians have put in their comments. Their proposal is that the main headings (items) 1 and 2 should be combined to read something like: "Review of economic developments in recent years and likely prospects." Symon thinks the Indians have world politics in mind and that the language they propose is designed to dispel any impression that the Commonwealth is "ganging up" (not against the United States but against Soviet countries). Moreover, the word "war" is deleted.

4. Symon is thinking of sending a telegram to other Commonwealth countries to expedite receipt of any comments which they might have to make on the United Kingdom draft agenda.

5. Symon, by the way, fully expected the type of amendments which we put in and he himself is quite sympathetic to the approach they represent. Although he could hardly comment on our proposals at this time, he did say in passing that the addition we proposed as Item 4 (a) — "domestic economic policies affecting the external position" — was the "heart of the problem".

6. The following are substantive paragraphs of the short aide memoire we left with the Commonwealth Relations Office yesterday and which I shall leave with Mr. Butler today, Begins: The Canadian Government has considered these two documents and transmits the following proposals and amendments.

As regards publicity, the Canadian Government is not in favour of publishing any detailed agenda such as that suggested (Annex A). It has not been customary in the past to publish an advance agenda for Prime Ministers' Conferences. Furthermore, the Canadian Government feels that in this instance publication of the bare outline of an itemized agenda might lead to undesirable speculation. If some kind of an advance release is considered desirable, the Canadian Government feels that it should take the form of a suitable general statement. The Canadian Government assumes that it would be given an opportunity to see such a statement before it is released.

The amendments proposed do not alter too much the general structure of the United Kingdom draft. With one exception, the main heading (Annex A) have been left unchanged. The majority of the amendments which are proposed, therefore, are to the expanded Annex B.

A number of amendments to the proposed agenda result from the fact that, in the view of the Canadian Government the United Kingdom draft seems generally to place an undue emphasis on the factors external to the sterling area and, consequently, does not appear to provide an adequate basis for an examination of the developments inside the system. The Canadian Government feels, therefore, that the proposed amendments should provide an opportunity for a more realistic examination of the whole problem in its wider aspects.

Other proposed amendments are designed to remove the implication that the Conference should aim at the development of an agreed Commonwealth line on economic and commercial policy matters which are, in fact, of wider international importance.

The amendments proposed by the Canadian Government to Annex B are appended.

The Canadian Government considers these amendments as important in order to facilitate a full appraisal of the present situation and of its contributing factors. Ends.

1. When I saw Butler on August 20, he knew we had put in a redraft of the explanatory notes on the conference agenda, though he had not himself seen the text nor had any opportunity to discuss it with his own staff. He said that as far as he was concerned, and he was sure he spoke for the whole government, the central problem of the sterling area countries was fundamentally a problem of internal finance and domestic economy. If the draft agenda and explanatory notes attached to it gave us the impression that they were trying to shift the emphasis from this central problem to the "outward" aspects of their difficulties, then their papers had been badly drafted and he would welcome our suggestions for clarification and revision.

2. He went on to say that they might have some difficulty in getting India, Pakistan, and perhaps Australia, to agree on an agenda focussed more explicitly on the problems of internal economy, but for his part he had no quarrel with our suggestions as to how the emphasis of the conference discussions should be distributed.

3. I said that I had privately been rather worried by the light-hearted way in which his government had proposed a Commonwealth conference to consider questions on which, with all the good will in the world, it would be difficult at this stage to make substantial progress, to which his only but not inadequate reply was: "you're telling me!" I thought some difficulties in the present preparatory stage could have been avoided if the United Kingdom Government, recognizing as I knew they did that their relations with Canada in these fields were essentially different in kind and character from their relations with members of the sterling area, had discussed privately with us the various agenda papers before broadcasting them to Commonwealth countries generally. Specifically, if we had had an opportunity of making our comments on the advance draft of the agenda papers instead of on the text that had been communicated simultaneously to all Commonwealth Governments, I was sure it would have been easier to have secured quick and general agreement. As it was, they would have to go back to all the others with revised agenda papers in which the differences in drafting would attract attention and invite argument. Butler did not dissent but said that he hoped that from now on it would be possible for their experts and ours to work together without reservations and not necessarily in the forum of full Commonwealth meetings. He had hoped that his meeting with Mr. Abbott in Mexico would have been an opportunity for initiating just such discussions, and he asked me to let our Minister of Finance know that his main if not only disappointment in not going to Mexico was that he would miss this opportunity for preliminary discussions with Mr. Abbott and our delegation. In the meantime he would be steadily on the job here trying to help shape the United Kingdom approach to the meetings, and expected that their Cabinet Committee, of which Eden is chairman, would get started next week and work pretty hard and intensively on the main lines of policy to be blocked out in advance of the September meetings. In the meantime he and his staff would be completely at our disposal, and he hoped that we would not hesitate to press home the points that seemed to us important or gave us worry.

4. I got the impression that he expected to have his own difficulties with some of his cabinet colleagues and would be glad of any reinforcement or stiffening which our representation of the general Canadian interest and viewpoint could give him. My general sizing up of the situation, and this is an interim answer to your telegram No. 1565 of August 15,<sup>12</sup> is that there is no particular need at this juncture for any public preaching from Canada about what the United Kingdom should do to be saved, but a real need for inserting privately into United Kingdom thinking a more realistic recognition of the conditions under which the forthcoming conference can do a little good and not positive harm. From this point of view your own visit to London in mid-September is well timed and should be helpful. By the same token I think it might be a good idea to have John Deutsch in London a few days before the preliminary official meetings begin on September 22.<sup>13</sup>

COMMONWEALTH ECONOMIC CONFERENCE AGENDA

Reference: Our telegrams Nos. 1796 of August 20 and 1818 of August 22.

1. Couillard<sup>14</sup> has been pressing the proposed Canadian amendments on United Kingdom officials, and until yesterday was hopeful that they would be ready to recommend their acceptance in toto. This morning, however, when he and I saw Liesching it became clear that United Kingdom officials, in the absence of ministers, did not feel they could go beyond undertaking to recommend the draft reply to the Canadian aide memoire that is quoted in my immediately following telegram. If this redraft of the agenda, which represents a pretty substantial effort to meet our viewpoint, is likely to be acceptable to Canada, they will make every effort to get it approved by their ministers. Nothing will be circulated to other Commonwealth countries until after they have had our further views.

2. Liesching insisted that the United Kingdom, for their part, would be ready to accept our amendments as they stood. Their main difficulty was one of presentation of an agenda in which our proposed addition as Item 4(A) — "Domestic economic policies affecting the external position" — would be incorporated as a separate and distinct heading. The Commonwealth Relations Office are convinced that India and possibly Pakistan would balk at this change and that its proposal would prejudice Indian participation in the meeting. They do not know what the Australian position will be.

3. You will see that section I of the redraft (this is the list of main headings which United Kingdom officials think might have to be made public at some time and was referred to as Annex A in Thomson's letter of August 5) does not include our proposed Item 4(A). On the other hand, the word "External" would be dropped in the new Item 3(A) (originally 4(A)) — "External financial policy". Your rewording of Item (main heading) 4 would be acceptable. The Indian suggestion to group and redraft Items (headings) 1 and 2 has also been incorporated.

4. As for Section II of the agenda (Annex B of Thomson's letter), all of the Canadian amendments would be accepted except our proposed Item 4(A). The question of internal policies would be brought within the scope of the agenda, not only in the first or main headings agenda (through the deletion of the word "External" in new Item 3(A)), but also in the explanatory language which you proposed and which would be accepted under Item I ("Internal causes"), as well as in Item 4 which envisages discussion of responsibilities of debtor countries.

5. The difficulties of presentation referred to in paragraph 2 are essentially political. They relate to what the United Kingdom officials feel certain the Indian reaction to our proposed 4(A) would be; Mr. Nehru is personally sensitive about being "forced" into discussion of his internal economic policies and would be sure to have almost overriding fears of the political repercussions in India should it become known that he had agreed to an agenda including 4(A).

6. I was not in a position to challenge the United Kingdom assessment of the risks involved and the possible effect on the level of Indian participation in the conference; they certainly attach a good deal of importance to having Deshmukh, the Indian Minister of Finance, attend the conference himself. Sir Raghavan Pillai, who was in London last week, appears to have privately confirmed their assessment of Indian susceptibilities. Liesching saw similar difficulties, although he was not as emphatic, as regards Pakistan.

7. The Australian comments on the original United Kingdom draft are still awaited. The Commonwealth Relations Office have told us in confidence, however, that Roland Wilson<sup>15</sup> was in the process of telling the United Kingdom representative in Canberra that the original United Kingdom draft agenda was acceptable to Australia when the report of the Barkway article<sup>16</sup> in the Observer reached him. He then said that, in view of this news of the Canadian attitude, he would have to take their draft reply to Prime Minister Menzies.

8. I should think this redraft, if thought tolerable in Canada, would be accepted by United Kingdom ministers and commended to the other Commonwealth governments. In all the circumstances, and particularly if the Canadian contribution to the discussions of the conference is to be directed pretty exclusively toward Item 1, I doubt whether we would make progress by insisting on further drafting changes at this time. As suggested in the final paragraph of the United Kingdom aide memoire, another and perhaps better

Reference: Our immediately preceding telegram.

Following is text of aide mémoire and its annex containing United Kingdom redraft of agenda. Begins:

Aide Mémoire

Reference is made to the aide mémoire given to Mr. Symon, Commonwealth Relations Office, by Mr. Couillard, Canada House, on the 19th August, containing the Canadian Government's views on the agenda proposed by the United Kingdom Government for the Commonwealth Economic Conference in November next.

2. The United Kingdom Government agree with the view of the Canadian Government that publication of a detailed agenda should be avoided, if this is at all possible. Past experience, however, indicates that the danger of such information becoming known to the press is so great that it is prudent to have ready the broad headings in a form on the lines of section I of the annex to this aide mémoire which might be available for publication if all governments agree. This was the consideration which prompted the United Kingdom Government to prepare the agenda in two sections, viz. section I under broad headings, in a form which might by agreement be published, and section II supplementary secret information which would not be divulged outside official circles.

3. The present position is that the agenda circulated by the United Kingdom Government has been accepted by the Governments of New Zealand, South Africa, Pakistan and Ceylon; the Government of India have proposed one amendment and the Government of Southern Rhodesia have suggested two possible additions. Final comments from the Australian Government are still awaited.

4. The United Kingdom Government have considered most carefully the amendments proposed by the Canadian Government, together with the comments received from other Commonwealth governments. For their part, the United Kingdom Government are ready, with one important exception, to accept the amendments proposed by the Canadian Government. Difficulty arises regarding the Canadian Government's proposal to amend paragraph 4 of the main items of the agenda to include "domestic economic policy" as a separate and distinct heading. As the Canadian Government are aware, it has been explained to other Commonwealth governments (by United Kingdom High Commissioners) that the United Kingdom Government, so far from excluding discussion of internal economic policy, "hope that the scope of the conference will be the whole field of external economic policy and of internal economic policy so far as it has repercussions on external policy." The United Kingdom Government's readiness to engage in such overall discussion was reiterated by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his discussion with Mr. Norman Robertson on 20th August. In the absence of comment on this point from other Commonwealth governments, the United Kingdom Government must assume that they also are prepared to engage in such discussion. But in view of the possibility of publicity being given to this section of the agenda, the United Kingdom Government fear that the Canadian Government's amendment to include domestic policy as a separate item would create substantial political embarrassment for certain Commonwealth governments. They feel that the Canadian Government will be with them in desiring to avoid such embarrassment. In the hope, therefore, of securing the agreement of all Commonwealth governments, they would urge the Canadian Government to accept a redraft on the lines set out in the annex to this note. The United Kingdom Government consider that it should be open to Commonwealth officials at their meetings in London beginning on 22nd September, to review the agenda in the light of their deliberations and if necessary to submit revised proposals for the consideration of governments.

[ANNEXE/ANNEX]

Section I: main headings

- Item 1. Review of economic developments in recent years and future prospects
- Item 2. Objectives in external economic policy
- Item 3. Aspects of these objectives and of the means for achieving them:
  - (a) Financial policy
  - (b) Economic development
  - (c) Trade policy
  - (d) Commodity policy
  - (e) International institutions
- Item 4. Co-operation with other countries
- Item 5. The short-term balance of payments prospects of the sterling area, and policy for 1953

Section II: supplementary information

The secret supplementary explanation under the main items of the agenda would be as follows:

Item 1

Review of economic developments in recent years and future prospects

This would review recent trade and payments developments and objectives and would analyse the external causes and the internal causes of the difficulties encountered by Commonwealth countries. It would include consideration of the assumptions underlying postwar agreements such as the IMF and GATT and the extent to which subsequent events and policies have affected the validity of those assumptions. It would also deal with the extent to which the unsatisfactory features of the world economy in recent years and particularly the payments difficulties are likely to persist and the extent to which they might be alleviated by the adoption of appropriate policies by the countries concerned.

Item 2

Objectives in external economic policy

This would attempt to determine the external objectives of economic policy, taking as a start the statement issued at the conclusion of the Commonwealth Finance Ministers' meeting in January 1952.

Item 3

Aspects of these objectives and of the means for achieving them

(a) (b) and (c) would continue the examination of the issues considered in a preliminary way at the Commonwealth Finance Ministers' meeting and in the interim report of the Commonwealth Working Parties on convertibility and development.

(c) would also involve discussion of the steps that Commonwealth governments might take to achieve their objectives including among other things the effect of preferences and quantitative restrictions.

(d) would discuss means of creating greater stability in trade in primary commodities but would not involve an attempt to work out detailed plans for particular commodities.

(e) would be concerned with the role of international institutions such as the IMF and GATT, taking account of items 1 and 2 above.

Item 4

Cooperation with other countries

This would be concerned with the desirability of achieving more effective international cooperation, particularly with the United States and OEEC countries, and with the responsibilities of debtor and creditor countries respectively.

Item 5

The short-term balance of payments prospects of the sterling area, and policy for 1953

This would be an examination of immediate problems on the lines of that normally carried out at meetings of Commonwealth Finance Ministers. Ends.

Following Personal for Robertson from Wilgress.

You will have seen from Telegram No. 1646 giving the text of the press announcement of the composition of our delegation to the meeting of officials preparatory to the Commonwealth Economic Conference, that it is the wish of the Government that you should head the delegation.

It was the special wish of the Prime Minister that you should undertake this responsibility. I know from experience how difficult it is for a High Commissioner to participate in discussions on the official level. In your case, however, the difficulties will be considerably lessened by the close personal relations which you have with the United Kingdom officials concerned. Moreover, once the meeting gets underway there should be ample opportunity for a free exchange of views with all members of the delegation having an opportunity to participate. This will give Deutsch, who will be the most familiar with the official thinking here, ample opportunity to express the Canadian point of view. I trust therefore that you will have no misgivings upon accepting this added responsibility to your many other duties. Ends.

COMMONWEALTH ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

You will recall that, at the informal meeting of Ministers on August 26th, the general lines of the policy to be followed by Canada at the Commonwealth Economic Conference were approved and it was agreed that a draft paper should be prepared for possible submission by us to the Conference. It was also agreed that the draft should be ready for consideration by the Cabinet at its meeting on September 13th, in order that it might, if approved, be made available to the representatives of the other governments at the meeting of officials, opening on September 22nd. A draft has now been prepared and approved by the members of the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy. It will be an item for the agenda of the Cabinet on Saturday.

As the paper is quite long, Mr. Pickersgill suggested that I might send it to you in Toronto, in the hope that you would have an opportunity to read it in the course of your journey. A copy of the Cabinet document, including the draft, is accordingly attached herewith.†

Mr. Pickersgill informed me, by telephone on August 31st, that you agreed that Canada should accept the revised agenda for the Conference, subject to the understanding that further discussion would be possible at the meeting of officials. Information to this effect was sent to the High Commissioner in London on September 1st. I have today received a letter from the Deputy High Commissioner for the United Kingdom setting forth the agenda precisely as we agreed to it. Mr. Thomson stated orally that it had been passed by all the Commonwealth governments and that it would now stand, subject to further consideration at the meeting of officials.

COMMONWEALTH ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Agenda Item 1. Review of economic developments in recent years and future prospects Agenda Item 2. Objectives in external economic policy.

Statement of Canadian views

1. The Canadian Government welcomes the opportunity presented by this conference of discussing with fellow members of the Commonwealth some of the major economic problems which are confronting us all. We have followed with sympathetic anxiety the emergence since 1951 of fresh balance of payments difficulties in many of the Sterling Area countries. Though Canada is not a member of the Sterling Area, our close ties with the United Kingdom and the other members of the Commonwealth inevitably make us feel great concern at any adverse turn in their fortunes. Canada is anxious to play a constructive part in finding a solution to the Sterling Area's difficulties. We

<sup>17</sup>Le 13 septembre, le Cabinet a examiné le projet de déclaration préparé par le Comité interministériel de la politique sur le commerce extérieur et a demandé qu'il soit remanié. Le document a été soumis une deuxième fois le 17 septembre, et le Cabinet l'a approuvé sous réserve que de nouvelles corrections lui soient apportées et que le premier ministre puisse l'examiner une dernière fois.

The draft statement, prepared by the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy, was considered by Cabinet on September 13 at which time revisions were requested. The statement was resubmitted on September 17. Cabinet then approved the document subject to further revisions and final consideration by the Prime Minister.

share with all parts of the Commonwealth a vital interest in seeing sterling again a strong and truly international currency.

2. The present statement does not cover Canadian developments, but is devoted to a review of the Sterling Area's position as seen through Canadian eyes. No doubt the representatives of Sterling Area countries will, in the course of these discussions, wish to make some observations on Canadian policies as seen through their eyes. If so, we shall be glad at any time to review the Canadian economic situation and touch upon some of our principal problems. We believe that it is in this way, through a frank exchange of views, that the countries of the Commonwealth can help each other to overcome their difficulties and attain their common objectives.

3. Although seven years have passed since the end of the war the goal of a satisfactory system of international economic relations is still far from attainment. There is common agreement that the far-reaching dislocations caused by the war, the subsequent political tensions, the outbreak of hostilities in Korea and elsewhere, and the need for substantially increased defence efforts have greatly intensified the difficulties. In attempting to diagnose the fundamental causes of the persistent financial problems, these special features of the post-war period, and particularly the heavy burden of rearmament, have to be fully recognized. Allowance for these features should not, however, divert attention from other factors which may be of underlying importance.

4. The war and its aftermath presented all Sterling Area countries with major problems of adjustment. The impact on the international financial and trading position of the United Kingdom was particularly severe. In financing its war effort the United Kingdom liquidated a large part of its foreign investments, and accumulated substantial debts in paying for its requirements from overseas countries. The physical damage to plant and equipment, the loss of shipping, and the depletion of capital assets, adversely affected the capacity of the United Kingdom to produce and to export. Normal channels of trade were disrupted and had to be re-established. In short, the United Kingdom emerged from the war with heavy new commitments abroad, with a vast reconstruction problem at home, and with a substantially reduced capacity to earn foreign exchange required to cover these increased needs. In recent years the problem of making ends meet has been further aggravated by the need to devote a substantial share of the national output to defence purposes. It was clear that these changed circumstances of the United Kingdom would require major adjustments, both in the structure of its economy and in its external economic relations.

5. The traditionally close economic relationships between the United Kingdom and other members of the Sterling Area meant that these countries would be directly affected by the adjustments. The new[ly] independent members of the Commonwealth in Asia were faced with special problems and needs arising out of their changed status. The members of the Commonwealth were also confronted with new and pressing needs relating to recovery, development and population growth.

6. In these circumstances extraordinary efforts and special measures were required if the United Kingdom and its partners in the Sterling Area were to succeed in building up their production and exports to the level required to meet their urgent needs. It was generally recognized that during the period of adjustment the United Kingdom and other countries in similar circumstances would not be in a position to remove the wartime controls on trade and payments. Accordingly, while the objectives of currency convertibility and non-discrimination were adopted, the international agreements incorporating these objectives, notably the International Monetary Fund and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, contemplated considerable freedom in the use of trade and exchange controls in a transitional period.

7. External financial assistance was also clearly necessary if the job of reconstruction was to be accomplished in a reasonable period of time and the basic economic health of the war-damaged countries restored. The United States and Canada, which were more fortunately placed, provided substantial assistance for this purpose in the form of loans and grants. The Financial Agreement of 1946, between Canada and the United Kingdom, was designed to help the United Kingdom recover from the war and also to help re-establish multilateral trade, which was the mutually desired objective of the two governments.

8. While the wounds of war have not been altogether healed and while there has been some permanent loss in real income from overseas investments, there has been an impressive recovery in production and in the export trade of the United Kingdom and other Sterling Area countries. In the case of the United Kingdom, statistics indicate that the 1951 total industrial production was 45% higher than in 1946, and 39% higher than in 1938. Exports in 1951 were 82% greater in physical volume than in either 1946 or 1938. Comparing the year 1938 with the six month period ending March 1952, on the basis of annual rates, the rise in the value of exports was from $2,750 million to $8,300 million for the United Kingdom and from just under $3,000 million to over $10,000 million for the rest of the Sterling Area.

9. It is apparent that this remarkable recovery has not been accompanied by a corresponding improvement in the external financial position of the United Kingdom and the Sterling Area. The difficulties respecting the balance of payments appear as pronounced as ever, both from an overall point of view and in their regional aspects. For the years 1946 to 1951 inclusive, the United Kingdom and five other independent Sterling Area countries had aggregate current account deficits of £2,700 million. These were offset to the extent of £700 million by the net surpluses of the colonies and the remaining independent Sterling Area countries, leaving an overall current account deficit of £2,000 million. Of this total deficit some £650 million occurred in 1951. The Sterling Area's gold and dollar reserves are now lower than they were at the end of 1943. Throughout the post-war period relatively small disturbances of external origin have produced major swings in the Sterling Area's balance of payments position and its foreign exchange reserves. The persistence of the exchange problem and the deep fluctuations in the balance of payments position of the Sterling Area, indicating difficulty in making adjustments to the pattern and volume of world demand, suggest that there may be more fundamental and deep-rooted causes of the problem than can be traced to any lack of recovery in total production.

10. The deterioration in the post-war terms of trade of the United Kingdom as compared with the nineteen thirties, has aggravated its overall payments problems and made the necessary adjustments more difficult. It must be recognized, however, that the terms of trade during the thirties were abnormally favourable of countries exporting manufactured goods. For the primary producers of the Sterling Area the effect of this movement in the terms of trade has on balance been favourable as compared with pre-war. From the point of view of the Sterling Area as a whole in its relations with the rest of the world, the shift in the terms of trade in the post-war period does not appear to have been a fundamental factor affecting the area's external balance, even though there have been pronounced short-term fluctuations which had temporary effects on the central reserves.

11. In the search for the reasons why the Sterling Area's balance of payments difficulties have persisted, it is sometimes suggested that greater progress has not been possible because of inadequacies in the policies of creditor countries, particularly the United States. In this respect it is said that the creditor countries cannot be depended upon to maintain a high and stable level of economic activity and demand, that they have failed to open their markets sufficiently to imports and that they have not provided an adequate flow of foreign investment.

12. The fact is that the levels of employment and production in the United States and Canada since the war have been high and have risen almost uninterruptedly, except for relatively minor adjustments which took place in the United States in 1949. In 1951 the United States index of industrial production was 219, and the Canadian index 212, on a 1935-39 base. In this regard it is difficult to envisage more favourable conditions than have actually prevailed in the post-war period. For the future it is relevant that the North American economies are expanding rapidly and there is good ground for believing that they have the means and the will to avoid deep or prolonged slumps. This is not to say, however, that the United States and other major trading countries will not be subject to moderate fluctuations from time to time. Such fluctuations are often inseparable from economic progress in a dynamic and progressive economy.

13. It is said that the dollar countries are not pursuing policies in the field of tariffs and commercial relations appropriate to the size of their export surplus with the non-dollar world. In this regard the experience of Sterling Area sales in the Canadian market might be examined as an indication of the extent to which this has actually been a major determining factor in the post-war period. Throughout this period Canada has provided one of the largest and most rapidly growing markets for imports. In 1951 the value of Canada's imports was approximately six times as great as in 1938; the volume has increased nearly two and one half times. Tariffs have been progressively reduced, and their level, particularly with respect to imports from Commonwealth countries, is among the lowest in the world. With the exception of certain dairy products there are no quantitative restrictions on imports into Canada and many British goods enjoy tariff preferences in the Canadian market.

14. It is perhaps significant that in circumstances which favour imports from Commonwealth countries the proportion of imports from this source should be substantially lower than before the war. In 1938, 17% of Canada's imports came from the United Kingdom and a further 10% from other Commonwealth countries. In 1946, largely because of the war, these proportions had each declined to 7%. By 1951 some improvement was shown, with the United Kingdom supplying 10% and the rest of the Commonwealth 8%. If in that year the Sterling Area had been able to supply the same proportion of Canada's imports as before the war, the Area's dollar earnings would have been $350,000,000 greater than they were. The failure to recover the pre-war share of the Canadian market suggests that circumstances were present, other than any general lack of opportunities, which interfered with the efforts to take full advantage of this important dollar market.

15. The United States has traditionally been a much more difficult market for Sterling Area goods than Canada. Despite significant tariff reductions since the war, the efforts of the United States to encourage imports cannot be regarded as having gone far enough, having in mind its responsibilities as the world's greatest creditor nation. Undoubtedly more constructive and vigorous efforts to remove United States trade barriers would have created additional opportunities for Sterling Area goods in that market. However, the experience of the sterling countries in the generally more receptive Canadian market, and in other third markets, raises the question as to how far additional opportunities would have resulted in a substantial increase in Sterling Area exports to the United States.

16. Over the years international capital movements have been an important balancing factor in world trade and payments. The record of private capital movement since the war has been disappointing. However, the failure of private investment to play its traditional role appears to have been as much a consequence as a cause of the whole complex of trade and financial imbalance in the post-war period. In assessing the effect of an inadequate flow of private capital, consideration must be given to the substantial movements of public capital which have taken place. In the post-war period Sterling Area countries have received in the neighbourhood of $8,000 million in the form of loans, grants, and advances from the United States and Canada and from international institutions. While they have not taken the traditional forms, there have in fact been massive international financial transfers in this period which have served as an important balancing force in world trade and payments. However, the inadequate movements of private capital across most international boundaries is one of the important financial problems to which increasing attention needs to be directed.

17. The problems inherited from the war, the movements in the terms of trade and certain inadequacies in the commercial and financial policies of the creditor countries have contributed to Sterling Area problems and have made necessary adjustments more difficult. At the same time the nature and the persistence of the difficulties which have affected the Sterling Area suggest that a satisfactory explanation cannot be found in these factors alone. The question is inevitably raised as to whether a considerable part of the explanation for the continued disequilibrium in trade and payments must not be found in the total effect of policies pursued by countries in the Area.

18. The persistence of balance of payments difficulties so long after the end of the war, notwithstanding the increase in production and total exports, suggests strongly that the basic cause of the foreign exchange problem has been the tendency of many parts of the Sterling Area to consume and to invest in excess of the amounts available to them from their production and from investment from abroad. This was recognized in the statement issued after the January meeting of Commonwealth Finance Ministers where it was agreed that "the only way to prevent recurrent drains of the central gold reserves is for every country in the Area strenuously to endeavour to live within the means which are, or can be, available to it" and where it was also agreed that the "first and most important step" to be taken by any country in the Sterling Area likely to be in overall deficit is "to ensure that the internal economy is sound and that all possible measures are taken to combat inflation."

19. Since the end of the war the main objectives of economic policy in the sterling countries, as in most countries, including Canada, have been full employment, rising standards of living, expanding social services, economic development. These are sound objectives and are essential long-term elements of economic progress. For the Asian countries in the Commonwealth the need for accelerated progress towards some of these objectives has been particularly urgent. The attempt of the Sterling Area to push ahead rapidly on all these fronts at the same time appears, however, to have resulted in greater demands for goods and services than could be met out of available resources, particularly in view of the high priority that some Sterling Area countries have found it necessary to give to the needs of defence.

20. The ways in which excessive demand arising out of inflationary pressures may affect a country's balance of payments are well known and need not be elaborated here. Internal demand which cannot be met out of domestic production spills over into demand for imports. Potential exports are consumed at home. Pressure of excessive demand tends to push prices up and the competitive position of the country's exports in foreign markets deteriorates. If the pressure of demand is greater at home than abroad production for the domestic market becomes more profitable than production for export and resources are drawn away from the less profitable export industries. Deficits appear in the balance of payments, and if these are greater than the inflow of capital or financial aid from abroad, the exchange reserves fall.

21. This process would appear to have been at work in most Sterling Area countries, as well as elsewhere. To the extent that the excessive demand in those countries has spilt over into dollar imports, the drain on the dollar reserves has been direct. To the extent that it has increased imports from other sterling countries it has been no less serious since it has impaired the ability of those countries to export to non-sterling countries. In an attempt to restore balance in their external accounts and to stop the drain on reserves, the Sterling Area countries imposed and later intensified restrictions of a discriminatory nature. These measures, however, would seem to have been an attempt to deal with symptoms rather than with the underlying causes of the problem. Unavoidable though the restrictions may have been as emergency measures designed to provide time for taking fundamental action, events have shown that in themselves they do not provide a solution to the problem. It has become apparent that the restrictions have certain undesirable effects on the structure of the economy which aggravate the problem and make the achievement of a lasting solution more difficult.

22. Discriminatory trade restrictions and exchange controls insulate domestic industries from foreign competition. In this way the restrictions lead to higher costs and prices, and weaken the incentives to efficiency. To the extent that this occurs, an advantage is gained by the exporters of competitive goods from other countries. Since less essential goods are a favoured target for import controls, there is a tendency for resources to be drawn away from more essential industries into the domestic production of these goods, regardless of whether such industries are efficient or not.

23. The attempt to contain the balance of payments effects of inflationary pressures through import restrictions consequently tends to be self-defeating. The effects of the misdirection of resources naturally take time to work their way through the economic system. For a while their consequences may be concealed by the availability of foreign balances or foreign assistance to cover the external deficits to which the misdirection of resources contributes. An illustration of the way in which this process works itself out may well be provided by the failure of the production of many primary products in non-dollar countries to rise above the pre-war level, let alone to keep pace with the rising demands for these products resulting from the growth in population and the expansion of industrial production. Available evidence indicates that the level of food crop production outside North America must have been less than before the war. It is clear too that in the case of many raw materials the expansion in Sterling Area output has been much less than might have been expected in view of the strong world-wide demand for such commodities.

24. No doubt there are special reasons to explain the failure of the output of individual primary commodities to expand in particular countries. It does appear, however, that one important general factor has been the diversion of productive resources away from primary industries which have to face world competition to the production of manufactured goods, in many cases of a non-essential type, which are protected from world competition by import restrictions. The long-term consequences of these developments appear to be serious. With capital resources scarce, the countries concerned can ill afford to have capital misdirected and to weaken the basic structure of their economies through a decline in their output of the staple primary products they must sell abroad to meet their essential import requirements. From the point of view of the Sterling Area as a whole, the failure of basic production to keep up with growing demand and population has meant continued shortages and perpetuation of balance of payments difficulties.

25. The Sterling Area stands in great need of additional capital resources to permit the member countries to take advantage of their opportunities to increase output and raise their standard of living. The need is general but is particularly keenly felt in those parts of the Area which are economically less highly developed. The United Kingdom has since the end of the war exported capital to these countries on a large scale. In so doing it has made a notable contribution to their economic development and stability. It is understood that the net outflow of private capital from the United Kingdom to the rest of the Sterling Area from 1946 through 1951 exceeded £850 million. There was also a substantial reduction in the sterling balance of certain Sterling Area countries but this was more than offset by a rise in the balances of others. Some of the expenditures consequent upon this flow of capital were no doubt directed to the United States and other non-sterling countries, but in the main the expenditures were made in the United Kingdom and the capital export involved the use of its resources of manpower and materials. The strain on the United Kingdom economy produced in this way should not be underestimated. It was eased in part by the financial assistance from the United States and Canada. With outside assistance no longer available on the scale of former years, the United Kingdom has indicated its inability to continue to support a heavy burden of capital exports to other sterling area countries.

26. In the light of the continued need of many parts of the Sterling Area for outside capital to assist in their economic development, particularly in expanding the production of primary products, an important question which would seem to require attention is how to attract outside capital into the Sterling Area. In any assessment of the virtues and demerits of present policies, both internal and external, this question is one of great importance. The only source of external capital on the scale required is the United States. Unfortunately, the inconvertibility of sterling, and the controls on trade and payments, add to the difficulties of the sterling countries in attracting private capital from outside the Area.

27. At the present time the principal choice which would appear to lie before the Sterling Area countries is whether, in the further development of the policies designed to meet their payment problems, the major emphasis is to be placed on measures intended to increase the inherent strength of sterling or on measures to suppress the external manifestations of continued underlying weaknesses. In the past year or so an increasing emphasis has been placed on internal policies, particularly monetary policy, as a corrective of balance of payments disequilibrium. However, it would still be true to say that the Sterling Area is relying very heavily on the direct control of imports; the degree of restriction and in most cases the extent of the discrimination are more severe now than at any time since the war. Although it is recognized that a major shift in the direction of policy would involve difficulties, the question would seem to be whether the interests of the countries comprising the Sterling Area would not best be served by such a shift. There are strong reasons for believing that they would.

28. It is clear by now that the policies of restriction and discrimination have not been successful in achieving their objective. These policies have not achieved international balance for the Sterling Area, and there is no apparent reason for supposing that further intensification would be any more successful. The policies pursued by numerous countries in recent years provide abundant evidence that import restrictions do not, in themselves, overcome the underlying difficulties. When deficits are encountered the more constructive course is to examine the export side and general economic policies to see by what means a country's earnings can be increased. When restrictive policies are pursued by many countries, they succeed only in preventing the balanced expansion of world trade from which all benefit.

29. We feel that there is a further reason for believing that a major shift in policy would be desirable in the interests of the sterling countries themselves. We fear that the combination of excessive demand and import restrictions is leading to a misdirection of resources and the encouragement of economic inefficiency. If this analysis of the situation is correct, the net result is to keep both the standard of living and the rate of economic development of the Sterling Area countries below what they would otherwise be. Although the application of policies which would flow from placing greater emphasis on internal measures might be painful and difficult in the short run, there is ground for believing that they would strengthen the economies of sterling countries, would result in more efficient and greater output, and would help to create the conditions under which public and private investment from outside the Area would be more readily available.

30. There is another reason why the Canadian Government would regret the further development of Sterling Area policies along the lines of restrictionism and discrimination and would welcome a reversal of present tendencies. To an ever-increasing extent, Canadian producers have found themselves excluded from Commonwealth markets since the end of the war, except in respect of essential materials not available from non-dollar sources. In the conditions which have prevailed in Canada and in the United States and elsewhere during the past few years the Canadian economy has managed, by and large, to adapt itself to this situation without widespread difficulty. The discrimination against Canada in sterling markets has created immediate problems of consequence only in respect of a limited number of products. Nevertheless, there is concern with the long-run effects on relations between Canada and other parts of the Commonwealth of a continuance of the present lines of policy. Opinion in Canada, while sympathetic, finds it increasingly difficult to understand the continued need, so long after the end of the war, for disruption of traditional trade connections and persistent discrimination against Canadian exports. The Canadian Government would greatly regret seeing policies followed which over a period of time would run the risk of placing a strain on relations between Canada and other parts of the Commonwealth and, indeed, between Sterling Area members of the Commonwealth themselves. Moreover the close cooperation and understanding between the Commonwealth and the United States which is so essential for the prosperity and security of the Western world might be jeopardized by a continuation of the efforts of the Sterling Area to solve its payments problems through import restrictions and discrimination.

31. The failure of individual countries to solve their exchange problems has sometimes led them to seek a solution through a tightening of regional trade and payments arrangements. Post-war experience has shown that in the absence of appropriate internal policies such arrangements do not provide a satisfactory and lasting answer to the exchange problems of the region as a whole or of individual members of it. Regional arrangements may make it possible for some members to ease their own problems for a short time by drawing on the resources of other members of the group, temporarily relieving them of the need for taking the necessary fundamental corrective measures. In effect a mechanism is provided whereby inflation experienced in one country is spread throughout the area. In this way the difficulties are aggravated and the underlying problems are obscured.

32. An effective programme to correct the underlying causes of imbalance is a prerequisite to a successful restoration of currency convertibility and the removal of discrimination. An artificial and precarious balance, sustained by the continued use of trade and exchange restrictions, cannot be regarded as adequate. The advantages implicit in a fully convertible currency — access to all world markets and sources of supply, increased productive efficiency, the enforced regard to internal financial stability — would in fact be negated by the effects of the restrictions.

33. One of the more important lessons learned from the experience since the war is that international co-operation can only be effective if nations are prepared to accept a share of responsibility in the common effort. In the economic field, North American co-operation made a significant contribution to the successful restoration of the economies of the war-damaged countries. Yet action taken by the United States and Canada was only a supplement to the major efforts made by those countries themselves to expand production.

34. This paper has indicated reasons for believing that the present situation holds serious elements of danger. In these circumstances there is clearly scope for further co-operation among all countries affected, including the United States and Canada. Such co-operative action cannot, however, be a substitute for measures to arrest and reverse the present tendencies which are obviously the responsibility of national governments and which they alone can initiate and carry out. It would be the earnest desire of the Canadian government to seek effective means of supplementing such measures to assist in achieving true international balance on a basis which recognizes fully the responsibilities of all countries.

1. Mr. Deutsch summarized the Report on Finance and Trade prepared at the conclusion of the Preparatory Meeting of officials for the Commonwealth Economic Conference. (Commonwealth Economic Conference, Preparatory Meeting of Officials, Report on Finance and Trade, C.E.C. (O) (H.D.) (52) 1 (Final) 15th October, 1952.)†

He pointed out that when the meetings began none of the delegations except Canada's and the United Kingdom's appeared to have carried out much preparation. Canada and the United Kingdom presented submissions to the meeting and the United Kingdom presented certain proposals for discussion only. United Kingdom Ministers were not committed to the proposals and United Kingdom officials had no authority to alter them in the course of the discussions. Essentially they contained a scheme for a limited convertibility of sterling and for the gradual removal of quantitative restrictions on a collective basis.

The scheme included:

(1) Plans to make sterling convertible for non-residents of the sterling area although the payment of sterling to non-residents would continue to be controlled through exchange control and the operation of import restrictions.

(2) A progressive removal of quantitative restrictions on imports into the sterling area. The process would apply in the first instance as between soft currency countries, viz., Western European nations and countries in the sterling area. At a later stage restrictions against the dollar area would be removed first for Canada and then for the United States. The reason advanced for the removal of restrictions by these stages was to reduce the risks of the operation and because of the so-called "persistent creditor" position of the United States. United Kingdom officials maintained that so long as the United States continued to have a surplus in her balance of payments not financed by investment abroad it would not be possible to remove restrictions against that nation.

It was further proposed that the United States assist in the convertibility operation by providing a considerable sum of money to establish an exchange stabilization fund. Although not actually suggested there would in practice be an implication that Canada would also be expected to make a contribution to such a fund.

The fund would be managed by a small group of nations ("the nuclear group") composed of the United Kingdom, United States, Canada, France, Belgium and the Netherlands. This group would also form the initiating body for carrying out the plan and it was hoped that other European nations would be enlisted to further the general plan. This group also would constitute the forum for consultation on international economic matters and for the reconciliation of policies as between debtor and creditor countries.

The collective approach also presupposed the adoption by the United States of good creditor policies, viz., the liberalization of its commercial practices including a reduction of tariffs and a revision of customs procedures and measures to increase foreign lending. The debtor countries on the other hand would agree to make their currencies convertible for non-residents and remove import restrictions by progressive steps. To help reduce the risks involved it was proposed that sterling should be made convertible for non-residents of the sterling area on the basis of a flexible exchange rate.

The successful carrying out of such a scheme involved primarily the adoption of appropriate and adequate internal policies in the sterling area countries to deal with inflationary pressures and to make the prices and delivery dates of their products competitive with other countries and particularly with those of the dollar area.

Another element included in the United Kingdom proposal was the revision of the G.A.T.T. provisions to eliminate the "no new preference rule."

2. Mr. Deutsch said the proponents of the United Kingdom proposal felt that this was a favourable time for proceeding with convertibility plans because there were now no dangerously large sterling balances outside of the sterling area, and that in any event sterling was already being converted to an increasing degree by non-residents through the "cheap" sterling markets and various other devices. They felt that the continuation of the existing arrangements would lead to a progressive deterioration in the position of sterling and that the maintenance of inconvertibility would not in any case provide an escape from adequate internal policies. The United Kingdom officials also felt that the coming of a new administration in the United States, the fact that existing American Foreign Aid Programmes were now being reviewed and that the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act ran out in June 1953 made this an opportune time to approach the United States authorities.

The Canadian delegation expressed the view:

(a) That as the success of the proposal was so dependent upon the co-operation of the United States it would not be a practical course to label her from the outset as a "persistent creditor", and to maintain discrimination against her while at the same time asking the United States to provide the exchange stabilization fund and to liberalize her trade policy. Furthermore, it could not be shown in logic that the surplus in the United States balance of payments was solely the fault of the United States.

(b) The proposal to alter GATT in order to permit the development of new imperial preferences was neither a necessary nor a practical element in the scheme. This would only antagonize the United States and in any event the scope for enlarged preferences within the Commonwealth was not great. In this view the Canadian delegation was supported by all other delegations present except Southern Rhodesia.

(c) That even if it were only a small beginning some removal of restrictions against Canada should commence at the same time as the restrictions against soft currency nations began to be eliminated. It would not be satisfactory for discrimination against Canada to continue unabated until after all restrictions with the soft currency had been completely removed.

The Indian delegation did not approve of the management of the stabilization fund and the determination of international economic policy by a few European countries and Canada and the United States. These are the NATO powers, and with the exception of Canada are also the principal colonial powers.

In the light of the objections raised by the Asian members of the Commonwealth to the proposed "nuclear" group and because of the difficulties which, in all probability, would arise in the United States if a request were made for additional financial requirements for a fund outside the International Monetary Fund, the Canadian delegation suggested for consideration an alternative course, viz., that which is set out in paragraph 34 of the Report on Finance and Trade.<sup>18</sup>

3. Mr. Pearson thought it would be advisable to find out what the reaction of other Commonwealth countries to the United Kingdom proposals would be. In this connection he pointed out it has become apparent at the present meetings

This would involve the use of resources already in the IMF, further bilateral credit arrangements if required, availability of automatic standby funds from the IMF for normal management requirements, and the establishment of a joint IMF-GATT committee to discuss finance, trade and related problems.

of the United Nations that relations between some members of the Commonwealth, e.g. between India and Pakistan on the one hand and South Africa on the other are becoming increasingly bitter because of racial difficulties and South Africa's repressive legislation.

4. Mr. Deutsch felt that there were three possible alternatives regarding what the United Kingdom government might propose at the meeting of the Prime Ministers in November:

(1) Modify their present proposals to meet the objections raised in the discussions concerning the elimination of the "no new preference rule", the labelling of the United States as a "persistent creditor", continuance of discrimination against Canada, and subordination of the IMF and GATT and the composition of "nuclear group".

(2) Put forward their original proposals for discussion without commitment, to be followed, if agreed, by discussions with the United States.

(3) Decide that they cannot agree to undertake the proposals suggested and that they would continue substantially their present policies, and at the same time probably ask for a modification of the preference rules under GATT.

5. Mr. Abbott felt that if the first course were adopted the Canadian government should be agreeable provided that a beginning, even if small, were made at the outset to remove discrimination against Canada. He added that it would be necessary to revise certain rules of the IMF and that this would have to receive the sanction of the various governments involved, principally the United States. It would, however, be for the United Kingdom to decide whether she would be able to carry out adequately the internal policies which would be necessary.

6. Mr. Pearson felt that it would be advisable for Canada to prepare a scheme along the lines suggested by the Canadian officials and embodying any other points that had been raised and have it available for use if necessary in November.

7. Mr. Deutsch indicated that the United States authorities in London had been given a general description of some of the principal matters discussed at the meetings, and that they were, in fact, aware of some of the main details of the plan but this had not received confirmation from the United Kingdom or Canadian authorities. He re-iterated the importance that was attached to the maintenance of complete secrecy regarding the nature of the United Kingdom proposals.

Mr. Deutsch also said it was not clear when they left London if the Indian Minister of Finance would attend the Conference in November and it had been suggested informally that it might be helpful if Mr. Abbott could speak to the Indian High Commissioner here in Ottawa in this connection.

Ottawa, November 21, 1952

UNITED KINGDOM PROPOSALS

1. We have been informed that the United Kingdom Government has decided to place certain proposals before the Commonwealth Economic Conference as the basis for discussion. These proposals are along the lines of the "collective approach" to multilateral trade and payments which were discussed at the preliminary meeting of officials, modified in certain respects to take into account points raised during these meetings, including those raised by Canadian officials. It was emphasized that the proposals will be submitted on the understanding that no final decisions could be taken until after the discussions with the United States and the leading European countries had been completed. The United Kingdom memorandum as transmitted to Commonwealth Governments is attached as Appendix A.†

Main Features of the United Kingdom Proposals

2. The proposals are given only in bare outline and some of the main elements are not fully explained. This suggests that the position taken with respect to certain important matters is not entirely firm and clearcut. This lack of precision may have been intentional to allow for further discussion and possible modification in the details. The memorandum makes no mention of internal policies. We assume that this is because the memorandum confines itself mainly to a discussion of modifications in the original proposals. The necessity for appropriate internal policies was an important feature of the officials meetings and was highlighted in the report of those meetings. The principal features of the proposed plan and the programme for implementation appear to be as follows:

3. If after discussions at the forthcoming Conference the United Kingdom decides to pursue the "collective approach", the next step would be to enter into discussions with the United States and the leading European countries. If these discussions lead to agreement on a plan along the lines indicated and on the steps to be taken by each of the parties, the United Kingdom would be prepared to proceed with a course of action comprising two stages:

First Stage

(a) Convertibility of sterling for non-residents of the sterling area, at a flexible rate of exchange vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar.

Discussed at special meeting 22/XI/52.

(b) Continuation of existing "open-door" policy on imports from the sterling area.

(c) Some relaxation of restrictions on imports from non-sterling countries which would not, however, involve any significant additional strain on the United Kingdom's balance of payments. These relaxations would take the form of:

(i) some liberalization of imports from Europe,

(ii) some carefully limited removal of discrimination and restrictions on imports of essential raw materials and staple foods from dollar countries.

4. There is no commitment on the timing of these steps comprising the first stage. They would not, however, be undertaken before agreement had been reached on the following specific matters:

(a) Arrangements for assured access to additional dollar funds to support the convertibility operation through use of the whole of the unused portion (about $1 billion) of the United Kingdom quota in the International Monetary Fund, supplemented by either an additional standby credit made available by the I.M.F. to the United Kingdom and other countries undertaking convertibility, or by further bilateral credits. It is contemplated that the United States Government might put additional funds at the disposal of I.M.F.

(b) Undertakings by leading European countries concerning the convertibility of their currencies and import control policies respecting the sterling area.

(c) Agreements with the United States, and leading European countries on the objectives of long-term commercial and financial policies including the responsibilities of both debtors and creditors.

Second Stage

5. After an intervening period, the duration of which is uncertain, the following further steps would be taken leading toward the attainment of the long-term objectives:

(a) Determined action leading to the removal of quantitative restrictions subject to certain limited escape clauses respecting emergency balance of payments difficulties.

(b) Progressive removal of discrimination against non-sterling countries "in step with the progressive solution of the world dollar problem."

(c) The establishment of a joint I.M.F.-G.A.T.T. committee to formulate "precise long-term trade rules" which may involve the modification of some of the present provisions of the I.M.F. and G.A.T.T. It is stated that these trade rules would recognize that balance of payments problems may require appropriate action by both "creditors" and "debtors" and that a process would be provided by which "pressure could be exerted on the United States to adopt 'good creditor' policies." This committee would also constitute a continuing forum for the discussion of trade and financial problems and for the co-ordination of the policies of "creditors" and "debtors."

6. There is no indication in the United Kingdom proposals as to the duration of the period between the convertibility operation in the first stage and the further steps envisaged in the second stage to remove restrictions and discrimination. The United Kingdom state, however, that they would wish to keep their hands as free as possible during this intervening period "in order to take whatever action might be best to limit the first impact of convertibility." This would involve sufficient time to obtain experience of the working of convertibility at flexible rates, to assess whatever additional strains may be involved, and take the necessary steps to overcome them. From our point of view the length of this period will depend primarily upon:

- (a) the adequacy of internal measures in the sterling area countries to overcome the excess pressure of demand on their resources and in this way bring their external accounts into overall balance,
- (b) the extent of the strains imposed upon the United Kingdom by capital movements to the rest of the sterling area,
- (c) the progress made by the United States in pursuing "good creditor" policies.

Canadian Position

7. The United Kingdom proposals, which are described as the "collective approach" to multilateral trade and payments offer a fresh opportunity to reverse the present unsatisfactory tendencies in world trade and payments. The general direction of the proposals is encouraging. However, the steps by which they would be implemented and the conditional nature of the undertakings with respect to the removal of quantitative restrictions and discrimination raise certain fundamental questions. Convertibility of sterling is a desirable step, but in itself, unaccompanied by significant progress toward the removal of discriminatory restrictions, would have only limited direct value for Canada. The conditional and vague nature of certain of the main elements suggests, that while convertibility may be achieved, there may be an indefinite period during which the existing pattern of restrictions will be maintained. On the other hand the initiation of the scheme entails immediate and firm commitments from the outset on the part of the United States (and inferentially Canada) in the form of additional financial support and in a modification of policies in the Fund and elsewhere. Consequently before it is possible to assess the merits of the scheme as a whole it will be necessary to obtain clarification on the following matters:

- (a) The extent, timing and nature of the limited relaxations of restrictions on "essential raw materials and staple foods" contemplated in the first stage of the convertibility operation.
- (b) The timing and rate of progress contemplated in the progressive removal of discrimination during the second stage.
- (c) The nature of the proposed emergency balance of payments escape clauses which are to be available when the long-term policy is in full operation.

8. With respect to the initial relaxations, we would wish to have more precise details of what the United Kingdom means by "essential raw materials and staple foods" and also of the extent and nature of the relaxations which other sterling area countries would be prepared to make at the outset. This clarification is important not only from the point of view of immediate Canadian trade interests but also in respect of the ultimate workability of the whole scheme.

9. It may prove difficult to obtain more firm indications regarding the rate of progress to be achieved in the ultimate removal of discriminatory restrictions, on the ground that such relaxations would have to keep "in step with the progressive solution of the world dollar problem." In fact, the progress achieved in the removal of the so-called "dollar problem" will depend to a very substantial extent on the ability of the sterling and other non-dollar countries to put into effect internal policies which are consistent with the maintenance of equilibrium in their external accounts. The adoption by the United States of more liberal trade and lending policies which is regarded by the United Kingdom as an essential feature of the scheme, would help, of course, but this would not provide the solution in itself. In assessing the proposal as a whole, therefore, a judgment will have to be made on the likelihood that sterling area countries will be able and willing to adopt and maintain appropriate internal policies.

10. One of the difficulties in exploring these proposals further is the uncertainty as to how firmly they are supported by the United Kingdom Government itself. In this connection Mr. Robertson has indicated in a message (attached as Appendix B)† that, "It is my impression that the decision of the United Kingdom Cabinet to submit proposals revised to meet to some extent the views expressed in the preliminary discussions represents rather a victory for Butler and those of his colleagues who share his views. There are still some waverers, however, in the Cabinet and their acceptance of the present proposals does not mean that they are ready to fight very hard for them if their reception by the conference is on the cool side." Mr. Robertson goes on to suggest that the progress made with these proposals may depend upon the position which Canada takes from the outset of the conference.

11. In formulating the Canadian attitude, account has also to be taken of the results which are likely to follow if proposals along these lines, limited though they be, are not pursued at this time. The alternative would appear to be to continue substantially along the present course in the hope that appropriate internal policies will be instituted and made effective so that a better basis is created for real progress toward convertibility and multilateral trade. If, however, effective internal measures are not taken, there is the danger that there would be an indefinite prolongation and perhaps intensification of the existing system of restrictions leading to further separation of the dollar and non-dollar areas, which might have been avoided by the new initiatives on the part of both debtors and creditors that the collective approach itself might make possible.

12. In any event the London Conference can do no more than consider whether a set of proposals can be formulated which could provide a reasonable basis for discussion with the United States and the major European countries. Any final commitments on the part of Canada will not have to be taken until after these discussions with the other countries concerned. We shall wish to have some discussion of the procedure to be followed in these further talks and of our relationship to them. In the course of these discussions the proposals will no doubt undergo some modification, and our final attitude will have to be decided in the light of these later developments.

Imperial Preferences

13. The United Kingdom Government state that they have noted the views expressed at the meeting of officials and would wish to go into the matter further at the conference. Mr. Robertson informs us that "British Ministers feel that they have to put forward their party position on preferences and G.A.T.T. in the meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers" and Mr. Robertson goes on to say that "they were a bit dismayed and shaken by the lack of support this position received from the preliminary meeting of officials, but they have, I suspect, some ground for hoping that the Ministers from New Zealand at least and perhaps Australia will be more receptive to their proposals about preferences". The Canadian views on this question, namely that this is a matter which should not be regarded as an integral part of the scheme and will be an obstacle to its acceptance, is likely to receive support from some other Commonwealth countries, particularly the countries of South-East Asia.

1. The Minister of Finance referred to a report by a working group concerning the United Kingdom proposals which would be placed before the Commonwealth Economic Conference. Copies of the report had been circulated.

(Report, November 21, 1952, and attached Appendix "A", United Kingdom proposals, and Appendix "B", telegram No. 2296 of November 15, 1952 from the High Commissioner in London)†

The two stages involved in the United Kingdom proposals were not clearly set forth in their text but were developed in the report. In the first stage, sterling would be put on a flexible rate and convertibility established for non-residents of the sterling area. The open door policy on imports from the sterling area would be continued and some relaxation of restrictions would be made which would not involve any significant additional strain on the United Kingdom's balance of payments. These would be through liberalization of imports from Europe and limited removal of restrictions on imports of essential raw materials and staple foods from the dollar countries. There was no indication as to how long this stage would last. It was clear that it would not be launched without special fund arrangements to support the convertibility operation, undertakings by leading European countries concerning convertibility of their currencies and import control policies, and agreement with the United States and European countries on the objectives of long-term commercial and financial policies. In the second stage there would be action leading toward the abolition of quantitative restrictions, subject to escape clauses, removal of discrimination against non-sterling countries and the establishment of a joint I.M.F.-G.A.T.T. committee to formulate long-term trade rules. The proposals were encouraging but there were many gaps in them. There was no clear indication as to when or to what extent import restrictions would be removed. Unless something substantial could be done about them, convertibility itself would be of limited value. Before Canada could take any very positive stand, there would have to be more elaboration of what the various steps would involve. The prime requisite of the whole plan would be adequate internal measures by the United Kingdom and other sterling area countries.

2. The Prime Minister enquired as to the suggested arrangements for a special fund and asked what would be involved in that part of the U.K. proposals.

3. Mr. Rasminsky said that the quota of the United Kingdom under the International Monetary Fund amounted to about $1.35 billion, of which $350 million had already been drawn. There was thus about $1 billion of the United Kingdom quota left. The idea was that arrangements should be made so that the entire unused amount of the quota could be drawn on in case of need to support the convertibility operation. This would involve two changes for the Fund. One would be in the policy about the use of Fund resources. The Fund had been conservative with regard to the purposes for which resources could be used, and the present plan would involve a substantial change. The agreement of the United States would be necessary. The second change would be in making Fund resources available to a country whose currency was on a fluctuating rate. If changes were made as indicated, such a large part of Fund resources would have to be available for the United Kingdom scheme that the United States would probably have to give supplementary aid to the Fund in order that it might be in a position to look after the needs of others.

4. The Governor of the Bank of Canada said there were possible implications for Canada. The Canadian quota was $300 million, of which $75 million had been made available in gold and $225 million as a Fund account in Canada. If the United States and the Fund agreed to the United Kingdom proposals, it was likely that the Fund would want to use a large part of the Canadian dollar credit to help support the plan. Canada would have to provide the cash amount involved.

The success of the whole United Kingdom scheme would depend upon the internal measures taken, but the flexible rate feature was intended to provide an additional defence. If internal measures proved inadequate, it would be possible to defend the reserve position by allowing the sterling rate to fall. That would be the principal feature that was not present when convertibility was attempted in 1947. The hope would, of course, be that measures would not have to be resorted to that would involve any major variation in the value of sterling. Other countries of the sterling area viewed with apprehension the possibility of substantial fluctuation in the exchange rate.

5. The Prime Minister said that the fundamental thing from the point of the view of the United Kingdom was that consumption should not exceed what could be paid for or by production. Unless a balance could be achieved, no amount of machinery would be of much use. Such being the case, he wondered how valuable it was to be discussing machinery at this stage.

6. The Minister of Finance agreed that the balance was fundamental. The method of approach would, however, determine whether it would be achieved on the basis of a contracting or of an expanding economy. Canada had every interest in encouraging an expansionist approach. While the present proposals had many gaps, they represented a change from the purely restrictionist attitude that had prevailed for so long. The approach involved risks, and it was for the United Kingdom to decide what amount of risk could be taken and what measures would be necessary to ensure success.

7. Mr. Towers said there were a number of people in the United Kingdom who felt that, while the ultimate objective should be the same as we had in mind, the risks in an operation of the present sort were too great and that more should be done internally in the United Kingdom before the plan was put into effect. They were very frightened of the consequences of a new effort like that of 1947, which might again fail with very serious consequences. Ideally it was correct that the best course would be to set their house more in order before trying so bold a venture. It was, however, doubtful whether enough could be achieved internally without the encouragement of a broader programme and the outside pressure that it would bring to take the necessary action.

8. Mr. Deutsch said the internal measures would all be politically very difficult. It would be extremely hard to take them unless the United Kingdom government could present them as part of a co-operative plan in which they were receiving the assistance of the United States and other countries. Among other things action probably would be required to reduce the food subsidies and possibly to remove or reduce rent controls in order to meet the housing problem. There might be some short-term unemployment while industrial adjustments were taking place. Pressure would be brought on inefficient industries, particularly if restrictions were removed. The measures would press most severely on lower income elements in the community and that made them especially difficult. The Labour Party would almost certainly oppose them.

9. The Deputy Minister of Finance said Canada had a very great stake in seeing the United Kingdom's financial difficulties solved. For that reason it was important to encourage any action that gave promise of leading in the right direction.

10. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said the United Kingdom was hoping for support from Australia and New Zealand about imperial preferences. He thought it would be very undesirable to have any approach to G.A.T.T. on the matter. Canada should take a clear and definite line against anything of the sort.

11. Mr. Towers suggested that it might be desirable, and possible, at an early stage in the discussions and before coming to our position on the machinery proposed, to try to set the whole matter in perspective. It could be acknowledged that any course was going to be difficult and that the present plan undoubtedly had dangers within it. Nevertheless, there should be an assessment of the difficulties and dangers in doing nothing and continuing in the present direction. Events and policies of the last few years had had a weakening effect on the sterling area. It was more desirable that that process should be brought to an end. Moreover, the tendency of present policies had very undesirable political effects. The general result was a crystallization of the countries of the free world into two groups and the division weakened them at a time when it was in their common interest to come as closely together as possible. If the weakening and dividing process continued it would be extremely dangerous for them all. Emphasis on the international political aspects and on the broad perspective might give the suggested venture greater appeal to Mr. Churchill.

12. The Prime Minister said that the lines to be taken by the Canadian representatives would have to be considered in the light of further information that became available and of the morning's discussion. It was quite clear that Canada would have to avoid, at all costs, any appearance of telling the United Kingdom what course it ought to take and what internal measures should be introduced. The essential point could be emphasized that what had to be done was to ensure a position in which the United Kingdom's exports and imports could be balanced and a stable position maintained. Stress should probably be laid on the importance of diminishing the restrictions against certain items. Unless there could be some diminution of restrictions it would be difficult to convince people that the project was one worthy of support. The general perspective outlined by Mr. Towers would also have to be kept in mind.

Following from the delegation to the Commonwealth Economic Conference, Begins: The conference has got off to a rather slow start, but an encouraging amount of general support for the modified UK proposals has already been expressed. At the first meeting of the committee on finance and trade (which were held on Friday, November 28, under Mr. Eden's chairmanship) statements were made by the representatives of Canada, South Africa, India, Southern Rhodesia, Ceylon, Pakistan and New Zealand, as well as an introductory statement by Mr. Butler, who apparently will do most of the talking for the UK. The text of the statement made by Mr. St. Laurent is contained in my immediately following telegram. Mr. Menzies was not ready to speak on Friday, and his opening statement has been deferred until Monday.

2. Preferences. The representatives of South Africa, Ceylon and India have already made it clear that they do not support the UK's proposal for a revision of the "no new preference" rule of GATT. Mr. Havenga<sup>20</sup> said that he could not see how this proposal could be reconciled with the desire to progress towards freer multilateral trade, and he added that, in his opinion, it would prejudice US support for the scheme to make sterling convertible. Sir Chintaman Deshmukh<sup>21</sup> said that the existing preferential system was at present tacitly accepted in India, but that it would not be possible politically for India to agree to any extension of the system. Mr. Senanayake of Ceylon argued that any attempt to extend Imperial preference might tend to jeopardize the objectives which the countries of the Commonwealth had set for themselves. Mr. Holland of New Zealand did not touch on this subject.

3. Convertibility. Opposition to confining convertibility initially to non-resident sterling had faded, and it seems improbable that this will be an issue during the conference. Ceylon's objections to this limitation in the UK's proposals were explicitly withdrawn by Mr. Senanayake.

4. Exchange rates. The Asian members of the sterling area have now all accepted the thesis, although with varying degrees of reluctance, that the sterling rate should be flexible. However, they are uneasy about the provision in the present UK proposals whereby, after an initial period of free movement against sterling, the exchange rates of all sterling area countries should be fixed and move only in accordance with the sterling rate. Sir Chintaman Deshmukh stated that, in the opinion of the Indian Government, it was not essential for the success of the plan that the Indian rupee should be linked with sterling. He did not think there would be any great difficulties in a position in which sterling was subject to only minor oscillations while the rupee was constant in terms of dollars. Mr. Senanayake said that Ceylon would probably want to link the Ceylonese rupee to sterling, but he contended that it would be inadvisable to [make that?] course obligatory. In a very brief reference to this subject, Mr. Nazimuddin, the Pakistani Prime Minister, referred to the provision that all other rates should be pegged to sterling as "a difficulty" in the UK proposals.

5. Quantitative restrictions. As was to be expected, a considerable difference of opinion has been revealed on the question of how quickly quantitative restrictions should be removed. The representatives of Pakistan and Ceylon have urged caution, while Mr. Havenga of South Africa, in a clear and interesting statement which pointed out many of the disadvantages of continued discrimination, warned, on the other hand, that a too gradual approach might lead only to another crisis.

6. Price of gold. The case for a rise in the price of gold was presented by Mr. Havenga, but more moderately and sensibly than it had been by Dr. Holloway<sup>22</sup> during the meeting of officials. Mr. Havenga was supported in his plea by Mr. Whitehead of Southern Rhodesia; and it seems certain that we will hear a good deal more of this subject before the conference is over.

7. Finally, it might be added that Mr. Holland, in a rambling, impromptu statement of strongly protectionist flavour, made it clear that his understanding of the topics under discussion is not profound, and provided considerable confirmation of the extraordinary report, contained in Mr. Rive's telegram No. 5 of 14 November,† that even by that date the New Zealand Government had received only very scanty information about the discussions at the preliminary meeting of officials. However, we should imagine that Mr. Holland will prove willing to go along with the UK's proposals. Ends.

London, November 30, 1952

Following from the delegation to the Commonwealth Economic Conference, Begins: Following is the text of the statement made by Mr. St. Laurent on the 28 November, Text Begins:

I do not intend to use this occasion to discuss the proposals and tentative lines of policy which were the subject matter of the preparatory conference of officials, and which have now been placed before us in revised form by the UK Government. We shall have opportunities to cover this ground as our meetings proceed. But I would like to sketch the background against which our discussion of these difficult and intricate problems will take place — the background as seen through Canadian eyes.

The proposals put forward by the UK Government which we are about to consider are directed toward establishing a multilateral system of trade and payments through a collective approach in which creditors as well as debtors will play their part. In the course of these discussions we shall be giving thought to various techniques which may be adopted to help attain these ends and to the contribution which each of our respective countries, and others whose cooperation is needed, can make. It was brought out very clearly in the discussions among officials which preceded this meeting — as is again reflected in the main paper before us — that success in attaining the objective of international balance depends on all the countries concerned carrying out domestic policies which are, in fact, compatible with international balance. Unless we all do so, we would stand in constant jeopardy of a breakdown in whatever new arrangements might be decided on to govern international trade and payments.

The decision regarding the character and timing and, indeed, regarding the feasibility of the domestic measures which may be required in each country must, of course, be that of the responsible Ministers in the country concerned.

We have all shared in the efforts which have been made since the end of the war to achieve the objective of a world in which friendly nations could maintain a high level of international trade and enjoy each with the others that freedom of contact which is to my mind the sine qua non of economic strength and political unity. It would not be proper to describe these efforts as unsuccessful because we should all be much worse off if some had not come to the aid of others during this time and if the goal of multilateral trade and convertibility of currencies had been abandoned. However, it would be idle to deny that at least so far as surface appearances go we do not seem to be much nearer those goals than we were when hostilities ended. Perhaps it is time to make a fresh assessment of the importance we attach to the principles which have so frequently been enunciated. Are inconvertibility of currencies and all the paraphernalia of restrictions on trade and travel which go with it really such bad things?

In the Canadian view they are. Basically we think they are bad because over a period of time they weaken economies and reduce their capacity to satisfy the various demands on them. The pressures we all feel on our resources, in part, reflect aspirations which are desirable in themselves — such as an increase in the standard of living of the lower income groups in the community, a better standard of housing, higher standards of social welfare, a speedier rate of economic development in the less developed parts of the world. In part, for some of us they reflect the compelling necessity to build up our military strength to maintain our security in the face of the great dangers which threaten us.

It is of vital importance that we develop and maintain our basic economic strength so that we can satisfy these important and competing demands on our resources to the maximum extent of which we are capable. To achieve this, and do our part to maintain peace in the world, it seems to us in Canada that two things are necessary. One is that our resources should not, on any substantial scale and over any extensive period of time, be artificially diverted from the most advantageous economic uses; and the second is that we should work together in harmony and not allow relations with each other to degenerate into conflict and misunderstanding. Nothing could give greater satisfaction to those who wish us ill than to see our economic strength sapped in this way.

In Canada we have been concerned for some time at the likelihood that in the long run the measures which many countries have felt obliged to take to deal with their international payments problems — I refer particularly to the measures of trade restriction and discrimination against the dollar countries which have a weakening effect on their own basic economic position. Our attitude toward this matter is not, I believe, theoretical and doctrinaire. We realize that each country has its special problems — that new and under-developed countries may, for example, need for some time to come to exercise some direct control over imports to ensure that they are of a character which meets their developmental needs. But post-war experience seems to us to support the view that the widespread use of these self-perpetuating restrictions and discriminations tends to have a weakening effect on countries relying heavily on them.

We have been concerned in Canada too at the effect of continued reliance on trade restrictions on the prospects of that harmonious cooperation among like-minded countries which we regard as so essential. I was greatly impressed with the broad political risks which may be involved in continuing and perpetuating the division of the world into dollar and non-dollar blocs. The effect of this division is that trade, instead of bringing us together in friendly contact, tends to divide us; instead of being a source of harmony and mutual benefit, it becomes a source of friction and misunderstanding. The longer the division of the world into blocs continues, the greater becomes the dangers of friction as well as the economic dangers to which I have referred.

In referring to the dangers of friction and disharmony I am of course thinking in part of the relations between the US and the sterling area. I am also thinking of relations within the Commonwealth — relations between the sterling members of the Commonwealth and Canada, and relations among the sterling members themselves. The position of Canada as a dollar member of the Commonwealth is obviously of a different character from that of the other members, and opinion in Canada has recognized this and has accepted the fact that the exigencies of the position after the war required the other members of the Commonwealth to treat our trade on a different basis. But I freely confess that opinion in Canada, while still sympathetic, finds it more and more difficult to understand why, so long after the end of the war, the restrictions against us should be maintained and even intensified.

Finally, I venture, with great diffidence, to suggest that over a period of time arrangements regarding sterling based upon restrictions and discrimination can hardly fail to place strains upon the relations between the various countries comprising the sterling system itself.

Feeling as we do that the policies of restriction and discrimination weaken the economic foundations of our world and that they jeopardize the cooperation and understanding which are necessary for our common prosperity and security, we in Canada feel that there would be great advantages to the whole world if a fresh initiative could be undertaken which resulted in less stress being laid on restriction and more on multilateral trade and currency convertibility. We have been encouraged by the work done at the officials' meeting, and by the proposals which have now been placed before us by the UK Government, to believe that we are now called upon to consider a serious effort to change the general direction of sterling area trade and currency policy away from the restrictions which have, perhaps of necessity, characterized it since the end of the war. If we are right in this interpretation of the proposals, we welcome the change and we shall wish to do our part in working out their application to help make them acceptable to all concerned.

I ought well be told that there is really no need for me to bring forth arguments in favour of the goals to which I have referred as most people here agree on the broad general principles. But unless it is believed that major and continuing departure from these principles on the part of the great trading nations of the world will inevitably have disastrous effects, no one will be willing to make a real and sufficient effort to attain the goals in question. To us it seems essential that if — as I assume to be the case — the proposals before us represent an effort to effect a general change in the direction of policy along the lines I have referred to, the measures taken to implement them should carry conviction, and should leave no doubt in the minds of people either at home or abroad that there is in fact a basic reorientation of policy. I have in mind both domestic policies adequate to sustain the new arrangements without long-continued reliance on import restrictions and also concrete arrangements for the removal of import restrictions and discriminations within measurable time. I am not suggesting that everything should be done at once or that a rigid time-schedule can now be drawn up. But it is the case that in the light of the successive disappointments suffered in this field since the end of the war, general statements of objectives will have to be accompanied by concrete action. Changes which have been made in various aspects of these proposals since they were first put forward seem to recognize this fact.

In conclusion may I express the hope that our views on these matters at this conference will coincide and that we shall find other great nations whose cooperation is needed in the effort to attain true international balance to be of like mind. For my part I welcome this opportunity for discussion. I think it was a very wise and statesmanlike move on the part of the Prime Minister of the UK to propose the holding of a conference at this particular time. I am sure he appreciates the extraordinarily important political as well as economic implications of the course of action which we may attempt to follow if discussions here and later with others are fruitful. I assure you at the outset of these talks that we are anxious to join with you in seeking a constructive solution to the problems we shall be discussing.

Addressed External No. 3, repeated Washington No. 3.

Mr. Menzies spoke at length at the meeting yesterday morning of the Committee on Finance and Trade. His remarks were clear and closely reasoned; but when he had finished his intentions were still rather inscrutable. The criticisms he had to make of the United Kingdom proposal were so numerous and serious that it might have been thought that he was announcing he could not support them. An alternative interpretation would be that he had not yet made up his mind about the proposals and was searching for enlightenment and reassurance. Or, finally, he might have been indicating that he would support the proposals — but at a price. We are inclined for the time being to adopt the last of these three possible interpretations, and to believe that he was pressing the United Kingdom discreetly either for further capital to finance Australian development, or for permission to float a loan in the London market. This interpretation of his opening general statement was reinforced by what he had to say yesterday afternoon at the first meeting of the Committee on Development, on which we are sending a separate report.

2. After welcoming the United Kingdom proposals on account of their breadth and the careful study which had gone into their preparation, he explained by way of preface that, although he agreed that anti-inflationary measures were necessary throughout the sterling area, and also that sound economic development should be promoted, it seemed to him that there would be considerable difficulty in reconciling these two objectives. Strict internal measures in individual sterling area countries would have the effect of drying up the domestic resources available for development, while if an attempt were made to finance development through inflation, the consequences for the balance of payments would be grave in the extreme. The only way out of this dilemma was for Australia to be able to put its hands on additional resources from abroad.

3. After announcing in this way his main, but never fully explicit theme, he turned aside to consider the subordinate, if important, issues. First, he expressed support for Mr. Havenga's plea for an increase in the price of gold. The new administration in Washington, he thought, might be favourably disposed towards such action, if only because it would be difficult for them to find a solution of the present disequilibrium through a major revision of United States commercial policy. In any case, Mr. Menzies thought that Commonwealth countries should urge an increase in the price of gold on the United States Government.

4. He then dealt with the question of preferences and expressed regret that at the opening meetings of the Committee on Finance and Trade the preferential system had seemed to have almost no friends. He then professed his own attachment to it, but in a way which he clearly hoped would seem moderate and discriminating. Referring to the views of those who would like Commonwealth countries to repudiate the general agreement on tariffs and trade and to increase preferential margins substantially, he said that he could not agree that that was the proper solution to the problem of living in an inconvertible world. On the other hand, he dissociated himself from the thesis that preferences must be abandoned in the interests of a thoroughgoing multilateral system, and he repeated arguments with which you are very familiar in an attempt to show that the United States attitude toward preferences is unreasonable. He summed up his own position by saying that he thought the best way of saving dollars in the short run would be to increase intra-Commonwealth trade, and such an increase would be facilitated by adjusting and strengthening the preferential system. Unless action were taken to revise GATT so that Commonwealth countries would be free to increase preferences, he was very uneasy about what would be the state of Commonwealth trade once quantitative restrictions had been eliminated. At this point in Mr. Menzies' remarks, Lord Swinton, who was sitting opposite him, permitted his rather frosty absorption to be broken by the only smile he has shown so far.

5. Having cleared these subordinate matters out of the way, Mr. Menzies then turned to examine the core of the United Kingdom proposals. Although insisting that, as he said, he was not knocking the plan, he said that it seemed to him experimental, precarious and partial. It was experimental because:

(a) It depended on complete co-operation from the countries of Western Europe;

- (b) It would require thoroughgoing and generous United States support;
- (c) Considerable administrative talent would have to be displayed if newly acquired non-resident sterling was to be segregated from previous accumulations; and
- (d) Democratically elected parliaments throughout the sterling area would have to institute and sustain strict anti-inflationary measures, which would often be unpalatable and unpopular.

The plan would be precarious because of conflicting impulses which would come to a focus over the question of non-discrimination. In order to limit the amount of sterling held by non-residents, sterling area countries would be under considerable temptation to adopt discriminatory import policies in favour of their sterling area partners. On the other hand, the United States would probably make non-discriminatory policies on the part of the sterling area a condition of financial support for the plan; and similarly the countries of Western Europe would be willing to co-operate only if they received pledges of non-discriminatory treatment. Finally, the plan must be regarded as partial since the type of convertibility it contemplated would be confined to non-resident sterling. The reasons for this limitation were strong and compelling, but they would not be so visible, or so persuasive, to ordinary citizens of sterling area countries as they were to Finance Ministers and their experts.

6. Mr. Menzies doubted whether support for the proposals could be secured unless it were possible to go further than had been ventured in the United Kingdom's proposals and say something about the further stages to which it was hoped these initial steps would lead. Part of this more distant landscape would be a situation at which all sterling, both resident and non-resident, would become convertible. At this point in his statement Mr. Menzies also gave another indication that, although it might be possible to persuade his countrymen to accept some immediate slackening in the pace of Australian development, they would need to be reassured by the promise of some outside assistance within the not too distant future.

7. He also thought that he would have difficulty in getting acceptance of the proposal that a joint committee of the International Monetary Fund and of GATT should be established as a kind of arbiter in the whole field of international financial and commercial policy. Neither of these institutions was popular in Australia, and there would be little enthusiasm for asking them to assume even wider powers and responsibilities than they possessed at present.

8. The proposals therefore seemed to present many difficulties. Perhaps they were not insuperable. But, if they were to be overcome, the plan would have to be presented as part of a much larger pattern which would include a promise of outside capital for development purposes, and ultimately the convertibility of resident, as well as non-resident, sterling. He hoped that the conference would address itself to the task of at least sketching in this wider pattern.

9. Before concluding he gave it as his advice that as early an approach as possible should be made to the new administration in Washington. In twelve months' time it would be subject to many more internal pressures than at present. Now, flushed by a great popular victory, Mr. Eisenhower would be able to take action of which he might later be incapable. The time to strike was within the next three months while the new administration would be comparatively malleable.

10. After Mr. Menzies had spoken, Mr. Lyttleton made a brief statement on behalf of the colonies. It amounted to little more than the expression of a flat judgment that the United Kingdom proposals would be in the colonies' interest. He did, however, emphasize that it would be very important for some of the colonies, and especially for the West Indies, for the convertibility operation to be undertaken at a time when there was a strong tide of confidence in sterling. Colonies which depended largely on dollar imports would suffer seriously, if, after the convertibility operation, there were to be any substantial drop in the value of the pound.

11. In winding up the general discussion on the United Kingdom's proposals, the Chancellor of the Exchequer contented himself with expressing satisfaction that the proposals had been able to command so large a measure of support. The only point on which he had anything of substance to add was concerned with timing. Drawing attention to the final sentence of paragraph 7 of the United Kingdom memorandum (CEC(52)2) which states that, "the decision on this (i.e. convertibility of sterling) would be taken in the light of the circumstances ruling at the time and the progress made under each of the elements of the proposals," he emphasized that progress would have had to be made in reaching agreement on plans for removing quantitative restriction, and also that indications would have had to be received that the United States was prepared to follow "good creditor" policies, before the convertibility operation could be undertaken. It would be for the United Kingdom to judge the proper moment after having consulted with the United States and with the countries of Western Europe, and after having assessed the results of these consultations. But the United Kingdom proposed to remain in the closest contact with Commonwealth countries throughout this whole process, and particularly when it was on the point of reaching a decision as to when convertibility could be introduced.

Following from the Canadian Delegation to the Commonwealth Economic Conference, Begins: Following is the text of the statement made by Mr. St.

Laurent on December 2 in the Committee on Development and Commodity Policy.

Text begins:

We entirely agree with the emphasis that has been placed on this subject of further development of natural resources. It is something which most of our people are apt to regard as one of the principal means by which we can achieve those rising standards of living which they desire.

There is no doubt that the countries of the Commonwealth are rich in human and material resources and, when means are found to stimulate the development of the economic potential of our countries, the resulting increase in output will also make a vital contribution to the achievement of international balance and expanding trade.

Conversely, it is our feeling as well that, by making real and early progress toward the restoration of multilateral trade and convertible currencies along the lines of the proposals before us, we should improve materially the prospects for more rapid development.

I think we all recognize that the savings available in the undeveloped parts of the Commonwealth are not apt to be sufficient at this time to provide all the capital that is needed. This is a problem which we in Canada can easily recognize, since our own economic development in the past has been financed, to a considerable extent, not out of our own inadequate savings but through the import of capital on a large scale, first from the United Kingdom and, more recently, from the United States.

Two main problems seem to us to emerge as a result of the inadequate supply of domestic savings, the first is to ensure that the supplies which are available are put to the best possible use; the second is to supplement the domestic supplies from outside sources. It also seems to us that the need to guard against inefficient use of the capital available, is another reason to work towards an international system of trade and payments because that does produce incentive for the right sort of investment. On the basis of our own experience in Canada, we found that, when we had to impose restrictions to take care of a serious balance of payments problem five years ago, there was an immediate tendency for available capital to be invested in industries which would benefit directly from a continuance of import restrictions.

We, of course, agree with those who have expressed the view that the greatest stress should be laid on the development of those resources which will increase both the export capacity of the sterling area and meet the basic needs of its people. But we would also lay stress on the objective that investments of a dollar-saving character should meet the test of being able to stand on their own feet in a multilateral system of trade and payments.

In the past, the United Kingdom has been the important source of outside investment capital for the less developed parts of the sterling area and, even in recent years, it has provided substantial amounts. It seems to be generally agreed, however, that, in view of the many calls on its resources, the amount of capital which the United Kingdom will be in a position to supply in the near future is apt to fall short of what is needed.

One of the important problems in this general question of development is, therefore, how best to improve the prospects of Commonwealth countries being able to attract investment from outside, not as grants but for good business undertakings.

It seems to us to be realistic to regard the United States as the principal substantial source of such outside capital. In the post-war period there have, of course, been factors operating against an adequate flow of investment capital from the United States. These factors have arisen out of circumstances existing both in the United States and in the potential receiving countries. We have to recognize that the counter-attractions for the investment of capital at home in America have been strong and that the international political and economic situation abroad has not been favourable. Nevertheless, there has been some investment of outside capital in many of our countries and we in Canada have had many examples of the kind of investment Mr. Menzies described in respect of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company. We have found that, to obtain an inflow of private capital for investment purposes, there had to be a climate favourable for such inflow. What I mean is that the investors had to feel there were reasonable prospects of profitable earnings and that they would have reasonable prospects of determining how they would use those earnings, either for reinvestment or for conversion into currencies readily usable elsewhere.

Of course, we realize that there are some developments which are not so appropriate for private investment and which have to be promoted or aided by the State or by agencies of the State. We have several of that kind under active consideration by ourselves at the present time and, no doubt, some further contribution can and should be made through international institutions. But, if we can make progress in respect of the basic issues of world trade and payments, a sound basis will have been laid for fruitful international cooperation in providing more adequate supplies of capital for both public and private investment.

I hope that in such an effort we, in Canada, may be able to play some part. As I have indicated, we are, ourselves, a rapidly developing country and, as such, our development is being aided, through inflows of investment capital particularly, at the present time, from the United States. Nevertheless, we are doing what we can to assist in the development of other countries. We have cooperated in the Colombo Plan and through the United Nations and the International Bank and we would expect to continue to do so. We have released, for use by the Bank, the whole of our 18 percent subscription and we have authorized the International Bank to put out a bond issue on the Canadian market. We place no restrictions whatever in the way of Canadians who wish to invest in the sterling area or, indeed, in any other part of the world. While it would be excessively optimistic on my part to expect that Canada could in the near future become a major exporter of capital, I would hope that favourable world developments along the line we are discussing here might make more individuals and corporations, Canadians included, see opportunities for profitable investment in countries other than their own, thus increasing our bonds of inter-dependence and our opportunities for helpful and mutually profitable economic as well as political cooperation.

Addressed External No. 5, repeated Washington No. 5.

Following from the Canadian delegation to the Commonwealth Economic Conference, Begins: The general discussion of economic development was concluded yesterday afternoon. For the most part it was confused and imprecise. At times it was so disconnected and there were so many references by different speakers to the glowing possibilities for economic development in particular constituencies that the discussion resembled nothing so much as a rather humdrum part of the usual debate in the House of Commons on the reply to the address. Nevertheless the two meetings devoted to this subject were given some inner tension by the consideration paid to two important issues:

(a) How far would sterling area countries agree to regulate the pace of their economic development in the interests of the viability of the sterling area as a whole?

(b) How much capital could they expect to obtain from the United Kingdom?

2. Lord Salisbury, who was the principal spokesman for the United Kingdom at these two meetings, tried to secure agreement to the proposition that sterling area countries should restrict their plans for economic development to projects which, either directly or indirectly, would assist in correcting the sterling area's balance of payments. In summing up the discussion, he claimed that all sterling area countries had agreed. That may be. But when representatives of many sterling area countries said that they supported the conclusions reached by officials in the report on development policy, they often seemed to mean little more than they thought there should be increased production in the sterling area; and their agreement to the proposition advanced by Lord Salisbury was often so hedged about by qualifications and reservations that one might be forgiven for doubting how far they would be guided by it in practice. Mr. Menzies of Australia stressed how difficult it would be politically to convince the electorate that the pace of economic development in Australia should be curbed. In the same vain, Mr. Holland of New Zealand said that, if his government were to follow indefinitely the policy urged by Lord Salisbury, it would be necessary to find some anaesthetic for the electorate. Mr. Nazimuddin of Pakistan suggested that the conclusions in the report by officials should be modified to make full allowance for the fact that under-developed countries needed to carry out a programme of basic development, which could not be expected to contribute for quite some time towards strengthening the sterling area's payments position. Mr. Louw<sup>23</sup> insisted that South Africa intended to continue its policy of industrial development in spite of the policy of caution advocated in the officials' report.

3. In his opening statement Lord Salisbury repeated the undertaking given by the United Kingdom delegation last October at the preparatory meeting of officials that, if the principle were accepted that projects which would improve the balance of payments position should be regarded as paramount, then, in appropriate cases, the United Kingdom would try to assist by supplying capital. As the discussions progressed, there was considerable pressure from the spokesmen of other sterling area countries for a continued flow of capital from the United Kingdom and a scale larger than that forecast in Lord Salisbury's careful formula. Mr. Menzies suggested that there was a tendency to exaggerate the need to secure capital from the United States, and gave it as his opinion that much more capital could be raised within the sterling area than was usually thought. Although he did not openly request more capital from the United Kingdom, that was the unmistakable tenor of his remarks. The Prime Minister of Pakistan was more forthright. He claimed that the United Kingdom should play a larger part in the economic development of under-developed countries in the Commonwealth by providing capital goods and long-term credits. He also asked the United Kingdom to release its sterling contribution to the International Bank, so that it would no longer be necessary for Pakistan to use dollars borrowed from the Bank to buy sterling goods.

4. One minor mare's nest in the discussion was a proposal made by Mr. Holland for a Commonwealth Development Corporation. It was not at all clear what he had in mind, although he appeared to think that such a corporation might raise funds for development purposes and investigate schemes submitted to it. Sir Godfrey Huggins of Southern Rhodesia, supporting this proposal, said that in his opinion such a corporation should determine where increased production of dollar-saving or dollar-earning commodities should be encouraged, and should also arrange for the financing of such schemes as it approved. Ordinarily, the sterling component of the funds required would be provided by the United Kingdom; any necessary dollar expenditure should be financed through the International Bank; and the country in which the development was to be undertaken would be responsible for the rest of the financing. It does not seem likely that this proposal for a Commonwealth Development Corporation will get very far. Mr. Menzies expressed scepticism about it, and Mr. Hopkinson, the Minister of State for the Colonies, recalled that the United Kingdom's experience to date with public corporations to promote economic development, has been by no means uniformly happy. This proposal, along with the final report of the Washington group on United States investment in the sterling area, has been remitted to a small committee on development which is to meet later this week under the Chairmanship of Lord Salisbury.

5. The text of the statement made by Mr. St. Laurent in the course of the discussion is contained in my immediately preceding telegram. The Prime Minister also interpolated some remarks about his experience with United States investors in Canada, indicating that in his judgment they were moved by exactly the same considerations as when investing in enterprises in the United States and in no case could be regarded as instruments of United States policy. Ends.

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Addressed External No. 6 (Important), repeated Washington No. 6.

Following from the Canadian Delegation to the Commonwealth Economic Conference, Begins: Any report of the discussions on preferences yesterday morning in the Committee on Finance and Trade must be headlined by the statement made by Mr. Holland of New Zealand. Before he spoke the score had been about even. The United Kingdom, Australia, and Southern Rhodesia, had urged that Commonwealth countries should make a concerted effort to revise the "no new preference" rule of GATT, so that preferential margins could in appropriate cases be increased. On the other hand, opposition to any such action at this time had been expressed by South Africa, India, Pakistan and Ceylon. Then Mr. Holland unexpectedly said that he too was opposed to the United Kingdom's proposal. The thin red line was broken, the rout was completed, and Mr. Eden on behalf of the United Kingdom was obliged to acknowledge defeat.

2. The United Kingdom brief had been presented by Lord Swinton. In view of his background and his part, as Sir Philip Cunliffe-Lister, in framing the Ottawa agreements, he showed on the whole, remarkable moderation. Arguing that increased trade among the countries in the Commonwealth was by no means inconsistent with increased trade between the Commonwealth and the rest of the world he suggested that it would be wise to examine carefully what the value of imperial preference would be in a trading world where quantitative restrictions were much less prevalent than they were today. The United Kingdom's objective was to get rid of quantitative restrictions. A corollary of that was that there must be freedom to apply tariffs flexibly. During the period when quantitative restrictions had been the chief means of regulating imports, many new industries had grown up in the United Kingdom; and it might be found desirable to give them some moderate degree of protection once quantitative restrictions were removed. An example of how new developments made flexibility necessary was provided by the European Coal and Steel Community. The establishment of this community marked the emergence of a new preferential system for which a special waiver had had to be devised by the contracting parties to GATT. The competition from Japanese goods was increasingly keen, and, if this problem were to be handled in an orderly and satisfactory way, some freedom in raising duties and in widening margins of preference would be required. Lord Swinton emphasized that the United Kingdom did not want to see high tariffs protecting either the United Kingdom industries or the industries of other countries. But the future was uncertain, and the problems it might present could not be met with confidence, once quantitative restrictions had been abandoned, unless the United Kingdom could recover its freedom to raise duties moderately and to widen margins of preference.

3. Not only was the United Kingdom bound by the obligations which all the signatories of GATT had undertaken, but it was also hampered in adjusting its tariff to new conditions by United Kingdom domestic legislation which embodied the Ottawa agreements and gave free entry into the United Kingdom market to a very wide range of products from Commonwealth countries. These two obligations made it impossible for the United Kingdom to introduce into its tariff structure revisions which were demanded by the new circumstances.

4. Mr. Havenga of South Africa, who spoke very briefly, said that in the past his country had derived great benefits from the Ottawa agreements. Notwithstanding that, it seemed to him perfectly clear that any efforts to abolish the "no new preference" rule of GATT would be inconsistent with the general objective of a freely multilateral trading world. It would also run counter to the collective approach which it had been agreed was necessary.

5. The Indian answer to Lord Swinton was put politely, but very firmly, by Sir Chintaman Deshmukh. In most cases it might be inadvisable to harp too much on internal political difficulties; but the political feeling about Imperial preference in India was so strong that he could not properly explain his country's position without mentioning it. "A strong political odour still attaches to this subject," he said. The Ottawa agreements themselves had failed of ratification in the Legislative Assembly, and had been put into effect only by action of the Viceroy's Council, he recalled. There had subsequently been strong agitation to do away entirely with Imperial preference. This agitation had somewhat died down of recent years, but opposition to the preferences was still widespread. The Government of India could certainly not join in any attempt to secure an extension of the preferential system.

6. Moreover, India would not have any economic interest in such a course. They must rely on quantitative restrictions as a means of operating a selective import policy which would enable them to exclude luxury goods and to concentrate their comparatively meagre resources of foreign currency on goods required for capital development. For that reason the Indian Government was not really concerned with how to work the alternative system of tariffs and preferences. "In this fight between quotas and tariffs we are on the side of quotas," Sir Chintaman Deshmukh declared.

7. He also made it clear that India was by no means fully satisfied with the existing preferential system. Preferences had been granted bilaterally and in a way which discriminated among the various members of the Commonwealth. India, he said, knew to its cost that the present preferential system did not generalize to all the members of the Commonwealth the benefits accorded.

8. If it were argued that in that case the proper course was to correct this weakness by introducing, as it were, the Most Favoured Nation principle into the preferential system, he would answer that under present circumstances the scope within the Commonwealth for preferential arrangements of this generalized kind would be highly limited. At the time of the Ottawa agreements, the United Kingdom had been the only highly industrialized country within the Commonwealth. But a new pattern of Commonwealth trade had emerged since then; and few commodities, in his opinion, would be found on which individual Commonwealth countries would be prepared to grant preferential treatment to all other members of the Commonwealth.

9. Sir Chintaman Deshmukh also warned that, if Commonwealth countries claimed for themselves freedom to extend the present preferential system other groups would claim the same or similar rights. A process of this kind would strike at the very root of GATT. As for the argument by analogy with customs unions he thought that it was unsound, since a customs union was conceivable only between countries which formed a natural economic unit, which ordinarily were contiguous, and which in most cases were looking towards economic, or even political, union. This was not true of the countries of the Commonwealth. Finally, we [he] thought that a concerted effort to remove the "no new preference" rule of GATT would prejudice the chance of securing United States support for this collective approach to convertibility.

10. Mr. Rahman, the Pakistani Minister of Commerce, repeated this final point. "The United States," he said, "would begin to doubt the sincerity of our efforts if, on the one hand, we presented a plan which aimed at reducing and eliminating restrictions to trade, and, on the other hand, argued for an increase in preferences." After Sir Godfrey Huggins of Southern Rhodesia had supported Lord Swinton's arguments, Mr. Senanayake of Ceylon declared that an acceptance of the United Kingdom's proposal would, in his view, be a negation of the underlying objectives of this conference. This was the first voice raised in the course of the discussion in support of the interests of consumers. He could not help viewing increased Japanese competition in a rather different light from Lord Swinton, he said. The people of Ceylon, with their low standard of living, were reaping considerable advantage from the reappearance there of cheap Japanese textiles.

11. Mr. Menzies, in an interrogative style which seems to be growing on him, had a great number of questions to ask. The drift of his remarks was that an extension of the preferential system would not be incompatible with multilateralism. "We could easily get into an ecstasy of suicide on this matter," he said in summing up his argument that freedom to widen preferential margins would be required in a trading world from which quantitative restrictions had been banished. He also described the difficulty which has been created for Australia by the drop in the real value of the preferences enjoyed in the United Kingdom market by some Australian products, notably Australian wines, on which specific, rather than ad valorem duties are levied. It would only be equitable for the real value of these preferences to be restored by permitting an adjustment of the specific duties in order to bring them into line with current prices.

12. It was at this moment in the debate that Mr. Holland said that, in his opinion, Commonwealth countries would be speaking with two voices if they approached the United States, saying that it was their objective to remove restrictions and yet, at the same time, that they wanted to increase these particular restrictions. The risk of failure in the whole enterprise would be immensely increased by allowing this feature to be included in the proposals to be discussed with the United States Government.

13. Mr. Abbott warmly supported what Mr. Holland had said. An attempt to remove the "no new preference" rule of GATT would be untimely and inappropriate, he said. Recalling that Canada had been the first Commonwealth country to extend preferences, he stated that in the past very substantial advantages had accrued to Canada from the preferential system. The circumstances which had permitted those benefits to be reaped, however, now no longer existed. Many Canadian commodities were completely excluded from sterling area markets by quantitative restrictions. It had therefore become necessary for Canada to seek alternative markets and success in this search had been greatly facilitated by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The Canadian Government could not countenance any action which might undermine GATT. For this reason, if for no other, they would be opposed to any attempt at this time to remove the "no new preference" rule. The effect on American opinion of any such move would also be highly unfortunate, he thought. The Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act came up for renewal next year; and it was important that nothing should be done which would make it more difficult for those in the United States who favoured liberal commercial policies from securing from Congress satisfactory action on this measure and on others in the field of commercial policy.

14. Mr. Abbott said that he could see that there might be a case in equity for adjusting specific duties to restore the real value of some individual preferences which had been diminished by price changes. It might well be that such an adjustment should be permitted in the case of Australian wines entering the United Kingdom market, and he would be prepared to see this and other particular cases of a similar kind examined. On the other hand, it must be borne in mind that a great many duties in the United States tariff were levied on a specific, rather than an ad valorem, basis. The continued rise in prices had eroded the value to United States producers of these protective duties in the same way as the value of some preferences had been eroded. In Canada too, the protective effect of specific duties had declined; and there had been considerable pressure — although this had been resisted — from Canadian manufacturers to increase the specific duties levied under the Canadian tariff on import of woollen cloth. Mr. Abbott concluded by repeating that in his judgement it would be extremely unwise to make a concerted attempt to seek a revision of the “no new preference” rule of GATT.

15. When all the votes were in, Mr. Eden acknowledged defeat gracefully, and admitted that it would clearly be impossible to make such a concerted attempt as the United Kingdom had proposed. He then changed the ground of discussion, and appealed for sympathetic consideration of the particular problems which the United Kingdom as a country was facing because of its commitments under GATT, and under the Ottawa agreements. If the United Kingdom were to get rid of quantitative restrictions, it would need to re-examine and revise its existing tariffs, and in some cases would probably want to make modest increases in the MFN rate. This would be impossible so long as it was forbidden to widen margins of preferences, and so long as the obligation stood to give free entry to a wide range of commodities from Commonwealth countries. One or other of these obligations must be modified in order to provide the United Kingdom with some freedom to raise existing duties. He suggested that this particular United Kingdom problem should be remitted for study by officials, who would be asked to return with recommendations before the conference concluded. This suggestion was sympathetically adopted. Mr. St. Laurent further suggested that the question of making adjustments in some particular duties in order to restore the real value of the preferential margin involved should also be studied by the same group of officials; and this was also agreed to. Ends.

London, December 7, 1952

TOP SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Addressed Ottawa No. 7 repeated Washington No. 7.

Following from Canadian delegation to the Commonwealth Economic Conference, Begins: There have been four meetings of Finance Ministers this week to consider the problems thrown up during the opening discussion in the Committee on Finance and Trade, on which we reported in our telegrams 1 and 3. The two subjects to which the most attention has been paid have been exchange rates and quantitative restrictions. There has also been a discussion of the price of gold. This telegram deals with the views expressed by Finance Ministers on the removal of quantitative restrictions, while our immediately following telegram contains a report of the controversy over linking other rates to sterling after the sterling rate has become flexible.

2. The explanations given by Mr. Butler, Lord Swinton and their officials about the intervening period confirm what was reported in telegram No. 2346 of November 23.† The United Kingdom authorities are thinking of an intervening period of about a year's duration. This period is required, in their opinion, so that a new code of commercial rules could be based on some experience of a system in which many currencies would be convertible and many exchange rates flexible. The explanations given of the need for new rules followed very closely the information contained in paragraph 2 of telegram No. 2346.<sup>24</sup>

3. On the other hand, the statement made by Lord Swinton about the import policy which the United Kingdom intends to follow in the immediate future, i.e. before the convertibility operation, was less encouraging than private talks before the conference opened had led us to expect. Extension of the present United Kingdom policy of buying staple foodstuffs and essential raw materials in the cheapest market, as well as further liberalization of the United Kingdom's trade with OEEC countries, would have to wait on the convertibility of sterling, Lord Swinton declared. However, it is by no means certain that the last word has yet been said on this subject; and it still seems possible that the United Kingdom may be able shortly after the conference ends to give us some satisfaction by announcing further measures to reduce discrimination against dollar imports. The Prime Minister has already had a conversation about this possibility with Mr. Butler, from which he drew considerable encouragement. So far as the intervening period is concerned Lord Swinton made it clear at a meeting on Tuesday that after non-resident sterling has become convertible, the United Kingdom intends to buy all its essential raw materials and basic foodstuffs in the cheapest market.

4. In the discussion of import policies for the immediate future, i.e. before convertibility, the United Kingdom representatives pressed Mr. Menzies to introduce some discriminatory relaxations into the present Australian restrictions which would favour sterling area commodities at the expense of commodities coming from OEEC countries. Although he was reminded that the United Kingdom was at present discriminating in favour of the sterling area, Mr. Menzies was completely unmoved. He said that, in the short run, no relaxations of any kind were being contemplated by the Australian Government and added that, in his opinion even if there were some scope for relaxations, it would be inopportune to make them on a discriminatory basis in view of the forthcoming approach to the United States that is under contemplation. It is our impression that Mr. Menzies' resistance to this United

This was an apparent reference to the changes that were taking place in international economic circumstances, specifically the tendencies toward convertibility of currencies and flexible exchange rates.

Kingdom pressure is to be regarded as part of a tactical campaign he is conducting to persuade the United Kingdom to grant Australia permission to raise money on the London market.

5. These various issues, however, have not given rise to much debate. The real difficulty has come over the proposal that, after the intervening period, all quantitative restrictions should be removed, except those which could be justified under a strict emergency clause of GATT. India, Pakistan and Ceylon have all expressed deep misgivings about this proposal. Mr. Mohamad Ali of Pakistan has indicated that, in his opinion, it would not be possible for Pakistan to get rid of quantitative restrictions in one year or two years or five years, and has argued that they are necessary as a means of allocating Pakistan's scarce resources of foreign exchange in the interests of its programme of economic development. In a country with a less unequal distribution of wealth it might be possible, by appropriate monetary and fiscal measures, to damp down effective demand for luxury articles without recourse to quantitative restrictions; but such a policy would not be feasible for Pakistan. Nor would heavy sales-taxes solve the problem, since the power to impose sales-taxes is vested in the states rather than in the central government. Sir Chintaman Deshmukh has presented a similar case on behalf of India. In order to carry out India's programme of economic development, a selective import policy is essential and this can be implemented only by imposing quantitative restrictions. At the present time the Indian restrictions are sanctioned by the Balance of Payments Articles of GATT; and it would not be possible to accommodate them within the terms of article XVIII of the general agreement (which deals with under developed countries) since the purpose of that article is merely to allow under developed countries to impose quantitative restrictions in order to protect raw industries. What India needs is the power to exclude luxury imports, even though such articles are not being manufactured domestically.

6. It has been widely recognized by the representatives of other countries at the conference that the problem raised by India, Pakistan and Ceylon is a genuine one. However, it has been pointed out, that if wide latitude were given to under developed countries to continue to impose quantitative restrictions this latitude would in all likelihood be abused by some countries. In any case, it might perpetuate the present situation where quantitative restrictions are the rule rather than the exception. The United Kingdom authorities have given it as their provisional view that what India and Pakistan are really saying is that, while they are engaged in the process of economic development, they will be almost continuously in balance of payments difficulties. The original United Kingdom idea of a balance of payments escape clause to deal with "emergency" conditions is therefore inappropriate to deal with this problem. United Kingdom spokesmen have also admitted that Article XVIII of GATT is irrelevant to this issue, and have stated further that they would be very unwilling to see that article, which was negotiated only with great difficulty, reopened. They have suggested that the solution is rather to be found by interpreting the balance of payments provisions in a liberal fashion in the case of under developed countries which are endeavouring with a sense of responsibility to restrict their imports so as to promote their own economic development. We have supported this general approach to the problem, but have insisted, along with the United Kingdom that there should be no "unquestioned right" (as Mr. Mohamad Ali had argued) for under developed countries to impose quantitative restrictions. Restrictions imposed by under developed countries should be subject to review, so that, if countries were taking restrictive action which was either unnecessary or excessive, there would be room for adjustment. On the other hand, we have admitted that there should not be constant international interference into the restrictive policies of under developed countries whose proceeds from abroad are inadequate for the purposes of economic development and which may therefore be regarded as being in almost continual balance of payments difficulties.

7. The Indians have already expressed their preliminary acceptance of this method of handling the problem. They have conceded that the IMF, in examining the Indian restrictions, has already shown sympathy towards their particular difficulties. If similar sympathy were shown by whatever international body is to consider financial and commercial matters in the new situation, India would be prepared to accept international scrutiny and review of the policy of quantitative restrictions which they expect to have to apply for many years to come. Pakistan and Ceylon are less certain whether the problem can be dealt with in this way. In any case, it is agreed that it will require considerable further study. Ends.

London, December 7, 1952

TOP SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Addressed Ottawa No. 8 repeated Washington No. 8.

Following from the Canadian Delegation to the Commonwealth Economic Conference, Begins: The controversy over whether all sterling area countries should be obliged to peg their exchange rates to sterling has been deep and intense, but it now seems to be on the way to solution. Our immediately following telegram contains the text of a statement made at the meeting of the Committee on Finance and Trade on Friday by Mr. Butler in an effort to resolve this issue.† He explained that the main departure it represented from the United Kingdom's proposals was a concession that other sterling area countries as well as the United Kingdom would have to exercise independent judgment before the convertibility operation was undertaken. This concession had been granted in return for informal understandings given by the representatives of India, Pakistan and Ceylon that it was their intention eventually to establish a link with sterling.

2. The underlying reason for the United Kingdom's unwillingness to agree that sterling area countries should be free to decide whether to link their currencies with sterling, or alternatively to peg them to gold or to the United States dollar, had been the fear that, if they did not decide to follow sterling, this would undermine confidence and increase the risk of speculative movements against sterling at a time when it was essential that it should be strongly supported.

3. After Mr. Butler had spoken, the Indian position was once again expounded by Sir Chintaman Deshmukh, who repeated that he was not at this time prepared to agree that the Indian rupee must be linked with sterling. He explained that this would require the introduction of new legislation to change the existing provision of the Reserve Bank of India Act whereby the bank is required to quote exchange rates based on the IMF parity. Those in India with inconveniently long memories, he said, would regard the establishment of a legal link with sterling as politically unacceptable and as exhibiting "the stigmata of a situation which no longer existed." In addition to this political difficulty, it would be objected in India that the Indian Government should be free to exercise its unfettered judgment as to what decision would be in India's economic interest. "Our judgment," he said, "must be the final one on what is politically feasible in our own country and as to what is to our advantage." If the present proposals found favour in the United States and in Western Europe and if the question of the rupee rate could be presented to the Indian Government and parliament within that wider framework, he was hopeful that the proposals as a whole would be acceptable and also that it would be agreed that the rupee should "keep in step" with sterling. Mr. Mohamad Ali of Pakistan supported what Sir Chintaman Deshmukh had said and added that, when the time was closer for the whole operation to be undertaken, it should be easier to get support for linking the Pakistan rupee to sterling than it would be at present.

4. Mr. Menzies was somewhat worried by the Chancellor's formula and said that he would need time to study it. In his opinion, it would be necessary long before the convertibility operation was undertaken to know whether or not the currencies of all other sterling area countries would be linked to sterling. If the decision on this question had to be deferred, the postponement should be as short as possible, if only because it would be difficult to enter into negotiations with the United States unless there were clarity on this point. Mr. Butler replied that, in his view, it would be adequate if he could say in Washington — as he now believed he could — that it was the present intention of those responsible for financial policy in India, Pakistan and Ceylon eventually to link their currencies to sterling.

5. Some misgivings about the formula was also expressed by Mr. Oliver Lyttelton, who said that, in his opinion, it would not be consistent with membership in the sterling area for countries to link their currencies to something other than sterling. This elicited from the Chancellor the explanation that the reference in the final sentence of statement to "practicable techniques ..... designed to maintain the strength of sterling ...." would exclude a link with the United States dollar. We have learned privately that the formula submitted by Mr. Butler has not yet been shown to his cabinet colleagues and is to be considered by ministers here on Monday. Apparently there is a good deal of nervousness about this formula, not only among United Kingdom Ministers, but also among senior officials in the Treasury. On the other hand, Mr. Cobbold<sup>25</sup> told Mr. Abbott on Friday that he was entirely in agreement with the position the Chancellor had taken and that he agreed it would be unwise to try to press the Indians and Pakistanis further. So far as he was concerned, he placed entire confidence in the private assurances which Sir Chintaman Deshmukh had given that it was his intention to link the Indian rupee to sterling. Ends.

London, December 9, 1952

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Addressed Ottawa No. 10, repeated Washington No. 10.

Following from the Canadian Delegation to the Commonwealth Economic Conference, Begins: After taking a licking in their fight for an amendment to GATT to remove the "no new preference" rule, the British have come back strongly with a new proposal which would virtually amount to a waiver of that rule in their favour. At meetings of officials on Friday and Saturday of last week they invited support for a proposal that the United Kingdom should not be regarded as contravening Article I of the general agreement "if, in order to protect United Kingdom industry, it increased a duty on foreign goods, but in accordance with the relevant tariff legislation, either

(a) continued to exempt the like Commonwealth goods from duty where this is required by existing legislation; or

(b) increased the duty on the like Commonwealth goods only to the extent provided for in existing legislation applicable to the goods in question."

This proposal, as you will see, would apply to almost the complete range of the United Kingdom tariff; only goods subject to revenue duties would be excluded from its scope.

2. We have been very unhappy about this proposal, and have argued that the United Kingdom would have little chance of securing such a broad release from GATT, or of enlisting our support, unless their application could be narrowed and made more specific. We have been strongly supported in this position by the representatives of South Africa, India and Pakistan.

3. The United Kingdom representatives, on the other hand, have argued that a more limited waiver would not assist them in solving their problem, since they are not in a position to decide what MFN rates they will want to raise when they abandon quantitative restrictions. They have also indicated that, if it were impossible for them to secure release from the "no new preference" rule, and if they decided to impose duties on Commonwealth goods which now enter the United Kingdom duty free, they would in all probability have to explain in the House of Commons that Commonwealth countries had preferred the imposition of new duties on their commodities to a revision of the "no new preference" rule of GATT. You will see that in this discussion we have had to walk a narrow tightrope, since we thought that we should avoid enabling United Kingdom spokesmen to say at some future date that we had encouraged the levying of new duties on imports from Canada.

4. The crucial sentences in the report of officials on this subject read as follows:

"All Commonwealth representatives appreciated the importance of the problem before the United Kingdom and agreed that it would be desirable that the United Kingdom Government should secure arrangements in the GATT to enable it to increase its MFN rates of duty, as necessary, for protective purposes without having to depart from the present statutory basis of duty-free entry for Commonwealth goods. Many representatives expressed the view that it would be undesirable in this connection to undermine the basic provisions of the GATT governing non-discriminatory trade practices, but all were ready to cooperate with the United Kingdom in seeking in the GATT a solution consistent with this general principle."

In our opinion this formula should leave us free to decide what the Canadian attitude should be when the United Kingdom has decided more precisely how to formulate its application to GATT. Already the United Kingdom has moved a little way towards our position by agreeing to restrict their application to those commodities which now enter duty-free from Commonwealth countries. In other words, they have agreed to drop the proposal that they should be free to increase the MFN rate on commodities now subject to the "McKenna duties" without raising the parallel preferential rate. This modification in their proposals highlights their main motive in seeking more elbow-room from GATT. In their opinion, it would be politically very difficult, if not impossible, to secure consent from the House of Commons here to a measure imposing duties on Commonwealth commodities which now enter duty-free. Although this change in the proposals is in the right direction, it would hardly seem to go far enough.

5. It was made clear in the course of the discussion that acceptance by the United States or by GATT of this United Kingdom proposal is in no way to be regarded as a condition which must be satisfied before the "collective approach to multilateral trade and payments" can be undertaken. The report by officials states clearly that discussion of this proposal with the United States authorities would be separate from discussion of the "collective approach", although it might be convenient for the United Kingdom Government to raise it at the same time. Ends.

London, December 11, 1952

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Addressed Ottawa No. 11, repeated Washington No. 11.

Some delegations, notably those from New Zealand and Australia, have been waiting since the opening of the conference for the promise of something more palatable than a diet of continued austerity. With the voters back home in mind they have been looking for something which would allow them to represent the outcome of the conference in a more favourable light. At the end of the session on development on Saturday (after listening to a statement by the Chancellor) they thought they had obtained what they wanted. They and other ministers gave a cordial welcome to Mr. Butler's offer of additional financial help as a significant contribution to the cause of Commonwealth development. Indeed Messrs. Menzies and Holland were positively enthusiastic. However, the resumed discussion of this subject which took place on Monday made it clear that these same delegations, after a closer scrutiny over the weekend of the Chancellor's proposals, now feel less satisfied with the dish that was placed before them.

2. As to the channels through which additional capital might be made available, the Chancellor made it clear that the London capital market would continue to be the primary source. He announced, however, that a consortium of leading financial and industrial interests was being formed in the City to make more finance available for Commonwealth development both directly and indirectly. The Chancellor hoped that this would meet the demand of Mr. Holland who had suggested the establishment of some form of Commonwealth financial corporation in London. Details of this venture are expected to be announced by the private interests concerned to coincide with the end of the conference. We have heard unofficially that the initial capital of this company will amount to £15 millions.

3. The principal additional help for development to be made by the Government of the United Kingdom itself is to come from the 18 percent subscription of the United Kingdom to the International Bank. The Chancellor did not indicate the amount that might be made available in this way over any given period and rather left the impression that he would expect the IBRD to apply the criteria mentioned below. The Chancellor naturally did not make the point, but it will occur to you as it did to us that in making funds available through the International Bank the United Kingdom may well feel that the Bank will be able to apply more searching, additional standards to the borrowers than would be possible if the United Kingdom were to dispense the funds itself.

4. The Chancellor then turned to the criteria which in the future should govern the disposition of the capital which might be forthcoming from United Kingdom sources. These included three principal and two subordinate criteria, as follows:

(a) The investment should be concentrated on prospects which would directly or indirectly improve the balance of payments with the non-sterling world;

(b) The United Kingdom would want to feel assured that the borrowing country was devoting a sufficient part of its own resources to development designed to assist the balance of payments;

(c) The borrowing country should put up a sufficient part of the cost of the scheme to ensure that both the United Kingdom and the borrowing country had the same interest in carrying it through efficiently;

(d) Where appropriate, account would be taken of the probable effect of capital assistance upon the prospects for United Kingdom exports;

(e) Account should be taken of the contributions which the investment would make to the supply of raw materials needed by the United Kingdom.

5. The Chancellor also spoke of the expansion in the physical contribution to the needs of the Commonwealth which might result from greater availability of steel and engineering goods. However, he was not able to put a figure on the additional capital assistance that the United Kingdom hoped to give. The present restrictions on the outflow of capital could not be seriously relaxed until balance of payments conditions had improved sufficiently.

6. The Chancellor also mentioned that it was in the interests of Canada and the United Kingdom that the United Kingdom should enjoy a share in the development of Canada and that he would endeavour to make dollars available for any good schemes that came along. This statement was subsequently referred to by Australia and India as somewhat strange, having in mind the shortage of dollars in the sterling pool and the ease with which Canada seems able to finance its needs for external funds in the United States. Mr. Abbott felt it necessary at one moment to mention mildly that the United Kingdom offer had not been solicited.

7. The United Kingdom authorities, without objection from other members of the conference, have accepted the conclusions of the Washington Working Party that it is unrealistic to expect a substantial increase in the provision of private capital from the United States in the near future. However, to make investment in the United Kingdom itself more attractive to foreign investors, the Chancellor announced that he proposed shortly to make public a statement that capital gains resulting from approved foreign investment in the United Kingdom and in the Colonies (made since January 1950) shall be freely transferable.

8. The discussion of the Chancellor's statement was resumed on Monday. In the main, the comments of delegations related to the criteria that the Chancellor had laid down as applicable to development projects, criteria which delegates felt themselves unable to meet in full. Some of them wanted an assurance that the new offer from the United Kingdom would not interfere with their traditional right of access to the London money market, an assurance which was given. South Africa (Mr. Louw) welcomed the United Kingdom appeal to the Sterling Commonwealth to confine development expenditures to those which assisted the balance of payments, but said that he would be critical of any proposal "to control" private investment within the sterling area. Mohamed Ali (Pakistan) felt that the emphasis of new investment in Pakistan upon agriculture, power and communications would enable Pakistan to meet the United Kingdom conditions but seemed worried lest the country's modest industrial programme would fail to qualify. Deshmukh likewise argued that the objectives of India's five-year plan would enable it to meet the three main criteria, but hoped that the United Kingdom would not place too rigid an emphasis on the fostering of United Kingdom exports and the obtaining of raw materials for United Kingdom industry.

9. The doubts of Mr. Menzies were more forthright. He declared that, in tying its offer of financial assistance to specific projects, the United Kingdom would make it impossible for Australia to borrow, since the Commonwealth Government was not itself responsible for the initiation of projects, which came within the purview of their various states. General-purpose loans of the type with which Australia was familiar in pre-war days did not run into this problem. With the IBRD hardening its attitude in favour of project loans and the United Kingdom moving in the same direction, Mr. Menzies wondered how the Commonwealth Government could qualify as a borrower much longer. He also pointed out, somewhat plaintively, that it was not within the power of his government to determine the direction taken by investment made by the various Australian States. The States were the planning authorities and the Commonwealth could control development only by the drastic step of cutting off finance which, in ordinary circumstances, was out of the question. In short it was difficult to apply the axe to investment generally in Australia, despite the admission that Australia had been trying to develop too rapidly, and impossible to determine that only essential investment should be fostered. Mr. Menzies concluded that he could not see in Mr. Butler's offer the prospect of any addition to the capital resources available to Australia.

10. Mr. Holland came to the rescue of the Chancellor and argued that his proposals were generous and reasonable. New Zealand, he thought, could live with them. Mr. Lyttelton spoke for the Colonies in support of the proposals but hoped that the criteria as defined by the Chancellor would not be made applicable to borrowing from existing agencies either in the City or from the IBRD. The Chancellor did not answer the doubts of Mr. Menzies and others directly but undertook to circulate later a statement dealing with some of the issues raised at these sessions and, in particular, with the part that the London capital issues committee will play in his proposals.

COMMONWEALTH ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

5. The Prime Minister said he proposed to table the official communique issued at the end of the Commonwealth Economic Conference. He would recommend that it be printed as an appendix to Hansard. Every word in the communique had been carefully considered and members of Parliament should have the complete text available for discussion.

Canada had managed to secure a change in wording in paragraph 7. It had originally stated that Commonwealth governments would give consideration to the effects on the export industries of countries of the sterling Commonwealth of import restrictions which some had found necessary. The paragraph had been altered so that consideration would be given to the effects on the export industries of all Commonwealth countries and not simply those of the sterling countries. The United Kingdom had already given up timber controls and would be buying where the best terms could be got. There was hope that something might be done about purchases of cheese, and perhaps salmon. There appeared to be no hope with regard to apples.

6. The Cabinet noted the report of the Prime Minister concerning the official communique issued at the conclusion of the Commonwealth Economic Conference and agreed that it be tabled in the House of Commons.<sup>26</sup>

[Ottawa,] February 5, 1952

Colombo Plan: Second Canadian Contribution

On February 12th, 1951, the Cabinet agreed that the Canadian Delegate at the Consultative Committee be authorized to state that the Canadian Government was willing to provide $25 million to the Colombo Plan in the fiscal year 1951-52, but that this amount would be made available only if other contributing countries were providing enough to give reasonable hope that the broad objectives of the Plan would be achieved.

2. Other contributing countries have made commitments as follows:

The United Kingdom has agreed to assist over a six-year period to the extent of approximately $900 million; this assistance to be given chiefly in release of sterling balances held in the U.K. by certain Commonwealth countries in the Colombo Plan area, and partly in the form of direct economic aid.

Australia is contributing the equivalent of $21 million in the first year and will contribute the equivalent of $75 million over a six-year period.

New Zealand will contribute the equivalent of $9 million over the next three years.

The United States is engaged in a very extensive foreign aid programme for which a total of $1,440 million has been appropriated by Congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1952. Of this total, $418 million has been allocated for economic assistance in the under-developed countries of the Near East, the Far East and Latin America. The appropriation for the Far East, including the Colombo Plan area, amounts to $237 million. In addition, the United States has provided India with wheat to the value of $190 million, on a low interest loan basis. The U.S. is now a full member of the Consultative Committee and has agreed to provide a chapter on its contribution to the economic development of the Colombo Plan area, for inclusion in the next Colombo Plan report.

3. The $25 million Canadian contribution to the first year of the Colombo Plan was allocated, on the authority of the Cabinet, to India and Pakistan, with $15 million being earmarked for economic assistance to India and $10 million to Pakistan. Both these programmes are well under way, and it is expected that most if not all of the $25 million vote will be committed before the end of the fiscal year. The greater part of these commitments would be for projects already approved by Cabinet; some other projects, now tentatively approved by Ministers directly concerned, but still under discussion with the Indians and Pakistanis, will be submitted to the Cabinet for final approval in the near future.

4. It is suggested that the time has now come to consider the question of a Canadian contribution for the second year of the Colombo Plan. The Consultative Committee is to meet in Karachi in late March and the extent of Canadian participation in 1952-53 should be decided before then.

5. The arguments for helping to promote political and economic stability in South and South-East Asia are as strong now as they were a year ago when the Cabinet approved a Canadian contribution of $25 million for the first year of the Colombo Plan. Moreover, we can already see the first practical results of the Colombo Plan in the efforts being made by receiving countries to come to grips with their economic problems and to face up to their own responsibilities. The economic development programmes which have been worked out, particularly in India and Pakistan, show a serious attempt to assess primary needs and potential resources, and to approach the problem of economic development in a sound, realistic manner with emphasis being placed on agricultural and other fundamental projects. These countries have begun to implement their programmes and, from the reports we have received, both from Canadian officials in India and Pakistan, and from an International Bank Mission which recently visited India, real progress is being made. Officials from Ottawa have recently discussed Colombo Plan matters in Washington with officials of the International Bank and the State Department, both of whom are carrying out large-scale economic development operations in that area. There has been and will continue to be close cooperation with them to ensure coordination of all our efforts so that available resources for assistance will be put to the best use. Thus the Colombo Plan has made encouraging progress to date; other donor countries are committed to continued support, and the United States has become a full partner. In these circumstances, failure by Canada to remain in the Plan would, I believe, have most unfortunate results both in Canada where there is very widespread support for the Plan, and abroad where Canada's participation so far has been much appreciated.

6. If we are to continue participation, the question arises how much should we contribute for 1952-53. Any smaller contribution than last year's might well be taken to indicate either dissatisfaction with progress to date, or lack of confidence in the ultimate benefits of the Plan. On the other hand, the continuing heavy burden of defence expenditure militates against increasing our contribution. Taking these considerations into account, it would seem reasonable and appropriate that the Canadian contribution for the second year of the Plan be in the same amount as the first contribution.

Recommendation

It is recommended that Cabinet authorization be given, subject to Parliamentary approval, to a contribution of $25 million for 1952-53 for economic assistance under the Colombo Plan.

COLOMBO PLAN: SECOND CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION

10. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to the discussion at the meeting of February 12th, 1951, said it was proposed that, as in the fiscal year 1951-52, Canada contribute in 1952-53 $25 million for economic assistance under the Colombo Plan. The plan was working well and the 1951-52 contribution, which had been allocated to India and Pakistan, was being spent in very useful ways. These two countries had been working out their plans for the use of counterpart funds in collaboration with Canadian authorities. Other countries had made commitments in connection with the plan on the scale anticipated, and the United States had become a full member of the Consultative Committee on the Economic Development of South and South East Asia.

The Committee would be meeting in Karachi in March<sup>27</sup> and it was planned that member countries be represented by cabinet ministers. As Canada should be represented, the composition of the Canadian delegation would have to be discussed shortly.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum Feb. 5, 1952 — Cab. Doc. 35-52).

11. The Minister of Trade and Commerce doubted that any of the funds to be provided for 1952-53 should be used for grain shipments.

12. The Minister of Finance believed that part of the second Canadian contribution would probably be allocated to Ceylon. Since long-term projects were involved, the vote covering this contribution should be one that would not lapse after March 31st, 1953.

13. The Cabinet, after further discussion, approved the recommendation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and agreed that, subject to Parliamentary approval, a contribution of $25 million for the fiscal year 1952-

COLOMBO PLAN: ARRANGEMENTS FOR CARRY-OVER OF FUNDS

Of the 1951-52 Colombo Plan Vote of $25 million, only the $10 million allotment for wheat for India has actually been spent. The balance of $15 million will lapse at the end of the fiscal year unless measures are taken to provide for a carry-over. The programmes for India and Pakistan have reached the stage where some projects are definitely agreed upon, and arrangements are being made for tenders, contracts, etc., while others are tentatively approved subject to further consideration. Although funds can be ear-marked for these projects, expenditures will begin after March 31, and, in some cases, depending on delivery schedules, will continue to be made into 1953 and perhaps even longer.

2. Mr. Abbott is anxious to have the full amount of the Vote debited to this year's account and to avoid a revote of the unspent balance. The Department of Finance has drawn up a Submission to Council recommending a financial procedure whereby the funds would be turned over to the Canadian Commercial Corporation to be used to carry out this year's Colombo programme. In order that the arrangements be quite legal and in conformity with the wording of the vote, it is necessary that the unspent monies be formally given to the governments of the recipient countries. There is, of course, no question of handing over $15 million to the Governments of India and Pakistan to use as they like, and it has therefore been agreed with the Indians and Pakistanis that an exchange of letters will take place constituting an agreement whereby the Indian and Pakistan Governments will direct the Canadian Government to turn over the Colombo funds available to the Canadian Commercial Corporation which will then act as agent of the Indian and Pakistan Governments. Provision is made, of course, that the C.C.C. will, in fact, make funds available only for projects approved by you.

3. The draft Submission to Council has been cleared with the legal advisers of the Departments of Finance and Trade and Commerce, as well as with our own Legal Division. At one point the question arose of the legality of the C.C.C. letting contracts for construction work in a foreign country. The question bore directly on the erection of a cement plant in Pakistan. The Department of Justice was asked to give a ruling on this matter, and Mr. Varcoe has stated that, in his opinion, the C.C.C. constitution can be interpreted to permit of such a contract.

4. The Department of Finance assures us that the procedure which they recommend in the Submission to Council is unassailable on legal grounds and is not contrary to the intentions of Parliament in voting the funds. Nevertheless, these financial arrangements are exceptional and may bring forth some comment from the Auditor General. The Department of Finance tells us that Mr. Abbott will be quite prepared to deal with any comments from the Auditor General or with any questions which might arise in the House on the financial procedure for the carry-over of funds.

5. I attach, for your signature, the Submission to Council† and, for your approval, the attached draft exchange of letters† with the Indian and Pakistan High Commissioners. Attached also for your signature are letters† to Mr. Howe and Mr. Abbott requesting their concurrence with the Submission.

6. A very brief covering memorandum to the Cabinet is being prepared and will be submitted for your signature as soon as it is cleared on the official level.

COLOMBO PLAN: CARRY-OVER OF FUNDS

21. The Minister of Finance said that, with his concurrence and that of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Secretary of State for External Affairs had recommended a financial procedure for the disposition of the unspent portion of the $25 million Colombo Plan Vote for 1951-52. It was proposed that an Order in Council be passed to legalize the proposed carry-over of funds after March 31st, 1952.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

22. The Cabinet, after discussion, approved the recommendation submitted by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as concurred in by the Ministers of Finance and Trade and Commerce, for the carry-over beyond March 31st, 1952, of the unspent portion of the $25 million Colombo Plan Vote for the fiscal year 1951-52; an Order-in-Council to be passed accordingly.

COLOMBO PLAN

We are becoming increasingly concerned with the slow pace at which we are moving ahead on the actual execution of our Colombo Plan programme. It was inevitable that there should have been delays in getting this brand new type of programme off the ground and we were not unduly disturbed, though admittedly disappointed, at our record of definite achievements in the first year. However, the present status of our 1952-53 programmes, which we had expected to be well advanced by this time is, in fact, pretty discouraging. Four months of the current fiscal year have now gone by and, apart from the programme for Ceylon which is fairly firm, we have made very little progress in lining up definite projects for Canadian assistance. Officials of the interested departments have given serious thought to this problem and have considered possible ways of helping to solve it. Certain steps can and will be taken at this end to improve our administrative facilities, but this will not do anything to overcome what we believe to be the basic weakness, namely, the inept handling of Colombo Plan matters by the responsible government officials in the recipient countries. It is here that we would like to enlist your help.

2. As you know, we have an understanding with the Indian and the Pakistan Governments that the official channel of communication on the Colombo Plan should be through their High Commissioners in Ottawa. Although this channel has not proved very satisfactory, we would not wish to abandon it completely. In spite of the prolonged delays which the High Commissioners experience in obtaining information from New Delhi and Karachi, there is much to be said for maintaining our close relationships with them on Colombo Plan questions. What we have in mind is that greater use than in the past could be made of our missions in India and Pakistan both in supplementing our formal and official contacts with the High Commissioners and in providing us with information directly. It seems to us that there are these specific ways in which your office could be of definite assistance to us in operating the Colombo Plan.

(a) In advance of Mr. Cavell's<sup>30</sup> annual trip to the area, a good deal of preparatory work could probably be done through informal discussions and exchange of views with Indian or Pakistan officials on possible projects for Canadian aid. This sort of conversation could commence months ahead of Mr. Cavell's arrival and in the intervening period it might be that a tentative list of sound and feasible projects could be lined up which he could then use as a basis of discussion with the government concerned. You might, in this way, be able to stimulate some advance planning, sift out the obviously unacceptable projects and encourage adequate preparation of material on the most attractive projects. To the extent that the decks could thus be cleared for action, Mr. Cavell's consultations would be that much more profitable.

(b) One of the main reasons for delay in deciding on projects submitted for our approval is the lack of sufficient information on which to base a judgment. We do not of course expect or want detailed specifications in the initial stage, but it is essential that we have general information on the scope and usefulness of the project and some idea of the type of equipment which would be required, before we can determine whether the project is an appropriate one for Canadian assistance. It has been our experience that this type of information is extremely difficult to obtain and it might be that we could get it more quickly with your help. In such instances, you might be able to prod the government officials directly concerned into supplying the required material. It might also be that you would have additional details from other than official sources which might be helpful to us in judging the merits of a project.

(c) It quite frequently happens that after a project has been approved, there is prolonged delay in getting it underway because of the lack of detailed specifications or the unsatisfactory form in which they are presented. Again, we sometimes reach a point in the execution of a particular project where a decision must be taken by the Indian or Pakistan Government on a particular point. I have in mind, for example, the difficulty which has arisen over the railway tie project for Pakistan. As a result of the reluctance of the Pakistan authorities to accept a proportion of hemlock ties, the placing of orders for these ties has been held up for months while the High Commissioner here has attempted, without success, to persuade his Government to agree to the proportion offered. In specific instances of this kind, an approach by you might achieve the desired action.

3. The informal co-ordination meetings which take place in the national capitals might provide a further opportunity for encouraging a more business-like approach to problems of economic development and technical assistance. We hope that this forum can be used to stimulate greater efficiency on the part of Indian and Pakistan officials charged with responsibility in these fields.

4. We have already sought your help on a few occasions in the past in regard to particular projects and your co-operation has proved useful in each case.

Our intention now is that you should play an increasingly active role in working out Colombo Plan projects and speeding up their execution. I should be grateful to receive your general reaction to this suggestion and any views or comments you may care to put forward in connection with the ways in which your office might help in improving our Colombo Plan operations.

DESPATCH 588

Karachi, August 30, 1952

COLOMBO PLAN ADMINISTRATION

Reference: Your despatch E-353 of August 11, 1952.

I agree with you that our experience of the 1951-52 and 1952-53 programmes under the Colombo Plan has not been entirely satisfactory. As you point out there has been too much delay in achieving concrete results. We have sometimes been ashamed to admit at this post that the only item under the Colombo Plan with which Pakistan has yet been supplied was one Ford station wagon. The basic difficulty is the rudimentary and often inefficient administration of the receiving countries, including Pakistan. There is even a terminological problem. I refer, for example, to the confusion as to what constitutes "agricultural machinery". However, I think that both ourselves and the Pakistan authorities have gained considerable and valuable experience during the last year and that there are grounds for hope of greater and quicker progress in the future.

2. This can be accomplished partly by ceasing to rely as heavily as in the past on the High Commissioner's offices in Ottawa. In Pakistan's case, her High Commissioner's letters and telegrams from Ottawa must go first to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations in Karachi and then to the Ministry of Economic Affairs, and finally to the Department directly concerned. In some cases this routine is repeated in the provinces until the proper authority is reached. At this end, while we are officially expected to deal with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Ministry of Economic Affairs, in point of fact we almost invariably go directly to the senior official in the Government Department responsible for any particular item. . . . In connection with the Thal Livestock Farm, it is becoming increasingly clear to us that in all matters of urgency the Canberra Committee channels should be supplemented by direct communication between Ottawa and this office. The difficulties over agricultural machinery might never have arisen if more direct channels had been used.

3. The same point arises in connection with the Technical Assistance Programme. I note that you are now making a practice of sending copies of most of the offers made to the Bureau at Colombo to this mission at the same time that they go forward to Mr. Sykes.<sup>31</sup> As a result we have frequently been able to speed up action in this field. This mission has, of course, no intention of trying to assume any major portion of the work now being done in Canberra and Colombo.

4. In the future, as indeed in the past, we will not hesitate to approach the appropriate officers of the Government of Pakistan at the official level concerning Colombo Plan matters whenever we consider that the results would be useful. In the case of the railway ties I will await your instructions before raising this problem formally with the Government of Pakistan. However, if we are to perform this liaison function properly here, we will have to be kept in constant touch with developments in Ottawa.

5. I had not realized that Mr. Cavell proposed to make a yearly tour of this area. We would be very interested to know of his plans and would be glad to prepare the ground before he arrives. Presumably he will be attending the next Consultative Committee conference at New Delhi, and may also be visiting the Pakistan area at that time.

6. I think, however, that some of our present dismay at the slowness with which the Colombo Plan activities are developing may be premature. The next few months, as far as Pakistan is concerned, will be periods of great activity. In addition, as Mr. Said Hasan remarked to us on his return, whereas Colombo Plan assistance during 1951-52 was very helpful to Pakistan, the funds which are to be provided in 1952-53 are vitally necessary if her development programme is to continue as hoped. The current economic crisis in this country will result in much greater attention being paid to Colombo Plan problems.

COLOMBO PLAN

Reference: Your letter No. E-566 of August 13, 1952.<sup>32</sup>

I have read your letter with considerable interest. I share your concern with the slow pace at which the Colombo Plan programme for 1952-53 is moving ahead, and I believe that the suggestions which you have made may prove helpful. When I call upon Sir Chintaman Deshmukh this week, I shall take the opportunity of referring to the importance which the Canadian Government attaches to the Colombo Plan, and shall suggest closer liaison between my staff and the officials of his Department.

2. Lest you should think, however, that closer liaison is likely to afford more than a partial solution to the problems which face us, I think it would be well for me to outline briefly the administrative and political difficulties which are to some extent endemic to this country. If I go over a good deal of familiar ground, I hope you will excuse this in the interests of what may perhaps be the first detailed presentation of the problem.

3 We have all apparently been under the impression that the difficulties which we encountered during the first year of the Colombo Plan were due in a large measure to the fact that the Plan was in an experimental stage; that we were feeling our way; that we were setting up new and untried machinery and procedures. It seems to me that this is only a very partial answer. I am not competent to speak for Pakistan and the rest of South-East Asia, but I believe that the difficulty which any donor country faces in dealing with the authorities of a recipient country in this area are epitomized in India. They may be summarized as follows:

(a) There is an Indian way of doing things. By our standards, it is slow, hesitant and confused, and is based on a fundamental lack of planning and a tendency continually to make ad hoc decisions. This attitude, which is thoroughly familiar to the English, who have lived and worked in this country for 200 years, is regarded by them with a tolerant and good-natured cynicism. They do not attempt to force the Indians to meet their pace or to comply with their ideas of efficiency. They are prepared to let nature take its course, as it were, in the knowledge that eventually a given project will be completed. If, during the course of its completion, it takes longer and costs more than was originally intended, and turns out to be somewhat different from the blueprint, this is acceptable to them in the interest of long-term goodwill. For ourselves, the Australians, and the Americans, being much newer to the sub-continent, it is much more difficult to accept this: but it is something which cannot be changed simply by a closer liaison.

Among its manifestations are parallel and duplicate approaches by Government Departments; slipshod and outmoded administrative methods; and a failure in what the Americans call "phased planning" (i.e. the turbines may arrive before the cement floor is laid; the power is ready to be turned on before the industries have settled in the area; the product is ready to market without any distribution outlets having been surveyed).

It is easy to be frustrated by this haphazard approach. But it is in many ways a projection into another sphere of the day-to-day, hand-to-mouth, generally improvident attitude which characterizes an extremely poor country.

When one finds quite senior Civil Servants arriving at a meeting without having prepared any agenda or having read their files, and then proceeding after desultory discussion to an entirely ad hoc decision to deal with Point A, Point M or Point Z, as the case may be, one is appalled; but one must realize that while the clerks are numerous, the seniors are few and over-driven.

(b) The Indian Government is extremely short of well-trained Civil Servants. Recruitment for the Indian Civil Service stopped in 1940. The last generation of I.C.S. trained men are now in their late thirties. Officials below the rank of Joint Secretary will seldom take any action on their own responsibility. The successor organization, the Indian Administrative Service (I.A.S.) has nothing like the prestige or the training qualifications that the I.C.S. had. The Civil Service has also expanded enormously since Independence. The men who, three and five years ago, were clerks, are now Deputy Secretaries. While such rapid promotion is exemplary, it does not mean that those who are promoted have the capacity to deal with the complex problems of modern administrative machinery. As a result, files get lost or are not read, senior Civil Servants are not properly briefed, meetings are called without proper notice, agenda are not prepared and the whole range of what we would regard as normal administrative procedures are simply ignored.

The few I.C.S. and well-trained younger Civil Servants are at a high premium and are thus often quite impossibly loaded down with work. For example, Bhattacharyya, in addition to being deputy head of the International Economic Division of the Minister of Finance, is also directly responsible for all foreign aid programmes, does a good deal of the Minister's work while he is away, and serves on many interdepartmental committees. O.K. Ghosh, who is a comparatively junior civil servant, handles all the Technical Assistance operations, but is in addition advisor to the Home Ministry on States' problems, to the States Ministry on States' economic problems, acts as liaison officer with the Reserve Bank, and has so many odd jobs to do that it is a miracle that he succeeds in getting any one of them done at all. In any event, Ghosh is now going away for six crucial months, and Bhattacharyya is going to do his work as well as his own.

(c) There is a good deal of interdepartmental jealousy at the working level, and it is not uncommon for one Ministry to say to a representative of a donor country: "Will you please go to the Ministry of Blank and tell them to co-operate with us?" As a result of this, round table meetings rarely achieve anything.

(d) The capital development side of the Colombo Plan is tied in very closely with political considerations and is susceptible to all kinds of political pressures and delays. You will be familiar with this from the history of the Bombay State Transport Commission.

(e) The machinery whereby the Centre deals with the States is extremely cumbersome. When a request comes in, it may have to be referred to all of the 17 Part A and Part B States, (whose relationship to the Centre is somewhat similar to that of our Provinces) and also to the Commissioners of the 10 Part C States. This all makes for unnecessary delay.

(f) There is an acute shortage of the basic routine tools of administration: typewriters, stenographers, stationery, etc. It is a common thing to receive a carbon instead of an original letter and matters are handled in a way which to us seems extraordinarily slipshod.

4. Having said all this, one must, of course, add that the overriding consideration is that the Colombo Plan should be implemented in such a way that the Canadian public and parliament and the Indian public and parliament are satisfied that it is being mutually beneficial. But this does not mean that the standards by which the beneficence will be judged are necessarily the same in both countries. In India one has to work twice as hard to avoid slipping backward, let alone making progress. The progress will be made, but it will not be made in terms of Western ideas of time schedules and efficiency. It will be made at the Indians' own pace and we should face the fact that we may have to find, at the end of each fiscal year, devices for holding over unspent funds, as we did in the fiscal year 1951-52; that we shall encounter, at all times, all sorts of disheartening delays, misunderstandings, bunglings and inefficiencies. But the will, and the goodwill, are there; how they are exercised is a matter for the Indians to determine. The above views would, I feel certain, be concurred in by Mr. Cavell.

5. I now come to the suggestions contained in your letter under reference. We should be able to do a good deal more if we received fuller documentation. The only information which we have received regarding the 1952-53 capital development aspect of the Colombo Plan is contained in the very valuable minutes of meetings of the Colombo Group, of which three copies have reached us this year. We were not aware that the only official channel of communication for the Colombo Plan was through the Indian High Commissioner in Ottawa. We did not know until we read paragraph 2(a) of your despatch under reference, that Mr. Cavell was going to take an annual trip to this area. We have not received, with one exception, the correspondence which passed between the Department and Mr. Saksena, so that when we go to see Bhattacharyya or Ghosh, we are sometimes placed in the position of having to ask them if they have any knowledge of our Government's intentions.

6. I should now like to comment on the practical proposals contained in your letter under reference:

Paragraph 2(a): We agree that a good deal of preparatory work could be done through informal discussions in advance of Mr. Cavell's visit. However, in order to enable us to conduct such discussions, we should need to be kept fully informed, and to receive copies of all relevant correspondence.

Paragraph 2(b): I agree entirely. The difficulty here has been that since the channel to Saksena<sup>33</sup> was established, Bhattacharyya has not been letting us have copies of the correspondence initiated by his Department with Saksena. You will recall that last year this used to be the case. We think it would be useful for us to have access to this correspondence and have suggested it informally.

Paragraph 2(c): Here again I think that if we had the complete story we should be able to be of more assistance to you in making approaches of the kind which you suggest.

We should add that the coordination meetings which you mentioned in your paragraph 3 take place only in respect of technical assistance and not of economic development. We think it extremely unlikely that the Indian authorities would consent to meetings in the latter field since it would put them in the position of offering their projects on an open market instead of bringing them to the attention of the specific country which they think may be in a position to fill their needs. In any case, we do not think that complicated, large, and individual projects could be profitably discussed at joint meetings.

7. Summing up, I would say that we should be very glad to undertake the types of liaison indicated in your paragraph 2(a), 2(b) and 2(c). In order to do this, however, we should have to have more, and more frequent, documentation from Ottawa. We should, in fact, to be as useful to you as possible, receive copies of all correspondence between the Indian authorities and Saksena. This, we think, can be arranged here, provided you would also suggest it to Saksena. Bhattacharyya has already indicated his willingness to comply.

8. With the full documentation in our possession, we should, I think, be able to carry out all the types of formal and informal consultation which you suggest. We ought also to visit projects ourselves, in order to give you the benefit of a second point of view. I should emphasize once again, however, that liaison is not by any means the full story, and that so long as India remains India, we must expect the delays and frustrations due to the political and administrative difficulties outlined in paragraph 4 of this despatch.

9. I am reporting in a separate despatch on an interview which we had earlier this week with Bhattacharyya.

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

COLOMBO PLAN: 1951-52 PROGRAMME

You will recall that the Order-in-Council covering the procedure for carrying over the unexpended balance for last year's Colombo Plan vote provides that all contracts entered into by the Canadian Commercial Corporation shall be "individually approved on behalf of the Government of Canada" and that such contracts shall not be approved on behalf of Canada

"except with the concurrence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Finance."

2. Our experience in operating under this Order-in-Council shows that while the procedure is quite reasonable for large-sized package contracts it is administratively impractical, or at least very slow and cumbersome, when applied to the purchase of miscellaneous items required for a particular project. We have in mind particularly the agricultural machinery and related equipment which Canada is supplying as its share in the establishment of the joint Australian-New-Zealand-Canadian experimental livestock farm in Pakistan. The nature of our contribution is such that the individual contracts are bound to be numerous while there are so many people involved and so many procedural steps required that it is quite impossible to place all the orders at the one time unless all procurement is held up until the last specification is approved. The implementation of this whole project has been delayed so long that we are anxious to do everything we can to expedite matters, especially insofar as Canada is concerned, because the delay so far has been mostly on our part.

3. In order that the CCC may go ahead with procurement of individual items as they are ready without any unnecessary delay, I wonder if you would be prepared to give your blanket authorization now for the purchase of machinery and equipment for the Thal Livestock Farm as approved by the officials directly concerned with the operations of the Colombo Plan, provided the total expenditure on all such equipment and machinery is within the $200,000 allocation approved by the Government.<sup>34</sup>

4. The Legal Division has been consulted on this proposal and agrees that such a delegation of authority would be perfectly legal.

COLOMBO PLAN: FUTURE CONTRIBUTIONS

Following for the Minister, Begins: We have been discussing with Finance officials the most suitable method of financing future Canadian contributions to the Colombo Plan. Following is the text of a draft memorandum to Cabinet for submission on Thursday, which reflects our official discussions and which we understand has been cleared in principle with Mr. Abbott although he has not yet approved the text. We shall let you have our comments on Monday. Text begins:

"I have been giving some consideration to the unsatisfactory financial situation which has arisen by making provision for our contribution under the Colombo Plan by means of annual Parliamentary Votes.

"So far, Parliament has voted $25 million for capital assistance under the Colombo Plan for each of the fiscal years 1951-52 and 1952-53. As the first of these fiscal years drew to a close, it became apparent that only $10 million out of the $25 million voted would be actually spent by March 31, 1952. In the circumstances, a special procedure was adopted and an Order-in-Council passed so that the unspent funds would continue to be available to make expenditures against projects agreed on with recipient governments in respect of the first contribution of $25 million. While the procedure adopted can be supported legally and technically, it is open to objection on principle and may draw criticism. What this procedure involved was transferring the unspent funds from the Vote to the recipient governments, who agreed in advance to deposit them with the Canadian Commercial Corporation and to spend them only on projects approved by the Canadian Government. It would be desirable to avoid having to justify the repeated use of such a procedure. The situation which it covered last year has arisen again this year. It now appears probable that under $10 million from the current Vote of $25 million will have been actually paid out by next March 31. While the unspent money could, of course, be allowed to lapse, this alternative may also raise difficulties. It might be regarded as a reflection on Canadian support for Colombo Plan programmes because the sum voted by Parliament tends to be regarded publicly both here and abroad as a firm contribution. Difficulties might also arise if Parliament were asked to revote the unspent sum of about $15 million together with a new annual vote of $25 million for the fiscal year 1953-54. This would mean that a figure of $40 million for the Colombo Plan would have to be included in next year's estimates.

"In view of these difficulties and after consultation with my Colleagues, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I would like to raise for discussion the proposal that our contributions under the Colombo Plan should be put on a statutory basis.

"The purpose of the proposed legislation could be to allow for the more orderly planning of programmes and the more effective use of Canadian contributions to the Colombo Plan. Experience gained since the six year Colombo Plan period started on July 1, 1951, indicates that the present method of providing for the Canadian contribution by annual appropriations gives rise to avoidable risks of waste and misdirected effort. These risks arise because the most useful projects usually require considerable detailed preparatory work and planning while their actual execution and financing covers a period of several years. This is true of such projects as the cement plant and the geological survey which we are undertaking with Pakistan, and it is also true of hydro electric projects, which we may expect to undertake in the future. In participating in such projects, it is obviously desirable to reach a firm agreement at the outset with the recipient government covering all aspects of the proposed project including particularly the division between external and local costs. It is difficult, however, to secure an appropriate undertaking from the receiving country to meet local expenditures for materials and labour in accordance with the principle of self-help, when no authority exists for the contributing country to meet, on its part, external costs which will come into the course of payment in subsequent fiscal years. Furthermore, in the absence of such authority receiving governments aware that unspent funds may lapse, are under pressure to put forward proposals which may not be soundly conceived or which may require considerably more working up before they can be considered seriously. This kind of difficulty would be resolved to a large extent by the proposed legislation which would also help to avoid the possibility, already referred to, of public misunderstanding in Canada or in receiving countries which might arise in the event that a substantial part of our total contribution voted by Parliament for 1952-53 were to lapse.

“In the early stages of programmes expenditures tend to be small. In this connection it is estimated that the additional cash required during the forthcoming fiscal year will be in the order of $10 million which is, of course, substantially less than the $25 million provided for each of the two preceding fiscal years. The first Vote of $25 million is now practically wholly committed although only about $10 million has been actually paid out. From the current Vote of $25 million only slightly over $5 million has been spent up to the present and it is anticipated under the proposed legislation that about $15 million which would ordinarily lapse at the end of the present fiscal year will be available to meet cash requirements during the forthcoming fiscal year. Thus, if it is decided to provide another $25 million next year, the actual new cash requirement to be included in the estimates for 1953-54 need not be more than about $10 million, if this proposal for a statutory appropriation is adopted.

“The proposed legislation, consisting of three or four sections, would:

(a) authorize the Secretary of State for External Affairs, with the approval of the Governor in Council, to enter into economic development agreements up to July 1, 1957, with governments of countries in South and South East Asia for the provision of grants and loans for development projects and for technical assistance up to an amount of $...million in addition to the unspent balance in Vote 114 for fiscal year 1952-53;

(b) authorize the Minister of Finance to transfer to a special account in the Consolidated Revenue Fund the unspent balance from Vote 114;

(c) authorize the Minister of Finance to make payments, during the current and subsequent fiscal years, for economic development projects and technical assistance agreed upon by the Secretary of State for External Affairs with the approval of the Governor in Council, up to $...million out of unappropriated monies in the Consolidated Revenue Fund and out of the balance transferred to the special account in accordance with (b) above; and

(d) provide for a report on activities under this Act to be presented annually to Parliament by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Minister of Finance"

COLOMBO PLAN: FUTURE CANADIAN CONTRIBUTIONS

Reference: My teletype No. 460 of November 8.

Following for the Minister from Wilgress, Begins: We understand that while Mr. Abbott fully appreciates the practical advantages from a financing and programming point of view, of placing our Colombo Plan contribution on a statutory basis, he feels sure that Ministers will wish to give due weight to the domestic political implications of such a move at this time. It is for this reason that the memorandum to the Cabinet is being drafted in terms of a submission for consideration by Ministers rather than a positive recommendation. You will have observed, however, that the present draft (most of which was done by Finance officials) is strongly slanted towards legislation and if approved by Mr. Abbott, substantially in its present form, comes close to being a recommendation. We understand further that Mr. Abbott, who will not be at Thursday's Cabinet meeting, intends to write to the Prime Minister expressing his own preference for legislation over the annual vote procedure.

2. In our view, legislation as outlined in paragraph 5 of the draft memorandum, should provide a satisfactory basis for operating the Colombo Plan. It would allow for long-term planning, would avoid difficulties of lapsing Votes and would not add to the budget burden for next year. At the same time, it should have a good political effect, especially in the Colombo Plan area, in that it will constitute a commitment by the Government to continued participation in the Plan.

3. If you agree that a memorandum along the lines of the present draft should be submitted to the Cabinet on Thursday, it might be helpful if you were to have a word by telephone with the Prime Minister to let him know your preference for legislation. You may wish, at the same time, to indicate to the Prime Minister the figure which you consider appropriate for the lump sum to be authorized by the legislation. You will note that it is being left blank in the memorandum to the Cabinet. We understand that Mr. Abbott is not prepared to suggest a figure and thinks that Ministers may decide the principle at this week's Cabinet meeting without settling upon an amount. If the decision were in favour of legislation, a reference to the Government's intention could be mentioned in the Speech from the Throne.

4. Even though a final decision on the amount will probably not be taken on Thursday, there may be some discussion on the order of magnitude envisaged and you may, therefore, think it desirable for the Prime Minister to know your views. Our own feeling is that it would be reasonable to calculate the total on the basis of our first two annual contributions, that is, to provide for $100 million over the four remaining years. It seems to us that any lower figure might be interpreted as an intention to reduce our scale of assistance below that which we planned at the beginning and that such an impression would be unfortunate. On the other hand, Finance points out that the Government is being beset with numerous domestic claims for assistance, many of which will have to be rejected and that resentment can be expected from these quarters if as much as $100 million is authorized for Colombo Plan aid.

5. You will probably not wish to discuss this matter with the Prime Minister until after Mr. Abbott has informed him of the proposal and conveyed his own views. This will probably not be before Wednesday.

6. Will you please let me know what action you take in this matter. Ends.

Following for Wilgress from the Minister, would you please send the following message to the Prime Minister, Begins: I understand Mr. Abbott is taking up with you and other Ministers possibility of legislation to put our Colombo Plan contribution on a statutory basis. I am myself very much in favour of this and hope that it may be possible. Insofar as the amount is concerned, my own feeling is that it would be reasonable to calculate the total on the basis of our first two annual contributions, that is to provide for $100 million over the four remaining years. I think that our contribution at the rate of $25 million a year is now understood and accepted in the country and that any reduction in this amount might be difficult to justify. ## COLOMBO PLAN

Following for the Minister:

At the meeting on Wednesday, Cabinet considered the proposal that our participation in the Colombo Plan should be put on a statutory basis. The reactions to the proposal were generally unfavourable, primarily on the basis of domestic political considerations.

2. As an alternative Cabinet instructed the Department of Finance in consultation with other departments to investigate the feasibility of:

(a) Establishing a special account for our Colombo Plan contributions in such a form that any moneys in the account would be available until spent and would not lapse at the end of a fiscal year;

(b) Carrying over into that special account any unspent funds (which may amount to some $15 million) from the current appropriation;

(c) Appropriating a further $25 million to be added to this account in the coming fiscal year.

3. Such a special account would remain open to receive any further appropriations in subsequent years.

4. The Minister of Finance will report to Cabinet on Monday that this course would be feasible and the likelihood is that Cabinet will then give its approval to it.

5. I should be grateful if you could let me have your reaction to this proposal in order that Cabinet may be informed of our views at the Monday morning meeting.

6. Although the alternative course does not seem to us to be as advantageous as the original proposal, we regard it as preferable to the existing arrangements. It would at least ensure that funds would not lapse at the end of each year and it would make possible some advance planning inasmuch as forward commitments could be made up to the amount in the special account at any particular time.

7. Apart from any defects which the proposed course may have from an administrative and planning point of view, it is also open to the criticism that it can be interpreted as "legislation by appropriation". A statute, although it might have attracted considerable attention (which might be regarded as undesirable from some points of view), would seem to be more in accord with established parliamentary procedures.

8. I have discussed the situation with Pickersgill and he has assured me that the opposition in Cabinet to the original proposal was very strong and that it would stand little, if any, chance if it were to be revived at the Monday meeting.

9. In these circumstances you may wish to go along with the alternative suggestion as representing at least an improvement on present arrangements.

COLOMBO PLAN; FUTURE CONTRIBUTIONS

29. The Minister of Finance, referring to discussion at the meeting of November 13th, said it appeared that the best way of handling Canadian contributions under the Colombo Plan would be to have an arrangement similar to that made for contributions to the fund for the development of the National Capital.

30. The Cabinet approved the recommendation of the Minister of Finance and agreed that an item be included in the Further Supplementary Estimates for 1952-53 to transfer to a special account in the Consolidated Revenue Fund the unexpended balance of the Canadian contribution to the Colombo Plan for the fiscal year 1952-53, and that an item be inserted in the Estimates to place in the same special account an amount of $25 million as the Canadian contribution under the Plan for the fiscal year 1953-54; the items to be so drawn that the amounts placed in the Account would be available for use after the end of the fiscal year for which they were appropriated.

COLOMBO PLAN

Draft Instructions to Canadian Delegation to Meeting of Consultative Committee in Karachi, March 24, 1952,
and to preliminary meeting of officials

The following instructions relate to the items in the proposed Agenda, as circulated by the Pakistan Government by telegram No. 623 of February 6, 1952.

Identical letter sent to: Washington 376, New Delhi 148, Canberra 77, Wellington 76, Colombo 16, Karachi 79.

Preparation of Annual Report

2. The preparation of periodic reports is the most important task of the Consultative Committee. The circulation of these reports is an important means of keeping people everywhere informed of the Colombo Plan and interested in its success; the preparation of the reports provides a valuable stimulus to the implementation of the Plan itself.

3. The meeting at Karachi will be preparing the first comprehensive report since the original "Colombo Plan" of September-October 1950. It will therefore set a pattern for the periodic reports to follow. Accordingly, emphasis should be laid on its interim character. It should be unpretentious and should not attempt to duplicate the original document in form or substance. It should seek to give to readers in every participating country a ready means of finding out what their own country is doing, and what others are doing. In particular, it should be made clear what the United States is doing.

4. These objectives can probably be best attained if the bulk of the report consists of individual chapters (or sections) describing the work of individual countries, of the International Bank and of the Bureau for Technical Cooperation, with a pithy, readable summary and general review in the introduction or the conclusion. However, while the Delegation should press for a report of this general type, its substance is more important than its form, and the Delegation may accept a report in any form that is satisfactory to itself and other Delegations.

5. The Delegation should beware of two dangers. First, the Report should not be over-optimistic about the future of the Plan or of the under-developed countries participating; over-optimism would lead to disappointment. Second, the Report must not, at any point, involve financial commitments for Canada beyond the fiscal year 1952/53, or beyond the amounts for which the government is now prepared to make recommendations to Parliament in connection with the Colombo Plan for that year: viz, $25 millions for economic assistance and $400,000 for technical assistance.

Role of the International Bank

6. It is most desirable that the Bank should be represented at meetings of the Committee and that there should be general, constructive discussions of its past and possible future activities. On the other hand, the Committee is not the proper forum for a general appraisal of the merits of the Bank, of its policies, or of its personnel. The proper forums for such appraisals are the annual meetings of the Governors of the Bank and the regular meetings of its Executive Board.

7. It seems likely that Pakistan will launch some sort of attack on the Bank in the Committee, together with detailed criticisms of its policies and personnel. The Canadian Delegation should not be drawn into any such discussions and should try to head them off by pointing out that they belong in other forums.

Future Organization for Continuing Consultation

8. It is assumed that this item refers primarily to the establishment of a continuing secretariat concerned with economic (capital) assistance.

9. A small continuing secretariat may prove useful as a centre for interchange of information, as a nucleus for the preparation of periodic reports, as a source of guidance for underdeveloped countries in preparing programmes and compiling statistics, and possibly for other purposes. If other countries, including the United States, accept proposals for a modest secretariat for such purposes as these the Canadian Delegation may do so.

10. However, the Delegation should use its best efforts to be sure that the secretariat is kept small. Further, the secretariat should, if at all possible, be set up as an adjunct of the Bureau for Technical Cooperation, rather than an entirely separate and independent international organization. It seems most desirable that, whether or not the new body is formally associated with the old, they should be set up side by side and with the same Director. It is questionable, however, whether the Council for Technical Cooperation in Colombo should become responsible for matters relating to economic assistance, because of the different type of work involved.

11. The most appropriate and effective way of securing coordination, not merely between the activities of the countries contributing under the Colombo Plan but also with the various U.N. agencies in the field, would be the establishment of appropriate arrangements in the national capital of each recipient country. The Canadian Delegation should promote this sort of coordination. However, it should recall that the Canadian Delegation to the last meeting of the Consultative Committee (in Colombo in February, 1951) received similar instructions but found that at least one Asian country was vigorously opposed to any sort of coordination in its national capital. No such coordination can be useful without the cooperation of the recipient countries concerned, and the Delegation should not try to bring any pressure on any of those countries. Nevertheless, there may well have been some change in their positions since last year, and the Delegation should explore the ground again.

Liaison with ECAFE

12. Under this item a proposal may be made that a representative of ECAFE should attend meetings of the Committee. The Delegation should scrutinize this proposal carefully.

13. The policy of the Canadian Government is that work under the Colombo Plan should be carried on in close collaboration and consultation with the U.N. agencies concerned; on this ground representation from ECAFE might seem desirable. On the other hand, there is a danger that, if ECAFE was represented, there would be a demand for representation from a large number of other U.N. agencies and this might prove embarrassing to the Committee. (The International Bank appears to be in a special position vis-à-vis the Colombo Plan.) Moreover Colombo Plan activities are so different in nature from those of ECAFE that it is difficult to see what useful purpose would be served by liaison at the policy-making level.

14. The Canadian Delegation should be guided by these considerations and by any others that may emerge from Mr. Cavell's visit to the recent ECAFE meeting in Rangoon. In any event, the Delegation should not support ECAFE representation in the Committee against the opposition of any major Asian or non-Asian member of the Committee.

15. While there may be serious objection to ECAFE representation in the policy-making organ of the Colombo Plan (i.e. the Consultative Committee), there would appear to be a good deal to be said for coordination on the secretariat level. Should the Committee decide to establish a small continuing secretariat, the Delegation might explore with others the usefulness of coordination between the ECAFE and the Colombo Plan secretariats in relation to such matters as guidance to under-developed countries in preparing programmes and compiling statistics.

Colombo Plan Exhibition

16. No instructions required.

Informal Participation of non-Commonwealth Governments in Colombo Plan

17. The Canadian position is the same as it was at the last meeting of the Committee: if it is proposed that countries such as France and the Netherlands should take some part in the work of the Committee the Canadian Delegation should raise no objections; but such countries should only be included with the agreement of the Asian countries.

Other Business

18. If any other question of importance appears on the Agenda, the Delegation should seek instructions from Ottawa.

There will be a preliminary meeting of officials in Karachi beginning March 10 and the Consultative Committee itself will commence its meeting on March 24. It is expected that that Consultative Committee meeting will last one week. The Canadian Delegation will be composed as follows:

Alternate Representative

Mr. K.P. Kirkwood, Canadian High Commissioner in Karachi

Members of the Delegation

Mr. G.D. Mallory, Department of Trade and Commerce

Mr. A.P. Bissonnet, Commercial Secretary, Karachi

Mr. H.H. Wright, Department of Finance

Mr. G.S. Murray, Office of the Canadian High Commissioner, Karachi

The member countries of the Consultative Committee, all of whom will be represented at the Karachi meeting, are: Australia, Burma, Cambodia, Canada, Ceylon, India, Laos, New Zealand, Pakistan, United Kingdom, United States and Viet Nam. The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development has also been invited to participate in the meeting and the governments of countries in the area, which have been invited to join the Colombo Plan and which have not yet come to a decision, have been invited to send observers. These countries are: Indonesia, Thailand and the Philippines. A press release issued from the Prime Minister's Office on February 20 announced the composition of the Canadian Delegation to the Consultative Committee meeting. The same release announced the Government's intention to seek parliamentary approval for contributions in 1952/53 of $25 million for capital assistance and $400,000 for technical assistance under the Colombo Plan.

CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEE

Following from the delegation, Begins: Summary of disposal of agenda items follows. All items have been dealt with except the final draft annual report. We shall report on this later.

2. Discussion on role of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development was not, repeat not, troublesome. Pakistan's views were presented but it was apparent that other Asian members were not, repeat not, prepared to support them. There was general agreement that the Consultative Committee was not, repeat not, the appropriate forum for such discussions.

3. Discussion on continuing consultation was confined to the narrow issue of establishing small secretariat. Asians took the view that although there might be need for such secretariat there was not, repeat not, sufficient need to warrant action at this time. With reference to paragraph 11 of our instructions, it appears clear that further exploratory informal discussions are the best way to secure the necessary support for coordination in national capitals. In the course of such discussions we have ascertained that the United States representative believes that it is only possible to achieve such coordination through informal arrangements in capitals concerned.

4. After discussion it was agreed that invitation be extended to the Secretary-General, ECAFE, or his representative to attend as observer at the meeting of the Consultative Committee. No, repeat no, reply to this invitation has been received to date. United Nations Technical Assistance Board also asked to be associated in the same manner. Consensus of the meeting was that the present arrangement for the Liaison Bureau in Colombo and for coordination in national capitals should not, repeat not, be expanded.

5. There was a brief appropriate reference to the Colombo Exhibition. However, Ceylon has introduced item on "cultural cooperation" suggesting that small part of contributions to recipient countries should be devoted to bringing students from outside to study the culture and civilization of countries within the area. As an idea we see no, repeat no, objection to this proposal but have doubts about its implementation. Other Asians did not, repeat not, favour the suggestion. United Kingdom suggested that there might be more appropriate organization than the Colombo Plan for implementing the proposal. Any comments you may have on it will be appreciated since we understand the Ceylonese will press the proposal in Ministerial meeting and possibly at policy session of the Council.

6. Discussion on technical cooperation avoided reference to continuation of the scheme, largely as a result of our efforts behind the scene. We are reporting by separate telegram on the prevailing attitudes of various delegations. Ends.

FOURTH MEETING OF THE CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEE

Reference: My Air Telegram No. 1 of March 19, 1952.

The delegation to the Consultative Committee has prepared a report on the Fourth Meeting held at Karachi from March 10 to March 28 inclusive. A copy of this report is enclosed. The report contains comments on each of the items discussed at the meeting of Ministers. Copies of the Annual Report,† Agenda,† prepared statements made by the Canadian delegate,† Press Communiqué,† minutes of the Ministerial meeting,† and a review of the officials' meeting† are also enclosed. Under separate cover I shall send by sea bag additional copies of the Annual Report, the Minutes of all the sessions and the background papers on which the Report is based.

2. The delegation has already reported in detail on several of the matters discussed at the recent meeting:

(a) In our telegram No. 35 of March 10<sup>36</sup> we mentioned that the additional item on "Technical Assistance" had been placed on the Agenda. This item would have afforded the opportunity for delegates to discuss the continuation of the Technical Assistance Scheme, in particular, the United Kingdom proposal that it be made co-extensive with the Colombo programme for economic development. It was, however, the opinion of several delegations, including the Canadian delegation that the matter could more appropriately be discussed at the Policy Session of the Council for Technical Co-operation, which was due to meet in the first week of April. As a result of efforts behind the scenes, at the meeting of Ministers it was generally agreed that the question of continuation of the Technical Co-operation Scheme should be discussed at, and decided by, the forthcoming Meeting of the Council (our telegram No. 45 of March 22<sup>37</sup> refers).

(b) In our Air Telegram No. 1 of March 19 we gave a summary of the disposal of the various Agenda items at the Meeting of Officials. As may be seen from the delegation's report, there was little new added to the discussion of these items at the Meeting of Ministers.

3. Useful discussions were held with representatives of Australia, New Zealand, Pakistan, the United Kingdom and the United States about co-ordination at national capitals. There seemed to be general agreement that such co-ordination was necessary and would be of value. Arrangements were initiated for holding regular meetings in Karachi as follows:

(a) Meetings of local representatives of Australia, Canada, New Zealand, Pakistan and the United States to discuss the progress of programmes for economic development; and

(b) Meetings of local representatives of Australia, Canada, Pakistan and the United Kingdom to discuss the progress of the programme for technical cooperation. (It was anticipated that this group would be expanded to include representatives of the United States and the United Nations Technical Assistance Board.)

These meetings will be of an informal nature but will be held regularly once a month. We shall be reporting on them more fully at a later date. In discussing this matter the delegation kept in mind the points made in the exchange of telegrams on this subject between New Delhi and Ottawa, with particular reference to your telegram No. 50 of March 14.<sup>38</sup> instructions the Canadian delegation welcomed this invitation. The Indian delegate stated that, in order to lighten the burden on officials at the preliminary meeting and the work of the secretariat, his Government proposed to take steps well in advance of the meeting to ensure that the documentation was completed. He made the useful suggestion that officials of the Indian Government might correspond with officials of other governments who had taken part in the Karachi meeting. By this pooling of experience, it might be possible to overcome many of the difficulties. In particular, the heavy burden on the drafting committees might be eased. The Indian delegate said that his Government would welcome any suggestions which other Members might wish to offer about the organization of the work for the next meeting.

5. The local press has throughout the period of the meeting devoted considerable space to Colombo Plan matters. At the beginning of the meeting of Ministers, a special supplement was included in Dawn with photographs of the leaders of the delegations and special articles on the various aspects of the Plan. The reports on the proceedings in the conference room have been largely speculative, although it was obvious that some information leaks of an innocuous nature had occurred. Before the sessions began there was speculation on whether Japan would be admitted to the Colombo Plan. These reports seemed to have originated in London. As far as we know, none of the representatives at the meeting raised the matter of Japan's participation in the Plan. This is not to say that the question of Japan's admission might not be raised at future meetings,

6. The Press Information Department has released the complete text (copy of which is enclosed) of the closing remarks made by the Chairman, Mr. Fazlur Rahman, Minister for Commerce, Education and Economic Affairs. Mr. Wright discussed this statement with Mr. M. Ismail, Deputy Secretary of the Ministry of Economic Affairs. Mr. Ismail maintained that the remarks should be taken in the "family spirit" in which they were delivered. In particular, contributing countries should not read too much into the suggestion that "there is at once the right and obligation for the giver to give and for the receiver to receive." This notion, he added, should be considered in the context of the friendly atmosphere in which Mr. Fazlur Rahman's remarks were made.

7. Mr. McIlraith has been provided with a copy of the report prepared by the delegation.

Rapport de la réunion du Comité consultatif

Report of Meeting of Consultative Committee

[Karachi, n.d.]

Following the officials' meeting held between March 10 and March 21, the meeting at Ministerial level was in session from March 24 to March 28, 1952. Although some representatives were initially inclined to use the conference table as a platform for propaganda speeches, the majority confined themselves to the business in hand and made comment only when the position of the government concerned required clarification. The atmosphere of the meetings was most cordial and conducive to full understanding and co-operation.

Annual Report

2. The Report is longer and more detailed than might have been desirable. The real emphasis, however, is on the progress which has been achieved during the first year of the Plan. At an early stage in the officials' meeting the decision was taken to refrain from making detailed forecasts about the terms of trade of the countries of the area and about the resources available for development projects under the Plan. At the same time the view was stressed that the Report should avoid repetition, as far as possible, of material which had appeared in the first report on the Colombo Plan.

3. The two opening chapters and the final chapter comprise the general sections of the Report; and had to be carefully considered by the officials (including members of the Canadian delegation) responsible for the draft report. As you will appreciate, these chapters represent a compromise between several widely divergent views, stemming in the main from the difference in approach between the recipient and the contributing countries. The general chapters, although vague in many respects, contain nothing which can be construed as committing Member Governments to courses of action not hitherto agreed upon. The general impression is that the chapters represent the best possible balance of viewpoint of the various member countries.

4. The most informative chapters are those describing the progress which has been achieved by the countries in the area — that is, Chapters III to VIII inclusive. The general conclusion is that commendable progress has been achieved and that the Colombo Plan has acted as a spur to the implementation of the plans for economic development in the area. In these chapters statistical tables have been kept to a minimum but the interested reader can refer to them among the appendices to the report. Chapter IX, entitled "Contributions to the Economic Development of South and South East Asia", describes briefly the contributions of the various countries outside the area, including the United States, and refers to the contributions made by India and Pakistan to technical assistance within the area. The objective of giving the readers in every participating country "a ready means of finding out what their own country is doing and what others are doing" was kept in view.

5. The report is not over optimistic about the future of the Plan or of the under-developed countries participating; and it does not, at any point, involve financial commitments for Canada beyond the fiscal year 1952-53, or beyond the amounts for which the Government is now prepared to make recommendations to Parliament in connection with the Colombo Plan for that year.

Technical Assistance

6. As previously reported, at the opening session of the officials' meeting an item on "Technical Assistance" was added to the agenda. The Canadian delegation contributed to the efforts to confine the discussion at the Consultative Committee on this item to general remarks about the progress of the Technical Co-operation Scheme. It was apparent that several delegations were prepared and anxious to discuss the continuation of this scheme and to take steps to make it co-extensive with the Colombo Plan for economic development. The Canadian position was discussed informally with the delegations of Australia, India, Pakistan, New Zealand and the United Kingdom. A report on these conversations was made by telegram. It was generally agreed that the forthcoming policy session at Colombo of the Council for Technical Co-operation was the appropriate forum for discussion and decision on points of substance.

7. At the Ministerial meeting, discussion on the continuation of the Technical Co-operation Scheme was introduced by the Chairman. Several delegations, including Australia, Burma, India, New Zealand, Pakistan and the United Kingdom indicated support in principle for the proposal. The sense of the meeting, however, was that, although there seemed to be general agreement about the continuation of the Scheme, the matter would be fully discussed by and decided by the Council. The delegation took no steps at the formal meetings to explain the Canadian position.

Role of the International Bank

8. At the meeting of officials Pakistan attempted to introduce discussion on the policies and procedures of the International Bank. It immediately became obvious that Pakistan would obtain no support from countries either in or outside the area. The consensus of the meeting was that this item had been placed on the Agenda to enable the Bank's representative to review its operations in the region and not to discuss policy matters relating to the Bank.

9. At the meeting of Ministers, the representative of the International Bank gave a helpful explanation of the role of the Bank in rendering economic aid to countries in South and South East Asia. His list of items of assistance already given included the announcement that the railway loan of about $27,000,000 to Pakistan had been finalized. The Pakistan representative joined with other Asian members in expressing what appeared to be sincere appreciation of the efforts being made by the Bank. It seems likely that the discussion of this item at the Consultative Committee has served the useful purpose of clarifying the Bank's position and of satisfying Pakistani representatives that Pakistan was not being discriminated against.

Future Organization for Continuing Consultation

10. The discussion of this item was confined narrowly to the question of setting up a permanent secretariat. The Asian countries, India and Pakistan in particular, expressed doubt that the need for such a secretariat was sufficient to warrant its establishment at this time. The representative of India made the helpful suggestion that the host country for subsequent meetings should be permitted to seek assistance through correspondence with officials who had participated in the previous meeting. At the officials' meeting the Canadian representative indicated that, if there was general agreement with the proposal, he could see no objection to setting up a small secretariat as an adjunct to the Bureau and, in any case, under the same director. Other delegations supported this view; but since the consensus of the meeting was against the proposal for a secretariat, the question was left open for future consideration.

11. Regarding co-ordination at national capitals, as a result of informal discussions, arrangements were initiated for regular meetings on economic assistance to Pakistan to be held in Karachi by representatives of Pakistan, of countries contributing under the Colombo Plan and of the United States; and for separate meetings of representatives of Australia, Canada, Pakistan and the United Kingdom to be held regularly to discuss the progress of the Technical Co-operation Scheme. It was suggested that after a short trial the latter group might be expanded to include representatives of the United Nations Technical Assistance Board and the United States. A detailed report on these developments is being submitted separately.

Colombo Exhibition

12. Apart from a number of short statements congratulating the Government of Ceylon, there was no discussion on this item.

Cultural Co-operation

13. The representative of Ceylon added this item to the Agenda. His proposal was that a small portion of each country's contribution to the Technical Cooperation Scheme should be set aside to facilitate an exchange of students of cultural subjects. This proposal found little favour and was therefore dropped. It was suggested that other organizations were better suited for dealing with cultural exchanges, such as UNESCO, of this kind; and that in any event a form of cultural exchange resulted from the ordinary operation of the Technical Co-operation Scheme.

Liaison with E.C.A.F.E.

14. At the officials' meeting the decision was taken to invite the executive secretary of E.C.A.F.E., or his representative, to attend the meeting of the Consultative Committee as an observer. The Executive Secretary attended the Ministerial meeting and made a statement on the role of ECAFE in the region.

15. A similar invitation was solicited by Mr. David Owen, Chairman of the United Nations Technical Assistance Board. The officials' meeting decided that present arrangements with T.A.B. should not be expanded. It was suggested, moreover, that the representative of ECAFE could provide the liaison with the United Nations and its specialized agencies. In this regard the Executive Secretary of ECAFE mentioned the keen interest taken by Mr. David Owen in the activities under the Colombo Plan; and stated that a permanent liaison officer from T.A.B. would take up his duties on April 6 in Colombo, where he would work closely with the Bureau.

Membership

16. Burma and Nepal attended this Meeting of the Consultative Committee as new members. Representatives from Cambodia and Viet Nam were also present; as were observers from Indonesia, Philippines and Thailand. Laos, although a member, was not represented. There was no discussion, informal or otherwise, on whether other countries outside the area, notably France and the Netherlands, should be associated with the work of the Consultative Committee.

Publicity

17. At the officials' meeting it was agreed that there would be no publicity. At the Ministerial meeting the decision was taken to issue short daily bulletins through the Secretariat; and a Press Committee (including Canada) was established to draft the press communique issued at the end of the meeting. Nevertheless, throughout the period of the meetings there was ample evidence in the local press of leakages about proceedings at the conference table. These press leaks were, generally speaking, of an innocuous nature.

LETTER No. V-10

Ottawa, January 31, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE COLOMBO PROGRAMME FOR TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION AND THE TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAMMES OF THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

When the Government gave its final approval to the Canadian contribution to the United Nations Expanded Programme, and to the Colombo Technical Co-operation Programme, in June 1950, the Prime Minister was most explicit about the relationship which should be established between the two programmes. In his opinion it was important to ensure that there be no duplication between the United Nations Programme and the one agreed to at Sydney and that Canadian efforts be directed towards integrating the two programmes to as large an extent as possible. It was his opinion that the most satisfactory arrangement might be to have both programmes handled though the same organization. Canadian representatives were instructed to endeavour to have measures taken to ensure that there be no duplication between the work of the Consultative Committee's technical assistance programme and that established by the United Nations and that everything possible be done to merge the two schemes.

2. Earlier, the Secretary of State for External Affairs had assured United Nations officials of our intentions in participating in the Colombo Programme. In February 1950, he wrote to Mr. F.L. McDougall, Special Assistant to the Director-General of the F.A.O., "nothing must be done without the clear understanding as to what is already being done by the United Nations Economic Committee for the area, F.A.O., etc."

3. The Canadian Delegation to the Sydney meetings in May, 1950, had been instructed by the Government to make clear that before considering any contribution to technical assistance for the Commonwealth and non-Commonwealth countries in South and South-East Asia, the Government would wish to have information concerning the way the programme would fit in with United Nations technical assistance.

4. Mr. Pearson thought it necessary to seek the assurance of the Australians about their intentions and Mr. Spender<sup>39</sup> had replied that he was urging "the greatest possible use of all United Nations agencies in the area and the smallest practicable Commonwealth organization, which we envisage would cease to function at an early date when participation by other countries was achieved."

5. In his report on the meetings of the Standing Committee on Technical Co-operation which met in Colombo in August 1950, prior to the setting up of the Council for Technical Co-operation, the Canadian Representative reported that the United Kingdom and New Zealand representatives were in agreement with him that we would be advised to exercise vigilance against the tendency of Australia and the Asian countries to overlook the fact that aid under the scheme must be only supplemental to aid which might be procured under other schemes, particularly those administered by the United Nations.

Sir Percy Spender, Ambassador of Australia in United States.

6. At the Consultative Committee meeting in Colombo in February 1951 and at the meeting of the Council for Technical Co-operation which followed, the Canadian Delegation stressed the importance the Canadian Government attached to the closest possible co-ordination of the two programmes. The United Kingdom representative appeared to be in tacit agreement. The Indians and Pakistanis, who have always hoped that they could obtain from the Colombo Programme assistance which they maintained they had not been able to obtain from the United Nations, expressed no opinion. The Ceylonese tended to be unaware of the activities of the United Nations. The Australians were entirely preoccupied with their proposed activities in the area under the Colombo Plan to the exclusion of all other considerations.

7. When Mr. Coomaraswamy, President of the Council for Technical Co-operation, spoke to the Interdepartmental Group on Technical Assistance in Ottawa last autumn, he referred to the usefulness of his conversations with United Nations officials and of the need for co-ordination between the two programmes. He added, however, that whereas the Colombo Programme had been designed to supplement United Nations activities in the area, it was proving so successful that it was, in fact, becoming complementary to the United Nations programme.

8. We have been encouraged by the reports we have received of the visits of Mr. Geoffrey Wilson, Director of the Bureau in Colombo, made to New Delhi and Karachi. These reports would seem to indicate that he attaches great importance to co-ordinating Colombo Programme activities with those of the United Nations and other agencies giving technical assistance to South and South-East Asia. We were particularly interested in the specific suggestion he made for consideration by the Council in Colombo to the effect that all requests for experts might, in the first instance, be directed to the United Nations and should regret it very much if the Council did not give sympathetic consideration to proposals of this kind.

9. I attach for your information and guidance the text of a statement of policy on this subject which was approved by the Interdepartmental Group on Technical Assistance at its twenty-second meeting on January 30.

10. You will note that this statement underlines the fact that the Canadian Government considers the Colombo Programme for Technical Co-operation as a temporary supplement to the programmes of the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies. It means that plans for Canadian activities under the Colombo Programme will be drawn up in the light of our opinion that the Colombo Programme and the United Nations Programmes should be merged in a few years. We must at the same time avoid the danger that the existence of the Colombo Programme will result merely in replacing during the next few years technical assistance which the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies would otherwise have given to South and South-East Asia. The essential thing is that technical assistance under the Colombo Programme should supplement United Nations technical assistance; we should not compete with it or replace it. It could, however, provide "a missing component" for a United Nations project.

11. Copies of this letter are being sent to our High Commissioners in New Delhi, Karachi, London, Wellington and Canberra, to the Embassy in Washington and to the Permanent Delegation of Canada to the United Nations, New York.

Statement of Policy

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa, n.d.]

“Approved by the Interdepartmental Group on Technical Assistance at its twenty-second meeting on January 30, 1952.”

The Canadian Government regards the Colombo Programme for Technical Co-operation as a temporary supplement to the technical assistance activities of the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies in an area where the needs are specially urgent. The Canadian Government considers it important, therefore, not only to avoid any duplication or overlapping between the United Nations Programme and the Colombo Programme but also to insure that every effort is directed towards integrating the two programmes to as large an extent as possible.

We have noted with satisfaction the appointment of a United Nations Liaison Officer to the Bureau in Colombo and the steps which governments participating in the Colombo Programme have taken to co-ordinate technical assistance activities at a national level.

Nevertheless, in view of the fact that in our opinion the Colombo Programme and the United Nations Programme should merge in a few years, we would continue to urge:

- 1) The greatest possible use by both recipient and donating countries of all United Nations agencies offering technical assistance to the area;
- 2) That requests for assistance by countries in South and South-East Asia, through the Bureau in Colombo, be made with due regard to United Nations activities in the area and, where advisable, in consultation with the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies;
- 3) That offers of technical assistance to countries of the area by other countries participating in the Colombo Programme be made with due regard to United Nations activities in the area and, where advisable, in consultation with the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies;
- 4) That the Council in Colombo recommend that member governments give sympathetic consideration to proposals for joint projects to be undertaken by the United Nations or the Specialized Agencies and a country giving assistance under the Colombo Programme in which "a missing component" for a United Nations project might be supplied through the Colombo Programme.

New Delhi, February 1, 1952

CO-OPERATION AMONG VARIOUS COUNTRIES GIVING TECHNICAL AID TO INDIA

Reference: Our letter No. 1182 of November 20, 1952 [1951]

You will recall that in our letter under reference we reported at length upon the discussions we had had with the Director of the Bureau on the above subject. We mentioned, too, that Mr. Ghosh of the Indian Department of Economic Affairs had seemed quite struck with the idea of some sort of committee on the National level to assist in achieving a co-ordination of effort which might bear more fruitful results than the present individualistic or strictly bi-lateral approach.

2. We have gathered from Mr. Burns's letter to you, No. 297 of December 14, 1951, that this new idea would not be very warmly received in Colombo, at least until its implications have been more fully explored. At the same time it has been our understanding that the principle of co-operation at the national level, particularly if supported by the Government of India, has your approval.

3. The latest development here in regard to the establishment of some kind of co-ordination has been the receipt of advice from Mr. Ghosh that Indian officials desire to hold a meeting on this subject on February 4 with representatives of the Australian, United Kingdom and our own offices. We have agreed to attend the meeting and Mr. Jay<sup>40</sup> will go on our behalf.

4. Mr. Ghosh has, of course, been meeting periodically with United Kingdom officials to discuss their technical aid, and he has had similar talks from time to time with us. His meetings with United Kingdom officials have apparently been on a somewhat more regular and fixed basis than ours, and Mr. Ghosh has suggested that we too might meet with him or his representative in the same way as United Kingdom officials. We expect to discuss this suggestion with him shortly, to determine what it is exactly that he has in mind. Mr. Ghosh has frequently said that his informal relations with us have been singularly free from difficulty and useful.

5. His main proposal is that, whether or not we accept this suggestion, there should be a general meeting with the representatives of the United Kingdom High Commission as well as those of Australia and Canada to discuss matters of general importance falling under the Commonwealth Technical Assistance Scheme. He adds "More specifically, we thought we could discuss outstanding requests made by us on the various Governments in the Commonwealth in order to see whether any readjustments for their distribution between the various Governments was necessary and possible. It might be useful to discuss the placement of new requests also at such a meeting. We thought that such meetings would be useful in keeping the machinery of technical assistance, so far as we are concerned at New Delhi, in good gear." He hopes that such general meetings might be held regularly every month.

6. In the light of what has been said above and because experience has shown us that Mr. Ghosh and Mr. Prem Narain, the Indian officers directly concerned, are keen and efficient, we are most anxious to give them every assistance in trying to work out procedures which may not only speed up the flow of technical aid but also help to ensure its significant character. Nevertheless, we have not failed to notice that the rather broad language used in the first paragraph of the letter to Mr. Pickard to set the stage of the meeting, may well contain the seeds of an approach to this matter which might, if not carefully watched, hatch out in procedures that would overlap the activities of the Bureau.

7. This assessment of the invitation from Mr. Ghosh is certainly that of the representatives of the United Kingdom office here, who have been instructed to keep strictly to bi-lateral negotiations with the Indian authorities, although Mr. Eric Midgley, Assistant Trade Commissioner, has been delegated to attend this first meeting. In conversations with both Mr. Pickard, Counsellor of the United Kingdom High Commission, and Mr. Midgley we have been questioned as to our attitude. We have answered that we had not as yet had your advice on the present Indian proposal but that, although we are aware of the difficulties of co-ordinating in the manner suggested in paragraph 5 above without cutting across the responsibilities of the Bureau, we are prepared to give the Indian authorities encouragement in any honest effort to improve administrative techniques and to increase the free exchange of information. We have pointed out, too, the cogency of the arguments put forward by Mr. Wilson and Dr. Mani (Director of W.H.O. here) in support of a concerted effort on the part of all "giving" agencies to meet in a really lasting and fruitful way the demands of a few areas of need as opposed to the rather "scatter-shot" practices now followed. Mr. Midgley has admitted privately the force of some of these views, at least to the extent that it seems worthwhile to follow the lead of Mr. Ghosh pro tem to see what will or can develop.

8. At the meeting on February 4 we shall (a) encourage the plan to hold regular meetings so long as this does not cut across the work of the Bureau, (b) endeavour to bridge the gap between the Indian and Australian point of view on the one hand and the United Kingdom view on the other, (c) avoid any definite commitment pending advice from you.

DESPATCH No. 256

New Delhi, February 11, 1952

RESTRICTED

CO-OPERATION AMONG VARIOUS COUNTRIES
GIVING TECHNICAL AID TO INDIA

Reference: My despatch No. 219 of February 1, 1952.

The meeting referred to in my despatch under reference took place as arranged on February 4, 1952, in the office of Mr. O.K. Ghosh, Department of Economic Affairs, Ministry of Finance.

2. Mr. Ghosh was supported by Mr. Prem Narain of the same Department. The United Kingdom was represented by Mr. E.A. Midgely, Trade Commissioner, and Mr. Griffiths, Executive Officer. Australia was represented by Mr. R. Birch, Third Secretary, and Mr. Jay was present on our behalf.

3. Mr. Ghosh opened the meeting by explaining that the idea of co-operation at the national level had been suggested as early as the February 1951 meeting of the Council. Mr. Wilson, Director of the Bureau, had, during his subsequent visit to India, discussed this suggestion with the Indian officials concerned, who had now decided to test the proposal in practice. Mr. Ghosh believed that joint meetings would, on the whole, produce more efficiency in the technical assistance work, at least as far as India is concerned, but he emphasized that he was still only groping towards more effective procedures. He expressed the hope that the western Commonwealth countries represented in Delhi would cooperate in the test.

4. He proposed that joint meetings might be held, say on the first Monday of every month, to discuss the peculiar problems arising out of the administration of Colombo technical aid to India, and to deal more specifically, in a preliminary way, with new applications contemplated by the Indian Government. He pointed out that after discussion of proposed new applications at the joint meetings, representatives of the High Commissions, or one of them, as the case might be, could correspond with their home Governments to learn whether it was likely that the requests could be met. If it developed that assistance might be available — with no commitment yet having been given or expected — the Indian authorities would then formally send the application through Colombo.

5. Mr. Ghosh explained that this procedure would obviate a great deal of the correspondence now being carried on between New Delhi and the Indian representative on the Council. He said, too, that he understood that the representatives on the Council of the western countries had in almost every instance to refer back to their Governments in any case. The fact that most of the points of difficulty arising out of an application would have already been cleared up as a result of the meetings in New Delhi where all relevant information would be more readily available, should, he felt, appeal to the representatives in Colombo who must, under the present system, be most harassed. Another advantage which might be expected to result from the adoption of his proposal would be the decrease in the volume of correspondence requiring to be filed and recorded by the Bureau. He said that it seemed regrettable that Mr. Wilson should be tied by his onerous responsibilities in this regard to Colombo rather than be free to travel to the various capitals.

6. Mr. Birch felt that Australia would be happy to associate itself wholeheartedly with the joint meetings in Delhi. Mr. Midgely also agreed to cooperate, but added that the authorities in London would have to be consulted before he could pledge support. Mr. Jay said that he could see no real objection to trying the meetings for a time to see what might develop, although no specific instructions from Ottawa had been received.

7. The meeting then discussed briefly and in a general way the question of associating other contributing agencies in India with the plan for coordination. The consensus of the meeting seemed to be that, after the present proposal had had a sufficient opportunity to prove its usefulness or otherwise, it might then be worthwhile considering more carefully whether specialized agencies might not be included. Mr. Midgely, without having an opportunity to make a categorical statement, nevertheless made it clear that the United Kingdom would be cool to the idea of including the United States in joint meetings.

8. Mr. Ghosh said that quite apart from the question of positive and active co-operation with the specialized agencies, the Indian Government might put in requisitions to Colombo for assistance designed to round out and to make fully effective projects being executed by the United Nations bodies in this country. He emphasized that any such application would fully describe the proposed destination of the assistance requested.

9. Mr. Prem Narain suggested, and it was agreed, that all dealings with Indian award winners in regard to travel arrangements, should be channelled through him. This does not mean that the Indian authorities will make reservations, but only that they will help to ensure that the students and others take advantage of the reservations already secured by one or other of the High Commissions. This is, as you know, the procedure we have been following.

10. Mr. Ghosh drew attention to the desirability of having all of the outlets for assistance within a "giving" country co-ordinated under the Colombo Plan. He mentioned, as an example, and was supported by Mr. Midgely, that private institutions in the United Kingdom — including the Brush-Oboe Group and others felt to be worthwhile by the United Kingdom authorities — had agreed not to make awards available to Indians except through the Colombo Plan. Mr. Prem Narain drew attention to the fact that Canada had apparently not made a similar arrangement. In this regard he referred to a recent Indian Ministry of Health press announcement, a copy of which is attached.<sup>1</sup> The announcement concerned an offer of internships and residenceships for Indian medical graduates received from several hospitals in Canada. The way in which this offer was arranged appeared to be very little understood by either Mr. Ghosh or Mr. Prem Narain. It seems, however, that the arrangements may have been made by the Ministry of Health acting through Mr. Saksena in Ottawa. The first intimation we received of the offer was, of course, the press release.

11. Mr. Prem Narain told Mr. Jay privately that although he personally felt that it would be excellent to have all of the giving agencies in a western country co-ordinated through the Colombo Plan, he was a little worried at what might be the result should the Colombo Plan cease to exist. He wondered whether a lot of the agencies or institutions, which had for a long time been giving aid to India, might not then automatically cease to do so.

12. Mr. Ghosh pointed out that the Indian authorities had now agreed that experts coming to this country under the Colombo Plan would be given the same privileges as United Nations personnel with regard to duty free entry of their personal effects. He said also that relief from Indian income tax would be granted. This would be effected by first deducting the tax from the salaries of the experts, who would then receive compensation through the organization to which they might be attached.

13. Mr. Ghosh said that detailed information about the various Universities, from which students are going forward to accept awards under the Colombo Plan, is being prepared and will be circulated to the High Commissions.

14. Mr. Ghosh pointed out that the draft report of the Director of the Bureau emphasizes that demands for technical assistance equipment have not been made by the Indian Government. He explained that the Australians had not waited for specific requests but had examined the field and made offers. He agreed, however, that it would assist the western countries if it were known what kind of equipment would be most useful to India. He promised to hand out copies of a list of the kinds of equipment required to each of the representatives at the next joint meeting.

15. Mr. Jay asked whether the Indian authorities could explain the fact that a very limited number of experts had come forward to India during the first year of the Colombo Plan. Mr. Ghosh said that Indian applications had been, to date, for experts of a high calibre which the western countries did not seem to be in a position to release. He pointed out that the requests from the private sector of industry in India will now be coming up for consideration and he believed that more requests for master mechanics and foremen would be put forward.

16. The main proposal made by Mr. Ghosh would appear to go further in the direction of assuming the functions of the Bureau, vis-à-vis India, than we might consider desirable without consultation with the Bureau. The procedure suggested would also mean more work for this office. On the other hand, we have been as conscious as Mr. Ghosh of a need for some more direct technique to facilitate the work of selection. Since the Indians are evidently making the proposal because they sincerely desire to improve the efficiency of present procedure, we perhaps should give it sympathetic consideration.

17. I feel the periodic joint meetings should be supported in any case. They are in line with the general view enunciated by Canada from the beginning and they would be valuable as a means of keeping representatives of all Governments and agencies in Delhi informed of what each is doing for India. They would probably also assist us to do "follow-up" work on particular applications intelligently.

18. It would certainly seem desirable to include representatives of the United Nations agencies. I would also think it desirable to include the Americans. I do not know what objection the British have to this. Possibly they feel the Americans, at this early stage, would prefer to work with the Indians directly. I know, however, that Mr. Wilson, the T.C.A.<sup>41</sup> administrator in India, has been instructed to keep closely in touch with representatives of Colombo Plan countries. Perhaps liaison with the Americans can be achieved separately for the present.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE COORDINATION IN NEW DELHI

Reference: Your despatch No. 256 of February 11.

Following for the Minister, Begins: You should give every encouragement to Indian initiative in proposing regular meetings to which we attach great importance. You should at the same time endeavour to secure agreement to broaden the membership so as to include United States and United Nations representation.

2. We understand the Australian High Commissioner in New Delhi has been instructed to "strongly contest" United Kingdom opposition to the participation of United States officials in these meetings. You should support Australian representations to the United Kingdom High Commissioner on this subject.

3. We should be grateful for any explanation you can offer of the narrow approach of the United Kingdom officials to the question of coordination of technical assistance activities of which this is merely one of several recent examples.

4. We understand the Australian High Commissioner has also been instructed to give encouragement to a proposal for consultations in New Delhi without the participation of the Indians. While it is not clear to us what this proposal implies, we think it most inadvisable to consider any suggestion which might lead to a formal pattern of consultation in New Delhi which would exclude the Indians. #### FUTURE OF THE COLOMBO PROGRAMME FOR TECHNICAL COOPERATION

Since the setting-up of this three-year Programme in 1950 we have stressed to other members of the Commonwealth that we consider it a temporary supplement to the United Nations Technical Assistance Programme and had participated in it in the expectation that the two programmes should be merged in a few years.

2. Recently the United Kingdom has asked for agreement in principle to an extension of the programme to make it co-terminous with the six-year Colombo Plan for capital assistance.

3. In reply we gave our opinion that the Colombo Technical Cooperation Programme could not be extended without reference to its financing during the proposed period of extension. We pointed out the particular need for continued support to the United Nations Technical Assistance activities in view of the United Nations' present political difficulties and said we were unwilling to discuss the future of the programme without reference to steps which should be taken to merge it with the United Nations Programme.

4. As result of our representations other members of the Commonwealth agreed to defer discussion until the policy session of the Council on Technical Cooperation which meets in Colombo on April 3 in order that the matter might be discussed thoroughly in Karachi where the Consultative Committee meetings are presently going on.

5. As we had foreseen, other participating governments intend to favour continuation of the Technical Cooperation scheme for the Colombo Plan period. Our Delegation reports, however, that our view of the importance of close coordination with United Nations Programmes is now fully appreciated.

6. Other participating governments will announce their support for the proposal to extend the programme and I should be reluctant to announce our decision to break away from the programme after 1953. I should also be reluctant to announce that we are reserving our position.

7. Failure to continue the Technical Cooperation Programme may be taken by Asian countries as reflection on the attitude of contributing countries towards the Colombo Plan generally, especially because the present difficult supply situation means that more emphasis is being put on the technical assistance side of the Plan. Certain types of technical assistance can better be undertaken under the Colombo Programme than by the United Nations and there is a vital need for technical assistance which paves the way for most effective use of capital assistance. Weight should be attached, I think, to the aspect of Asian and Western cooperation in the Commonwealth context. I intend, therefore, if you agree, to instruct the delegation to make a statement which, I think, encompasses our basic views but also resolves these difficulties.

8. The main points of this statement would be as follows:

As our economic assistance programmes for the first two years move forward they are likely to require technicians in numbers almost to exhaust the supply available in Canada. Consequently, we envisage tying together on a bilateral basis our technical and economic assistance. Multilateral technical assistance will mainly receive our support through the United Nations. The Government's view that the Colombo Programme for Technical Cooperation is a temporary supplement to the programme of the United Nations, and that our activities will be guided by the opinion that these programmes should eventually be merged, will be stressed.

The statement would then emphasize that the Canadian Government understands that other members of the Council share the view that assistance under the Colombo Programme should not compete with or attempt to replace assistance in the United Nations and that on the basis of this understanding we would welcome the continuation of the programme for the six-year period of the Colombo Plan. The statement would point out that our agreement to extend the programme involves no financial commitment whatsoever because Parliament authorizes expenditures on a yearly basis and that, consequently, the question of contributions would have to be reviewed and recommendations submitted to parliament each year.

9. By continuing our membership in this programme we would in effect be agreeing to continue to share in the operating costs of the Bureau in Colombo which on the basis of experience so far amounts to about $4,000 annually. I do not think this should pose any great difficulty because the proposed statement by our delegation would leave the Government free to consider on a later date the possibility of technical and capital assistance for South and South-East Asia coming out of the same vote.

POLICY SESSION OF THE COUNCIL FOR TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION:

APRIL 4-APRIL 9, 1952<sup>43</sup>

Generally speaking the meetings were held in an atmosphere of cordial co-operation. At first sight the agenda did not seem to include many items of importance or urgency. Before the opening of the session several delegates expressed surprise that the Policy Session should be held at this time; and that it had not been held in Karachi immediately after the meeting of the Consultative Committee. It was our impression at the time of the Consultative Committee sessions that the Pakistanis were ready and willing to hold the Council meeting at Karachi. At Colombo I asked Mr. M. Ismail, Deputy Secretary of the Ministry of Economic Affairs, why the Policy Session had not been held in Karachi. I pointed out to him that several delegations had expected Pakistan to take the initiative in this regard. In reply, he agreed that Karachi was the obvious choice but said that at the request of Mr. A.C.B. Symon of the United Kingdom delegation the Pakistani authorities had not pressed the matter.

Report by the Director

2. Copies of the Director's report, Bureau Document C/52/15 and C/15/add.,† have already been sent to Ottawa. The discussion on the report related to the following aspects of the Technical Co-operation Scheme.

(a) Training Programme:

The programme for the training of Asian candidates abroad had been, in the main, successful. It had become apparent that taken as a whole the contributing countries could provide training facilities in almost every field required by the recipient countries. Most of the administrative difficulties in this programme had been eliminated, although there had been some unfortunate experiences. It was, nevertheless, a widely held view that training in the area for middle and lower class technicians was a preferable aim under the Colombo Programme. The Asian delegations, in particular Ceylon, India and Pakistan supported this view. It seems likely that this may be an important future development in the Technical Co-operation Scheme.

(b) Equipment:

The provision of equipment was described as a "distinctive feature of the Technical Co-operation Scheme." From the discussion it appeared that there would be in this aspect of the Scheme the positive opportunity for integrating the Colombo Plan activities with those of other technical assistance agencies, principally the United Nations. Some of the Asian delegates seemed to be sceptical about providing the equipment for the United Nations or the Specialized Agencies. They expressed the fear that these agencies might make use of such equipment in countries outside the area of South and South East Asia. The Asian delegates, principally the Pakistan representative, sought to place emphasis on the urgency for meeting requests for equipment. The representatives of the contributing countries countered by stressing the need for precise and detailed requests; and for requests for equipment which clearly came within the scope of the Technical Co-operation Scheme. The Australians and ourselves were most emphatic on these two points. As a result of this discussion, there may be a considerable increase in the number of requests for equipment. It seems likely, however, that such requests will need to be carefully screened by the contributing countries.

(c) Technical Missions:

There was general agreement that technical missions of the kind offered by Canada for senior officials to visit the various contributing countries were most useful. Despite our difficulties last summer, I believe that such missions have value, not only because they give senior officials from the countries in the area a working knowledge of the kinds of technical assistance available in Canada, but they provide an eye-opener for the more sceptical Asians, who are inclined to belittle the benefits of technological developments in the West, and start them thinking along Western lines. This might have an important political bearing. In addition, of course, these missions are an effective means of promoting goodwill.

(d) Experts:

There was general recognition that the recruiting of experts was the most difficult part of the Scheme and the least satisfactory from the point of view of progress. Only one quarter of the applications had been filled. Some of the difficulty arose because requests were being duplicated as between the Colombo Programme and programmes of the United Nations and the United States. The evils of such duplication were again stressed. The representative of Pakistan (which I suspect may be the principal offender) pointed out that duplication only took place at times when an expert was urgently required. This is not a new excuse; and the answer is surely that the Pakistani authorities should plan their development programme in such a way as to allow them to apply for experts well in advance of the date when they will be required. It seems likely that this will happen as the Scheme progresses; and that duplication will be reduced to a minimum.

(e) "Dead" Cases:

An interesting discussion developed on what should be done about applications or offers on which no action had been taken for a considerable period of time. The Director expressed the view that such cases should be written off the records. The United Kingdom and the recipient countries seemed loath to accept this view; and suggested that the Bureau should take action to expedite such "dead" cases. In private conversation with Mr. Wilson I discussed whether he might send regular reminders to the governments concerned but he expressed the fear that such action would not be popular. It is possible that some governments, but particularly the more sensitive Asians, might resent such action as being interference in their affairs. In all technical or economic assistance activities there is an inherent danger of creating the impression in the minds of the Asians that their national sovereignty is being threatened by some supra-national agency administering an assistance programme. The most effective means of stirring up stagnant cases lies perhaps in the visits paid by the Director to the various countries in the area.

Co-ordination with other Agencies

3. The discussion on this item was based on the memorandum by the Director, Bureau Document C/52/15.† From the outset it became clear that co-ordination will not be achieved without patience and perseverance. It was apparent from the discussions, both in Karachi and Colombo, that very few of the delegates were prepared to treat the problem of co-ordination as an urgent one. The Australian, New Zealand and Canadian delegates seemed to be in general agreement on the desirability of co-ordination and shared similar views on how it should be effected; the United Kingdom representative expressed opposition to several proposals which might have led to effective co-ordination; the Pakistani seemed to doubt the feasibility of co-ordination; and the Indian delegate was too complacent about what had already been achieved in Delhi. Accordingly, the process of co-ordinating Colombo Plan activities with those of other agencies is not without its difficulties.

4. Nevertheless, in the view of the Director (whose opinion I share) some progress has been made in the direction of co-ordination with the other agencies. With the arrival of Dr. J.P. Bannier, the United Nations Liaison Officer to the Council for Technical Co-operation, the abortive efforts of the past year to effect co-ordination should begin to bear fruit. Mr. Wilson told me that he had put up the various ideas in his memorandum as trial balloons. He hoped that in the process of shooting them down representatives would not only give more thought to the problem of co-ordination but would agree on some positive steps to effect it.

5. As a result of considerable lobbying, both in Karachi and Colombo, some degree of understanding was reached about the holding of regular meetings at national capitals. The United Kingdom representative seemed bent on making these meetings as informal as possible — informal almost to the point of rendering them futile. He seemed reluctant to invite to such meetings representatives of the United Nations and the United States. He endeavoured, with some success, to have written out of the record the suggestion that the meetings be convened by the government of the country concerned. In spite of his efforts, however, and in spite of the support which for different reasons he received from the Pakistani delegate — there is now considerable likelihood that regular co-ordinating meetings will be held at each of the national capitals of Ceylon, India and Pakistan. The Pakistani officials have informed us that such a meeting will be held in Karachi at the end of April. We propose to make every effort to have such meetings held at regular intervals.

6. The Director's suggestion, that the recipient governments prepare monthly statements on technical assistance requested and received, met with little support. Dr. Bannier pointed out that this practice was followed by the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies. It is my impression that the Pakistan Ministry of Economic Affairs would find great difficulty in keeping such statements up to date, owing to the inadequacies of the clerical staff in the Ministry. Possibly at the meetings at national capitals the governments concerned could make oral statements which would serve the purpose outlined in paragraph 4 of the Director's memorandum.

7. The Director's suggestion that reports by experts be given wide circulation, and particularly that they should be sent to the Bureau, was not received with enthusiasm. The recipient governments considered that the circulation of reports by experts was a matter to be decided by the government requesting the expert, possibly in consultation with the government which had provided him. The consensus seemed to be that the experts' reports would lose their value if they had to be drafted in such a way as to permit wide distribution. Reports from trainees, on the other hand, were considered of little value. Dr. Bannier confirmed that in the United Nations' experience trainees' reports were hardly worth reading, except where they related to the administrative arrangements for any given training programme.

8. There was general agreement that supplementary assistance should be given to United Nations Specialized Agencies requesting it. Concern was expressed, however, that an announcement to this effect might be regarded as an open invitation to the Specialized Agencies to ask for such assistance. The recipient countries were obviously not disposed to give much encouragement to the Specialized Agencies. It was clear from the discussion that requests for such assistance will have to be carefully screened, presumably by the Council for Technical Co-operation. Several delegates expressed the view that these requests should be initiated by the country or countries which would benefit from the project to be undertaken by the Specialized Agency concerned. This is perhaps a hopeful sign that Colombo Plan technical assistance funds will be utilized not only for joint projects undertaken with the United Nations but for strictly United Nations projects for which the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies would require supplemental equipment, personnel or finance.

9. There was general agreement on the point made by the Director in paragraph 11 of his memorandum, that it was in the field of providing experts where the main problems of co-ordination arose. Most of the delegates agreed also that the United Nations Expanded Programme provided far better facilities for the recruitment of experts. The recipient countries reiterated the difficulties which they had encountered in avoiding duplication of requests for experts. Dr. Bannier, supported by the United Kingdom representative, stressed that some degree of duplication would be preferable to creating gaps in the overall programme of technical assistance. There was considerable support for the view that individual requesting governments alone could decide to whom an approach should be made for technical assistance. The hope was expressed by some delegates that the requesting governments would consider the Colombo Plan as a source of specific types of technical assistance, types which in no way competed with the assistance offered by the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies. None of the delegates, however, was able to define with any accuracy the special forms of technical assistance on which the Colombo Technical Co-operation Scheme might concentrate. The majority of the delegates were of the opinion that these special forms would emerge as the Scheme progressed. The Director suggested that training in the area, the provision of consultative services, the supply of equipment, and the providing of facilities for short-term travelling missions and seminars were some of the specific types of technical assistance which might be provided under the Colombo scheme and which would be truly supplementary to the assistance provided under other schemes. It seems likely that, if more thought were to be given to defining these special forms of assistance, the activities under the Colombo Scheme could be channelled into non-competitive but most effective fields of technical assistance.

Possible Developments of the Council's Work

10. The discussion of this item was based on the Director's memorandum in Document C/52/18.† The reactions of governments to the suggestion that assistance be given to international organizations operating in the area have been described in paragraph 32. The Canadian delegate supported the suggestion in principle but added a word of caution that applications for assistance, made to the Council by the United Nations or the Specialized Agencies, should be looked at closely to ensure that the projects concerned would benefit one or more countries in the area and that such projects were related to the general picture of economic development in the area.

11. None of the delegates was enthusiastic about the Director's suggestion that a fund be put at the disposal of the Council for financing expenses arising in non-member countries. Several delegates stated that their governments had already paid such expenses and were prepared to do so in future. Accordingly there seemed to be no real reason why the proposed fund should be established.

12. The reaction of delegations to the Director's suggestion about the circulation of reports by experts and trainees has been described in paragraph 8. The consensus of the meeting was that some of the reports by experts might be found most useful but that, if such reports were to retain their value, they must be kept confidential in order to give the expert concerned scope for full and frank discussion. The reports were in essence a matter between the expert and the government who had requested him. There might be occasions when the government providing the expert would be brought into the picture. The consent of one, or perhaps both, of these governments would be required before the reports could be circulated to other governments or agencies.

13. The Council was not disposed to undertake at this time the translation of technical documents. It was considered that this work could be more appropriately performed by other agencies.

Indian Offer for Advanced Training for Rice Breeders

14. The discussion centred around two memoranda, C/52/4 and C/52/13,+ on this subject. Reference was also made to an announcement which Mr. R.G. Casey had made at the Consultative Committee Meeting in Karachi to the effect that the Australian Government proposed to build hostels in Sydney and Melbourne for the housing of Asian students and that up to £50,000 of the costs would be met from Australia's contribution to the Technical Cooperation Scheme. In the course of the discussion the Ceylon representative said that a similar commitment had been entered into by his government for hostels to be established in connection with the rural development scheme. It was explained that the governments of Ceylon and India had already incurred expenditures in the belief that the use of technical co-operation funds for such purposes had already been approved by the Council. The Council, taking note of the comments of the representatives of Australia, Ceylon and India, agreed that capital expenditure on buildings of this type was a proper charge on a country's contribution, provided that substantial benefits were offered to other countries in the area. Most delegates recognized that there was no means whereby the Council could prevent a country making such expenditure; but hope was expressed that the country concerned would seek the views of the Council on such a project at an early stage.

Period for which the Scheme Should Operate

15. The discussion on this item was surprisingly brief. The United Kingdom representative made a short statement in support of his government's proposal for continuing the technical co-operation scheme and for making it co-extensive with the programme for economic development. The recipient countries, as might have been expected, welcomed the proposal. Australia, Canada and New Zealand accepted the proposal with reservations, largely of a financial nature. The Canadian statement, copy of which is attached, was incorporated as an annex to the minutes of the third meeting of the policy session (Document SR/52/7).+ No comment was made at the meeting on these statements.

16. The discussion of this item was made slightly more difficult by the presence of new members at the conference table; Burma, Cambodia and Nepal attended for the first time as full members; while Indonesia, the Philippines and Thailand were represented by observers. Accordingly the statements on the continuation of the scheme had to be tactfully worded.

Election of the President

17. Mr. R. Coomaraswamy of Ceylon was re-elected president. His nomination was put forward by the representative of New Zealand and supported in rapid succession by the representatives of Pakistan and the United Kingdom. Mr. Coomaraswamy's words of thanks followed immediately. The rather obvious haste in this matter did not give the Indian delegate an opportunity to take part in the discussion. From the informal discussions which preceded this meeting it was apparent that both the Indian and Pakistani delegates had hoped that one or other of their permanent representatives would succeed to the office. The Pakistanis were persuaded to step down. I suspect that the Indians were not consulted. In the interests of continuity and control I should judge that the re-election of Mr. Coomaraswamy is well founded.

Conclusions

18. The following are perhaps the significant points which emerged from this Policy Session of the Council:

(a) Training in the area of middle and lower class technicians was recognized by the recipient countries, and by most of the contributing countries, as a most fruitful field in which Colombo Plan funds might be utilized. Basic training facilities, including possibly hostels, would probably be provided by the countries in the area; while the organizers, instructors and training equipment would be provided by the contributing countries. These training facilities might be operated in conjunction with development projects already under way in the countries of the area.

(b) Equipment for training and demonstration purposes might be supplied to the countries in the area to be used in connection with projects undertaken by the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies. Requests for such equipment would probably originate with the country or countries concerned and would be brought before the Council for consideration. These requests would be in addition to those, made by the recipient governments, for direct assistance in the form of equipment. It seems likely that such requests for equipment will be augmented in number.

(c) Efforts to effect positive co-ordination among the various agencies providing technical assistance to the area will have to be pursued with patience and perseverance. There are indications that the recipient countries are beginning to recognize the advantages of such co-ordination. The task is, however, by no means confined to converting the recipient countries.

(d) The Technical Co-operation Scheme will continue to operate until the end of the Colombo Plan for Economic Development. No additional financial commitment is involved. The facilities and funds available under the Scheme are likely to be diverted to an increasing extent into special fields of technical assistance — assistance which cannot be equally provided by other agencies and which is particularly suited to the Colombo Programme. There is a possibility that the assistance rendered by some contributing countries will be more closely related than in the past to their economic assistance programmes.

POSSIBLE VISIT TO CANADA OF MR. RAJU COOMARASWAMY<sup>44</sup>

Reference: Allocation of Colombo Plan Funds to Ceylon

In view of the possibility that there may be some allocation of 1952-53 Colombo Plan Funds to Ceylon, Mr. Coomaraswamy had informal talks on the subject with Mr. Cavell and Mr. McIlraith during the recent visits made by these two gentlemen to Colombo which related in part to the possibility that Mr. Coomaraswamy might discuss the question with competent authorities in Ottawa at a comparatively early date. I have had little to do with the matter but understand that it may be referred to you by both Mr. McIlraith and Mr. Cavell when they return from their trips on which they are now engaged.

2. If Mr. Coomaraswamy is to visit Ottawa in this connection he will presumably be able to do so only on the invitation of the Canadian Government. It is the case at the same time that, in view of other responsibilities, he could only make a visit to Canada except at considerable inconvenience, in the comparatively early future probably around the end of May. These two points may accordingly merit some consideration even prior to Mr. McIlraith's and Mr. Cavell's return.

3. Mr. Coomaraswamy understands that there is a possibility of certain Colombo Plan Funds being devoted to fisheries development in Ceylon but has no idea of the informal steps which have already been taken in this direction. He is in any case more interested in securing certain funds to be expended on the Ceylon Government's Rural Development Scheme and has told me in this connection that Ceylon would welcome the opportunity of establishing a counterpart fund, to be devoted principally to this purpose through the sale of supplies of flour, newsprint or such other typical Canadian commodities as might be available and as are in regular demand in this country. He did not appear to be very interested in supplies of hand tools, implements, pumps and similar equipment for rural development work except possibly in fairly limited amounts. Altogether I should think the disposal of any contribution to Ceylon for this purpose will require considerably more investigation and study than it has received to date, but the project undoubtedly appears to be one of considerable merit and one also on which funds could be usefully spent in almost any amounts small or large. There is the opportunity also of developing co-operation with such U.N. agencies as U.N.E.S.C.O., F.A.O., and W.H.O., all of which are carrying out or at least planning somewhat similar development work in this country.

4. Any advices which you may have for me in connection with the issue of an invitation to Mr. Coomaraswamy to visit Canada will be most welcome.

COLOMBO PLAN — AID TO CEYLON

Reference: Your letters No. 137 of April 9th and No.138 of April 12.

Following Mr. Cavell's return, preliminary consideration has been given to the question of Canadian assistance to Ceylon under our 1952/53 Colombo Plan programme. There is no doubt that, if suitable projects can be agreed upon, some funds will be made available out of the Vote for this year.

2. Both the fisheries development project and the rural development scheme appear to be worthwhile projects but it will, of course, be necessary to look into the supply situation in Canada in order to determine whether the required equipment and supplies are available. Inquiries in connection with the fisheries project will be initiated on the basis of the suggested requirements listed in Mr. Haywood's memorandum, which was attached to Mr. Ponnambalam's personal letter to Mr. Mayhew, and which was also forwarded under cover of your letter No. 137. While we can do some useful preparatory work of investigation at this stage, a formal request for assistance, accompanied by detailed specifications, will have to be submitted through the normal channels before any final agreement can be reached between our Governments.

3. The suggestion that Mr. Coomaraswamy might visit Ottawa to discuss with Canadian officials suitable projects for aid under the Colombo Plan has now been considered. Mr. Cavell understands that Mr. Coomaraswamy intends in any event to make a trip to London within the next month. Would you please inform him that Canadian officials think it would be useful to hold discussions on appropriate Colombo Plan projects for Ceylon and hope that he will be able to extend his trip to the United Kingdom to include a brief visit to Ottawa. If he decides to accept our invitation, it should be made clear to him that his discussions with us can only be fruitful if he is in a position to speak for his Government and to submit proposals which carry general governmental support.

4. For your own confidential information, we are anxious to avoid becoming involved in deciding the relative merits of competing claims from different Ministries. It will simplify our task if we can talk over possible projects with Mr. Coomaraswamy as representing the Ceylon Government; it will merely add to our difficulties and cause unnecessary confusion if he puts forward certain favoured projects of particular Ministers which may later be contested by other Ministers whose interests lie elsewhere.

COLOMBO PLAN — AID TO CEYLON — PUBLICITY

Reference: Your letter E. 40 of May 2.

I should be obliged for any instructions which you may be kind enough to provide by letter or telegram relating to publicity which may be given in this country to Colombo Plan aid to Ceylon.

2. If Mr. Coomaraswamy's forthcoming visit to Canada proves effective, as I am sure, we hope, it will, the Ceylon Government will undoubtedly want to publicize the fact as widely as possible and if this is going to be done I am apprehensive over the means which may be employed and the terms in which such publicity may be given. I am not so concerned over government action as the treatment which the subject may be given by the local press which, to put it mildly, is highly irresponsible. If therefore essential details of Canadian provision of aid to Ceylon under the Colombo Plan, such as, the sums involved for specified projects, the form in which the aid is to be supplied and related points could be furnished it would be of the greatest value as a means, if necessary, of correcting inaccurate reports, dispelling rumours and generally keeping matters in order. Any advice of the type referred to which you might supply would, of course, only be used if it appeared necessary and helpful to the Ceylon Government to do so.

COLOMBO PLAN — AID TO CEYLON — PUBLICITY

Reference: Your letter No. 183 of May 23, 1952

We have discussed with Mr. Coomaraswamy the undesirability of premature publicity on Canadian aid to Ceylon under the Colombo Plan. He fully appreciates the situation and assures us that no official publicity will be given by the Ceylonese Government until the Canadian Government has given formal approval to the provision of economic aid to Ceylon by Canada under the Colombo Plan during this current fiscal year. He himself is somewhat fearful of unauthorized leaks by junior officials in the Ceylon Government service but there is, of course, no way to guard against this.

2. Mr. Coomaraswamy's visit with us was useful and fruitful and I believe he himself is quite satisfied with the results. In addition to talks he had with various individual officials he also met with the interdepartmental Colombo Group where a full discussion was held on the three projects which Mr. Coomaraswamy submitted on behalf of his Government for Colombo Plan aid from Canada. The record of this meeting was put in the form of a letter to Mr. Coomaraswamy and I enclose a copy of the letter for your information.† As you will note, the conclusions arrived at by the Canadian officials will be placed before Ministers.

3. I am enclosing, also, a copy of the Statement of Principles which was agreed upon with the Government of Pakistan and with the Government of India on September 10, 1951. Once formal approval is obtained from Cabinet for the extension of Colombo Plan aid to Ceylon we shall ask you to arrange an exchange of notes with the Government of Ceylon for the purpose of establishing agreement on these general principles. Mr. Coomaraswamy felt sure that the Statement of Principles as agreed upon with India and Pakistan would be acceptable to his Government. He will, presumably, discuss it with his superiors on returning to Colombo and you might check with him and confirm that the text of the enclosed Statement, with the obvious verbal changes, is acceptable to the Ceylonese Government. Arrangements for the formal exchange of notes should, of course, not be made except on specific instructions from Ottawa which can be given only after Cabinet approval is received.

4. I believe that the signing of the notes accepting the Statement of Principles would provide the first appropriate opportunity for publicity in Ceylon on Canadian aid to that country under the Colombo Plan.

DESPATCH No. E-68

Ottawa, June 21, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

COLOMBO PLAN — AID TO CEYLON

Reference: Our Letter No. E-56 of June 5, 1952.

The following recommendations concerning Colombo Plan assistance to Ceylon were approved by Ministers on June 19th:

(a) that Canadian economic aid be made available under the Colombo Plan to the Government of Ceylon during the current year, 1952-53, in conformity with the Statement of Principles already agreed upon with the Governments of India and Pakistan;

(b) that the fisheries development project be approved for inclusion in the 1952-53 programme of economic aid to Ceylon and that up to $1,000,000 be provided for this project out of vote number 114;

(c) that the rural electrification scheme and the rural development pilot project be approved in principle as suitable projects for Canadian aid under the Colombo Plan but that these two projects be re-submitted to the Cabinet for final decision in the light of the report to be received from the Canadian electrical engineer in respect of the Gal Oya electrification scheme and in the light of the programmes which have yet to be submitted by India and Pakistan for Canadian Colombo Plan aid during this current year.

It is now in order for you to proceed with the exchange of notes with the Government of Ceylon to secure formal agreement on the principles in accordance with which Canadian aid will be made available. In this connection, I attach a revised copy of the "Statement of Principles" together with the text of the covering note which you should address to the Minister for Defence and External Affairs.† Apart from the obvious verbal changes, these two documents are similar in all respects to those sent to the Governments of India and Pakistan. I also enclose copies of the notes received from these two Governments, to which you may wish to refer if your advice is sought by Ceylonese officials on the form in which their reply might be made.‡

As indicated in my letter under reference, the signing of the notes accepting the Statement of Principles would seem to provide the first appropriate opportunity for publicity in Ceylon on Canadian aid to that country under the Colombo Plan. As was the case for India and Pakistan, it is proposed to issue a short press release here on the day the notes are signed. But we would expect the bulk of the publicity on this occasion to be given in Colombo. It would be appreciated if you would let us have in good time before the formal exchange of notes, the text of any press release which the Government of Ceylon may wish to issue. You will understand that it would be inappropriate to make public the estimated total monetary value of Canadian assistance to Ceylon for the current year in as much as approval for the Rural Electrification Scheme and the Rural Development Pilot Project has only been given in principle and final decisions on these two projects must await further Cabinet consideration. However, there would seem to be no harm in mentioning the probable value of our assistance for the Fisheries Development Project.

Please advise by telegram the date of and the arrangements for the exchange of notes so that we may take any necessary action here on publicity and let you have any comments on the arrangements which seem desirable.

COLOMBO PLAN

STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES

agreed between the Government of Canada and the Government of Ceylon for Co-operative Economic Development of Ceylon

The Governments of Canada and Ceylon, together with other governments, took part in London in 1950 in drawing up the Colombo Plan for Co-operative Economic Development in South and South-East Asia. The Governments of Canada and Ceylon now desire to co-operate for their mutual benefit, and in particular for the achievement of the purposes of the Colombo Plan, by promoting the economic development of Ceylon. Therefore the Governments of Canada and Ceylon now wish to establish agreed principles under which economic aid from Canada will be provided to Ceylon for the purposes of the Colombo Plan, and according to which supplementary agreements may be made to cover specific programmes.

The Governments of Canada and Ceylon agree to the establishment of the following principles:

1. All economic aid supplied by the Government of Canada to the Government of Ceylon under the Colombo Plan shall consist of goods and services in accordance with specific programmes agreed upon from time to time between the two governments. Similarly, agreement will be reached on the methods of procurement and transfer.

2. In order that Canadian aid may cover different types of projects, different forms of financing may be used; in particular, Canadian aid will be available on either a grant or a loan basis, depending on the nature of each specific programme and the uses to which the goods and services supplied under it are put.

3. The particular terms of each specific programme will be a matter for agreement between the two governments, subject to the following general provisions:

(a) Grants: In any specific programme under which goods financed by grants from the Canadian Government are sold or otherwise distributed to the Ceylon public "counterpart funds" will normally be set aside. The Ceylon Government will set up a special account for these funds and will keep separate records of the amounts placed in the account in connection with each specific programme. It will pay into this account the rupee equivalent of the Canadian expenditures on goods and services supplied under any such programme. The Government of Ceylon will from time to time report to the Government of Canada the position of this account and will supply a certificate from the Auditor General of Ceylon. The two governments will from time to time agree on the economic development projects in Ceylon to be financed from this account.

(b) Loans: For the specific programmes which are agreed to be appropriate for financing by means of loans the terms of the loans will be determined by the two Governments. These terms will relate primarily to the commercial character of the particular project in question, to its anticipated earnings, and to its anticipated effects on the foreign exchange position of Ceylon.

COLOMBO PLAN AID TO INDIA — SECOND YEAR

I understand that, in response to a request from Mr. Cavell, the Indian authorities have undertaken to send you a list of projects from which you might select items for direct aid in the second year. At the same time, they have told Mr. Cavell that they hope as much as possible of our second-year aid may take the form of wheat.

2. The Indian argument in favour of wheat runs as follows. Because wheat is in short supply in Australia and Pakistan, India's current wheat purchases from the dollar area cannot be reduced and may have to be increased. Gift wheat from this area would save India precious foreign exchange and indirectly improve the balance-of-payments position of the sterling area. Also, the counterpart funds from the sale of wheat would be welcome in India. The proportion of internal finance to foreign exchange content in India's development programme is about four to one. It is true capital goods are needed from abroad but it appears to be difficult to get capital goods additional to those already on order. Meanwhile the need to provide an adequate continuing supply of internal funds for development purposes remains. This year unusually high receipts from customs and export duties and funds realized from the sale of American loan wheat provided the main cushion enabling India to finance the year's programme to the full extent. Neither of these sources can be counted on to nearly the same extent in the coming year. Therefore aid in the form of wheat or similar raw materials for sale in India would be most helpful.

3. I think this argument is sound. I realize it is desirable to preserve the direct-aid content of our assistance, and I would hope that Canada, the United States, the United Kingdom and other western countries may be able to spare sufficient capital goods for India to meet her real development needs and prevent any possible swing toward iron-curtain countries as a source of such supplies. At the same time, supply is the main problem here; and, so far as the dollar area is concerned, any reduction in India's foreign exchange spending on foodstuffs and essential raw materials would be an effective collateral form of aid.

4. At present India's most acute food shortage is rice (particularly badly needed in drought-afflicted, rice-eating Madras); there is little Canada can do about this, though I suppose it is possible that an easier supply position in wheat might make it a little more feasible for the authorities to divert more rice to the south from wheat-eating areas. India can probably buy all the wheat she must have this year but free supply of wheat or other grains cannot be other than helpful both from the point of view of finance and in order to help feed the people.

5. The Canadian people would probably understand that this form of aid is particularly helpful at this stage of India's development; and, since wheat is a commodity of which — with luck — we should have a very good stock this year, it would seem appropriate that Canada should supply India with as much wheat as possible. Supplying wheat for consumption and to set up counterpart funds is rather like grub-staking a prospector: this is a good North American conception Canadians can understand.

6. I am informed that, on the technical assistance side, the Indian authorities expressed the opinion to Mr. Cavell that we might think in the coming year in terms of more aid of the type designed to train an increasing number of industrial trainees in India, where they would learn under conditions comparable to those under which they would afterward be working. I suppose this might involve the sending of experts and possibly some technical equipment. If the latter were desirable and feasible, the Indians, I am sure, would be content to have it supplied out of economic development rather than technical aid funds if we should prefer this.

Dear Mr. Banerjee:

I refer to the programme for Canadian assistance under our 1951-52 Colombo Plan allocation to India. In accordance with your Government's request, Canadian wheat, not exceeding $10 million in value, is now being shipped to India under the programme. The present position with respect to the remainder of the proposed programme is, I understand, as follows:

1. Truck and bus chassis for use by the Bombay approx. $4.5 million State Transport Commission, (subject to further consideration.)

2. Equipment for the Mayurakshi project, (subject to further consideration.) approx $0.5 million

Total approx. $5 million

Under the proposed procedure, the above programme would be subject to change or addition, with the approval of both Governments, in the light of the supply position in Canada or other considerations. The cost of all projects, including the wheat already provided for, which finally comprise the programme could not, of course, exceed approximately $15 million.

To facilitate the carrying out of the above programme, it is proposed that:

(a) the Government of India direct the Government of Canada to pay to the Canadian Commercial Corporation as agent of the Indian Government the amount of any grant that Canada proposes to make to the Government of India under the Colombo Plan;

(b) each such grant made to the Government of India will be used to procure goods and services to assist in the economic development programme of India and will be applied only to specific projects that have been approved in accordance with the "Statement of Principles" agreed between the Government of Canada and the Government of India on the 10th day of September, 1951;

(c) the Government of India will procure the said goods and services through the Canadian Commercial Corporation which shall act as agent of the Government of India in that behalf, and all contracts for the procurement of such goods and services must be approved in writing by the Secretary of State for External Affairs of Canada before they are entered into; and

(d) in the event that India has not, by a future date to be determined by Canada of which notice in writing will be given to India, applied the whole of any grant in accordance with paragraph (b) above, India will on request in writing by Canada pay to Canada in Canadian dollars an amount equal to the portion of the grant not so applied, out of the funds at the credit of India with the Canadian Commercial Corporation.

If the proposed procedure is acceptable to your Government, this letter and your reply will constitute an agreement on this subject, effective from the date of your reply, and a direction to the Government of Canada to make payment to the Canadian Commercial Corporation as agent of India as set out in paragraph (a) above.

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I refer to your letter of March 25, 1952, proposing agreement between our two Governments on a procedure to facilitate the carrying out of the programme of Canadian assistance under your Government's 1951-52 Colombo Plan allocation to India. The procedure as set out in your letter is acceptable to my government and, therefore, your letter referred to above and this reply constitute an agreement on this subject effective from March 28, 1952. The Government of India request the Government of Canada to make payment to the Canadian Commercial Corporation as agents of India as set out in paragraph (a) of your letter.

COLOMBO PLAN — AID FOR INDIA 1952/53

This morning Mr. Saksena, the Indian High Commissioner, met with officials of the interested Departments here to discuss in a preliminary way the type of assistance which might be supplied to India this year.

2. Mr. Saksena informed the group that the Indian Government would like to have the whole of its portion of the Canadian contribution supplied in the form of wheat. The counterpart funds from the sale of the wheat would be used to meet some of the rupee expenditures on the Mayurakshi irrigation and hydro electric project and any excess could be devoted to the rupee element in the similar Hirakud project. Mr. Saksena undertook, at the request of the Canadian officials, to provide further details concerning the size and nature of these rupee expenditures and he also undertook to inquire regarding the equipment required for these projects from outside sources which Canada might be able to supply if it were decided not to provide the whole of the Canadian contribution in wheat. The Canadian officials indicated that they might also wish to discuss later with Mr. Saksena the possibility of including in this year's contribution some relatively minor items of equipment which could be related to the kinds of technical assistance which Canada might be furnishing.

3. The Canadian officials said that they obviously could not comment with any authority on the suggested contribution of wheat. They would however proceed to find out whether satisfactory grades were likely to be available and whether Ministers thought this form of contribution would be desirable. Consideration of the request would be facilitated by the information which Mr. Saksena is to secure.

4. Concerning the 1951/52 programme Mr. Saksena indicated that, despite the regrettable difficulty which had been experienced in letting tenders for the trucks, the Bombay State Transport project now appeared to be ready for action.

5. Throughout the meeting the informal and preliminary character of the discussions was emphasized.

6. We now learn from the Press Office that in some strange manner the news ticker this afternoon contains a small item reporting that this meeting took place and that the provision of wheat was discussed. We do not propose to comment on the contents of this news report. We have told the Press Office that they can tell any inquirers that informal meetings regarding possible current and future programmes are continually taking place in order to provide some basis for our planning. Since the funds have not yet been voted by Parliament for the present year any discussions which might have taken place this morning could only have been of this informal character. Mr. Saksena, who is also unaware of the source of the news story, says that he does not propose to comment at all if he receives any inquiries.

Ottawa, July 28, 1952

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. A.E. RITCHIE

COLOMBO PLAN: INDIA

When we were discussing Colombo Plan aid to India recently, you suggested that I give you a note of my understanding of the reasons for the Indian desire to receive wheat, and in particular wheat of a grade higher than grades 5 and 6.

2. As I understand it, India wants wheat under the Colombo Plan because the Government, by selling wheat to consumers, can set up a counterpart fund which helps to finance development projects. The major financial component of India's six-year development program is rupees, not foreign exchange; the ratio, I believe, is of the order of 3 to 1. During the first year of the program, recently completed, India was able to find all the rupees needed to finance the year's program. But this was possible only because there were unusually high revenues from customs and export duties and because the Government was able to realize considerable sums from the sale of American loan wheat. For varying reasons, none of these sources — except possibly customs — can be counted on to the same extent this year or in future. This could cause curtailment of program.

3. Another advantage for India of wheat under the Colombo Plan is saving of foreign exchange. This year India is importing 4,500,000 tons of grain as compared with the Planning Commission's estimate of 3,000,000 tons as the amount India's foreign exchange position, considering other essential purchases abroad, will allow. Canadian wheat under the Colombo Plan in 1952-53 would help India to import sufficient food to feed her people at a time when this will be difficult without drawing dangerously on foreign exchange reserves or foregoing other essential purchases.

4. India, I understand, had again asked for No. 4 wheat, whereas we would prefer, if we give wheat, to let them have No. 5. We may, I think, anticipate that India would decline No. 5. The reason for this is that the wheat is to be sold to the people, presumably in Government ration shops; therefore, if it is to serve the dual purpose of feeding the people and raising development funds, it must be satisfactory to the purchaser. No. 5 wheat would not be satisfactory because, when ground into the "atta" (high-extraction flour) out of which the Indian makes his "chapati" (unleavened bread) it is very dark in colour and the "chapati" itself is even darker, verging on black. The average Indian, who is unsophisticated to the point of being superstitious and who in any case is paying a high price for his grain nowadays, would be reluctant to buy such wheat. I believe, therefore, that the Indian Government would not think it practicable to accept such wheat, particularly as a means of raising revenue for development.

Ottawa, September 8, 1952

WHEAT FOR INDIA UNDER THE COLOMBO PLAN THIS YEAR

As you will recall, Canada's assistance to India under the Colombo Plan last year consisted of:

(a) $10,000,000 worth of wheat (which was intended not only to meet current food requirements but also to be sold for local currency which the Indian Government could use on the Mayurakshi Irrigation and Hydro-Electric Project);

(b) $4,500,000 of equipment required by the Bombay State Transport Corporation;

(c) $500,000 for outside equipment needed in connection with the Mayurakshi Project.

2. This year the Indians have asked that Colombo Plan funds be used to buy 2/3 of the 300,000 tons of wheat which they are hoping to procure from Canada under the international wheat agreement. As in the previous year, the rupees produced by the sale of this wheat would be used to supplement the inadequate revenue available to the Indian Government for financing the Mayurakshi and similar Hirakud developments. This amount of wheat would cost about $13,000,000 and would absorb the whole of the expected Canadian contribution to India in 1952-53.

3. Although the Indian authorities have been pressed to suggest alternative projects to which at least part of the present Canadian contribution could be devoted, they have not come up with any promising items. The likelihood is, in fact that, so long as they have any hope of securing the whole contribution in wheat, they will not be anxious to suggest alternative projects to us.

4. In these circumstances, it would seem most desirable that an early decision be taken on the question of wheat for India this year under the Colombo Plan in order that:

(a) arrangements can be completed in the near future for the purchase and shipment of any wheat which is to be supplied; and

(b) if none or only a portion of our contribution is to take the form of wheat, the Indian Government can be made aware immediately of the necessity of proposing other useful projects on which the balance of our contribution can be spent.

5. The arguments against a contribution in wheat are briefly that:

(a) there has been some criticism in Canada of the fact that our earlier contribution was entirely in the form of wheat; and

(b) a contribution in wheat, even though it produces badly needed counterpart funds for use by the Indian Government, lacks the psychological (and possibly commercial) advantages which the provision of identifiably Canadian equipment might have; and

(c) as in the case of "economic aid" for NATO countries, it may be desirable not to encourage any impression that we are prepared to give away our traditional cash exports under the Colombo Plan, in view of the consequences which such an impression might have for our future balance of payments.

6. The arguments in favour of accepting the Indian proposal for a wheat contribution this year are that:

(a) the original Colombo Plan recognized that in the case of India the principal need was for adequate internal finance rather than for imported capital equipment directly;

(b) we made a contribution in the form of wheat last year and did not indicate that we would be unprepared to make a similar contribution this year if that were regarded by the Indian Government as the most useful form of assistance that we could render;

(c) the Australian Government also was willing to supply the bulk of its contribution to India last year in the form of wheat and flour.

7. Our general judgment would be that in the interests of the Colombo Plan, as a whole, it would be desirable to meet the Indian request for wheat so far as possible. We recognize, however, that a case can probably be made against the provision of our whole contribution in wheat. Accordingly, in this situation, the only practicable course (particularly in view of the urgency of securing some decision) would seem to be a compromise between rejecting wheat entirely and allowing the full contribution to be taken up in wheat.

8. We would, therefore, suggest that you might discuss the following possibility with Mr. Howe and other ministers concerned:

(a) the Indian Government should be informed now that the maximum amount of wheat which can be supplied to it under the Colombo Plan this year is $5,000,000 worth;

(b) this quantity of wheat should be additional to any amounts which India may be purchasing from Canada under the international wheat agreement;

(c) Canadian Officials should work out urgently with the Indian authorities other projects which might constitute the remainder of Canada's likely contribution to India in 1952-53 under the Colombo Plan; and

(d) the Indian Government should be warned now that for any future years it should plan on the assumption that wheat will not continue to be available from Canada under the Colombo Plan.

9. We have reason to believe that if a proposal on these lines were to be made to Mr. Howe, he would probably be prepared to accept it. He might wish to strengthen the warning in paragraph (d) to the point where any wheat would be definitely ruled out for future years. That might be going too far since it is not possible to foresee all possible future situations. For instance, the development of a severe famine might appear to the Canadian Government to warrant the diversion of some Colombo Plan monies to the supply of wheat. Mr. Howe's concern would appear to be adequately taken care of if it is made quite clear to the Indians that they should not expect any further wheat from Canada under the Colombo Plan but should present other projects to which any future Canadian contributions could be devoted.

WHEAT FOR INDIA &amp; PAKISTAN

Ed [A.E.] Ritchie telephoned from External Affairs this afternoon about two matters which they hope to have discussed in Cabinet next Saturday. He first indicated the position that they will take on supplying India with wheat under this year's Colombo Plan programme. They intend to circulate a Cabinet memorandum on this subject within the next day or two. Then, Ritchie passed on some information about certain recommendations which they hope their Acting Minister, Mr. Claxton, will be prepared to put forward with a view to making wheat available to Pakistan as an emergency measure. External Affairs hope also to circulate a memorandum on this subject before Saturday.

Ritchie said that in their view there were several reasons which made it important to get the question of wheat for India straightened out at this time. Members of the Indian Supply Mission are about to enter into discussions at Winnipeg with the hope of obtaining, under the Colombo Plan, about two-thirds of their total requirements of 300,000 tons of Canadian wheat. However, Mr. Howe takes the view that no I.W.A. wheat should be financed under the Colombo Plan. He has agreed, though, that the Indians might receive this year $5 million worth of wheat as a gift under the Colombo Plan as long as this transaction takes place outside the I.W.A., and provided it is assumed for the future that no more wheat will be supplied under the Colombo Plan. Mr. Pearson has agreed (apparently somewhat reluctantly) to this "compromise" and it will be recommended in the Cabinet memorandum. Another reason why External Affairs wish to have the question of wheat dealt with now is because they consider it will be next to impossible to obtain firm information about other potential Colombo Plan projects for India so long as the Indians feel there is a chance of receiving the whole Canadian contribution in the form of wheat.

Concerning wheat for Pakistan, Ritchie said that Mr. Pearson felt quite strongly that Canada should make some "gesture". This feeling has been heightened by the barter deal which the Pakistanis and the Russians are working out to exchange jute and cotton for wheat, and by the fact that the United States has agreed to supply 160,000 tons of wheat valued at about $15 million. The United States offer is firm and Ritchie said that, according to reports from our representatives in Pakistan and the United States information, the barter deal is a bona fide one which is expected to go through. The Pakistanis represent their emergency wheat requirements to be 300,000 tons. External are making the following recommendations to their Acting Minister for consideration by Cabinet: that up to 75,000 tons of Canadian wheat, at a value of approximately $5 million, should be offered to Pakistan; that this transaction should take the form of a loan, the financing of which would be arranged under Section 20A of The Export Credits Insurance Act; that the amount of wheat actually supplied would be made conditional on demonstration of need by the Pakistanis.

Ritchie thought that about 75,000 tons, together with the American quantity and the amount to be obtained from the U.S.S.R., might bring the supplies from the outside up to the required aggregate. The intention in regard to the financing of the Canadian wheat is apparently that some appropriate agency in Canada would obtain funds by taking out a policy with the Export Credits Insurance Corporation and using it to secure credit at the banks. These funds would be used to buy the wheat, with the Pakistanis making up the difference between the amount so purchased and the total price of the wheat supplied under the suggested loan. I understand that Mr. Howe is not disposed to regard such an arrangement with much favour.

COLOMBO PLAN; WHEAT FOR INDIA

43. The Minister of National Defence, as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that in 1951-52, the Canadian contribution to India under the Colombo Plan had consisted of $10 million worth of wheat and $5 million worth of equipment for special projects. The Indian government had asked that Colombo Plan funds during the current year be used to buy two thirds of the 300,000 tons of wheat it was hoping to procure from Canada under the International Wheat Agreement. This would absorb the whole of the expected contribution to India. While such a use of funds would not be out of line with the possibilities that had been indicated when the Plan was established, it lacked the psychological advantages which provision of Canadian equipment would have. It was accordingly recommended that the Indian government be informed that $5 million worth of wheat could be procured under the Colombo Plan funds in accordance with certain understandings.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

44. The Cabinet approved the recommendation of the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs and agreed that:

(a) $5 million worth of wheat be supplied to India during the current fiscal year under the Colombo Plan;

(c) Canadian officials work out urgently with the Indian authorities recommendations concerning other projects to constitute the remainder of Canada's contribution to India under the Colombo Plan in 1952-53; and,

(d) the Indian government be warned that for any future years it should plan on the assumption that wheat would not continue to be available from Canada under the Colombo Plan.

WHEAT FOR INDIA

We are today issuing to the press for release in tomorrow's newspapers a brief announcement of the Government's decision to allow $5 million of Colombo Plan funds to be used for wheat for India. The statement explains that India had requested a larger amount but that in the Canadian view the balance of available funds should be used for capital equipment directly related to India's development programme. Mention is also made of the counterpart fund to be established for internal financing of development projects. We are not particularly anxious to give wide publicity to this agreement but since the press has already gleaned some information we thought it advisable to issue an official statement. Ends.

LETTER No. 1204

New Delhi, October 22, 1952

WHEAT FOR INDIA

Reference: Your telegram No. 216 of September 23, 1952

We called on Prem Narain<sup>45</sup> on October 21 to discuss outstanding matters between us. As indicated in my telegram No. 234 of October 20† he will shortly be taking over Bhattacharyya's work (in addition to his own and Ghosh's) and is, in fact, already handling much of it.

2. He gave us a copy of the attached letter dated October 10 from Bhattacharyya to Saksena.† From this you will see that the Indian authorities are disappointed with the position which we have adopted regarding the expenditure of India's share of Colombo Plan funds for Capital Development for the fiscal year 1952-53. Prem Narain informed us that Saksena was being asked to tone down this letter when he makes representations to the Canadian authorities but he thought that we should see it in order that we would know that the Indian authorities feel fairly strongly about the matter.

3. The letter deals with two points:

(a) the alleged failure on the part of the Canadian Government regarding the issue of a press release announcing the allocation of $5 million under Colombo Plan funds to be used for wheat for India;

(b) a plea for reconsideration of the decision to allocate only $5 million for this purpose.

4. We assume that the first point can be easily straightened out and we do not think any more is in evidence than a little pique at apparent failure to co-ordinate and time press releases. The second point seems to us much more serious. We read the letter in Prem Narain's office and then discussed it with him. He expressed the strong view that India's chief problem, at least in the first two to three years of the Colombo Plan, is internal financing and that donor nations can best help India at this stage by not forcing her to tie Colombo Plan funds too closely to the purchase of capital equipment. The position of the Indian authorities is that they need not only wheat (this need is genuine, see my despatch No. 1031 of September 5)† but they also need the counterpart funds which arise from its sale. They would at present rather have such funds to assist in the internal purchase of equipment, manufactured and purchasable in India, than purchase it from outside. This applied particularly to the multi-purpose projects.

5. I am not in a position to comment on the statement made in Paragraph 3 of Bhattacharyya's letter that "not much of the equipment available in Canada is suitable for such projects." I should have thought that this was hardly the case. What is more disturbing is that at this late date with the fiscal year half gone, there should still be a basic misunderstanding between the Indian and the Canadian authorities as to the objects of expenditure of Colombo Plan capital development funds.

6. Prem Narain said that the balance of $13 million could only be devoted to various small pieces of equipment, scattered over a wide variety of projects. What India would prefer, he suggested, was a package deal covering one specific project. He suggested that this would also be to Canada's advantage since it could then be announced that Canada had contributed to a certain project, whereas it would be difficult to list such contributions on a bits-and-pieces basis.

Department of Economic Affairs, Ministry of Finance of India.

7. We pointed out that we did not think this to be a real disadvantage and that we had always considered that since contributions were made by the donor countries as a whole, it was not necessary for any single donor country to present a complete package. We drew Prem Narain's attention to the statement made by the Minister of Finance to Mr. Chipman on September 6, (our letter No. 1048 of September 9, 1952).<sup>46</sup> He appeared unconvinced.

8. We were subsequently able to see Bhattacharyya for a few minutes prior to his departure on a mission to Washington to negotiate a loan in the United States. Bhattacharyya's opposition was less vehement than that adopted by Prem Narain, as befitted a more senior man; but he seemed firmly convinced that the provision of counterpart funds was the best way, at least in the early stages of the Colombo Plan aid and of Western aid generally, for donor countries to help India. He added that he had explained this position to Mr. McIlraith and Mr. Cavell at Karachi in March and he was surprised that the Canadian authorities were apparently unable to accept it. He seriously hoped that they would reconsider their position.

9. It seems to us that we should try to get out of this impasse. We gained the impression that the Indian authorities would not be prepared (I would hesitate to say, would not be able) to use all of our 1952-53 funds unless we could see our way to giving them some more wheat. They were particularly concerned at being forced into a position where they might have to sell Colombo Plan wheat at the same price at which I.W.A.<sup>47</sup> wheat would have to be sold,<sup>48</sup> with a consequent loss of counterpart funds.

10. On November 1, Bhattacharyya leaves as a member of a group including C.C. Desai of the Ministry of Works, Housing and Supply and S. Bhoothalingam of the Ministry of Commerce and Industry, to negotiate, inter alia, a loan in the United States for the erection of a steel mill. They plan to be in Washington for about three weeks. We have urged Bhattacharyya that he should also visit Ottawa. He would like to accept our advice, but must, of course, first clear with his Ministry. I think the Ministry is almost certain to agree that he should go. His presence, as an able and competent senior civil servant in discussions in Ottawa, might be useful in smoothing out this difficulty. I would not, of course, suggest that negotiations with Saksena be held up pending Bhattacharyya's arrival.

COLOMBO GROUP MEETING:

3.30 P.M., NOVEMBER 3 IN ROOM 175, EAST BLOCK

Present:

Mr. Cavell, Trade and Commerce (International Economic and Technical Co-operation Division)
Mr. Deutsch, Finance
Mr. Heasman, Trade and Commerce
Mr. Rasminsky, Bank of Canada

Also present:

I. Status of 1952-53 Programme(a) India

It was reported that apart from the $5 million grant of wheat no funds have been spent or committed for projects in India during the current year. Canadian consulting engineers had been in Mayurakshi and their report was expected shortly. Mr. Cavell hoped that as a result of the advice and recommendations of the engineers it would be possible to provide electrical equipment required for Mayurakshi to a total of approximately $2 million. Apart from this, no other projects were being considered.

2. The meeting then turned to a discussion of the basic difficulty in programming for India, namely the Indian insistence that the most useful Colombo Plan contribution from Canada is in the form of wheat and the contrary principle which Canadian Ministers appear to have adopted that Canadian capital equipment and not consumer goods should be provided to recipient countries in the Colombo Plan. In this connection the Group considered the report received from New Delhi in despatch No. 1204 of October 28 and its enclosure, a copy of a letter from Mr. Bhattacharyya to Mr. Saksena instructing him to make representations to the Canadian Government particularly in connection with the Government's apparent decision not to make wheat available in future. (No communication along this line has as yet been received from Mr. Saksena.) The meeting was informed that Mr. Bhattacharyya is arriving in Washington on November 7 for consultation with the International Bank and that arrangements have been made for him to visit Ottawa for Colombo Plan discussions. It was assumed that Mr. Bhattacharyya would continue to press the case strongly for additional wheat for India under the Colombo Plan but it was agreed that no steps should be taken, at least in advance of Bhattacharyya's arrival, to raise this matter with Ministers for their re-consideration. It was thought that if in the meantime the Cabinet decides to invite Parliament to enact legislation placing the Canadian contribution to the Colombo Plan on a statutory basis for the next four years, the Indians may feel that they can lessen their pressure for wheat since funds will continue to be available which can be used on capital equipment required at a later stage.

3. The Group was inclined to agree that perhaps the most effective assistance from Canada would be through the project approach, that is by taking over particular projects from the early blueprint stage and carrying them through to completion on the basis of plans drawn up by Canadian technical experts in consultation with their opposite numbers in the receiving country. In undertaking a project Canada would accept entire responsibility for the provision of the foreign exchange element and for the engineering and technical supervision. While it would normally be expected that the recipient government would pay for all local material and labour costs, the possibility in certain circumstances of using counterpart funds derived from grants of Canadian consumer goods would not be ruled out. An example of a brand new project which might be taken over was the Umtru project in Northern India where, as Mr. Cavell reported, the Indian Government is anxious to develop hydro-electric power as an important step in improving the conditions and opportunities for the local tribesmen in an area where the government is anxious to offset the communist influence from Tibet. The meeting agreed that Umtru should be seriously considered but that care should be taken to avoid any commitment for this or other possible projects until sufficient information was available to establish clearly that the project in question was economically sound and technically feasible and of high enough priority to justify its inclusion in the Canadian programme.

4. It was agreed that continued efforts should be made to secure as much information as possible about capital equipment which might be required during this current fiscal year in connection with projects already under way in India. This information should be sought through Canadian consulting engineers now in the sub-continent, from the High Commissioner in New Delhi and from Mr. Bhattacharyya when he comes to Ottawa. Mr. Cavell undertook to provide External Affairs with a memorandum indicating precisely the sort of information which was required so that the Department could explain the problems fully to Mr. Escott Reid and ask him to do what he can

(i) to find out what might be supplied from Canada in the way of capital equipment items in the immediate future, and

(ii) as much information as possible about complete projects which it might be feasible for Canada to take over and which could be discussed in detail by Mr. Cavell when he makes his next trip to the area some time in the new year.

5. Although the Group decided not to take any further action for the present in regard to the question of additional wheat for India, Mr. Cavell was asked to explore the actual situation in regard to the physical movement of wheat out of West Coast ports. It was understood by some members of the Group that it would not be possible to ship any more wheat until after next July.

RECORD OF DISCUSSIONS WITH MR. BHATTACHARYYA, AND CANADIAN OFFICIALS, TUESDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1952

Colombo Plan Programme for India

Present:

Mr. A.E. Ritchie (Chairman), External Affairs
Mr. Bhattacharyya, Indian Government
Miss Rukmini, Office of Indian High Commissioner
Mr. Cavell, I.E.T.C. Division (T & C)
Mr. Heasman, T & C
Mr. Ronning, External Affairs
Mr. Wright, Finance
Mr. Freeman, Bank of Canada

Also present: Miss Meagher, Mr. Bridle, Mr. Rosenthal, Mr. Pratt, Mr. Thurrott and Mr. Goldschlag.

Mr. Ritchie: in opening the discussion on this item, explained in general terms the reasons behind the Canadian preference for providing Colombo Plan aid in the form of plant and capital equipment rather than wheat. It was the Government's firm and consistent policy that wheat and other staple exports should be sold on a cash basis. Such commodities constituted our currency in international trade and safe-guarded our balance of payments position. The Government was extremely reluctant to sanction any transactions (whether through the Colombo Plan, NATO, or otherwise) which departed from this general policy. An exception had been made in the first year of the Colombo Plan when wheat was given on a grant basis in India. This was done for very valid reasons prevailing at that time but it was not intended that this exception should establish a precedent for future years. As indicated in the earlier meeting with Mr. Sundaresan, Canada's first preference was to provide capital equipment.

2. Mr. Bhattacharyya indicated that in general his Government agreed that the most ideal form of external assistance was the provision of plant and equipment not available locally. There had, however, been limiting factors on the extent to which India could absorb such plant and equipment from Canada under the Colombo Plan. India's economic development plan had been worked out before the Colombo Plan had come into existence and as early as 1948 and '49 orders had been placed abroad for almost all of the capital equipment needed for the execution of the development projects to be constructed up to and including the fiscal year 1953-54. Except for miscellaneous equipment needed to fill in or expand previous requirements there was very little in the way of essential capital goods which had not already been contracted for. The second limiting factor was that virtually all Indian engineers had been British-trained, worked according to British engineering practice, drew up requirements in terms of British specifications and looked to Great Britain as the source of capital equipment. In principle, the Indians could agree that suitable capital equipment should come first but in practice these two limitations made it difficult to receive the whole contribution in the form of Canadian capital equipment in the next couple of years. In the current situation wheat was at least equally conducive to development. The need for local finance was great and the counterpart funds arising from the sale of the wheat helped to provide rupee capital. It also helped an immediate problem by permitting the Government to sell wheat at lower than the prevailing rates and thus some of the people could be fed more cheaply.

3. Mr. Bhattacharyya explained further that it had been the view of the Indian authorities that there was much to be said from a public relations point of view in identifying particular economic development projects with particular donor countries. Thus they had felt that Canada's contribution to the economic development of India would be more effective in terms of promoting good will and friendly relations if its Colombo Plan aid were associated with a few small or middle-sized projects which could be completely, or almost completely, carried out with Canadian assistance. Since every project required a substantial proportion of rupee capital, this concept could only be put into effect if Canada were prepared to provide not only the essential capital equipment but also the means of creating counterpart funds. The alternative, which under the present Canadian policy was inevitable, was to distribute Canadian assistance in the form of capital equipment among several projects which were being financed from a variety of sources.

4. During the discussion which followed, Mr. Bhattacharyya explained that the economic development projects which were now under way represented the maximum effort which the Indian Government could put into its Five-Year Plan at the present time and that while there were additional projects which would be undertaken, the Indian Government would not, in any event, be in a financial position to commence operation on these before 1954-55. External assistance for such projects, if limited to plant and capital equipment, could, therefore, not be used for the next couple of years since the corresponding rupee capital for local costs could not be made available by the Indian Government. Such projects could only be begun, if external assistance could be made available for counterpart funds as well as for capital equipment.

III. Status of Counterpart Funds

14. The commodities which have been provided to India by Canada under counterpart fund arrangements consist of $10 million worth of wheat in 1951/52, $5 million worth of wheat in 1952/53, and $4.5 million worth of buses and trucks which will go forward in 1952/53. It had already been agreed between the two Governments that the counterpart funds for the $10 million grant of wheat would be used for local costs in connection with Mayurakshi. It seemed clear, from figures which had already been provided by the Indian Government and from explanatory remarks by Mr. Bhattacharyya, that the total rupee expenditure at Mayurakshi would amount to approximately $15 million. The meeting agreed that the counterpart funds arising from the sale of the current year's wheat contribution of $5 million should be devoted to Mayurakshi. If it developed that the full amount would not be required, any balance would be used for the construction of the Umtru project, provided that it was finally decided to accept this as part of the Canadian programme. There was no discussion of the use to which the bus and truck counterpart funds should be put since the first payment into the fund will not be made for more than a year and the total amount will not be paid up for six years.

15. Mr. Bhattacharyya informed the meeting that the Indian Government had credited the Special Account with the rupee equivalent of the $10 million wheat contribution as soon as the wheat reached India and before it was actually distributed for sale. He did not have the figures for disbursements from the Special Account or for the balance, if any, remaining. It was agreed that there was no immediate need to have this information and the meeting accepted Mr. Bhattacharyya's suggestion that the Indian Government should furnish an accounting statement as soon as possible after March 31, 1953.

Memorandum from Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs to Cabinet

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, December 9, 1952

COLOMBO PLAN — 1952-53 PROGRAMME FOR INDIA

Cabinet has already authorized the expenditure of $5 million from the 1952/53 Colombo Plan Vote for the provision of wheat to India, the equivalent value in rupees to be credited by the Indian Government to the special counterpart fund account for use of defraying local costs of economic development projects. Present indications are that most, if not all, of these counterpart funds will be required to complete the construction of the Mayurakshi irrigation and hydro-electric project, which has been largely financed so far from the counterpart funds arising from the 1951-52 Canadian grant of $10 million worth of wheat.

2. It will be recalled that the 1951-52 programme for India also included an allocation of $500,000 for direct capital aid to Mayurakshi in the form of certain items of Canadian equipment. Preparatory work on the hydro-electric plant for this project has now reached the stage where the Indian authorities are ready to place orders for all the electrical and generating equipment and it is estimated that the total requirements will cost in the neighbourhood of $5 million. Two Canadian consulting engineers have recently surveyed the project and have submitted a highly favourable report on it. The detailed specifications have been drawn up by the Indian engineers at Mayurakshi in accordance with British standards but these can be converted into equivalent Canadian terms without difficulty and if the provision of Canadian equipment is approved, it is intended that one or two Indian engineers will proceed to Canada immediately to collaborate with Canadian engineers in this task.

3. In addition to the generating equipment needed at the site of the power house, the Indian Government has requested that Canada also supply the transmission lines and related items required to distribute the electric energy to the surrounding district.

4. Canada has already contributed substantially to the construction of Mayurakshi through the use of counterpart funds. The provision of all the necessary capital equipment would make it virtually a Canadian project.

Recommendation: It is recommended that approval be given for the provision of generating and transmission equipment for Mayurakshi up to a maximum of $5 million (this total to include the amount of $500,000 allocated to Mayurakshi in the 1951-51 programme).

COLOMBO PLAN; 1952-53 PROGRAMME FOR INDIA

33. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs pro tem referred to the discussion at the meeting of September 13th at which the Cabinet authorized the expenditure of $5 million from the 1952-53 Colombo Plan Vote for the provision of wheat for India. Most, if not all, the counterpart funds set aside by India would be required to complete the construction of the Mayurakshi irrigation and hydro-electric project. It was estimated that electrical and generating equipment for the project would cost in the neighbourhood of $5 million. In addition to the generating equipment, the Indian government had requested that Canada supply the transmission lines and related items required to distribute the electric energy to the surrounding district. It was recommended that approval be given for provision of equipment accordingly.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Acting Minister's memorandum, Dec. 9, 1952 — Cab. Doc. 375-52)

34. The Acting Prime Minister said the project had been carefully considered by the Department of Trade and Commerce and appeared to be a sound one. He thought the recommendation should be approved.

35. The Cabinet approved the recommendation of the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs pro tem that, under the 1952-53 Colombo plan programme for India, generating and transmission equipment be provided for the Mayurakshi irrigation and hydro-electric project up to a maximum of $5 million; the total to include the amount of $500,000 that had been allocated for direct capital aid to the project in the 1951-52 programme.

COLOMBO PLAN — PROGRAMME FOR PAKISTAN

As a result of careful investigations into the supply situation in Canada, it has now become clear that the original programme for Pakistan which had been worked out with Pakistan officials and approved by the Cabinet must be amended. We had been considering the possibility of providing a number of diesel locomotives to substitute for other items for which materials are not available. However, after consultation with the International Bank we have decided not to go ahead with this project which the Bank itself is anxious to handle.

2. We have now drawn up a revised programme which responsible officials here consider to be practicable in present circumstances. We propose to submit the revised programme to the Cabinet within the next week or ten days. Meanwhile we have discussed it with Mohammed Ali, who is informing his government and who assures us that it will be acceptable.

3. For your information the programme, subject to Cabinet approval would be as follows:

(a) Cement Plant for Thal

This would include engineering survey and provision and erection of machinery. It would not include the construction of the building except for the provision of a minimum amount of structural steel and the provision if necessary of a temporary diesel power plant. Agreement would include the qualification that the construction of the plant would be subject to review by the Canadian and Pakistan Governments after receipt of the engineering report. Approximate cost estimated at $5 million.

(b) Photographic and Geological Survey

Cost $2 million.

(c) Equipment for Thal Livestock Farm

Cost $2 hundred thousand.

(d) Railway Ties in an amount to bring the total to $10 million.

Dear Mr. Enver:

I refer to the programme for Canadian assistance under our 1951-52 Colombo Plan allocation to Pakistan. At present, I understand, the programme is as follows:

- |    |  |                       |
|----|--|-----------------------|
| 1. | Cement plant for Thal Colonization Project                   | approx. $5 million   |
| 2. | Railway ties   | approx. $2.8 million |
| 3. | Air and geological survey (subject to further consideration) | approx. $1 million   |
| 4. | Agricultural machinery (subject to further consideration)    | approx. $1 million   |
| 5. | Experimental Livestock Farm for Thal Colonization Project    | approx. $200,000     |

This project will be carried out jointly with Australia and New Zealand. It is expected that Canada will supply chiefly machinery and equipment. Steps have been taken to furnish detailed information on requirements so that availability in Canada can be determined.

Total

approx. $10 million

Under the proposed procedure, the programme listed above would be subject to change or addition, with the approval of both Governments, in the light of the supply position in Canada or other considerations. The cost of all the projects finally included in the programme could not, of course, exceed approximately $10 million.

To facilitate the carrying out of the above programme, it is proposed that

(a) the Government of Pakistan direct the Government of Canada to pay to the Canadian Commercial Corporation as agent of the Pakistani Government the amount of any grant that Canada proposes to make to the Government of Pakistan under the Colombo Plan;

(b) each such grant made to the Government of Pakistan will be used to procure goods and services to assist in the economic development programme of Pakistan and will be applied only to specific projects that have been approved in accordance with the "Statement of Principles" agreed between the Government of Canada and the Government of Pakistan on the 10th day of September, 1951;

(c) the Government of Pakistan will procure the said goods and services through the Canadian Commercial Corporation which shall act as agent of the Government of Pakistan in that behalf, and all contracts for the procurement of such goods and services must be approved in writing by the Secretary of State for External Affairs of Canada before they are entered into; and

(d) in the event that Pakistan has not, by a future date to be determined by Canada of which notice in writing will be given to Pakistan, applied the whole of any grant in accordance with paragraph (b) above, Pakistan will on request in writing by Canada pay to Canada in Canadian dollars an amount equal to the portion of the grant not so applied, out of the funds at the credit of Pakistan with the Canadian Commercial Corporation.

If the proposed procedure is acceptable to your Government, this letter and your reply will constitute an agreement on this subject, effective from the date of your reply, and a direction to the Government of Canada to make payment to the Canadian Commercial Corporation as agent of Pakistan as set out in paragraph (a) above.

Dear Mr. Pearson,

Please refer to Mr. Enver's letter of March 27th, 1952, which was a reply to your communication of March 25th, proposing agreement between our two Governments on a procedure to facilitate carrying out the programme of Canadian Assistance under your Government's 1951-52 Colombo Plan allocation to Pakistan.

2. In Para 1 of your above-mentioned letter of March 25th, 1952, are given the details of the programme for the year 1952. In view of a number of factors, my Government has now decided to request deletion of item No. 4, namely "Agricultural machinery", (approximately $1 million), and to increase the expenditure on item No. 3, "Air and Geological Survey" to approximately $2 million.

3. If the revision of the programme as outlined in the above paragraph No. 2 is acceptable to your Government, then the programme for Canadian Assistance under your 1951-52 Colombo Plan allocation to Pakistan would be as follows:

- |    |  |                       |
|----|--|-----------------------|
| 1) | Cement Plant for Thal Colonization Project                   | approx. $5 million   |

| 3) | Air and Geological survey (subject to further consideration) | approx. $2 million   |
| 4) | Experimental Livestock Farm for Thal Colonization Project    | approx. $200,000.00  |

This project will be carried out jointly with Australia and New Zealand. It is expected that Canada will supply chiefly machinery and equipment. Steps have been taken to furnish detailed information on requirements so that availability in Canada can be determined.

Total approx. $10 million

I shall be grateful if you will kindly let me have at an early date the views of your Government.

COLOMBO PLAN — 1951/52 PROGRAMME FOR PAKISTAN

In the exchange of letters in late March, with the Indian and Pakistan High Commissioners, agreeing on a procedure for the use of the funds which were to be carried over into this year, a list of projects was set forth with approximate amounts earmarked for each project. It was agreed, however, that the programme as set forth "would be subject to change or addition, with the approval of both Governments, in the light of the supply position in Canada or other considerations."

2. During Mr. Cavell's visit in Karachi he discussed the various projects with Pakistan officials and the Pakistani decided that the Agricultural Machinery item should be deleted and the Air and Geological Survey should become a $2 million, instead of a $1 million project. This suited us better since it turned out that the agricultural machinery the Pakistani were expected to get was really heavy earth-moving equipment and related items, which we could not supply. Moreover, the Survey project has impressed officials here as being a very useful and worthwhile project and we were glad to have the Pakistani agree to extend the scope of the Survey.

3. The High Commissioner for Pakistan has now submitted his Government's proposed revision of the programme in a formal letter addressed to you. A copy of Mr. Ikramullah's letter has been sent to the Department of Finance and Trade and Commerce for submission to Mr. Abbott and Mr. Howe. Will you please let me know if you concur in the change requested by the Pakistani?<sup>49</sup>

Ottawa, June 14, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

POSSIBLE CANADIAN PROGRAMME FOR PAKISTAN IN 1952/3 UNDER THE COLOMBO PLAN

On June 10, the Canadian officials concerned met with Mr. Ikramullah, the Pakistan High Commissioner, and with Mr. Said Hasan of the Pakistan Ministry of Economic Affairs, to discuss the projects which the Pakistan authorities wished to have considered for inclusion in any programme for 1952/53. The following notes constitute an informal record of the discussion.

OK. L.B. P[earson]

a) Mianwali

A power plant is to be constructed at Mianwali to provide electric energy for the Thal area. Pakistan engineers have done a survey and have prepared blue prints and a U.N. expert has been called in by the Pakistan Government to investigate the project and to advise on the plans drawn up by Pakistan engineers. The U.N. expert's report is to be considered by the Pakistan Planning Commission probably before the end of this month. It is expected that Pakistan will be in a position to begin the project soon and to provide specifications for the equipment and materials needed. Mr. Said Hasan has promised to provide a copy of the U.N. expert's report and a memorandum describing the project, including the time-table for the commencement of the work and the date on which Canadian equipment could be put to use.

b) East Bengal Irrigation Scheme

The requirement here is for lift pumps to irrigate an area of approximately 500,000 acres. One pump irrigates approximately 1,000 acres. Depending upon the amount of money available for this project, the Pakistanis could use up to 500 pumps. An FAO expert has been in the region investigating conditions and requirements and his report will be made available to the Canadian authorities.

c) Karachi Water Supply and Sewage

The population of Karachi has increased from 300,000 to 1,400,000 since partition. The water supply is very inadequate and the municipal government is unable to provide the necessary finances to improve it. The central government must take steps very soon as the present situation is extremely dangerous from the health point of view. The requirements from Canada would be for intermediate pumping stations.

d) Taunsa

This is an area somewhat similar to the Thal region where the Pakistan Government is planning to undertake an irrigation and hydro-electric project. Canada's assistance is requested in the construction of a barrage. A technical report of engineers will be available soon and detailed specifications will be provided.

e) East Pakistan River Transport

A large part of East Pakistan is not served by railroads and there is a great deal of river traffic both for people and goods. The Pakistan Government would like Canada to provide shallow draft boats (not bigger than 500 tons). A memorandum describing and justifying the project will be provided and detailed specifications supplied. A suggestion was made, which Mr. Said Hasan promised to look into, that the Pakistani might themselves build the boats and that we might provide engines.

It was generally agreed that all five projects should be investigated further.

A copy of this despatch is being supplied to the Pakistan High Commissioner for his information.

THE COMMONWEALTH

The Colombo Plan

6. Mr. Ritchie. Mr. Said Hasan, of the Pakistan Ministry of Economic Affairs, visited Ottawa on July 16 and met with the Interdepartmental Colombo Group to discuss, in a preliminary way, a possible programme of Canadian aid to Pakistan for 1952-53. Mr. Said Hasan had suggested certain projects during an earlier meeting with Canadian officials and had promised to provide detailed information regarding them. At the meeting on July 16 he submitted two or three additional projects and changed the order of priority of those projects included in his first list. It was made clear by the Pakistan High Commissioner, who was also present at the meeting, that the inclusion of certain projects and the high priority given to others were the result of political pressure brought to bear by certain elements who complained that a disproportionate share of Colombo Plan aid was going to the Punjab. The Central Government apparently recognizes the validity of wider distribution of the benefits of external aid and is now anxious that Canada's programme should include projects in East Pakistan and in the North West Frontier Province as well as in the Punjab. The list as it now stands in the order of priority given the projects by the Pakistan Government is as follows:

(1) Lift irrigation project — East Pakistan (pumps and tube-well equipment required from Canada)

(2) River transport project — East Pakistan (small shallow draft boats with diesel engines required — Pakistan might be able to provide the hulls if the engines were supplied by Canada)

(3) Warsak hydro-electric project — North West Frontier Province

(4) Mianwali hydro-electric project — Thal, Punjab

(5) Karnafuli hydro-electric project — East Pakistan

(6) Karachi water supply

(7) Taunsa irrigation project

It is understood that Canada cannot undertake all these projects; they allow for a selection to be made. Mr. Said Hasan and Mr. Ikramullah were anxious that the 1952-53 programme should include the first four projects.

PAKISTAN; REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE RE WHEAT REQUIREMENTS

44. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that, on July 21st, the High Commissioner for Pakistan had conveyed a request from his government for Canadian assistance in purchasing some 300,000 tons of wheat valued at $20 to $25 million to be delivered to Pakistan for the end of March 1953. The High Commissioner had suggested several possible courses of action. None of the suggestions seemed to be practicable or advisable. However, in view of the important bearing which the prospective shipment of Canadian wheat would have on the well-being and stability of the South-Asian area, he strongly recommended that some means be found to come to the assistance of Pakistan in this instance. One possibility might be the issuance of a contract of insurance or a guarantee against which credit could be secured from commercial banks under the terms of the Export Credits Insurance Act. The Act had not been used in the past to finance purchases of this character or to cover a period as long as the five to seven years suggested in this case. If it were thought undesirable to create a precedent by resorting to such a course of action, it might be possible to finance some of Pakistan's other purchases from Canada, such as certain arms purchases, through this channel, thus releasing funds which could be used to buy at least part of the amount of wheat.

An explanatory note was circulated.

45. The Minister of Finance said Canadian wheat sales had always been made on a cash basis. He thought it would be undesirable to disturb this practice. The only practical solution he could see would be to increase Canadian contributions to the Colombo Plan, thus enabling a portion or all of the 300,000 tons to be brought under the Plan. This would involve a new and unforeseen cash disbursement by the Federal Treasury without any immediate compensating revenue from other sources. Parliamentary approval would be required.

46. The Acting Prime Minister said the Export Credits Insurance Act was not intended for this sort of transaction and that, in any event, it seemed to him unwise to introduce an element of credit into transactions involving wheat or metals.

47. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the request of the Pakistan government for Canadian assistance in supplying 300,000 tons of wheat to that country and agreed that the suggestion of the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning the possibility of financing certain suitable Pakistan purchases in Canada through the Export Credits Insurance Act, thus enabling the Pakistani government to use the funds so released for the purpose of Canadian wheat, be explored and a report submitted to the Cabinet.<sup>50</sup>

WHEAT FOR PAKISTAN

39. The Minister of National Defence as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, referred to discussion at the meeting of August 14th, concerning the request from Pakistan for assistance in financing the procurement of some 300,000 tons of wheat from Canada. In accordance with the decision, investigation had been made of the possibility of providing assistance through enabling Canadian exports to Pakistan other than wheat to be financed under the Export Credits Insurance Act thus releasing costs for the wheat purchase. It appeared that the possibility of providing assistance in this indirect manner was not promising. The United States government was contemplating a loan of $15 million to Pakistan at a low rate of interest to finance the purchase of 160,000 tons of wheat there. The U.S.S.R. was arranging for an exchange of jute and cotton against wheat. It appeared desirable that some assistance be provided by Canada and it was recommended that Pakistan be authorized to use the facilities of the Export Credits Insurance Act to assist in financing 75,000 tons of wheat from Canada between now and March 31st and that payment be over a period of 5 to 10 years.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

40. Mr. Claxton said the Secretary of State for External Affairs was very anxious that the most sympathetic consideration should be given to the request for financial assistance. The position of Pakistan was of the greatest importance in relation particularly to the situation of the Moslem countries and South-East Asia. He personally agreed with Mr. Pearson's view and thought the continued strength and good will of Pakistan was of vital importance.

41. The Minister of Finance thought it quite improper for the Export Credits Insurance Act to be used to finance a wheat purchase. If that were done, a very undesirable precedent would be established and it would be difficult to refuse future requests from other countries. If special assistance were to be given, it would be preferable to have a special vote in the estimates. He understood, however, that it was not likely that the full amount of Canadian assistance to Pakistan under the Colombo Plan could be expended during the present fiscal year on the projects for which it had been allocated. In the circumstances the desirable course might be to allow Pakistan to use $5 million for the purchase of wheat and to hold over to the next fiscal year some engineering order which could not, in fact, be ready during the present year.

42. The Cabinet, noted the recommendation of the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning the desirability of providing special assistance to Pakistan to finance purchases of Canadian wheat and agreed that:

(a) no arrangement be made to enable Pakistan to use the provisions of the Export Credits Insurance Act for the purchase of wheat, but,

(b) the government of Pakistan be informed that the Canadian government would permit $5 million of the appropriation for assistance to Pakistan under the Colombo Plan to be used for the purchase of wheat during the fiscal year 1952-53, if a similar sum in Pakistani funds was set aside for development under the Colombo Plan.

WHEAT FOR PAKISTAN

38. The Minister of National Defence, as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs referred to a decision of October 9th that $12 million of Canadian No. 5 wheat be delivered to Yugoslavia on the basis of a 20 percent cash payment and the remaining 80 percent to be paid at the end of one year, the whole transaction to be under the Export Credits Insurance Act. In reply to an earlier request from Pakistan for assistance in the financing of the procurement of some 300,000 tons of wheat to that country, Cabinet had agreed on September 13th that, in the absence of any suitable alternative, Pakistan be informed that the Canadian government would be prepared to allow the use of up to $5 million of the proposed Canadian contribution under the Colombo Plan to finance the purchase of a portion of the required wheat from Canada.

Although no reply had yet been received from Pakistan in this matter, the High Commissioner for Pakistan had indicated that the impression would probably be created that Pakistan was being treated less generously than Yugoslavia.

It was for consideration whether it would not now be advisable to make an offer to the Pakistan Government somewhat along the lines of the arrangement with Yugoslavia.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Acting Minister's memorandum, Oct. 22, 1952 — Cab. Doc. 338-52)†

39. The Minister of Trade and Commerce felt strongly that the arrangement with Yugoslavia for purchase on credit of $12 million of Canadian No. 5 wheat had been ill advised. Wheat was a commodity which should not normally be sold on any other basis than cash payments. In any event, this had always been the practice in wheat exporting countries and it now seemed quite clear that anything short of cash on delivery would inevitably lead to difficulties.

If it were felt that political reasons were strong enough to warrant delivery of the Canadian wheat on credit to Commonwealth or other countries, he suggested that a special appropriation be sought to cover such sales.

40. The Prime Minister said that, in cases where cash sales of wheat were not possible, it would probably be inadvisable for the Canadian government to go beyond agreeing to the financing of a portion of wheat deliveries under the Colombo Plan as had been done with India.

41. The Cabinet, after discussion agreed that

(a) Canada could not go beyond the offer made to the Pakistan Government on September 17th for the financing of a certain portion of wheat deliveries to that country under the Colombo Plan; and,

(b) as a matter of general practice in future, the government would not agree to any alternative to the cash payment basis other than the sort of Colombo Plan financing arrangements recently made with India.

6. It was recalled that when Mr. Said Hasan was in Ottawa he had put forward five projects for consideration; hydro-electric development projects at Karnafuli, Warsak and Mianwali, a lift irrigation project in East Bengal and a river transport project also in East Bengal. Mr. Cavell reported that two Canadian consulting engineers had gone to Pakistan to examine the hydro-electric projects at first hand and to report on the type and appropriate timing of Canadian assistance. They had completed their survey of Karnafuli and Mianwali and were ready to look at Warsak. Consideration of the Canadian equipment to be provided would have to await receipt of the engineers' reports.

7. Several attempts have been made to ascertain the real requirements for the East Bengal lift irrigation project but specifications received had been useless and it had not yet been possible to secure the basic information on this project. Mr. Cavell reported that three or four companies in Canada were prepared to undertake the manufacture of pumps for the East Bengal project when the precise specifications were available but no definite action could be taken meanwhile. An urgent request had been sent to the Canadian Mission in Karachi to attempt to find out from the Pakistan authorities the depth of the river water and the height the pumps would be required to lift it. This information would make it possible to design a pump to meet the requirements.

8. On the river transport project for East Bengal, Mr. Cavell reported the Central Government authorities and the local Bengali authorities disagreed on requirements. The Pakistan Government wished to have Canada provide the complete unit, i.e. hull and engine, while the Provincial authority preferred to have the hulls built in East Bengal and to equip them with engines provided by Canada under the Colombo Plan. Until the Central and Provincial Governments reached agreement there was nothing that could be done at the Canadian end.

WHEAT FOR PAKISTAN<sup>51</sup>

In connection with the efforts which the Pakistan Government made a few months ago to secure supplies of wheat quickly in order to tide them over until more permanent arrangements could be made, you may recall that they secured the agreement of the U.K. Government to the diversion of a cargo of Australian wheat destined for the United Kingdom. The diversion was made on the condition that Pakistan would replace this cargo in a few months' time. I understand from Vogel of Trade and Commerce that the Pakistan High Commissioner is calling for bids on a replacement cargo from Canada today.

2. Although no action by the Canadian Government is required in connection with this transaction, I think that its significance from several points of view should be noted within this Department.

3. In the first place, today's action by the Pakistanis would seem to show a very commendable determination on their part to live up to their undertakings. The evidence is all the more impressive when it is realized that this replacement wheat will have to be bought at the very high price (over $2.60 a bushel) applicable to wheat shipped from Atlantic ports and outside the International Wheat Agreement.

4. Secondly, the fact that they are making the replacement with this very expensive Canadian wheat would seem to indicate either that the quantities of wheat which they have managed to secure from other sources (e.g. the U.S.A., U.S.S.R. and Turkey) are no more than adequate to meet their own urgent requirements or that the price of such wheat is even higher than that which they will have to pay for this Canadian shipment. Otherwise, one would have expected them to use part of the wheat from those other sources to replace the cargo received earlier from the United Kingdom.

5. Thirdly, the insistence by the United Kingdom on a replacement in these circumstances would seem to indicate that the United Kingdom does not regard itself as in a position to be particularly generous to Pakistan. Apparently, at the time of the original diversion, the United Kingdom asked

noted. W[ilgress]

that replacement should be in the form of No. 2 Northern wheat and that this wheat should reach the United Kingdom not later than December 15. It would seem that the United Kingdom has not seen fit to relent on these original terms.

6. Finally, whatever considerations may have prompted the Pakistanis to go ahead with this replacement from Canada, it may seem rather surprising that they have not resorted to Colombo Plan financing. As you know, our offer to allow them $5 million worth of wheat under the Colombo Plan is still open. The fact that they have not used these facilities for this purchase, despite the pretty heavy outlay of dollars involved, would seem to emphasize their determination to keep their share of our Colombo Plan funds intact for use directly on development projects.

MR. MENZIES' REMARKS ABOUT NATO AT PRESS CONFERENCE

At Mr. Menzies's Press Conference this morning at the Parliamentary Press Gallery, he emphasized the reciprocal importance of North Atlantic, Middle East and Southeast Asian security arrangements and the bearing these have on what he termed "the whole picture". He was then asked specifically which NATO activities were of concern to Australia. He replied: "I don't know what NATO is talking about. If I did, we just might have some intelligent contribution to make. Stranger things have happened." He then expressed disappointment that there was no machinery in existence by which Australia could be kept informed of NATO arrangements which, in fact, might be of interest to Australia. DESPATCH No. K-1157

MR. MENZIES' VISIT TO OTTAWA

The Prime Minister of Australia and Mrs. Menzies, accompanied by Mr. Watt (Secretary to the Department of External Affairs), Dr. Wilson (Secretary to the Department of the Finance), Mr. Chilton (Deputy Secretary, Department of Finance), Mr. Brown (Secretary to the Prime Minister's Department), Mr. Cockburn (Press Secretary to the Prime Minister) and Mr. Cox (Melbourne Herald) visited Ottawa from June 22-26. Mr. and Mrs. Menzies were guests of the Governor-General during their short stay in the city.

2. Mr. Menzies had discussions with Mr. St. Laurent, Mr. Pearson, Mr. Abbott and Mr. Claxton and, for your information, I am giving below an account of these conversations.

3. I attach a copy of a memorandum prepared in the Department for the Prime Minister, giving background information on a number of topics which it was thought Mr. Menzies might want to talk about.†

4. In Mr. Menzies' discussions with Mr. Pearson, the former brought up the subjects mentioned in your telegram No. WA-1661 of June 21.† Security in the Pacific was discussed in a very general way and Mr. Menzies mentioned that he hoped the first meeting of the Pacific Council would be held in Honolulu in August. Nothing of significance was raised in this part of the conversation.

5. On the morning of June 23, Mr. Menzies held a press conference in the Parliamentary Press Gallery and emphasized the reciprocal importance of North Atlantic, Middle East and South-East Asian security arrangements and the bearing these had on what he termed "the whole picture". He was then

He talked to me about this — but had nothing to suggest. I told him we were doing our best to let our friends in Australia know what NATO was doing and I said that Mr. Heeney and Sir Keith Officer were in close touch in Paris. I expressed appreciation of the Australian wishes in this matter and suggested they should examine the matter when the Pacific Security Pact meeting took place this summer. I asked Mr. Menzies if he were aware of the formula we had adopted for EDC — but he seemed to be ignorant of this. L.B. P[earson] asked which NATO activities were of concern to Australia. He replied: "I don't know what NATO is talking about. If I did, we just might have some intelligent contribution to make. Stranger things have happened." He then expressed disappointment that there was no machinery in existence by which Australia could be kept informed of NATO arrangements which might be of interest to Australia. When asked whether he would discuss this problem with Mr. Pearson, he stated: "I don't know whether Mr. Pearson will be able to help in this matter." Mr. Menzies did bring up this question with Mr. Pearson but made no suggestions as to how effective liaison might be worked out. The Minister told him we were doing our best to let our friends in Australia know what NATO was doing and said that Mr. Heeney and Sir Keith Officer were in close touch in Paris. The Minister said we appreciated Australian wishes for effective liaison with NATO and suggested that the problem be examined by the Pacific Council at its meeting later this summer. Mr. Pearson asked Mr. Menzies if he were aware of the formula which had been worked out between NATO and EDC. Mr. Menzies had no knowledge of this. Mr. Pearson suggested that a similar formula might possibly be suitable for liaison between NATO and the Pacific Council.

6. Mr. Menzies told Mr. Pearson that he thought it would be useful if a Commonwealth economic conference could be held, but he realized that Canada could not take the initiative in calling such a conference. Mr. Menzies had mentioned this subject in his press conference and later in his speech to the Canadian Club he strongly urged that Commonwealth Prime Ministers meet to study the various problems of trade, finance and economic development. You may have noticed in Hansard that a question about this was asked in the House of Commons on June 26. Mr. Diefenbaker asked if the Canadian Government would consider giving a lead in the direction of convening such a conference. Mr. St. Laurent answered that Mr. Menzies had discussed the subject with him, but the Canadian Government, Mr. St. Laurent said, would not take the initiative in calling such a conference.

7. Since the State Department had been very kind in keeping you fully informed of Mr. Menzies' discussions in Washington, we were anxious to reciprocate and tell U.S. Embassy officials in Ottawa what Mr. Menzies discussed here. It was arranged that Mr. J.H. Morgan, Counsellor at the Embassy, would come to the Department and be informed of the talks. However, he was called out of town suddenly and the Embassy told us he would be unable to come until sometime this week. We were not going to inform him of Mr. Pearson's suggestion that a liaison arrangement such as that worked out between NATO and EDC might be the solution for NATO liaison with the Pacific Council.

8. Mr. Watt, Secretary to the Department of External Affairs, had a very worthwhile discussion with members of the Department on various problems which were of concern to his Department. I am attaching a memorandum on these talks.

9. I am sending copies of this despatch to London, Canberra and our Permanent Representative to the North Atlantic Council in Paris.

[Ottawa, n.d.]

DISCUSSIONS WITH MR. A.S. WATT, SECRETARY TO THE AUSTRALIAN DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

On June 25 Mr. A.S. Watt accompanied by Mr. Cutts of the Australian High Commissioner's Office met the following members of the Department in the Under-Secretary's Office: Messrs. Reid, Ritchie, Leger, Norman, Ronning, Watkins and Miss Ireland.

2. The Under-Secretary said that the most serious problem for Canada at the moment was how United States civilian control could be established over the military authorities. Mr. Watt commented that Australia's most important long-range problem was that of adjusting itself to developments in Southeast Asia, and its biggest immediate problem had been the securing of the Tripartite Security Treaty in the Pacific. He mentioned that Australia was not as optimistic as other members of the Commonwealth about the pacific intentions of the Japanese, and had wanted real restrictions on Japanese rearmament put in the peace treaty. Referring to the Under-Secretary's opening remark, Mr. Watt said the Australian Government had wanted to avoid any public protest to the United States which might antagonize Congress before the Tripartite Security Treaty was signed. He mentioned that Australia had privately made repeated protests to the State Department about General MacArthur's acts and speeches, and said that in about two months' time when the Pacific Security Council had been established "our hands will be untied." He expressed apprehension over the recent bombings of Korean power stations on the Yalu River and felt that they would stiffen, rather than soften the Chinese attitude at the armistice meetings.

3. The Under-Secretary mentioned that the reports prepared by Mr. Plimsoll, the Australian representative on UNCURK, on conditions in Korea, were very useful and we were grateful to the Australian authorities for passing them on to us.

4. With regard to the political situation in South Korea, Mr. Watt said his government was disturbed about Syngman Rhee's actions which were of tremendous propaganda value to the Communists. He mentioned, though, that while Mr. Rhee was far from perfect, some of the members of the South Korean Assembly were far from perfect as well. Mr. Watt knew of no other person who could carry on the government if Mr. Rhee were forced out of office by U.N. pressure; some pressure though might make him "see the light". Some scepticism was expressed by a member of the Department of the contention that any political figure was irreplaceable as Syngman Rhee contended he was. However, if he were forced out, the U.N. might find itself having to run a government; also his ousting might result in chaos in the country, which would certainly embarrass and possibly weaken the U.N.'s military position. It was thought the U.N. might work for a compromise between Rhee and the South Korean Congress.

5. The conversation then returned to the first topic, United States civilian control over the military authorities and the related question of how there could be effective consultation with the United States. In reply to a question as to whether we thought there could be better co-operation with the United States military in Tokyo, Mr. Watt said that we must try every avenue of approach. Decisions which had political implications were being made on military grounds alone and, while it seemed that the Pentagon could not be controlled, we ought to keep on trying. Mr. Watt pointed out that the United Kingdom wanted to keep its Ambassador in Tokyo apart from U.N. and Korean affairs. He said that Australia's main contact with the United States was in Washington and he thought that more could be done in Washington. He mentioned one difficulty though, that often South Korea and the Philippines wanted to be included in consultations with the United States. Mr. Watt did not know if General Bridgeford had been informed beforehand of the Yalu River bombings. These, he said, were extremely embarrassing for Earl Alexander, and had come at a time when public opinion in the United Kingdom had seemed to be more reassured about Korea.

6. A member of the Department said that we had been frustrated for two years over this question of effective consultation with the United States on Korea. He wondered if we had learned any lessons or could draw any conclusions which we could apply in the future should there be a new administration in the United States. It was thought that the State Department had lost so much prestige in the last year or two that it could only regain its power by a change in administration in the United States.

7. Mr. Watt mentioned that not only had Australia felt the lack of effective consultation with the United States over Korea, but it had also felt "out in the cold" with regard to the United Kingdom-United States long-term military planning. It was not possible, he said, to deal with the Middle East or Southeast Asia in isolation. The United Kingdom wanted Australia to commit itself heavily in the Middle East, but the troubled state of Southeast Asia made it difficult for Australia to do this.

8. Mr. Watt was asked if the Tripartite Security Treaty included a commitment by Australia to defend Formosa. Mr. Watt said the only decisive obligation was one of consulting together should the security of any of the signatories be threatened in the Pacific. He said he thought it would depend on the government of the day as to how the Treaty was interpreted. He pointed out one clause in the preamble of the Treaty, inserted by Australia, which recognized that New Zealand and Australia had military obligations "outside as well as within the Pacific Area." The first meeting, mainly organizational, of the Pacific Security Council would take place later in the summer and committees would be set up on the political and military levels.

9. Mr. Watt then discussed Australia's relations with countries in the South Pacific. With regard to Australia's immigration policy, he said that the former Minister of Immigration, Mr. Caldwell, had a singular capacity for deporting "the wrong people at the wrong time." However, the present Minister was not raising such a hornet's nest in Malaya and the Philippines. He said Australia's relations with the Philippines were improving, though Australia had been annoyed at reports that it did not want the Philippines in the Tripartite Security Treaty because of racial considerations. He said it was not a question of race at all, but if the Philippines were admitted it would be difficult, if not impossible, to resist the inclusion of other countries which would not add strength to the pact. Mr. Watt mentioned that the day before the Philippine-United States pact was approved, the Philippines had asked to be included in the Tripartite Security Treaty. South Korea and Indonesia had also brought up the question of defensive arrangements with Australia. Mr. Watt was asked why the Philippines would want membership in the wider pact when they had a bilateral arrangement with the United States. Mr. Watt said he thought it was a question of prestige, that the Philippines wanted membership in a first-class club and that they rather resented exclusion from a "white man's pact"; also the Philippines wanted to be considered as the leading country in their part of the world.

10. In reply to a question about Dutch New Guinea, Mr. Watt said that New Guinea was vital to Australia's security, and was to Australia what the Low Countries were to the United Kingdom. Should Dutch New Guinea come under Indonesian control, and if the latter went Communist, it would be impossible to stop Communist infiltration into Australian New Guinea. Australia wanted the question to be put "in cold storage" for the present, and recognized that the United States attitude would be the decisive factor in the disposition of the territory. He thought that recently Mr. Acheson had damped down Indonesian claims.

11. Mr. Watt was asked about Dr. Burton's statements on bacteriological warfare in Korea. He said that Mr. Caldwell, deputy leader of the Opposition, had criticized Dr. Burton for going to Peking, and Dr. Evatt, leader of the Opposition, had raised the question of Burton's passport. So far as Mr. Watt knew, his government placed no restrictions on the issue of passports to Australian citizens. The national executive of the Labour Party had disclaimed any association with the Peking conference attended by Dr. Burton, and it was possible that the New South Wales Labour Party would consider expelling Dr. Burton.

1. The Prime Minister welcomed Mr. Churchill and his colleagues. The government of Canada felt that any matters that were of concern to the government of the United Kingdom were also of concern to them as the welfare of the people of the two countries was so intimately related. They were particularly pleased, therefore, to have this opportunity of exchanging views. The government of Canada had also been pleased that Mr. Churchill and his colleagues had been able to visit the United States at this time to strengthen the ties between that country and the United Kingdom which were of such fundamental importance for all the countries of the Commonwealth. The members of the Canadian Cabinet would be glad to hear any comments that Mr. Churchill might feel it proper to make relating to his discussions in the United States and concerning problems of common concern.

2. The Prime Minister of the United Kingdom referred to his visit to Ottawa ten years before. He was gratified to be able to meet again with the members of the Privy Council of Canada of which he had, since that time, been a member. He would be glad to discuss any matters they might wish to raise.

Atomic Weapons

3. Mr. Churchill stressed the importance of the development and improvement of atomic weapons during the period when the relative strength of western countries in conventional weapons would not be adequate to afford them protection. The Labour government in the United Kingdom had made progress in the development of an atomic bomb and the first one produced in the United Kingdom would be tested in Australia during the summer. If it was successful, production could proceed. Apart from its intrinsic importance a successful British bomb might have a substantial influence on the readiness of the United States to exchange information on atomic development. He was very anxious to see an equality of knowledge with the United States which would lead to a more ready exchange of technical information.

4. The Prime Minister suggested that detailed discussion on atomic energy questions might be left to Lord Cherwell and Mr. Howe.

Policy Toward the Soviet Union

5. Mr. Churchill said that the policy was to preserve peace or at least a modus vivendi with the U.S.S.R. of as long a duration as possible. This could only be secured from strength. Agreements with the U.S.S.R. could not be secured on any other basis. The strength of the West was being developed through the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. It was to be hoped that N.A.T.O. would not be limited solely to preparations for defence but that it might develop into a lasting grouping of powers which would produce a new effectiveness for the United Nations. The present did not appear to be a propitious time to enter into talks with the U.S.S.R. but the United Kingdom would be ready at any time to respond to any genuine advance from the Soviet side.

A deterrent factor in the present dangerous situation was that war would be extremely unpleasant for both sides. Both would suffer what they dreaded most at the outset: Europe would be overrun and the U.S.S.R. would be blasted by atomic weapons in all its vital points. This gave some assurance that peace could be maintained. It seemed certain that at best there would have to be a prolonged period of cold war. That, however, was much better than catastrophe.

6. The Prime Minister enquired whether Mr. Churchill thought that the apparent concessions made by Mr. Vishinsky at the United Nations in relation to the banning of atomic weapons and the possibility of inspection gave indication of desire by the Soviet side to see some progress.

7. Mr. Churchill felt it would present a difficult problem if the Soviet Union were to offer to accept our conditions for the control of atomic weapons since the West was not sufficiently strong at present to do without the protection that their possession afforded. It was the vast superiority of the United States in atomic weapons and the technical improvements they had achieved, that provided a decisive deterrent at present. It was doubtful, however, that the U.S.S.R. would be prepared to allow bona fide and continuous inspection since it would too greatly lift the veil they kept over their affairs.

8. Mr. Eden said he thought the Vishinsky concessions did represent a positive move. The Western nations would have to expect more of these moves. They were indicative of a growing anxiety on the part of the Soviet Union.

9. Mr. Churchill said that there was, perhaps, some significance in the Soviet emphasis on the development of fighter planes rather than of bombers. It was a defensive emphasis which revealed anxiety and suggested that fear was an important factor in Soviet actions.

The Far East

10. The Minister of National Defence said he would be interested to hear the views of the United Kingdom ministers on the position in the Far East, particularly on the prospects in Korea. He felt that the six months of discussion on a cease-fire in Korea had left the United Nations in a much weaker position relatively than when the talks began. The U.S. commanders in Korea thought that the Chinese genuinely desired a cease-fire. On the other hand, the Prime Minister of Japan was of the opinion that the Communists would not accept one. He thought they would attempt to prolong the present discussions. Even if a cease-fire were achieved, it was not apparent how the United Nations were going to extricate themselves from Korea.

11. Mr. Eden expressed general agreement with Mr. Claxton's comments. He found it equally difficult to see how the Korean episode was to be resolved. He had felt some surprise in the discussions in Washington at the confidence of the U.S. authorities in their capacity to deal with any possible military developments in Korea next spring.

It was difficult to forecast developments in other parts of South East Asia. There was no reliable evidence that an extension of hostilities in Indo-China was imminent. There had been a number of reports of preparations by the Chinese but all had been contradicted by other sources. Some of the reports might be instigated by the Chinese Nationalists. He had been pleased that the President of the United States in his message on the State of the Union had explicitly warned China against the possible consequences of further aggression. He had tried to follow that up in his own speech in New York. The French felt that they could hold their position in Indo-China if there were no major aggression as in Korea. If there were any such move they would want the United Nations to take action.

12. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said that he was disturbed by Mr. Vishinsky's statement in Paris in which he claimed that the United States had moved Chinese Nationalist divisions to Burma and other South-east Asian countries. If any new communist move were being contemplated, this was the sort of propaganda preparation that might be expected.

13. Mr. Churchill pointed out that ten of the best U.N. divisions were tied up in Korea, and ten French divisions in Indo-China. The addition of that strength to western Europe could make a very substantial difference. At the present time, there was not one complete division in the United Kingdom. There were, however, some 250,000 troops in military schools and depots in the United Kingdom, and these were now being armed and trained so that they would have some combatant value in an emergency. He meant to secure that the United Kingdom looked more like the back of a hedge-hog than the paunch of a rabbit. If the Chinese attacked Indo-China it would be necessary for the United Kingdom to reconsider its recognition of the Communist government of China.

14. Mr. Pearson asked what divergences there now were between the U.K. and the U.S. on policy in the Far East.

15. Mr. Eden said that there were now only two points of divergence viz., the U.K. recognition of the Chinese People's government and the proposed treaty between Japan and the Chinese Nationalists. The first was little more than a formal point and the U.S. government were not now seriously concerned about it. The second was more troublesome. The U.S. administration apparently felt very strongly that, in order to satisfy Congressional opinion, they must announce that as soon as the Japanese Peace Treaty was ratified Japan would conclude a treaty with the Chinese Nationalist government in respect of Formosa. The United Kingdom government agreed that, once she had achieved her independence, Japan would be free to do as she wished in this matter; but they would have preferred that no public announcement of her intentions should be made in advance. They would not, however, continue to press their objections upon the U.S. government.

16. Mr. Churchill said that, as regards Korea, he was glad that the U.S. government were now consulting more fully with other governments which were contributing to the U.N. Forces.

17. Mr. Pearson said that 17 countries had now accepted the draft of the warning declaration about the consequences of a major breach of the armistice terms in Korea.

18. Mr. St. Laurent pointed out that acceptance of the draft declaration would still leave unsettled a number of important questions on which decisions would have to be taken by the countries contributing to the U.N. Forces in Korea.

19. Mr. Churchill said that the U.K. government were anxious to avoid raising small points of disagreement with the United States on Far East questions, as they were conscious that the brunt of the military effort in that area was being borne by the United States. In the Middle East, where the United Kingdom were carrying the major part of the load, he hoped that the United States could be persuaded to give some support and assistance. Even token assistance would be valuable. The United Kingdom were carrying out an international responsibility in maintaining free right of passage through the Suez Canal.

Middle East

20. Mr. Eden said that in his discussions in Washington he had agreed with the U.S. Secretary of State that the Four Power proposals should be revised and made ready for presentation in a new form possibly including something about the Sudan. It could then be indicated to King Farouk,<sup>53</sup> at the appropriate moment, that these proposals were available for presentation to a government likely to accord them a favourable reception.

21. Mr. Churchill said that insofar as the oil dispute in Persia was concerned, the policy of the U.K. government was to salvage what they could from the wreck. Britain could get her oil from elsewhere, but she needed the foreign exchange which she had earned from the Persian oil. Permanent loss of this source of revenue would mean a serious addition to the balance of payments difficulties of the United Kingdom.

22. Mr. Eden said the International Bank had put forward certain proposals which were acceptable to the United Kingdom but had not yet found favour with Dr. Mossadegh.<sup>54</sup> There seemed to be some possibility, however, that Mossadegh might eventually agree to something along the lines of these latest proposals. In any event it seemed clear that they were the sort of proposals that would afford Mossadegh the best opportunity to reach a compromise with the United Kingdom without losing face provided, of course, he were disposed to do so. Throughout the protracted discussions and negotiations on this problem Mossadegh had shown himself to be an extremely shrewd bargainer. The United Kingdom government had to ensure that any treatment given Persia should not be generous to the point where it would prejudice the future of oil concessions held elsewhere by the United Kingdom and the United States. If a satisfactory price could be negotiated, the United Kingdom might be ready to forego any claim it might have for compensation. Dr. Mossadegh might, however, prefer to stress the compensation feature since it would then be easier for him to reduce or eliminate British control and influence.

Europe

23. Mr. Churchill said that General Eisenhower had made it abundantly clear that he did not expect U.K. military units to join the European army. He was quite content that the United Kingdom should make appropriate military contributions to the NATO forces of which the European army was part. Mr. Churchill thought it not only unnecessary but unworkable that U.K. forces should be merged in the European army. He did not see how any Prime Minister of the United Kingdom could contemplate sending six British divisions to the European army in the knowledge that none of these divisions would ever stand shoulder to shoulder in the line. There were the problems of language, customs, armaments and munitions which were very real difficulties. He fully appreciated that the doctrine of European federation appealed strongly to the sense of logic of the French. He himself felt that the United Kingdom should offer every encouragement to the concept of European federation without, however, losing sight of the fact that it was in the interests not only of the United Kingdom, but of international peace that the United Kingdom should maintain her strong Commonwealth ties rather than become an integral part of a European federation.

24. Mr. Eden pointed out that when the present U.K. government took office, the plans for a European army had already been under discussion for nine months. If the new U.K. government had joined in the discussions at that stage, every detail of the proposed arrangements would have been thrown open for renegotiation and this would have caused further substantial delays.

Mohammad Mossadegh, Prime Minister of Iran.

25. Mr. Churchill thought it unfortunate that the Labour government had decided not to participate in the conferences on the Schuman Plan and the European army.

As a general comment, he felt that the principle of the Grand Alliance had much to commend it, primarily because, as became evident during the second World War, it enabled several sovereign states to work in the closest harmony without any suggestion that one country might be the vassal of another.

Atlantic Command

26. Mr. Churchill said that, in his opinion, British shipping would face greater dangers in a future war than in the last. Enemy submarines would be much more numerous, faster, and armed with even more deadly weapons than before. Anti-submarine vessels would have to be much faster craft, which could not be improvised after war had broken out. Even greater than the submarine danger was probably the mine threat. There had been developed new types of suction mines which were impervious to magnetic minesweeping. These could be dropped rapidly in large numbers and it was difficult to see at this time what effective measures could be taken against them.

The United Kingdom's dangers were much greater than those of the United States or Canada. If the United Kingdom failed to keep its ports open, it could not survive. For North America the loss of the battle in the Atlantic would mean the loss of the campaign in Europe. For the United Kingdom it would mean extinction. It was for this reason that he had made every effort to impress on the Americans that it was a matter of practical necessity that the United Kingdom should retain complete naval control in the eastern Atlantic at the reception end. Executive control of the battle and the convoys should be exercised in the eastern half of the Atlantic by the First Sea Lord and in the western half by the United States Chief of Naval Operations. On almost every occasion they would work in complete harmony. If any differences should arise between them, these could be resolved by the Standing Group who could be advised on policy by an Admiral of the Atlantic. He was, however, most strongly opposed to the creation of a Supreme Allied Commander, Atlantic. He was gratified to hear that some members of the Canadian government shared his views on this question.

27. Mr. Churchill said that Canada was to be congratulated on the growth of its Navy. It was building up one of the leading navies in the free world. He hoped that Canada, with its expanding resources, would continue to cherish the naval tradition, as it had been cherished for so long in the United Kingdom. A strong Canadian Navy would be of great value, not only for purposes of local defence, but also as a link between North America and Europe.

28. Mr. Churchill thought that, while the Western countries were becoming stronger, they were not yet necessarily safer. The greatest danger would come in the period just before their strength became really effective. If the Russians made war, they were more likely to do so as the result of miscalculation than by reason of an "incident". In his view the odds were against a war this year, although no one could make an accurate forecast.

The Russians had greatly improved their position by bringing large portions of Europe and all of China under their control without loss to themselves. They might therefore think it best to continue as at present. Their leaders appeared to fear war and atomic bombing since these would undermine their control over their people. They seemed more interested in maintaining their power internally than anything else. If, at a later date, the West desired to intensify the "cold war" it might possibly do so by taking steps to make more information available to the Russian people. The West would be in increased danger if there were the slightest sign that the NATO countries were not pursuing their defence plans with determination.

Economic situation

29. Lord Cherwell<sup>55</sup> said the Americans had been anxious to obtain additional supplies of aluminum. Canada's willingness that the United Kingdom should divert to the United States some of their Canadian supplies of aluminum had made it possible to persuade the United States to allocate to the United Kingdom considerable quantities of steel which would be of great value both for rearmament and for exports. It was vitally important to maintain United Kingdom exports. For the United Kingdom, gold and dollar reserves had fallen seriously in 1951 and it was going to be very difficult to stop them from continuing to decline in the next six months.

30. Mr. Churchill said that his government had been faced with a grave financial situation on assuming office. The sterling area was running a large deficit with the dollar area, with Europe and with the rest of the world. The rearmament programme of £4.7 billion would now cost £5.2 billion owing to increased prices. His government was, however, not going to be afraid to take the unpopular steps that were necessary if national solvency were to be regained. He felt that, if the need for further stringencies were put squarely to the people of Great Britain, they would accept the measures required by the situation. He did not propose to ask for outside help for the purpose of enabling the people of the United Kingdom to avoid discomfort. Rearmament was, however, a different matter; for it was designed to serve the common cause. He was ready to seek external aid to help forward the United Kingdom defence programme. The assistance which the Americans were providing would be a great help to the rearmament effort and the export drive.

31. Lord Cherwell said that cuts could only be made in domestic consumption, the defence programme or in exports. Consumption had already been cut to the bone. Some of the rearmament programme would have to be postponed.

32. Mr. Churchill said that he now expected the United Kingdom rearmament programme to take four rather than three years to complete. In the circumstances, his government was concentrating its efforts on such essential elements of the programme as new types of aircraft and tanks.

33. Mr. St. Laurent enquired whether there was any likelihood of the United Kingdom being able to reduce its unrequited exports.

34. Mr. Churchill said that it was hoped to make some progress in this direction but that his government's hands were tied to some extent by arrangements made since the close of the war.

During the war, he had been of the opinion that the United Kingdom should hold itself free to put in a counter-claim against the sterling balances which had been accumulated by countries which had been preserved by British troops from being overrun by the enemy.

35. Mr. Howe said that the imbalance in Canadian-United Kingdom trade would have been less if Canada could have placed larger orders in the United Kingdom for heavy equipment which had been going to countries in the sterling area.

36. Mr. St. Laurent said that he and his colleagues had greatly appreciated Mr. Churchill's review of the world situation. The Canadian government realized that the greatest possible efforts must be made by the Western countries in order to achieve the results that were essential to all.

37. Mr. Churchill said that he was most grateful to Mr. St. Laurent and the other members of the Canadian government for their kindness. The meeting of the four members of his Cabinet with the Canadian Cabinet had been a memorable event.

38. It was agreed that a brief communique should be issued to the press at the conclusion of the meeting. This would indicate that the discussion had ranged over the world situation with particular emphasis on the North Atlantic alliance, and that the exchange of views had revealed a complete understanding between the representatives of the two countries.

Canada-U.K. Continuing Committee

12. Miss Meagher A meeting of the Canada-U.K. Continuing Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs will take place in London immediately after the Commonwealth Finance Ministers Meeting, in January. While there are no active items on the agenda, the meeting will provide an opportunity for a general review of Canada's trade position in the sterling area, in the light of the considerable deterioration in the U.K. balance of payments position and of the change of government in the U.K., both of which have occurred since the last meeting of the Continuing Committee in May.

TELEGRAM 248<sup>56</sup>

London, January 25, 1952

From Canadian delegation to the Continuing Committee.

1. The Continuing Committee concluded discussions yesterday. As usual we exchanged our respective estimates of the balance of payments between the two countries for the coming year. There was considerable discrepancy between our estimates of the current balance, the British estimates of purchases from Canada being higher than ours by $110 million. On the other hand, the Canadian estimate of British sales to Canada was approximately $50 million higher than the British estimate. The United Kingdom estimates did not take into account any Canadian expenditures on the purchase of military equipment or expenditures of our forces in the United Kingdom.

2. With respect to the estimates of British purchases in Canada, the United Kingdom figures envisage larger expenditures on metals and forest products apparently due to a different view as to both prices and quantity. It has been arranged that further examination of these estimates should be made by both sides in Ottawa and London with a view to achieving closer reconciliation. The British emphasized in respect of both metals and forest products that they intend to honour all existing contracts.

3. They warned us that in view of the existing dollar crisis some of the marginal products may be in danger. The paper distributed by the representative of the Ministry of Food indicated that apples and salmon are vulnerable and that even cheese may be in doubt. They said that their arrangements regarding these purchases in 1952 had not yet been made, that they would be working on this in the near future and would let us know. They indicated that if they had to make cuts in food imports it would be difficult to avoid some cut in tobacco. Decisions on the marginal food items will not be taken immediately and they promised that they would get in touch with us through the appropriate channels when they were under consideration.

4. British estimates of their sales to Canada were substantially lower than ours in respect of textiles. This was based on a rather pessimistic view of the outlook for the consumer market in textile fabrics and actual export experience for the last quarter of 1951. In respect of sales of motor cars in Canada, their estimate is somewhat higher than ours.

5. The meetings provided a useful forum for the exchange of views on the outlook for the coming year and it was proposed that the next meetings should take place in Ottawa sometime next September. At that time they and we will be in a better position to consider the situation respecting the marginal products.

London, January 25, 1952

Dear Claude [Isbister],

Herewith the papers covering the just completed meetings of the Continuing Committee.† The telegram which we sent you yesterday, plus these papers, give a fairly complete picture and there is little I can add.

As meetings relating to the Finance Ministers' Conference had been going on for roughly two weeks before the Continuing Committee meetings started, a great deal of the ground normally covered at the Continuing Committee had already been traversed. It was, therefore, possible to cover the remaining ground in two meetings which were held on the afternoons of January 22nd and 23rd.

There is no doubt about the seriousness of the sterling area's balance of payments difficulties. The papers going forward to Adrian Gilbert on the Finance Ministers' meetings reveal this all too plainly.

Naturally the U.K. estimates of the Anglo-Canadian balance of payments position were more pessimistic than ours. This is the sort of bargaining approach which has characterized the figures exchanged at every Continuing Committee I know anything about. Perfect reconciliation is, of course, impossible, not only because of the time lag involved, but also because of the varying classifications. As you know our estimates of British exports to Canada in 1952 were based on our judgment on the outlook compared with 1951. The 1951 figures in turn were obtained by projecting performance for the first ten months forward into a twelve month period. In actual fact British exports to Canada in November and December of 1951 fell very sharply in comparison with the preceding months so that our projection was bound to be somewhat higher than the actual. The British on the other hand were rather inclined to estimate 1952 performance on the basis of their November and December experience which in our view was abnormal in the other direction. When we got down to a closer examination of the figures, we found that their estimates and ours were not so far apart after all. Their heading for vehicles, for instance, which was much larger than ours was found to contain a great many other items besides motor cars. It included bicycles, motor cycles, road rollers and even vessels. By a series of adjustments, the trade figures were ultimately brought into fairly close harmony, with the single exception of the textile items. Here our estimate was that they would sell £43.4 million to Canada in 1952 compared with their estimate of £26 million. The performance under this heading is anybody's guess and quite frankly I would place my money on their figure than on ours.

As far as U.K. imports from Canada are concerned, the major difference was in the metals and forest products items. A difference in the forest products heading is understandable because timber will enter the United Kingdom in 1952 under a limited general licence and it is anybody's guess where the business will be placed. On metals, however, the bulk of the purchasing is under contracts, details of which are currently known so that any pronounced difference is hard to understand. We estimated that the U.K. would spend $100 million on Canadian metals and minerals in 1952. The corresponding British estimate is approximately $261 million, a difference of $161 million. Part of the difference is accounted for by the fact that the British figure includes imports of Canadian steel, valued at approximately $12,300,000 in 1951 and ferro-alloys valued at approximately $10,000,000 in 1951, a total of say $22,000,000 if purchases in 1952 are at the same level as in 1951. Even allowing for this, however, the discrepancy is inexplicably large and the statisticians on both sides will try and reconcile their figures. Fullerton will doubtless go into this on his return and I would be interested in his findings.

The only other important discrepancy arose from the inclusion in our balance of payments estimate of roughly $60,000,000 which we plan on spending in the U.K. on military account — (Centurion tanks; troop maintenance, etc.). The British had not allowed anything under this heading.

The seriousness of the balance of payments position overshadowed all discussions. There can be no doubt about the determination of the present administration to take whatever steps are necessary to put the sterling area back on its feet. Recognizing this determination, our opposite numbers at the Conference table were not in a position to guarantee they would not cut back on imports of non essential Canadian food items such as canned salmon and apples. In the words of Frank Lee,<sup>57</sup> both these items are "vulnerable". The outlook for cheese is only slightly less disturbing. While I doubt if there will be a cut back in British imports of Canadian tobacco it was pointed out that if imports of food are to be cut down, it becomes politically awkward to defend dollar expenditures for tobacco so that these may also have to be reduced. If they are, we can always hope the axe will fall more heavily south of the line than north of it. In an effort to set an example to the rest of the Commonwealth the United Kingdom will import as little as possible in 1952 and is prepared to risk fairly serious inventory reductions in the process. Something more definite about their intentions in the above mentioned categories should be available later in the year, when import policies will have been formulated in the light of the recent Finance Ministers' Conference and also when we will be able to tell them, perhaps more accurately than we can now, how important it is to us to dispose of certain marginal items such as apples and salmon.

Frank Lee referred to increased difficulties from Canadian anti-dumping regulations. I was surprised to hear this because I cannot remember a single instance of British difficulties under this heading being brought to my attention in 1951. It is true that British exporters would be more likely to use their own Government for protests about this legislation, but nevertheless, we have always been consulted in the past and the fact that we have had a falling off in these consultations suggests that the position is less serious rather than more serious as Lee indicated that it was. I am asking the Board of Trade for more particulars and if I get anything worthwhile will write you on it.

It was also suggested that the expressed intentions of the Canadian Government to facilitate imports from the United Kingdom as far as Government purchasing was concerned, had not seemed to be particularly effective. Here again I am asking for further details.

There was an interesting discussion on United Kingdom investment in Canada including the operation of the interest free loan arrangements. I intend to write you more fully on this in a week or two.

Fred, as the result of what he heard at the Finance Ministers' meetings and from Dana Wilgress, realized before the meetings started that there would be little hope of getting U.K. enthusiasm for a token import scheme with other parts of the sterling area. He, nevertheless, raised the question in a tactful way and while the British pointed out that they could not dictate the policy of the self-governing sections of the sterling area Commonwealth, they did not feel that any of the Governments involved would be prepared to go very far in developing a token import scheme with dollar countries until they knew more about the progress of the whole of the sterling area under the corrective measures planned. I think this view is right. It is going to be a difficult task for Australia in particular to keep within the dollar budget that has been suggested. Until, therefore, they have succeeded in doing this they would be unlikely to consider favourably additional dollar commitments, especially for non-essential items. It was felt that the time was not opportune to develop the idea, although it was unquestionably a good time to bring it up — if only to remind the U.K. that we are still setting our sights on getting back into the sterling area markets.

While it is impossible to put your finger on any specific item and say, “but for the Continuing Committee meetings this, or that, would not have happened” it was a most successful session. I saw Frank Lee and McGregor<sup>58</sup> last night and they both claimed it to have been the “best ever”. In my view it was a very worthwhile venture, and I am sure Fred will agree.<sup>59</sup>

Yours sincerely,

CHEESE AND SALMON: DISCONTINUANCE OF U.K. PURCHASES

5. The Minister of Resources and Development as Acting Minister of Agriculture reported that the United Kingdom had now advised that they did not propose to purchase any cheese in Canada during the coming year. The Department of Agriculture were of the view, which officials in Trade and Commerce shared, that the U.K. government might have derived the impression at the meeting of the U.K.-Canada Continuing Committee on Trade that the Canadian preference was to have any available dollars spent on salmon rather than on cheese. They hoped that this impression might be corrected and purchases of cheese arranged.

6. The Minister of Fisheries said whatever might be the truth of that impression it did not appear that the United Kingdom intended to purchase any salmon either during the coming year. He had received advice to that effect from U.K. representatives in Canada.

7. The Cabinet noted the reports of the Acting Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Fisheries concerning notice of the U.K. intention to purchase no cheese or salmon in Canada during the coming year and agreed that the matter be discussed further at a subsequent meeting.

REDUCTION IN U.K. IMPORT PROGRAMME: SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT COVERING EXPORTS OF NEWFOUNDLAND FISH

4. The Prime Minister, referring to discussion at the meeting of February 13th, 1952, read the text of a telegram which the Canadian members of the U.K.-Canada Continuing Committee on Trade proposed to send to the High Commissioner's office in London about the United Kingdom import programme. The message would point out that at the last meeting of the Committee, in January of this year, no definite decisions on import cuts had been taken by the United Kingdom and it had been agreed there would be further consultation before firm decisions were reached. In the circumstances, it was assumed that advice about the discontinuance of purchases of cheese and limitation of purchases of tobacco to 8.5 million pounds were not yet final. The telegram should submit that the proposed division of U.K. tobacco purchases between the United States and Canada did not fully recognize the greater importance of the U.K. export market to Canadian tobacco growers than to U.S. tobacco growers. It would also indicate that the total discontinuance of cheese imports would not be consistent with the cuts being made on imports of cheese from other countries outside the sterling area. A cut of 50 percent might be in line. The hope would be expressed that there would be discussions concerning apples and canned salmon before final decisions were taken.

(Letter, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, to the Secretary to the Cabinet and enclosure — Feb. 19, 1952)†

5. The Minister of Fisheries said he had been advised that the United Kingdom would not continue for a further year the arrangement under which convertible sterling had been provided for Newfoundland salt cod sold in European Markets for local currencies. The arrangement had in the first instance been for a one year period and was connected with the financial provisions for the union of Newfoundland with Canada. It might be particularly embarrassing if announcement of the U.K. decision were made before deliveries had been completed on all orders for the 1951 catch. Certain contracts might be cancelled in the expectation that prices would drop. On the other hand, if the U.K. decision was firm, it would be desirable to give some guidance to Newfoundland fishermen at as early a date as possible in order that a shift in the 1952 catch could be made to fillets. Since the timing of the announcement was important, it would be desirable if a further paragraph could be added to the message pointing this out and asking that any public statement be withheld for the time being.

6. The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that a telegram be sent as proposed to the Office of the High Commissioner in the United Kingdom concerning proposed reductions in the U.K. programme of imports from Canada, the telegram to include a paragraph which would point out the importance of avoiding at present any public announcement of the decision to discontinue the special arrangement for sales of Newfoundland salt cod to soft currency countries.

CONFIDENTIAL

Following for Bower from Bull, Begins:

1. Further to your telegrams 449† and 463† will you please convey following views to the Board of Trade, Ministries of Food and Supply on behalf of Taggart,<sup>60</sup> Deutsch and Bull. This message has Cabinet approval.

2. It will be recalled that at the recent meeting of the Continuing Committee there was informal discussion of possible cuts in U.K. imports of Canadian tobacco, cheese, canned salmon and apples. The U.K. members, however, were not in a position, at that time, to indicate U.K. plans and it was agreed that there would be further consultation before definite decisions were reached and announced.

3. Since the meetings in London there has been no further consultation of the kind which we understood would take place before decisions were reached. Meanwhile, the Deputy High Commissioner has informed us that the U.K. had decided to cut purchases of Canadian tobacco to 8,500,000 pounds and Sir Andrew Jones<sup>61</sup> has notified Taggart by letter that the U.K. has decided not to buy any Canadian cheese. Sir Wilfred Anson of the Imperial Tobacco Company called Norman MacRae, of the Tobacco Division of the Department of Agriculture, to Washington, where MacRae was informed that the U.K. could only afford to purchase 70 million pounds of tobacco from North America in 1952 and that Canada's share would be 8½ million pounds. Canadian views on this division of the U.K. purchases were not invited. Had we been given an opportunity to discuss this allocation we would have pressed for a larger Canadian share.

J.G. Taggart, Deputy Minister of Agriculture.

Sir Andrew Jones, Head, Food Mission of United Kingdom.

4. We regret that consultation has not yet taken place but assume, on the basis of our discussions in London, that these decisions are not yet final. We, therefore, submit the following for consideration.

5. In our view, and as indicated above, the division of tobacco purchases between the United States and Canada does not fully recognize the much greater importance to Canadian tobacco growers than to U.S. tobacco growers of the U.K. export market. We, therefore, suggest that the Canadian share of the overall allocation could be substantially increased without serious effects upon the U.S.

6. As to cheese, it seems to us that a decision to cut off Canadian imports entirely would not be consistent with the cuts that are being made on imports of cheese from other countries outside the sterling area. We do not wish, in any way, to make suggestions which would add to the difficulties of the U.K. and the sterling area, and would accept the necessity for some cut in imports of Canadian cheese. A cut of 50 percent, however, would seem to us to be more in line with what is being done, for example, with respect to imports of cheese from European countries.

7. As yet we have no word about apples and canned salmon but express the hope that before final decisions are reached there will be an opportunity for an exchange of views.

8. The chief purpose of the Continuing Committee was to provide a forum in which problems of this kind could be discussed and we understood that our January meeting was called for the specific purpose of discussing necessary adjustments in the U.K. import programme from Canada.

9. While this subject was not discussed during Continuing Committee meetings, we would urge that no announcement be made by U.K. with respect to salt fish sales to Europe for sterling and question of conversion into dollars, until cleared with Canada, so as to minimize prejudicial effects upon sales, present and potential. Ends.

1. Ritchie, Marshall and I had meeting at Board of Trade today with Lee, Hancock<sup>62</sup> and Harris<sup>63</sup> and left copy of your telegram with following corrected Paragraph 6 to take account of the fact that Continental cheese is still under open general licence.

"As to cheese, it seems to us that a decision to cut off Canadian imports entirely would not be consistent with continued imports of cheese from other countries outside the sterling area. We do not wish, in any way, to make suggestions which would add to the difficulties of the United Kingdom and the sterling area, and would accept the necessity for some cut in imports of Canadian cheese. A cut of 50 percent, however, would seem to us to be less out of line with what is being done, for example, with respect to imports of cheese from European countries."

2. I also read Paragraph 3 of Canada House telegram No. 248 of January 24 as an indication of our impression at the time of what had been agreed upon about prior consultation.

3. They expressed regret at what they described as a genuine misunderstanding. They considered they had given fairly definite warning at the Continuing Committee regarding the probable fate of Canadian cheese and tobacco and that their only remaining obligation was to advise us of their final decisions as soon as possible.

4. They admitted to some surprise at the time that the reactions of the Canadians were not stronger. We disputed their interpretation of what had happened at the meetings and stated that our reactions would clearly have been more vigorous if the United Kingdom statement had been as definite as they now claim and if we had not understood that there would be further consultation before final decisions were taken.

5. They have agreed to consult with the other departments concerned and to give us their considered comments on Paragraphs 3 to 6 of your message. Lee observed that even had there been prior consultation the outcome could hardly have been different.

6. Regarding your Paragraph 7 Hancock stated the United Kingdom would not be buying Canadian apples in 1952 though there was a remote chance that they might take some salmon. This paragraph will be further dealt with in their reply.

7. Lee undertook to confer with the Treasury re your Paragraph 9 and to let us have their comments. Ends.

RESTRICTED

Following for Bull, Trade and Commerce from Bower, Begins:

1. The following message was received from Frank Lee tonight. Quote:

Reply to Canadian telegram No. 430. Aide memoire. United Kingdom purchases from Canada.

1. The United Kingdom members of the Continuing Committee very much regret that a misunderstanding should have arisen about the nature of the discussions at the recently concluded session. They believe, however, that there has been no departure on the part of the United Kingdom from the procedure developed at that and earlier sessions of the committee for handling economic questions of common concern.

2. They certainly share their Canadian colleague's view (paragraph 8 of the telegram) that the Continuing Committee is a forum for the general review, amongst other things, of prospective United Kingdom imports from Canada and particularly affords an opportunity for the discussion of any proposals to reduce them. But precisely because they regard the committee in this light they cannot agree that the discussion of possible cuts in certain United Kingdom imports at the recent meeting should be regarded as "informal" (as paragraph 2 suggests). During those discussions they were at pains to emphasize that the gravity of the sterling area's external financial position as disclosed at the Conference of Commonwealth Finance Ministers<sup>64</sup> was such that, in addition to the positive measures for long-term expansion discussed at that conference, reductions in certain imports from Canada to meet the present emergency were inescapable. They clearly indicated that these reductions might well include the cessation of imports of cheese and the reduction of imports of tobacco. The Canadian representatives did not at the time express any marked objection; and the United Kingdom representatives inferred that the Canadian Government expected to be told no more thereafter than the time and nature of the final decision. This view is borne out by their clear recollection of what took place and by the agreed minutes of the meetings.

3. The Canadian representatives say it was agreed (paragraph 2) that there would be further consultation before definite decisions were reached and announced. This, however, is not borne out by the record of the discussions. But the United Kingdom side do not wish to lay undue stress on that point. The

United Kingdom Government are willing, as they have always been, to give the Canadian Government as full and ample notice as the circumstances permit of measures affecting United Kingdom imports from Canada so as to enable the latter government to express any views they may wish (although the Canadian Government will realise that the balance of payments position has become so serious that cuts in imports cannot be avoided). The United Kingdom Government will accordingly be communicating with the Canadian Government in due course about the question of the extent to which purchases of apples and canned salmon may be possible or not in the forthcoming season.

4. On the specific items emphasized in the Canadian Government's telegram, the position is as follows:

(a) Tobacco. In the present critical circumstances imports of tobacco into the United Kingdom in 1952 are being restricted to the bare minimum which, together with the stockpile, will enable production of cigarettes etc. to be maintained. Purchases from the 1951 Canadian crop were exceptionally high as a result of the relatively large stockpiling purchases which were made. These purchases were much larger in proportion to purchase for current use than were those from the USA and accordingly United Kingdom stocks of Canadian tobacco will be proportionately higher than stocks of United States tobacco. Nevertheless, the ratio of the proposed imports from the 1952 Canadian and the USA crops (8 and one half million pounds and 61 and one half million pounds respectively) is approximately the same as the ratio of purchases from the 1952 and 1950 crops, and appreciably higher than the corresponding ratio for earlier years. Accordingly, taking into account the stock position described above and the probable rates of usage of United States and Canadian leaf, the United Kingdom Government do not feel it possible to increase the Canadian share of the total imports of tobacco from North America.

(b) Cheese. The United Kingdom Government have carefully considered the Canadian Government's request, but they regret that they are unable to modify their decision not to buy any Canadian cheese this year. This conclusion has been reached only after very full examination of the possible alternative import cuts. The Canadian Government will be aware that the United Kingdom ceased some time ago to purchase cheese from the USA. The continued imports of cheese from non-sterling sources to which the Canadian representatives referred, are assumed to be those from European countries in the OEEC. United Kingdom imports from those countries, however, have already borne the brunt of the government's emergency measures. The cuts already made have amounted to about 150 million pounds on food and additional cuts on items like cheese (which appears on the common list of liberalised products) would be a further serious blow to the European economy.

(c) Salt fish. The United Kingdom representatives have taken note of the Canadian request. They will be getting into touch with the Canadian Government in due course about this matter. Unquote.

2. I have been unable to discuss with Lee or Hancock the additional points on cheese which you mentioned today but will do so tomorrow. Please advise as quickly as possible what you propose to do in view of Lee's message, and what line you wish us to take.

3. At lunch today Rowan claimed the same understanding as Lee on what was agreed at the Continuing Committee. He suggested it would be next to impossible to get cheese or tobacco question reopened, but I feel representations at Ministerial level might be effective. Ends.

II. U.K. Purchasing Programme for 1952

13. The Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce said that a telegram had been received from London giving the text of a message from Sir Frank Lee about the understanding of the Canadian representatives on the U.K.-Canada Continuing Committee that no final decisions had been agreed on during the discussions with relation to reduction of the U.K. purchasing programme. Lee stated the U.K. members' understanding that they had clearly indicated that reductions might include the cessation of imports of cheese and the reduction of imports of tobacco, to which they had understood the Canadian representatives did not at the time express any marked objection. The message explained the reasoning behind the reduction in tobacco imports and stated that they could not modify the decision not to buy any Canadian cheese during the coming year.

(Telegram from the Office of the High Commissioner in London, No. 601, February 29, 1952)

The understanding described by Lee was entirely at variance with the impression of all the Canadian representatives at the last Continuing Committee meeting. It had been their clear impression that the U.K. representatives were indicating action that might have to be taken and probably would be necessary but not any firm decisions. It was on that basis that the matter had been allowed to pass without more vigorous argument. The Canadian group had understood that there would be an opportunity for further representations when decisions were actually made. Whatever the position was, the immediate question was whether anything further should be done about the U.K. decisions. It seemed probable that no modification could be secured at the official level and that representations, if any, would have to be at the ministerial level.

14. The Deputy Minister of Finance said that, while a great deal of exception could be taken to the U.K. handling of the matter, he doubted whether it would be desirable to try to press any further. The U.K.'s financial position had worsened steadily and the action on Canadian purchases was only a part of an exceedingly stringent programme. It seemed highly improbable that there was anything to be gained by further representations.

15. The Chairman expressed agreement. He thought, however, that the United Kingdom might be asked to ensure that any announcement relating to the Canadian programme did not refer to the U.K.-Canada Continuing Committee and did not say that there had been consultation with Canada in advance about the cuts. The next question was as to the position that would develop in Canada with sales of cheese to the United Kingdom cut off and with the Andersen amendment in effect in the United States. In the circumstances, it was difficult to see how the government could consider a new price support programme for cheese such as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture was urging. The desirable situation appeared to be to have the price of cheese reach a point at which there would be an incentive to divert milk into other products — dried milk, fluid milk or butter. Certainly there should be no incentive price for cheese.

16. The Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce said that a recent report from the Belgian Congo indicated that a substantial Canadian market there for dried milk was being lost to the Netherlands. Similarly a market for dried cod was being lost to Portugal and Norway. The reasons in each case were Canadian prices that would not allow competition. The export aspect had to be kept in mind in any price support programmes.

17. The Deputy Governor of the Bank of Canada pointed out that with the recent sharp break in the price of lard from 12¢ a pound to 6¢ a pound, it was quite possible that there would be a decline in vegetable oil prices and that the price of margarine would come down. That would bring an additional problem.

18. Mr. Paterson<sup>65</sup> said a further factor was that with the outbreak of foot and mouth disease the U.S. embargo prevented the movement of dairy cattle to the United States.<sup>66</sup> This was increasing the cow population in Eastern Ontario particularly, which was the principal cheese producing area. During the last year about 7 million pounds of New Zealand cheese had been imported into Canada to sell at about 32½¢ in Montreal. Any floor in that general region would enable N.Z. imports to come in under it.

19. Mr. Pearsall<sup>67</sup> said that, while milk could be diverted in many areas from one product to another, that was not the case in all localities and particularly it was not so in some parts of Eastern Ontario. There, during certain months of the year, particularly May and June, milk had to be used for cheese or not at all. 75% of all the cheese produced in Canada was manufactured between Belleville and Montreal. Concentrating plants were being established that would allow a greater flexibility but it would probably be another four or five years before there would be a complete capacity to shift.

20. The Deputy Minister of Agriculture said that one thing that would probably be necessary would be to discontinue any purchases of butter abroad. However, he thought it would be extremely difficult for the government to avoid a support policy for cheese. Under such a policy there would be a substantial chance that the government might end up holding some 20 million to 25 million pounds of cheese in the autumn.

21. The Committee, after further discussion, agreed:

(a) that no further representations be made to the U.K. government concerning the decisions with regard to the U.K. import programme for the coming year other than to ensure that any announcement concerning it should avoid reference to the U.K.-Canada Continuing Committee or any suggestion that there had been consultation in advance with Canada of the reductions represented by the programme; and,

(b) that the Department of Agriculture prepare for consideration by the Committee before presentation to the Cabinet a memorandum on cheese and the considerations that would affect policy in the coming year.

PURCHASE OF WARSHIP FROM BRITAIN

The Daily Graphic on July 1 published a despatch from its Ottawa correspondent, Patrick Nicholson, under the heading "British offer warship for 40,000,000 pounds more cheese." The story says it is understood in Ottawa that dollars paid by Canada for the aircraft carrier will be utilized by Britain in buying Canadian cheese, and includes an interesting calculation that since aircraft carriers cost about 2s.8d. a pound, compared with 2s.2d. a pound for Canadian cheese, the sale of an 18,000-ton carrier should yield nearly one pound of cheese for every person in Britain.

2. The story has not as yet been carried by any other London paper, but has caused some embarrassment to the Commonwealth Relations Office. Any information you could give me or the Canadian Joint Staff about the status of any discussions that may be proceeding regarding the acquisition of a new aircraft carrier in place of the Magnificent will be helpful.

PURCHASE OF AIRCRAFT CARRIER FROM UNITED KINGDOM

Reference: Your Telegram No. 1510 of July 3, 1952.

Ministers recently gave authority for the purchase of a new aircraft carrier in the United Kingdom at an estimated cost of approximately $21,000,000 as an alternative to the extensive overhaul and alteration of the Magnificent. In this connection, Ministers directed that consideration be given to the desirability of discussing with the United Kingdom the use of a portion of the dollar revenue from the contract for the purchase in Canada of Canadian products such as cheese — importation of which had been reduced or discontinued because of the United Kingdom's balance of payments position. This matter was discussed with Earl Alexander when he was in Ottawa and advice has now been received through Earnscliffe that although the United Kingdom would be prepared, in the circumstances, to make a new carrier available it would not be possible in view of the foreign exchange position to earmark proceeds of the sale for the purchase of specific Canadian products. This advice does not rule out the possibility of further consultations with United Kingdom authorities on this question. We will be keeping you informed of further developments.

PURCHASE OF AIRCRAFT CARRIER FROM THE UNITED KINGDOM

Reference: Your telegram No. 1439 of July 19.†

I am informed that negotiations for the acquisition and completion of new aircraft carrier have been satisfactorily concluded. The only point at issue is the method of payment.

2. As I understand it, the suggestion made by Claxton in conversation with Alexander that the whole purchase price might be paid over to the United Kingdom in the current fiscal year was linked with the suggestion that the United Kingdom would use some agreed proportion of the funds so advanced to buy Canadian cheese or other farm products in surplus supply.

3. From informal enquiries which Bower was authorized to make by the Department of Trade and Commerce and from conversations I had today with Leslie Rowan and Frank Lee, it does not appear that there is any likelihood that the United Kingdom would feel able to increase its food purchases from Canada in consideration of prepaying the estimated cost of the new carrier. In these circumstances am I right in assuming that the Canadian Government would prefer to pay for the carrier in the usual way, i.e. by progress payments, presumably quarterly, for work done on the construction and equipment of the carrier? Alternatively, are there budgetary considerations this year which might make it desirable to prepay the estimated cost of the carrier out of the current year's estimates?

4. I do not think there will be any difficulty about arranging payments by the ordinary method, at the same time I have no doubt that a decision to authorize prepayment would be a highly acceptable windfall to the United Kingdom Treasury.

AFRICANISM AND SOUTH AFRICA

Because of its immense area and diverse peoples and jurisdictions, it is sometimes difficult to realize how rapidly Africa south of the Sahara is becoming unified and how significant for the rest of the world this may be. It is not a unity of political forms or economic spheres of interest. In these regions the efforts at organized co-ordination of government are on a much more local scale, and are marked perhaps more by the reluctance of the units to come together than by any underlying unanimity of purpose. This is true of the tentative organization of common public services in East Africa, the Federation proposals in the Rhodesias and Nyasaland, and the conferences on Transportation and on common scientific problems of the CCTA [CTCA]<sup>68</sup> (see my despatch No. 121 of March 11, 1952).† In each of these the value of combining forces for constructive ends is fully appreciated by those in charge of

2. The African unity I have in mind is to be found in an entirely different quarter and springs from motives very different from those actuating the administration of the colonial powers or the government of South Africa. Two-thirds of Africa is discovering a unity in the swelling volume of African racialism which so far as one can observe is the same in the Gold Coast as in Uganda or the Transvaal, in Kenya as in Southern Rhodesia. It has the same opponent — the white man — the same general, even vague objective — self-determination — and it is founded in an unmistakeably common feature, the colour of its adherents. This last gives it one great advantage over its white rulers. Their colour unites them in the eyes of the African but so far has done little to bring them together in any significant common effort as far as this continent is concerned.

3. Bound together by two such powerful forces as the desire to shake free of the domination — however beneficent — of the white man and the fraternity of a skin pigmentation which almost everywhere in their experience is a disparagement of their race, it is not surprising that a buoyant and belligerent African nationalism or racism is now one of the most striking, and is certainly one of the most universal, social phenomena in Africa today.

4. To this potential of political and social revolution there have now been harnessed all the familiar powers of mass, swift, and sensational communication by the press and radio. As a result, wherever I have been in Africa, I have not only found that the African is intensely interested in what is happening in other parts of his continent — particularly in South Africa, the Gold Coast and now in Kenya — but that he also has abundant information on which to form his opinions and from which to draw encouragement.

5. Many people in South Africa are quite aware of all this. This government has, in matters of transportation, defence, and scientific research, not only supported but taken the initiative in promoting co-operation between African powers. But where the African himself is concerned, South Africans are in a dilemma. They repeatedly claim for their country the special task of preserving western civilization and aspire to give leadership to the other powers in authority in Africa. On the other hand they seem to be philosophically disqualified by their views on colour and by their fears of the African from playing such a role. Reasonable and earnest in so many ways, they seem to be quite incapable of dealing with an African movement because they can or will not concede that it has rights of its own and deserves at least as much respect and consideration as their own political and social convictions. There is a gap in mutual understanding which little is being done to bridge, so far as I can see, and each day it widens. Shortly before his death, about two years after the present Government of South Africa came to power, General Smuts remarked that even if he were to assume office at that date he was doubtful if he could bring about any reconciliation between the Africans and the Europeans, for many years. So far did he judge the races to have drifted apart. Today they are even further apart, and it appears all the more ominous when viewed against the background of Africa as a whole.

6. It is possible, I suppose, to over-theorize about this matter and to overlook the countless obstacles that still divide and weaken any concerted African movement on this scale. But facts more compelling than the logic of a theory make it difficult to escape these conclusions. In the urban riots of the last few weeks, in the slow surge of the resistance movement, in the daily exhortations of African leaders to their people, the uniting spirit of the African race stretching from the Cape to the Sahara is as positive a force as the batons of the police or the laws which bar the black man from the economic opportunity which he so frequently merits.

SOME OBSERVATIONS ON OUR DEFENCE POLICY<sup>1</sup>

I thought it might be useful to put on paper some observations about our defence policy, particularly vis-à-vis the United States, should you be discussing with the Minister the Haines pipeline or other proposed installations in Canada.

2. During the war, for the first time, U.S. installations were constructed in Canada. Although the Government appears to have felt that it was undesirable to have U.S. installations in Canada, our construction industry was taxed to the limit and the United States were pressing for installations which were unnecessary for Canadian requirements. Thus we agreed to U.S. construction of the Crimson Route, the Canol pipeline system, and the Alaska Highway. My recollection is (although I have not checked the files) that the United States also did considerable construction in the way of improvements to existing airfields on the Northwest Route. We also permitted the United States to station forces in Canada for the protection of the Sault Ste. Marie locks. In no case, however, did we give the United States any long-term rights of occupation or use, all installations were for the emergency only.

3. Following the war we proceeded to liquidate all U.S. defence interests in Canada. We took over the Crimson Route, reimbursing the United States, partly on the basis of continuing value to Canada. We took over the maintenance of the Alaska Highway, agreeing, however, that U.S. forces might have the right of passage over the Highway. The United States withdrew its forces from the Canadian side of Sault Ste. Marie. The only "unliquidated" item that remained was Canol; the United States still has the ownership of the 4-inch line from Skagway to the Highway and the 3-inch line from Whitehorse to the Alaska boundary, but the remaining lines appear to have been abandoned. The principles of joint defence in the immediate post-war era were set forth in the thirty-third and thirty-sixth recommendations of the PJBD, copies of which are attached.†

4. The incorporation of Newfoundland raised new problems. We accepted the three U.S. bases and assured the United States that we had no intention of questioning their continued occupation of the bases and continued possession of necessary military rights. We did, however, question certain rights which we regarded as unnecessary and subsequently secured a modification of the Bases Agreement in these respects. One condition of the bargain, not expressly stated but implied, was the granting of a twenty-year lease to an area or areas within the Goose Bay Air Base, subject to Canadian command and control of the Base. This lease has not yet been formally completed but we should be able to complete it shortly. The fact is, of course, that U.S. lines of air communication lie across Newfoundland and Northeastern Canada, and we could hardly have expected the United States to withdraw from this area even under conditions of a quiescent world.

5. There have, of course, been profound changes in our defence situation and policy during the past four years, because of the increasing tension in the international situation. On the whole, these changes indicate a growing maturity in foreign policy: we have come to accept a substantial measure of responsibility for the preservation of a world order which we feel is essential for the security of our way of life and the safety of Canada as a nation. Thus we are participating in resisting aggression in Korea and in countering threats to aggression in Europe. These new responsibilities are heavy and costly, and I am afraid the tendency is growing to carry them at some expense to the maintenance of effective autonomy at home. It is to this latter phase of our policy that the remainder of the paper is mainly directed.

6. During the last four years we have been under repeated requests from the United States for closer co-operation in joint defence of North America and for facilities to enable the United States to operate effectively abroad. Following is a summary of the more important requests dealt with or pending:<sup>2</sup>

1) Weather Stations. The original proposal was that the United States would establish weather stations in Canada. This proposal was eventually modified to provide for joint weather stations, to which Canada would have command. Only one exclusively U.S. weather station (Padloping Island), built in wartime, appears to remain. Although friction between Canadian and U.S. personnel has sometimes occurred, largely because of pay differentials and seniority of the U.S. Second-in-Command over Canadian officers in charge, on the whole, this scheme seems to be working satisfactorily.

2) Loran Stations. During the war certain Loran Stations were established by the United States in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. After the war the Nova Scotia stations were taken over by Canada, but only recently have we been able to persuade Transport to agree in principle to taking over Newfoundland stations although the United States has long been willing. The United States has also requested and been granted permission to survey sites for new Loran stations in the Arctic archipelago. No request for establishing stations has yet come forward.

3) Radar. The original U.S. proposal was for the establishment of an extensive chain across Northern Canada. Over a two-year period this request was modified and an agreement was eventually reached for the establishment of thirty-one stations, most of them within reasonable access of settled areas along the following lines:

- (a) Title to all sites to remain vested in Canada;
- (b) The United States to pay for, roughly, two-thirds of the construction and operating costs, and Canada one-third;
- (c) Canada to do the construction and Canadian materials to be used as far as practicable (all but eight stations in the Newfoundland-Labrador area are being constructed by Canada);
- (d) Canada to man at the outset thirteen stations (later amended to fourteen), the United States the remainder, although Canada can take over the manning of any further stations at any time. No plans are being made by the RCAF to man additional stations.

The United States has subsequently requested permission to survey sites in the Arctic islands for two additional stations (presumably for the protection of Thule Base, Greenland). The request for surveys has been granted.

At the last meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence the United States proposed the establishment of six additional stations in Ontario to protect the U.S. Great Lakes area against low-flying aircraft which might get through the radar net approved and under construction. Three at least of these sites would be in settled areas in Southern Ontario. The United States defence authorities have been put off with requests for further information, but we shall certainly be under pressure for the establishment of these sites. These sites would not be covered by the existing agreement.

4) Frobisher. The United States has requested and been granted the use of Frobisher as a staging and supporting field for Thule. Use is on a year-to-year basis, and if substantial improvements are made to the field, as is likely it may be hard to get the U.S. forces out. The principle of Canadian command and control has been maintained, the RCAF agreeing to a Canadian Commanding Officer, Canadian operation of the control tower, and a small detachment for maintenance purposes.

5) GLOBCOM Sites. About a year ago the United States requested small sites in Newfoundland adjacent to Harmon Field and to Pepperrell for the establishment of global communication facilities. The original proposal was that the same terms and conditions as applied to the leased bases — i.e., ninety-nine years, etc. — should apply, but they were subsequently induced to modify this. The United States has since dropped the proposed sites near Pepperrell, but has added sites in or near Goose Bay. The final proposal accepted by the Ministers concerned and the United States is that the Goose Bay sites should be brought under the terms of the Goose Bay lease and that the United States have occupation of the Harmon site without fixed tenure, either Government having the right to terminate the arrangement subject to consideration by the PJBD, but in such circumstances the PJBD should have regard to the relationship of these facilities to the Goose Bay facilities. In effect, the United States has secured twenty-year tenure for these sites as well as Goose Bay.

6) Torbay. As you know, the United States has informally proposed the development of Torbay as an air-head for supplying outlying stations of the Northeast Command and as a fighter base with accommodation for one squadron. The Canadian Section of the PJBD was able to postpone formal presentation of the request by asking the United States to examine whether their needs could not be met elsewhere (e.g., the Harmon or Argentia bases). It can hardly be said however that the issue is dead. If the United States is granted permission to develop Torbay it will certainly demand some assurance of tenure.

7) Northeast Command. Some time ago the Canadian Government, after prolonged consideration, agreed to the establishment of a U.S. Northeast Command for the Newfoundland-Northeast area of Canada. We were assured at the time that this was not an operational command but merely an administrative one. Indications are, however, that the command authorities assume (and perhaps rightly from their instructions) that it is an operational command. Certainly, under the U.S. Bases Agreement, the United States has the right to take measures to defend the bases. Nor is there any express limitation on the type of operations that may be mounted from the bases, even in peacetime.

The problem is how to reconcile the principle of Canadian command for the defence of Canadian territory (agreed to in Joint Defence plans), with the fact of U.S. rights to defend their own bases in Newfoundland. The problem is most acute in air defence, since air defence of the bases cannot be localized in the base areas and since in fact the only important targets in the area (except St. John's) are the bases. The RCAF plans do not provide for the stationing of any air defence forces in Newfoundland, even in wartime. For some time this problem has been under discussion between the U.S. Northeast Command and the Canadian Atlantic Command (Halifax) and in the Chiefs of Staff. I understand the present tendency in the Chiefs of Staff is to propose that the U.S. Air Defence Forces in Newfoundland should be given responsibility for the defence of this area in Canadian territory by placing U.S. Air Defence Forces in the area for this purpose under the control of the Canadian Air Defence Command (Montreal). However, the U.S. Northeast Command comes directly under the Joint Chiefs of Staff and is responsible for protecting air transport and SAC operations through the area, responsibilities which complicate the problem.

8) SAC Operations over Canadian Territory or from Bases in Canadian Territory. As you know, there have been special discussions on this problem.

9) Reciprocal Reinforcements in Air Defence. At the request of the United States, arrangements have been made for reciprocal reinforcements on the initiative of Air Defence Commanders of Air Defence Forces of the two countries in the event of war — the United States has pressed for the use of the term “emergency”, which however we have avoided.

10) Interceptor Flights. At the request of the United States, the PJBD recommended, and both Governments approved, that the Air Defence Forces of either country under certain conditions might intercept unidentified aircraft over the other, but might not fire thereon. The USAF are now pressing for an extension of this right to permit of opening fire (a) on a plane committing, or manifestly intending to commit, hostile acts; or (b) in the event that the Air Defence Commander responsible for defence of the area authorizes such firing.

11) Haines Pipeline. As you know, Cabinet has approved construction in principle, but apparently there was no support in Cabinet for Canadian participation. This may give the United States in effect a more or less permanent right-of-way across Canadian territory.

Some General Observations

7. It may be that we shall receive fewer demands for new facilities in Canada now that the U.S. Defence acceleration seems to be slackening down. On the other hand, we should not overlook the possible shift in U.S. policy towards greater defence at home and lesser defence abroad should there be a Republican victory next November, and especially if the new President were Mr. Taft or a compromise candidate. A shift in the emphasis of policy towards continental defence would almost certainly result in more pressure for facilities in Canada, pressure which might be very difficult to withstand.

8. Certain other difficulties may be noted: We have repeatedly asked the U.S. authorities for a full statement of their requirements in the Northeast region, but with little result. On different occasions we have been given to understand that nothing more is required, only to have new requests arise shortly thereafter. The fact is, of course, that the U.S. defence programme has been a developing one and that probably they have been unable to give us a final statement of requirements. We have also repeatedly asked to be informed well in advance of requests, but, again, with little result. The Haines pipeline is a specific example of how things are constantly done. We gave permission for the survey about two years ago, but we heard nothing more until the last meeting of the PJBD, when they came forward with a request for an answer in two weeks because of the alleged urgency of the requirement. I suppose the reason is that their requirements, like ours, are not governed only by military needs but by appropriations, and they cannot really say that any facility is a requirement until they have the appropriation. As soon as they get the appropriation for an item the military are often in a hurry to get it done. In part the reason is, no doubt, that the military authorities may have already waited a long time for approval by their own financial authorities, and are already impatient by the time the request is put forward to us. But in part the reason is the U.S. military authorities are very reluctant to take us — or the State Department for that matter — into their confidence at the planning stage. Again, the Haines pipeline is an example. This situation inevitably annoys Canadian officials and Ministers: the U.S. authorities in turn are liable to become impatient even by the necessary delay in “processing” a request. One further point is that the establishment of a U.S. facility in Canada inevitably leads to subsidiary requests and sometimes to attempts by U.S. Service personnel to exercise control over Canadians in other ways. For example, there has been more than one incident at Goose when they have attempted to control Canadian ships. The situation in the Arctic is also in point. U.S. activities there now far surpass those of Canada, and there have been numerous incidents of U.S. military personnel “throwing their weight about.” For example, some months ago the USAF at Thule ordered an RCAF plane on aerial photography over Canadian territory to stop taking photographs and land at Thule. (We heard of the incident only inadvertently, so no action was taken in the Department.) We may anticipate further expansion of the activities of the United States in this area, as indicated above with regard to radar and Loran (see attached photostat chart).†

9. On our part, I think we should recognize that certain other Departments, notably National Defence and Finance, are not very concerned with protecting Canadian sovereignty or autonomy. In fairness to National Defence, our new Defence policy has, of course, imposed on them very heavy responsibilities for operations abroad. In addition, the practice of the Cabinet is to impose an upper limit to defence expenditures, which is always substantially less than the programme which National Defence feels is essential to fulfil their responsibilities. National Defence has then to cut requirements. Naturally, they seek to avoid house-keeping or guard duties for the United States (e.g., radar stations), and tend to assume that their primary responsibilities are the definite commitments of participation abroad rather than protecting such intangibles as sovereignty or autonomy at home.

Conclusions

It is clear that we cannot avoid close co-operation with the United States in the territorial defence of the Continent, and in facilitating its operations abroad in collective defence enterprises in which we are partners. I feel strongly, however, that we should follow as closely as possible the line of policy which was worked out during and especially after the war, which may be briefly summarized as follows:

(a) The United States should be granted no long-term rights of occupation to defence sites in Canada;

(b) As far as possible, facilities should be joint enterprises, in which Canada should maintain command and control;

(c) Canadian command for the defence of Canadian territory (to make this effective we should be prepared to provide the major forces required for the defence of Canadian territory);

(d) We should avoid entering into arrangements which would permit the stationing of U.S. forces in Canada and seek to liquidate existing arrangements permitting this (e.g., the manning of radar stations by U.S. personnel), the Bases Agreement and Goose Bay Lease excepted.

MEMORANDUM OF A DISCUSSION WITH
MR. HAYDEN RAYNOR OF THE STATE DEPARTMENT,
HELD ON NOVEMBER 20, 1952

Mr. Hayden Raynor, of the U.S. State Department, and Mr. Don Bliss, Minister at the U.S. Embassy, called this morning on Mr. MacKay. Also present for the discussions were Mr. Rogers,<sup>3</sup> Mr. Eberts,<sup>4</sup> Mr. Cox,<sup>5</sup> and Mr. Barton.<sup>6</sup> The following topics were discussed:

...

Canada-United States Defence Relations Generally

3. There was some discussion of the difficulties which Canada had in dealing with U.S. requests concerning proposed U.S. defence installations in Canada. The principal of these was the fact that Canada was not consulted at a sufficiently early stage in the development of plans. This resulted in delay in obtaining Canadian consideration of U.S. proposals. As an example, the situation concerning the Haines-Fairbanks pipeline was cited. Canada first learned of this project at the June, 1952 meeting of the PJBD, when Canadian approval was requested as a matter of urgency. The proposal required negotiations with the B.C. Government which have proven complicated and time-consuming, and thus have delayed Canadian approval. However, the concern of Canadian officials over this delay is tempered by the knowledge that a complete account of the project was published in a U.S. journal as early as December, 1951.

4. Another example of a case where lack of early consultation had delayed consideration by Canada of a U.S. defence project was that of the six additional radar stations which it was proposed should be located in Ontario. This proposal had first been advanced by the U.S. Section of the PJBD in June, 1952, but the information which Canada required prior to consideration of the proposal was not furnished until the September meeting of the Board. This project raises another problem of concern to the Canadian Government, i.e., the stationing of numbers of U.S. troops in populated areas of Canada, which is politically undesirable for a variety of reasons, and causes difficulty whenever it arises.

5. There was some discussion of the situation with respect to U.S. activities and installations in Newfoundland. It was agreed that the recent modification of U.S. proposals concerning Torbay, coupled with the current meetings of the M.C.C. on the question of command in the Northeastern area of Canada, had done much to ease the concern of the Canadian Government over the position there. In the discussion on this item, Mr. MacKay again drew attention to the firm Canadian policy that a Canadian commander must control air defence operations over Canadian Territory. He also reiterated the concern of the Canadian Government to keep the numbers of U.S. forces situated in populated areas of Canada to a minimum.

6. Mr. MacKay then raised the question of U.S. defence activities in the Arctic. He referred to Project "Lincoln" and expressed concern that it might be considered necessary to superimpose such an expensive scheme on the existing radar network. There followed a general discussion on the implications of Project "Lincoln", during the course of which it was made clear that it was recognized that the proposals involved had not, as yet, been accepted by the U.S. defence authorities, and might never be.

7. Mr. Raynor stated that he appreciated the Canadian position on these matters, and said that the State Department was endeavouring to improve arrangements for consultation with the Canadian authorities on joint defence arrangements. He expressed the view that the tradition of friendly relations between Canada and the United States was built upon frank discussion of difficulties as they arose.

RADAR DEFENCE SYSTEM

In January, 1951, the Permanent Joint Board on Defence recommended the establishment of a radar defence system involving the construction of 31 stations in Canada. It was agreed that the cost should be shared by Canada and the United States on a ratio of approximately 1 to 2. By the terms of the Recommendation, it was provided that Canada might take over the operation of additional stations in the chain beyond its one-third share. Canada, therefore, has the right to operate all the radar stations on Canadian soil. When the system comes into operation later this year, Canada plans to man 13 stations which are, because of the nature of the stations, 4 more than Canada's one-third share. The United States will reimburse Canada for the operation of these 4 stations. Since the costs of operating the whole system are to be shared on a ratio basis, it would cost Canada about the same amount of money to man 30 stations as it does to man 13. From 120 to 200 men are needed on each station.

When the radar system was planned, the RCAF indicated an intention to man additional stations as soon as operators could be trained. From the political viewpoint it seems desirable that Canada should operate as many of the stations as possible. Although stations designed almost entirely for the protection of the U.S. bases in Newfoundland might best be manned by U.S. operators, it seems theoretically desirable that all other stations should be manned by Canada. Not only would Canadian manning limit the number of exclusively U.S. installations on Canadian soil but it would put us in a better position in discussions with the United States on command in the air defence of North America.

We understand from the RCAF that National Defence has now no plans for taking over additional stations in the network for at least the next two years. No provision is being made to train additional operators for the system. Responsible officers in National Defence have suggested that the possibility of Canada wanting additional stations is "both academic and remote."

Since the estimates for the next fiscal year are now fairly definite, and since the RCAF manpower ceiling makes the commitment of additional radar operators and supporting staff difficult, perhaps we might postpone raising the issue with National Defence. This is, however, a matter which we might bear in mind when future manpower requirements are being considered.

UNITED STATES IMPLEMENTATION OF THE AGREEMENT FOR EXTENSION OF THE CONTINENTAL RADAR DEFENCE SYSTEM

You may be interested in looking at the annexed letter of September 23rd from the United States Embassy regarding the plans of the USAF Air Defence Command for the manning and support of radar stations in Canada which are to be operated by the USAF.<sup>7</sup>

2. We have sent this letter to the Department of National Defence and other interested Departments for comment. It is not clear at the moment whether the express permission of the Canadian Government is required for the establishment of the offices in Winnipeg, Vancouver<sup>7</sup> and Ottawa referred to in the letter. The Exchange of Notes of August 1, 1951, included an authorization to the United States to station personnel at the sites of the radar stations but did not deal with the need for supporting offices in various cities of Canada.

3. In connection with the proposed "Accountable Office" in Ottawa, the United States Embassy told us that they had suggested to the USAF that the 28 officers and airmen who are to be in this office should not normally wear uniform.

RADAR AGREEMENT WITH THE U.S.:
PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF U.S.
MILITARY OFFICES IN OTTAWA AND OTHER CITIES

I attended a meeting in the Minister's Office today (with Mr. Wilgress, Mr. Ritchie, and Mr. MacKay) at which the Minister brought up the recent letter from Mr. Morgan, of the U.S. Embassy, concerning the proposed offices.

2. The Minister recalled that it had always been desired that the radar stations to be operated by the U.S. should not be close to centres of population. Now the U.S. wish to open military offices in Ottawa and other cities in connection with these radar stations. He was not very happy about the prospect. Mr. MacKay pointed out that the offices would be temporary installations and were apparently essential in connection with the big construction and financial operation involved. Mr. Pearson asked whether we could not tell the U.S. that these offices should be set up as annexes to the U.S. Consulates. This form of establishment would be preferable to the establishment of separate USAF offices in Ottawa and other cities. Mr. MacKay said that he thought this might be a possible solution and that we should look into it.

3. After the meeting I spoke to Mr. MacKay, and he thought that we might wait for a few days before speaking to the U.S. Embassy.<sup>8</sup> In the meantime we may get replies to the letters we sent to the other Government departments concerned.

RADAR AGREEMENT WITH THE U.S.: ESTABLISHMENT BY THE USAF OF OFFICES IN CANADIAN CITIES

Annexed for convenient reference is my memorandum to you of September 24 on this subject. Pursuant to your instructions, Mr. Wershof had a talk with Mr. Bliss regarding these offices, and put to him the idea of calling them annexes to the respective U.S. Consulates. Before reporting Mr. Bliss' response to this suggestion, I should like to give you his clarification of the purposes and problems of the offices, particularly the one in Ottawa.

2. The small Finance Offices in Winnipeg and Vancouver are necessary in order to look after the financial affairs of the stations in Northwestern Canada which will be operated by the USAF. The Post Exchange office in Winnipeg has been established in order to help the USAF to buy Canadian products, as far as possible, for sale in the P.X.'s which the Department of National Revenue is allowing the USAF to establish at some of the remote radar stations.

3. The "Accountable Office" in Ottawa is being established for the purpose of keeping an accurate record of the U.S. Government's property which is going into the stations manned or constructed by the U.S. It is necessary to keep such a record and to keep it up to date indefinitely, because of the possibility, under the Radar Agreement, that some of this property may eventually be reclaimed by the U.S. and the further possibility that the property might some day be transferred to Canadian Government ownership. Mr. Bliss feels therefore that the activities of the Accountable Office are not only essential from the point of view of the U.S. Government, but will be very useful to the RCAF when, or if, the RCAF takes over the operation of any particular station from the USAF.

4. The U.S. Government would have preferred to put the Accountable Office in a Canadian Government office building. They made enquiries (not through External) and were told that there was no possibility of Canadian Government office space being available. Accordingly, they have rented space in the Metcalfe Building, although the lease has not yet been signed.

5. Even before we raised the question, the U.S. Embassy and the Air Attaché had discussed with the Air Defence Command of the USAF the desirability of making the Ottawa office as inconspicuous as possible. There is no danger of the main entrance bearing a description such as "U.S. Air Force, Air Defence Command, Ottawa Branch." The name they had in mind for the office was simply "Air Defence Command, Property Office."

6. The personnel of this office will be instructed to wear civilian clothes except on ceremonial occasions of an official or social nature requiring the wearing of a uniform, or when on travel status.

7. The personnel will also be briefed on the necessity of keeping the office inconspicuous. They will be told to say to enquirers that they are working on a joint classified project of the USAF and the RCAF.

8. Mr. Bliss said that he and the USAF are convinced that this office has to be in Ottawa because of the necessity of its being in close touch with the RCAF and the Department of Defence Production.

9. Mr. Bliss hoped that this information would help to give a more accurate picture of what the office will be doing.

10. He then discussed your suggestion that the offices in Ottawa and in the other cities might be called "Annex to the U.S. Consulate". Mr. Bliss says that such a decision would create real administrative difficulties for the State Department and for the U.S. Embassy. The Consulates had, in fact, nothing to do with the personnel and work of these offices and all kinds of administrative trouble and confusion for the U.S. Government would be created if the offices had to be called Annexes to Consulates. He said that consideration had been given to the possibility of nominally placing the personnel of the Ottawa office under the Air Attaché, but here again the practical difficulties were serious; for one thing, it would mean adding twenty-eight people to the nominal staff of the U.S. Embassy.

11. Mr. Bliss would like to know whether we wish to press the suggestion that the offices be called Annexes to Consulates.

12. Also, Mr. Bliss would be grateful for assurance that, leaving aside the question of name, there is no substantive objection to the establishment of the offices, particularly the one in Ottawa. The personnel who are to work in the Ottawa office have received their instructions and are arranging to come here; nine are here already. It is therefore important for the US Embassy to know almost immediately if the Canadian Government objects to the opening of the office.<sup>9</sup> In this connection, we are expecting to receive a letter from National Defence saying that they have no objection to the establishment of the offices.

[Ottawa,] October 20, 1952

Dear Mr. Bliss,

RADAR DEFENCE SYSTEM:

U.S.A.F. OFFICES IN OTTAWA, WINNIPEG AND VANCOUVER

As you know, the Canadian authorities have been considering the plans for United States offices in Ottawa, Winnipeg and Vancouver, described in Mr. Morgan's letter of September 23.

Although we would have preferred to see these U.S.A.F. offices located elsewhere than in cities, the Canadian authorities recognize that the offices are necessary for the efficient support of those radar stations which are to be manned by the U.S.A.F., and therefore no objection is taken to their establishment.

We understand that the personnel of the offices will not normally wear uniform and that every reasonable effort will be made to keep the offices inconspicuous.

With reference to the establishments in Winnipeg and Vancouver, the Department of National Defence has asked the R.C.A.F. to see whether it would be possible for them to find space at one of their establishments in each of these centres to make it unnecessary for the U.S.A.F. to set up downtown offices. If however, in the meantime, the U.S.A.F. have or will have entered into lease arrangements, this suggested provision of space by the R.C.A.F. might be possible at some future date.

The offices are not, of course, regarded as permanent establishments. Their operation in future years depends on the continuance of the need for them. The Canadian Government therefore reserves the right to withdraw the permission for their establishment, but such action would naturally be taken only after full consultation and reasonable notice.

Yours sincerely,

L.D. WILGRESS

4. The Minister of National Defence reported that the United States wished to station army units in Canada for the manning of some of the radar stations and the units would include negroes integrated into white formations. They had enquired whether there would be any objection. There might well be objection to the stationing of negro units but it was difficult to take exception to units that included only a proportion of negroes. He suggested that the U.S. authorities be informed that the units could be brought in but that they be asked informally to ensure that the proportion of negro personnel did not exceed ten percent.

INTERCEPTOR FLIGHTS
BY THE UNITED STATES IN CANADA

Current procedures approved both by Canada and the United States governing interception of possible hostile aircraft, are based on PJBD

Recommendation 51/4 of May 1951. These procedures provide that aircraft controlled by the Air Defence System of the U.S. or Canada engaged in intercepting unidentified aircraft crossing the border between the two countries are permitted to fly over the territory of both countries as may be required to carry out effective interception. Interceptor flights are governed by the following provisos:

(a) Investigations by U.S. military aircraft over Canadian territory will only occur in the case of an aircraft headed for the Canada-U.S. border from the Canadian side whose flight plan has not been transmitted to the U.S. authorities; or which is off course, and then only in the event that the actions of the aircraft give rise to a reasonable interpretation of intention to cross the border. Activities of Canadian military aircraft over the United States are similarly restricted.

(b) Close investigation, with all due precaution, or interrogation, is to be performed solely on unidentified multi-engined aircraft for the purpose of obtaining electronic or visual identification. No attempt will be made to order an intercepted aircraft to land, nor to open fire except when the intercepted aircraft is over the national territory of the Air Force performing the interception.

(c) Investigating aircraft will not approach closer, in accordance with Civil Aeronautics Authority and Department of Transport standards, than is necessary to establish identification.

2. At the PJBD meeting of June 1952, the U.S. Air Force Member stated the opinion of the USAF that Recommendation 51/4 was too restrictive. The terms proposed as more suitable by the USAF are as follows:

“(a) The Air Defense Commander of either country, or the coordinated air defense system of both countries, be authorized to employ fighter-interceptor aircraft of either or both countries, or other means of either or both countries, available to him in the interception of unidentified aircraft over the national territory of either country regardless of International Boundary.

(b) The exercising of this authority be qualified by the following conditions:

(i) Investigations to occur in, but not limited to, the case of aircraft crossing an Air Defense Identification Zone Boundary (Canada or the United States) whose flight plan has not been received by the Air Defense System, or which was off course or late beyond mutually acceptable criteria for identification. Investigations be conducted by interception and visual identification, and electronic interrogation.

(ii) No attempt be made to order intercepted aircraft to land nor to open fire unless the aircraft commit(s) a hostile act, is (are) manifestly hostile intent, or is (are) declared hostile by the Air Defense Commander responsible for identification.

It will be noted that these provisions make no attempt to define ‘hostile act’ and ‘manifestly hostile intent.’ It is considered to be impracticable to attempt to list or otherwise define all of the many ways in which an aircraft can commit a hostile act or evidence hostile intent. Any agreement specifically spelling out such methods would be too restrictive upon the Air Defense Commander concerned."

3. The question of the exact meaning of the USAF proposals has been discussed by this Department with officers of the RCAF concerned with the matter. They have advised that if the proposals were approved it would mean that either USAF or RCAF aircraft, directed either by a USAF or RCAF air defence controller, could order interception of aircraft over U.S. or Canadian territory, and if it was deemed that a hostile act was being committed or intended, could order the aircraft being intercepted to land or be shot down. It would remove the present restriction that no attempt will be made to order an intercepted aircraft to land, nor to open fire except when the intercepted aircraft is over the national territory of the Air Force performing the interception.

4. The U.S. proposals were referred by the Secretary, PJBD, to the Department of Transport for comment. The Deputy Minister of Transport replied, on July 21, 1952, that he could see no reason for extending the existing regulations. He followed this by two further letters, the first dated July 21, 1952, and the second dated July 22, 1952, (copies attached)† giving details of an incident involving a TCA flight from Winnipeg to Toronto, on July 9, 1952, when it was intercepted by two USAF F-86 aircraft. In his letter of July 21 he stated that he regarded this incident as supporting the argument that the existing procedures should not be extended as proposed by the USAF.

5. Copies of the letters received from the Deputy Minister of Transport have been passed to the RCAF member of the PJBD for comment. In the event that the USAF aircraft violated existing procedures, the A.O.C. Air Defence Command, RCAF, has an established channel for reporting the incident to the USAF for disciplinary action.

6. The RCAF officers concerned have informed us that flight plans of all aircraft flying in the air defence interception zone at altitudes above 4000 ft. are required to be transmitted to air defence control centres both in Canada and the United States. In Canada the communications links involved are operated by the Department of Transport, and in the United States by the Bell Telephone Company on behalf of the Defence Department. The air defence identification zone in Canada has only recently been extended west of the Great Lakes, and links with the USAF are not yet functioning satisfactorily. The RCAF therefore anticipates the possibility of further interceptions until the situation is remedied. This will likely be a source of irritation to TCA and the Department of Transport, but should probably be tolerated for the time being so long as the intercepting aircraft obey the established procedures. The RCAF officers concerned ventured the personal comment that the Department of Transport was not being very helpful in making the present system function effectively.

7. After the Services and the Department of Transport have settled on their views with respect to the U.S. proposal, I will consult with you prior to the September meeting of the PJBD as to the position to be taken by this Department. In the meantime I thought that you would wish to be informed of the existing situation and the incident involving the TCA Flight from Winnipeg to Toronto.<sup>10</sup>

My dear Colleague,

INTERCEPTOR FLIGHTS

At the June, 1952 meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence the U.S. Section of the Board made proposals for a modification of Recommendation 51/4 on interceptor flights (copy of Recommendation 51/4 attached).† The effect of the U.S. proposal would be to allow the Air Defence Commander of either country or the over-all Air Defence Commander, if appointed, authority to employ interceptor aircraft or other available means of either or both countries without regard to international boundaries. The U.S. Section considered that this modification was necessary because an unidentified aircraft could fly on a course in Canada parallel to the Canada-United States border and at the last moment turn onto a heading for an attack on a U.S. target adjacent to the border. Under existing regulation a USAF aircraft intercepting an enemy aircraft would not be able to engage the aircraft until it crossed the international border. A copy of the U.S. proposal was forwarded to your Deputy Minister at the conclusion of the PJBD meeting.

The RCAF views on the U.S. proposal are contained in the Memorandum from the RCAF Member to the Canadian Secretary of the PJBD, dated September 8, 1952, (copy attached).† Briefly the RCAF supports the view of the United States that the conditions of the Recommendation require modification. However, they do not agree with the USAF proposal and recommend instead that sub paragraphs (a) and (b) of Recommendation 51/4 should be modified as follows:

(a) Investigation of unidentified aircraft by U.S. military aircraft over Canadian territory would only occur when it is not possible for a Canadian military aircraft to carry out the investigation; the activities of Canadian military aircraft over U.S. territory would be similarly restricted. For the purposes of this agreement an unidentified aircraft is an aircraft which enters or flies within an Air Defence Identification Zone, whose flight plan has not been received by the Air Defence System or which is off course or late beyond mutually acceptable criteria for identification.

We should be very careful about extending these interception rights — especially when no emergency exists. L.B. P[earson]

(b) Close investigation with all due precaution, or interrogation would be performed solely on unidentified multi-engine aircraft for the purpose of obtaining electronic or visual identification. The Rules of Engagement of the country over which the interception takes place are to apply, except that the engagement of an aircraft is to be carried out only on orders issued by the Air Defence Commander (or an officer who has been delegated the requisite powers) of the country over which the interception takes place.

The RCAF proposal was discussed at a meeting of the Canadian section of the PJBD which was held on September 16, and at which Major R. Dodds, Controller of Civil Aviation, was present. Major Dodds stated that his Department recognized the validity of the view that a modification of the existing recommendation was required and felt that the RCAF proposal was sound. He added, however, that his Department was greatly concerned about the possibility of an international incident as a result of carelessness on the part of a USAF pilot.

General McNaughton pointed out that the two countries had invested an enormous amount of money in the Air Defence System and that the interception procedure was essential to its success. He noted that under the RCAF proposal authority to engage an unidentified aircraft over Canadian territory would have to be granted by the Canadian Commander and that the provisions of sub-paragraph (c) of Recommendation 51/4 which states "Investigating aircraft would not approach closer, in accordance with Civil Aeronautics Authority and Department of Transport Standards, than is necessary to establish identification" would still be operative. He proposed that emphasis could be added to the Canadian position in this matter by requiring that all interceptions which breached Department of Transport regulations and the disciplinary action taken as a consequence should be reported to the PJBD. General McNaughton then directed that the RCAF proposal with the addition which he had suggested should be submitted to the Ministers concerned, i.e. External Affairs, National Defence and Transport, to obtain their permission to advance the Canadian proposal at next week's meeting of the PJBD.

It seems to me that the RCAF proposal with the addition suggested by General McNaughton is a sound one. If you agree I will instruct the Canadian Section that they may advance the Canadian proposal at the meeting of the PJBD which is to take place next week.

Yours sincerely,

BROOKE CLAXTON

My dear Colleague:

RE: INTERCEPTOR FLIGHTS

I have your letter of the 17th instant with reference to the proposals made by the U.S. Section of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence for a modification of Recommendation 51/4 on interceptor flights.

I note the views of the R.C.A.F. on the U.S. proposal and I have had the benefit of a discussion with General McNaughton this afternoon. I approve of the R.C.A.F. proposal with the addition suggested by General McNaughton.

I simply want to take this opportunity to bring to your attention the fact that the arrangements under Recommendation 51/4 have caused the Civil Aviation Branch of the Department of Transport some anxiety. For example there were two cases of United States jet fighters intercepting T.C.A. aircraft over Canadian territory this summer in rather dangerous circumstances. In one case T.C.A. considers that a fatal accident was avoided by a very small margin. The new proposal will add somewhat to the risk of civil flying since, in spite of precautions, mistakes in interception do occur as will errors in judgement on the part of military pilots whose enthusiasm may be less tempered by safety considerations than in the civil field. However, I realize that in times of war or great emergency such as we now have the national interest must prevail. For that reason and for the reasons set out in your letter, I concur in the proposal.

Yours sincerely,

LIONEL CHEVRIER

7. Interceptor Flights. The Canadian Air Force Member referred to Section 3 of the Board's Journal of June 1952 in connection with interceptor flights. At the last meeting the U.S. Air Force Member had indicated that the U.S. Air Force considered Recommendation 51/4 on this subject to be too restrictive. The United States therefore had submitted proposals for a modification of the Board's previous Recommendation.

The Canadian Air Force Member stated that he wished to defer consideration on this matter by the Board pending service-to-service conferences regarding Royal Canadian Air Force proposals which he felt would meet substantially the United States requirements with respect to amendments in Recommendation 51/4.

The Canadian Chairman emphasized the difficulties in obtaining the Canadian Government's concurrence to changes in Recommendation 51/4 unless there was assurance of prompt action in handling complaints which might arise. He recognized the possibility of unfortunate incidents on both sides of the border which would require corrective measures and disciplinary action. Responsibility in such cases would lie with the air defense commanders of the two countries. However, the Canadian Chairman felt that it would be helpful if the Board arranged to receive reports from air defense commanders regarding the action taken in cases where there was a breach of regulations concerning the method of interception. These reports could be followed and discussed by the Board. He felt that this action of the Board might alleviate unfortunate repercussions in public opinion on both sides of the border if serious incidents occurred.

The Board agreed to consider the suggestion of the Canadian Chairman at a later date after the two Air Forces had reached a decision on the technical aspects of the interception agreement.

COMMAND RELATIONSHIPS — U.S. NORTH EAST COMMAND

With reference to our discussion about two weeks ago I attach a JPS<sup>11</sup> redraft of the paper entitled "Basic Provisions for Canada-U.S. collaboration on Defence in the North Eastern Areas of Canada."<sup>12</sup> The original was drawn up in February 1951 at a meeting between General Whitten<sup>12</sup> and the Joint Services Committee (East Coast).

Commander-in-Chief, Northeast Command, United States Army.

In approving the current Canada-U.S. Emergency Defence Plan (MCC 300/3) on December 18, 1951, the Chiefs of Staff observed that "The U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff should be advised that since CINCNE had been specifically excluded from the Command Principles (Appendix F) the Command relationships between CINCNE<sup>13</sup> and Canadian Commanders, which have not yet been negotiated, should be taken under consideration as soon as possible."

The JPC subsequently approved, on January 3, a signal to CJS(W) suggesting that this question be discussed at the next meeting of the MCC.<sup>14</sup> The U.S. section of the MCC have agreed but noted that at the meeting of the PJBD in November, 1951, the U.S. Chairman had made an informal suggestion to the Canadian Chairman that the question of Canadian Participation in the North East Command should be discussed.

At yesterday's meeting of the JPC the attached paper was tabled as a possible basis for discussion at the MCC meeting which begins next Monday at Petawawa.† It was agreed that unless there was general satisfaction and agreement with the paper it would not be presented.<sup>15</sup> Mr. Glazebrook would appreciate your views by tomorrow, if possible, as to whether this paper is a satisfactory basis for discussion with the U.S. section MCC or whether it would be better to inform them that the question is still under consideration and invite some discussion. In either event, would you consider it useful to have a discussion with the service members of the JPC later this week.<sup>16</sup>

P.S. AVM [Air Vice Marshal] James has just returned from a meeting in the U.S. with General Whitten and other U.S. Air Defence Commanders. No agreement was reached on this particular problem. I understand that James proposed something in the nature of an integrated Air Defence Command of North America with himself as Deputy responsible for all Air Defence Forces in Canada. The U.S. Northeast Air Defence Commander would be subordinate to James. General Whitten pointed out that he might have to deploy forces to Greenland which would create complications for both of them. I also understand, as you may know, that Whitten has no air defence forces in Newfoundland yet. It seems that AVM James and RCAF HQ are not agreed on this problem either. J.M. C[ook]

U.S. NORTHEAST COMMAND

Commodore Raynor<sup>17</sup> referred to the letter from this Department requesting reconsideration of the JPC paper "Basic provisions for Canada-U.S. Collaboration on Defence in the Northeastern areas of Canada" before its submission to the Chiefs of Staff Committee. General Foulkes expressed the opinion that the Government would never accept a policy giving the U.S. responsibility for defence in this area nor did he think the Government would accept the idea of a Canadian as assistant to General Whitten. He confirmed our view that the U.S. Northeast Command was not accepted as a territorial command but merely as a command for the U.S. forces in the area. He suggested it might be necessary to put a Canadian Commander in Newfoundland with whom General Whitten could deal. Any instructions to civilians, for example to impose blackout or other regulations, must come, General Foulkes feels, from a Canadian — and not merely a Canadian assistant to Whitten. General Foulkes said we must develop some form of a cloak of Canadian control in the area. I gained the impression, though I may have been mistaken, that General Foulkes would prefer some form of integrated command such as A/V/M James has advocated.

RE: U.S. NORTHEAST COMMAND

1. At General Foulkes' Briefing Meeting of June 4, he reported that he had discussed the problem of air defence in Northeast Canada with General Bradley on June 2 in Washington. According to General Foulkes, General Bradley made the following comments:

Commodore H.S. Rayner, Secretary, Chiefs of Staff Committee, Department of National Defence.

(1) When the terms of reference for the U.S. Northeast Command were drawn up, the question of air defence was not considered seriously. He intended to have another look at them.

(2) There were no plans at present to station air defence squadrons permanently in Newfoundland. Current plans call for the temporary deployment of fighter squadrons to Newfoundland only in conjunction with S.A.C. operations. Fighter squadrons might therefore be stationed in Newfoundland for a couple of weeks at a time.

(3) He could see no major difficulty in including any fighter defence forces assigned to U.S. Northeast Command in the General Air Defence system.

(4) He would be prepared, if necessary, to fly to Ottawa and/or Newfoundland to settle the problem on the spot.

(5) He agreed with General Foulkes that the Commanding General U.S. Northeast (Air) Command should not give orders to the Civil population on such matters as blackout etc. This was a matter for Canadian Commanders.

2. General Foulkes then expressed the view that the problem can be solved easily at the Chiefs of Staff level. He was then queried by Colonel Kingstone re the paper now being prepared by the R.C.A.F. as a result of direction given at the CSC meeting on May 30. He agreed that it should be completed and used at the forthcoming meeting of the PJBD. He also said he would send a copy directly to General Bradley with a note referring to their conversations on the subject.

3. I have the following comments to make with reference to General Foulkes' report:

(1) General Bradley's statement that he does not know of any plans to station fighter defence squadrons permanently in Newfoundland is at variance with indications received through the PJBD at its last meeting and in connection with plans under discussion for the development of Torbay Airport.<sup>18</sup>

(2) General Foulkes was rather vague as to what he or General Bradley meant in saying that fighter defence forces assigned to the U.S. Northeast Command would be included in the Air Defence System. Some officers attending the briefing thought he meant that they would be put under the Canadian Air Defence Commander and others that they could be put under the U.S. Continental Air Defence Commander. It seems to me that a clear definition of existing arrangements for air defence cooperation between Canada and the United States is required. The arrangements are quite often referred to as an integrated system or concept which as far as I know, does not exist. Perhaps the R.C.A.F. paper now being prepared will clarify this point.

(3) After speaking to Mr. MacKay I spoke to Colonel Kingstone re the procedure for bringing the proposed R.C.A.F. paper to the attention of the U.S. authorities. I explained to Colonel Kingstone that External considered it necessary to at least show the paper to Mr. Pearson and Mr. Claxton first. I presume that General McNaughton should also be informed before General Foulkes refers anything directly to General Bradley. I shall keep in touch with Colonel Kingstone to ensure that no action is taken without our knowledge.

4. On the whole, I do not consider that a solution to the problem can be found as easily as General Foulkes and General Bradley seem to think.<sup>19</sup>

RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN CANADIAN MILITARY AUTHORITIES AND

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF UNITED STATES NORTHEAST COMMAND

1. The purpose of this paper is to clarify the Canadian position regarding the relationship between the Canadian military authorities and the Commander-in-Chief United States Northeast Command in order that discussions may take place with the United States military authorities relative to the air defence of the Northeastern areas of Canada and other military matters.

2. In October 1950 the United States Newfoundland Base Command was changed to a unified command designated the United States Northeast Command. The responsibilities of this command proposed by the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff and agreed to by the Canadian Government are as follows:

(a) The proposed command will be established as a unified command for the purpose of facilitating planning and the tactical employment of United States forces assigned to the command.

(b) The missions assigned to this command will be in consonance with the following two principles:

(i) maintenance of the security of the United States forces concerned;

(ii) planning in concert with the Canadian forces for the defence of such parts of North America and the sea and air approaches thereto as may be agreed upon from time to time by the Governments of the United States and Canada.

3. General Henry, the Chairman, U.S. Section Canada-U.S. Permanent Joint Board on Defence, explained in a letter dated November 9, 1951 that, from the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff viewpoint, U.S. Northeast Command was:

To provide a more direct operational control by the Joint Chiefs of Staff over U.S. forces on bases in Canada and Greenland and to facilitate the development of joint U.S.-Canada plans and surveys necessary for use in an emergency. The command is not territorial and its primary functions are associated with the support of a Strategic Air Command and the Military Air Transport Service. At present, there are no combat forces indicated for allocation to the command. For the future, the combat forces indicated for allocation to the same are U.S. Air Defence and Base Defence forces.

4. In February, 1951, a meeting was held in Halifax attended by the Commander-in-Chief, United States Northeast Command, the Canadian Joint Services Committee/East Coast and other American and Canadian officers. It was agreed that planning between Commander-in-Chief United States Northeast Command and the appropriate Canadian commanders should be commenced and to provide a basis for this planning, a paper entitled "Basic Provisions for Canada-U.S. Collaboration of Defence in the Northeastern Area of Canada" was drawn up. This paper was forwarded to the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Canadian Chiefs of Staff for approval.

5. It is understood that the paper was acceptable to the United States authorities and that Commander-in-Chief United States Northeast Command is using it as his guide pending notification of Canadian approval.

6. However, the paper is not acceptable to the Canadian authorities, chiefly from a political viewpoint. The main objection is to that portion which would give to Commander-in-Chief United States Northeast Command, the area defence of the Newfoundland-Labrador area and the northeast approaches to the U.S. and Canada. The political objection, of course, is to a United States commander directly under the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, being responsible for the defence of a considerable portion of Canadian territory.

7. Informal discussions have taken place between Commander-in-Chief United States Northeast Command, the Air Officer Commanding Canadian Air Defence Command, and the Commander-in-Chief, United States Air Defence Command, and the subject has been under consideration in Ottawa for some time in an attempt to find some solution that would meet the requirements of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff and at the same time be politically acceptable to the Canadian Government.

8. The whole problem lies in air defence. The Air Officer Commanding Canadian Air Defence Command, has been delegated the responsibility for the air defence of Canada. However, the Commander-in-Chief United States Northeast Command will have in Canada under his command radar stations and an air defence control centre and may have fighter squadrons and anti-aircraft guns. Because of the nature of air warfare, air defence cannot generally be confined to particular boundaries and cannot be restricted to relatively small areas as can be land forces. Therefore, even if these fighter squadrons were employed only for the defence of leased bases and other bases occupied by the Commander-in-Chief, United States Northeast Command's forces, they could not help but provide air defence of portions of Canada while defending their own bases.

9. The general plans for the air defence of Canada and the United States are contained in the Canada-United States Emergency Defence Plan MCC 300/3 dated 1 June, 1951 and also in the Canada-United States Regional Short Term Plan CUS 3/1 dated 24 October, 1951, both of which have been approved by the two countries. In these plans, it is stated that the air defence systems of Canada and the United States will be coordinated. The command principles in these plans state any forces of either country will operate under a commander designated by the country in which the forces are serving, that is, Canadian and United States forces operating in Canada would come under a commander designated by Canada. Further it should be noted that the agreement between Canada and the United States concerning the installation of radar stations as part of the continental air defence system was drawn up on the basis that these stations would form part of a coordinated Canada-United States air defence scheme. U.S. Northeast Command is at present not included in these agreements.

10. The strategic concept of MCC 300/3 states that forces will be deployed to afford protection for as many of the essential elements of the war making capacity as the forces allocated will permit and accept the risks involved in leaving some critical areas unprotected. "The Goose Bay-Stephenville-St. John's Area" is one of the critical areas listed to be protected, but under the emergency plan, the only air defence unit allotted is one Canadian anti-aircraft battery. However, at the March 1952 meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, the United States Air Member reported that the United States wished to send one squadron of 25 jet interceptor aircraft to Torbay for the defence of the area.<sup>22</sup>

11. It is considered that action should be taken to find a solution to this problem which would be satisfactory both to the United States and to Canada and which would permit the respective American and Canadian commanders to coordinate their plan.

12. It is, therefore, proposed that:

(a) all air defence forces in Newfoundland and Labrador be brought into the coordinated Canadian and United States air defence system and receive operational direction and control from the appropriate Air Defence Command;

(b) as suggested by the Chairman, United States Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence, an RCAF officer be accredited to the Headquarters of the Commander-in-Chief, United States Northeast Command. This officer would keep the Commander-in-Chief United States Northeast Command informed of Canadian views to any defence arrangements contemplated by the Commander-in-Chief United States Northeast Command. On matters concerned with air defence, this officer would be responsible to the Air Officer Commanding, Air Defence Command. He would also be responsible for advising the Canadian civilian authorities of the air raid warning status and dealing with Canadian civil air defence authorities on all air defence matters.

13. This would not involve the United States in making any commitments to provide forces or in undertaking any responsibility for the air defence of Canada with the United States forces except that of passing on early warning information of unidentified or enemy aircraft to the adjoining sections of the Canadian air defence system and assisting in the air defence of the area with such forces as were available at the time to the maximum extent possible. Such operations would also assist in defending Canada and the United States from air attack through the area in which the Commander-in-Chief United States Northeast Command's forces are located.

My dear Colleague,

Attached is a memorandum dated July 23,<sup>23</sup> from the Chairman of the Chiefs of Staff, enclosing a paper on the relationship between Canadian military authorities and the Commander-in-Chief, United States Northeast Command.

As you will see from the memorandum, General Foulkes proposes to discuss this matter informally with General Bradley.

I would be glad to have your views on this. After they have been considered, I think we should seek the direction of the Cabinet Defence Committee before instructing General Foulkes to proceed with his discussions.

At this time consideration should be given again to the question of having a U.S.A.F. fighter squadron in Newfoundland. Personally, I would rather see an R.C.A.F. squadron there, even if this meant reducing our commitment to NATO by one, or weakening the air defence of some other part of Canada. I realize, however, that there is more involved in it than this. The main object of having the squadron there would be to protect the U.S.A.F. in carrying out the role which is exclusively assigned to it.

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, August 15, 1952

My dear Colleague,

I have read with much interest your letter of August 8 and the attached memorandum, dated July 23, from the Chairman of the Chiefs of Staff dealing with the relationship between Canadian military authorities and the Commander-in-Chief, United States Northeast Command.

The paper attached to the memorandum proposed a solution to the complicated problem of responsibility between the two countries for air defence, a problem which does not seem to exist in the same way in regard to army and naval relationships. I understand that this paper, if it were approved, would be used only as a basis for discussion with the United States authorities and that any decision on the air defence problem would permit a satisfactory re-drafting of the draft agreement drawn up in February, 1951, entitled "Basic Provisions for Canada-U.S. Collaboration on Defence in the Northeastern Areas of Canada."

The actual proposals to deal with this problem are found in paragraph 12 (a) and (b) of the paper. Paragraph 12 (a) seems to me to be somewhat vague in its reference to the "Co-ordinated Canadian and United States Air Defence System" and "the appropriate Air Defence Command." I understand that the former refers to a working arrangement based on a number of separate agreements concerning specific air defence activities and is not clearly defined in any single document. As, therefore, there seems to be no formal "System" in existence, might it not be misleading to use that term in any future bilateral agreement concerning our relations with United States Forces in Newfoundland? Possibly the phrase "Co-ordinated Canadian and United States Air Defence Systems" might more accurately describe the existing position.

So far as the phrase "the appropriate Air Defence Command" is concerned, would it not be advisable, in order to avoid any subsequent misunderstanding, to spell out what we mean by the term; especially as CINCNE is at present specifically excluded from the command principles of the Canada-U.S. Emergency Defence Plan.

I understand that in the discussions leading up to this paper, representatives of this Department have expressed the view that it would appear that we are really leaving to the United States effective responsibility for the air defence of Newfoundland, and that if this is so, we should know exactly where we stand and what we are doing. General Foulkes has, I believe, denied that this view was correct, adding that the United States was itself unwilling to accept such responsibility. I retain the feeling, however, that the trend of development is in this direction and this feeling is increased by the possibility that U.S. fighter defence forces will be stationed in Newfoundland for the defence of the leased bases in peacetime and, presumably for the support of Strategic Air Command operations in the event of war. I do not see how you can draw a line between air defence of the leased bases and the defence of Canadian territory, and I for one would be worried about a development of this kind at a time when we are sending RCAF fighter squadrons to Europe. I, therefore, agree with the observation which you make on this matter in the last paragraph of your letter, and also that not only the specific proposals of the memorandum prepared by the Chiefs of Staff should be considered by Cabinet Defence Committee, but also the larger question of the U.S. role in the air defence of Newfoundland, and possibly as well the arrangements for ground defence of that area.

Yours sincerely,

SOME IMPRESSIONS ON VISITING DEFENCE INSTALLATIONS
IN NORTHEASTERN CANADA

During the week of September 22 the PJBD visited the U.S. bases in Newfoundland as well as Torbay and Goose Bay. The following are some of my personal impressions and some observations on our relations with the U.S. in this area.

1. Perhaps the strongest impression one gains on a visit to the bases is that of an immense U.S. defence effort in the area. Construction is going on at all the leased bases and at Torbay and Goose Bay as well. Although we have not given formal approval to the establishment of an airhead at Torbay, the U.S. Northeast Command has gone ahead with building new warehouses and barracks blocks at Pepperell, apparently on the assumption that we will approve the establishment of the airhead.<sup>25</sup> We have leased a number of buildings to them at Torbay on a yearly basis subject to thirty days notice and have permitted them to make alterations on these buildings. The alterations on many buildings are very substantial and are of a semi-permanent or permanent character rather than merely temporary. (They are apparently able, under their Treasury regulations, to make improvements of existing facilities even without a long-term lease.)

At Argentia construction appears to be largely in the form of making temporary buildings erected in wartime more permanent but the Navy has large plans for building such things as ammunition dumps and other permanent improvements. McAndrew (which is really part of the single area leased at Argentia) now houses units of the USAF and the Navy is anxious to push them out with a view to making the base ready for occupancy by Navy units immediately in the event of war.

A vast amount of construction is going on at Harmon to make the base into a SAC support base rather than merely a staging field as it has been formerly. Much of the construction during the war was of a permanent character. Temporary buildings are now being made permanent. In addition, the main runway is being extended to 10,000 feet (8,000 feet will be paved this year) and a secondary runway is being extended to about 9,000 feet. Heretofore, ships had to anchor in the bay about two miles out, cargoes being lightered in to a small temporary dock. Plans for next year provide for a thirty-foot channel into the base, cutting a channel into a small lake on the base and the construction of warehouses and docks sufficient to handle two large ships end-to-end. A breakwater to deflect ice has already been constructed and it is thought that Harmon can be kept open all year round.

At Goose runways have already been lengthened, one to 10,000 feet. Hard-stands that can take the heaviest bombers, taxi runways, fuel and other storage facilities, have been constructed, hangars and machine shops are under construction and a lot of housing has been completed. My recollection is that appropriations for Goose for the two-year period ending 1953 are of the order of $63,000,000.

In addition to the air bases a number of radar sights, [sites?] as permitted under the radar agreement, are under construction. These are on quite an elaborate basis.

2. A second impression is the vested interest of the Newfoundlanders in U.S. activities. There is a great deal of civilian employment at all the bases, both in construction and on a permanent basis. At Harmon we were told there were 3,200 civilians of which close to 2,800 were Canadians. At Pepperrell about 600 are employed permanently and at McAndrew over 400. At the time the re-negotiation of the bases agreement was under discussion the Americans were pressed to purchase as much as they could in Canada. Local procurement in St. John's largely for consumption in Newfoundland, although in part for consumption in the Greenland bases, now runs to about $4½ billion yearly. There is also considerable spending by military personnel. I have never seen St. John's look more prosperous and a good deal of this prosperity is undoubtedly due to U.S. defence activities. The U.S. bases are clearly, from the economic point of view, the largest industry in Newfoundland.

3. The increasing investment in defence installations in Newfoundland and the growing importance of such bases as Harmon and Goose in strategic air operations has clearly made all the bases very much more important targets than they were. The U.S. Northeast Command is very conscious, perhaps unduly conscious, of this, and with Pentagon approval, are actively planning defence facilities. Plans call for the stationing of five fighter squadrons in the Northeast area (two at Goose, one at Torbay or, alternatively, Argentia, one at Harmon and one in the north either at Thule or Frobisher.) The Navy were not forthcoming about their defence plans for Argentia but obviously they have something in mind. In addition they mentioned stationing in the area two anti-aircraft battalions and at least two heavy anti-aircraft batteries. Although the deployment of these forces was not very clear, it was evident that they intend some for Goose.

4. In comparison with U.S. activities in this area, our defence activities are virtually non-existent. We have no defence forces at Torbay or Gander and, although the RCAF are nominally in control of Goose, their establishment there is concerned with little more than housekeeping. In St. John's we have a Joint Staff which I would guess now numbers less than one hundred officers and men.

5. I have come to the conclusion that by dealing with the U.S. on a piecemeal basis, as we have been doing, we are at a serious disadvantage. Although the MCC theoretically has a voice in planning, the Americans do not tell us through this channel all they are planning for the Northeast Command. At most, and then not very precisely, the MCC merely records some forces to be deployed there. The Canadian section appears to have no voice at all in determining requirements for the area. In large measure this situation of course stems from the fact that the U.S. Northeast Command is primarily concerned with facilitating and protecting operations by SAC and U.S. air communications with Europe and Greenland. These are U.S. responsibilities under NATO, not Canadian, and we cannot very well say what requirements are appropriate for fulfilling these responsibilities. On the other hand, defence of these facilities spills over into defence of the whole area so that indirectly U.S. forces defending U.S. facilities in the Northeast area are defending Canadian territory.

There is perhaps no completely satisfactory solution to the problem but we might have more control:

(a) if we were prepared to station forces in the area or at least to put them in there immediately in the event of emergency. The only force we have earmarked for the whole area (other than naval and air forces concerned with convoy operations) is an anti-aircraft unit (I think, a reserve unit). The guns for this unit are stored at Goose but are not equipped with new radar sighting and fighting mechanisms while the personnel is located in central Canada.

(b) We might also consider a Unified Command in which specified functions would be allocated to Canada or put under Canadian command. We could hardly ask for participation in command without being prepared to put in some effective forces. A Unified Command would also give us a more effective voice in planning. Further, if it were a NATO Command we would get credit in NATO circles for any forces earmarked for defence of the Northeast.

My dear Colleague,

In recent correspondence you expressed your concern about the expanding U.S. defence activities in Northeastern Canada. I fully share your concern and think the situation which is developing there is one which requires urgent attention.

I do not suggest that the U.S. authorities have gone beyond their rights under the Leased Bases Agreement of 1941 or other arrangements which we have made, or that their activities in the northeastern area of Canada are unwarranted in the light of the current international situation. I recognize also that the U.S. has special responsibilities under NATO for the strategic air arm and that Canada, along with other NATO members, is under obligation to facilitate the fulfilment of these responsibilities. I think you will agree with me, however, that we should not be oblivious to the serious political implications arising from the extent and character of U.S. defence activities in Northeastern Canada.

Perhaps the questions of most immediate concern are those of defence of the area and command of defence forces deployed there. Under the Leased Bases Agreement, the U.S. has clearly broad powers of local defence of the bases including emergency powers to take action outside the leased areas. The recent proposal of the U.S. to station an interceptor squadron at Goose Bay has raised the question of defence of the complex of defence facilities located in that area. Under conditions of modern warfare, it would seem impracticable to restrict the exercise of defence rights to a leased area or base. In any event I doubt if the U.S. would be prepared to confine its defence activities in the northeast to areas under its exclusive control. It would seem therefore that in fact U.S. defence forces deployed in the area will, indirectly, participate in the defence of Canadian territory outside areas exclusively under U.S. control.

This situation seems to me to pose two important questions: first, whether we should not consider stationing more Canadian forces in the area; secondly, whether we should not consider proposing to the U.S. the establishment of a combined command for the defence of the area, possibly with a Canadian commander. We could scarcely expect the U.S. to agree to a combined command, and much less a Canadian commander, unless we were prepared to contribute substantially to the total forces assigned to the defence of the area.

A third question might also be worth consideration — whether, assuming a combined command were established, it should not be a NATO command. Such an arrangement would have the obvious advantages that we could probably more easily justify U.S. activities in the area to the Canadian people and we could get credit in NATO for forces allocated to such a command. There would no doubt be disadvantages to establishing a NATO command, and these may well outweigh the advantages. Nevertheless, the question would appear to be worth examination.

I understand that the Journal of the last meeting of the PJBD is on the agenda for the next meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee. It occurs to me that this might be a convenient occasion to raise in a general way questions about the northeast such as I have suggested above. If you have no objection, I therefore propose to raise them at the forthcoming meeting. It would, of course, be premature for the Cabinet Defence Committee to reach any decision at this time on such questions but if the Committee feels they are worth further examination, the Chiefs of Staff Committee might be asked to study them and report back at an early meeting of the Defence Committee.

Yours sincerely,

U.S. MILITARY ACTIVITIES IN THE NEWFOUNDLAND AREA

I wish to draw to the attention of the members of the Committee the discussion reported in Sections 10 and 11 of the Journal of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence of September, 1952,<sup>26</sup> (copies of which have been circulated)† with respect to Goose Bay and Torbay, which have a bearing on the general problem of U.S. military operations in the Newfoundland area. The discussions at the September meeting of the PJBD are summarized as follows:

1. Goose Bay

The Canadian Chairman drew attention to the necessity of planning on a joint basis at all stages in the development of Canadian-U.S. defence arrangements. He then pointed out that the recent statement of intention by the U.S. Air Force to base an interceptor squadron at Goose Bay for the local defence of the base indicated that the Canadian interpretation of the proposed Goose Bay lease did not accord with that of the United States. He thought that the difficulty had arisen primarily through the lack of any joint study on the forms and scale of attack to which Goose Bay might be subjected and to the absence of any agreement on the defensive measures required. He pointed out that there was at present no authority for the stationing of USAF interceptor aircraft in Canada other than at the 99-year leased bases. He suggested that even in the case of the leased bases it would be advantageous if the U.S. Government were to inform the Canadian Government through diplomatic channels of important changes which might be contemplated in the numbers, types and roles of units located there. He reiterated his view that Canada found it difficult to approve U.S. proposals because of lack of knowledge of the specific requirements and what these requirements were based upon. He proposed that the appropriate joint planning agencies make a detailed study of the military needs in the Northeast area of Canada and how they might be met.

The External Affairs member suggests that, in order to remove doubt as to the meaning of the Goose Bay lease, an interpretation might be recorded through an appropriate procedure which would make it clear that, notwithstanding rights granted to the United States under the lease, arrangements for the sea, air and land defence of the Goose Bay area should be the subject of separate discussion and agreement between the two Governments.

The Board met from September 21-26, 1952.

The U.S. Chairman said that the U.S. Section would refer the Canadian position to the appropriate U.S. authorities for their consideration. He urged that the External Affairs member's suggestion of an interpretation regarding defence should be broadened to define more precisely the authority of the United States to station operational units at Goose Bay either for local defence or for other purposes.

2. Torbay

The United States has proposed the expansion of facilities at Torbay to provide for:

- (a) a fighter squadron;
- (b) an airhead for depot and base support;
- (c) MATS LOC (Military Air Transport Service Line of Communication) — (peace and war); and
- (d) Airways and Air Communications Service (AACS) and weather detachments.

The Canadian Chairman stated that while the briefings presented at U.S. Northeast Command Headquarters had been useful, Canada would have been in a much better position to consider the U.S. proposal if Canadian military planners had participated in the staff studies leading to the proposal and as a consequence were familiar with the considerations which had led to the stated conclusions. He pointed out that the U.S. had been energetically developing facilities at Torbay although the lease for the buildings which they were occupying was for one year only and subject to termination on 30 days notice, and although the Canadian Government had previously indicated that it was most reluctant to increase the scale of U.S. activities in the St. John's area with respect to the location of an interceptor squadron at Torbay. He considered that the approval of the Canadian Government was dependent upon the prior agreement by the U.S. and Canadian Chiefs of Staff that this was necessary to meet the defensive requirements of the area. When or if such an agreement was reached by the Chiefs of Staff Canada would be in a position to determine whether it would prefer to provide the necessary forces itself or to permit the United States to do so.

The U.S. Chairman emphasized the attitude of the United States that all military agencies should as far as possible be in a state of readiness. In short, the United States was endeavouring to be in a position whereby it was ready for "action at the drop of a hat." This meant that essential defence forces must be "on station" now, rather than brought in after the outbreak of hostilities.

At the request of the Canadian Chairman it was decided that the essential information, upon which the United States based the view that it was not feasible to locate the facilities proposed for Torbay at one of the leased bases, should be provided by the U.S. Section in the form of two memoranda, one dealing with the airhead and the other with the interceptor squadron.

IV. Permanent Joint Board on Defence; Journal of September 1952; U.S. Forces in Newfoundland; Goose Bay Lease

18. The Secretary submitted the Journal of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence for September, 1952.†

19. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said that he had shared with the Minister of National Defence serious concern over the problems arising from the development of plans of the U.S. forces in Newfoundland. It appeared that the U.S. Navy wished to take over from the U.S. Air Force, McAndrew Air Force Base, and that the U.S.A.F. wished to develop substantial new airhead facilities at Torbay. The U.S.A.F. had also referred to plans for the stationing of four squadrons in the Newfoundland area, two at Goose Bay, one at Harmon Air Force Base and one at Torbay. In particular substantial development of facilities at Torbay in the area of St. John's would have far-reaching consequences. It would be necessary to consider whether it would be desirable to station more Canadians in the area of these U.S. activities and possibly to establish some form of combined command. Combined command would, of course, be practicable only if the present Canadian forces in Newfoundland were increased. He had also suggested that consideration might be given to a third course, the creation of a NATO command. He thought that the public might find it difficult to understand why Canada was sending 12 squadrons to Europe while the United States was sending four into Canada.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, Oct. 3, 1952 — "U.S. military activities in the Newfoundland area" — Cab. Doc. D-363)

20. The Minister of National Defence said that the Canadian Section of the P.J.B.D. was now awaiting information from the U.S. Section which was to be submitted in justification of the U.S. desire to build and maintain an airhead at Torbay and to station an interceptor squadron there.

21. The Prime Minister said that it was important that we should maintain in Canada only those forces which the Chiefs of Staff considered necessary. Once the necessity of maintaining any military facilities in Canada had been established, it would then be necessary for us to decide by whom and in what manner those facilities should be provided.

22. Mr. Pearson recalled that a lease of part of the R.C.A.F. station at Goose Bay had been approved by Cabinet on February 21st, 1951. Signature had been postponed in order that it might be considered whether the proposed agreement by implication would give to the United States the right to station fighter squadrons for the air defence of the base. Since there was some doubt about the meaning of the proposed lease in this connection, he thought that it would be desirable to record the understanding of the Canadian government that the lease agreement did not make any provision for the defence of Goose Bay and that arrangements for defence should be the subject of discussion and agreement between the two governments.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Secretary's memorandum, Oct. 8, 1952 — "Background note: Goose Bay lease" — Cab. Doc. D-364)†

He said that it had always been the Canadian view that there should be joint agreement on the defence of Goose Bay. Our views could be clarified either by an amendment to the lease or by a separate exchange of notes; the second course seemed more satisfactory.

23. The Committee, after further discussion:

(a) noted the Journal of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence of September, 1952;

(b) noted the report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs on U.S. military activities in the Newfoundland area;

(c) agreed that the Secretary of State for External Affairs be authorized to conclude an exchange of notes with the United States constituting a lease of part of the R.C.A.F. station at Goose Bay; the exchange of notes to be accompanied by a separate note stating that it is the understanding of the Canadian government that the lease agreement does not apply to any arrangements for the defence of Goose Bay or other new developments which would continue to be dealt with by the appropriate agencies of the two governments.

COMMAND ARRANGEMENTS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

1. Annexed for convenient reference are copies of the following papers:

(a) extract from the Journal of the September 1952 meeting of the PJBD (Section 10 and 11) dealing with this subject;<sup>27</sup>

(b) a copy of Mr. Pearson's letter to you dated October 3, in which he suggested that the Chiefs of Staff might be asked to study the possibility of establishing a combined command, perhaps a NATO command in the Newfoundland area;

(c) extract from the minutes of the 89th meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee [October 9, 1952] (paragraphs 18-22) dealing with this subject.

2. I think there is general agreement that our defence position vis-à-vis the United States in the north-eastern area of Canada is not entirely satisfactory. It seems to me that General McNaughton put his finger on the nub of the matter when, at the September 1952 meeting of the PJBD, he made a comment that so long as U.S. proposals were submitted piecemeal for consideration by the Canadian Government without any real opportunity to examine them in relation to an agreed overall plan, there would be friction and frustration. I should like to propose, therefore, as a first step in overcoming this difficulty, that you consider the advisability of directing the Chiefs of Staff to initiate arrangements to have the appropriate military agencies of the two countries carry out a study of the anticipated forms and scales of attack in this area and the forces which will be needed to meet military requirements. I assume that the military requirements would take into account the need for the defence of the area itself, of the U.S. defence installations in the area, and of the role of the area as a defensive barrier for the more populated sections of eastern Canada and the United States.

3. It seems to me that a joint study of this character is an essential preliminary to following the direction of the Prime Minister as given at the October 9 meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee, when he said that it was important that we should maintain in Canada only those forces which the Chiefs of Staff considered necessary. Once the necessity of maintaining any military facilities in Canada had been established it would then be necessary for us to decide by whom and in what manner those facilities should be provided.

4. Mr. Pearson in his letter to you dated October 3 suggested that the Chiefs of Staff might be asked to study the possibility of establishing a combined command, perhaps a NATO command, in the Newfoundland area. He also mentioned the subject at the October 9 meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee but there was no time to go into it fully and no decision was taken. It might be that such a study would be most fruitful as the second phase of an overall appreciation, the first phase of which would be the joint study of forms and scales of attack and the military measures required to meet them, as proposed in the preceding paragraph of this memorandum.

VI. Canadian Operational Control of US Defence Forces Operating from Bases Within Canada

22. The Committee considered a message from the Canadian Joint Staff, Washington, outlining a directive from the US Joint Chiefs of Staff to the US Section Canada-US Military Cooperation Committee that they enter into negotiations with the Canadian Section for the purpose of obtaining a military agreement providing for the Canadian operational control of US defence forces operating from bases within Canada. A paper prepared by the Joint Planning Committee on this subject was also circulated.

(CSC 1796-1 of 10 November, 1952)*

23. The Chairman said that the Department of External Affairs had suggested in a memorandum to the Minister that the appropriate military agencies in the United States and Canada carry out a study of the anticipated forms and scales of attack in the Newfoundland area. Such a study would aid the Government in determining by whom and in what manner the necessary defence facilities should be provided.

As a result of the memorandum from the Department of External Affairs the Chairman had reviewed the problems and submitted a memorandum to the Minister in which it was recalled that a study of scales of attack had in fact been carried out and reviewed on a yearly basis. A joint study extending as far ahead as 1957 had been completed. It was on this information that the Canada-US defence plans were reviewed. It was stressed that any re-assessment of the scales of attack on any military level up to and including the Chiefs of Staff would not in any way assist in solving the present US-Canadian difficulties in the Newfoundland-Labrador area, and would no doubt lead to increased pressure from the US Chiefs of Staff for considerable stiffening of Canadian defences in accordance with the recent strategical guidance paper SG 13/23 (revised) which states:

"In 1956 the Soviet Union may have a formidable atomic potential against North America and adequate defence of this area does become essential in order to permit NATO to accomplish its objective."

It was, therefore, recommended to the Minister that no additional joint assessment of the risks and scales of attack be undertaken.

With regard to Goose Bay, it was pointed out that the US desire to base a fighter squadron there was based on the need to protect the US installations for the support of strategic operations. The need for such protection could hardly be disputed, and it was, therefore, recommended to the Minister that the USAF be permitted to continue to base a fighter squadron at Goose Bay under the same arrangements as pertaining to the American radar stations in Canada.

With regard to Torbay, a close study of the problem revealed that the all-weather fighter interceptor squadron which the US had suggested should be based at Torbay, had in fact, no intimate connection with the administrative installations such as the airhead and base depot which the US wished to establish at Torbay.

The objections to the US establishing administrative installations at Torbay were mainly political, and it was evident that the only solution acceptable for Torbay would be for the Government to refuse to change over the base from a civilian to a military airfield, and request through political channels, that the US make arrangements for the additional accommodation they require within their own leased bases.

The question of an all-weather fighter interceptor squadron to be based at Torbay should be considered in relation to the Canada-US integrated air defence scheme (Pinetree). The air defence scheme calls for radar and control units being set up in St. John's and Gander and the addition of a fighter squadron in Newfoundland is a logical step after providing the radar and control units. It was stated with some degree of certainty that the Canadian Chiefs of Staff could not, on military grounds, find suitable arguments to refute the need for extending the air defence scheme to include fighter formations in Newfoundland in view of the importance that the US place on their installations.

If the Government were to decide that the Torbay airfield would remain a civilian airfield, the USAF would have to base their fighter squadron at Argentina.

With regard to who should supply the squadrons for the extension of the Canada-US air defence scheme, it was pointed out that the commitment called for all-weather fighter interceptor and Canada would not be able to fulfil such a commitment until after 1954. It appeared, therefore, that the only possible course to present was to make similar arrangements with the US as were made for US radar stations situated in Canada, whereby the US would be allowed to provide the extra squadrons on the understanding that as and when the Canadian Government desired, it could take over the air defence roles in Canada.

Subsequent to submitting the above views to the Minister in a memorandum, US authorities had indicated informally that they were prepared to drop their request for base depot facilities at Torbay.

24. The Chairman, Joint Planning Committee said that a group of US officials who were at present in Ottawa discussing the matter informally, had intimated that the USAF would be quite prepared to base a fighter squadron at Argentia instead of Torbay, if steps were taken to lengthen the runways at Torbay for its possible use by fighter squadrons in the event of an emergency.

It was also understood by the US that Canadian forces would take over the air defence of the area when the Canadian Government considered it desirable to do so.

25. Lieutenant-General Foulkes stated that he proposed to see the Minister and endeavour to arrange for the new US proposals to be discussed at Cabinet Defence Committee on the 14 November, 1952.

26. The Committee noted the remarks of the Chairman and concurred in the action suggested by him.

CANADA-UNITED STATES MILITARY INSTALLATIONS
IN NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR

1. The Committee will recall the discussion at the 89th meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee held on October 9, 1952, at which the Committee discussed the question of United States requirements at Goose Bay and Torbay arising out of the Journal of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence for September, 1952, in which the United States had submitted plans for placing fighter squadrons at Goose Bay and Torbay and for subsequent development of facilities at Torbay to provide a logistical organization to support the United States bases in Newfoundland, Labrador and Greenland.

2. Since this meeting the Chiefs of Staff have had this matter under review and have had certain informal talks with senior United States officials. The Chiefs of Staff have reviewed the United States request for the extension of the Canada-United States air defence scheme to cover the Northeast area, which includes the United States bases and United States installations at Goose Bay. It will be recalled that the present Canada-United States integrated air defence scheme includes radar and control units being set up in St. John's and Gander and the addition of fighter squadrons in Newfoundland and Labrador is the next logical step after providing the radar and control units. The Chiefs of Staff have reviewed the roles of the various United States installations and have come to the conclusion that these bases are of such importance to the implementation of the United States strategical plans that fighter defence of this area is now essential.

3. It is considered that the provision of the additional fighter squadrons for the defence of this area of Canada should ultimately be carried out by the RCAF but owing to other commitments and the unavailability of suitable types of aircraft the RCAF will not be able to carry out these additional air defence tasks until after 1954. It is, therefore, suggested that the USAF should be allowed to carry out these air defence tasks on the condition that as and when the Canadian Government so desires, these air defence tasks in Canada will be taken over by the RCAF, and further, that the stationing of air defence squadrons in Newfoundland be restricted at present to the United States leased bases, and that any such air defence squadrons provided by the USAF should form part of the integrated Canada-United States air defence scheme, and come under Canadian operational command while operating in Canadian air space.

4. As a result of a series of informal discussions with United States officials it has now been learned that the United States authorities are prepared to agree to the following proposals:

(a) that owing to the strong position taken by Canada in regard to Torbay the United States authorities will withdraw their request for the establishment of a logistical base at Torbay;<sup>28</sup>

(b) that the USAF will withdraw their request for the stationing of an air defence squadron at Torbay<sup>29</sup> if satisfactory arrangements can be made for:

i) stationing a USAF air defence squadron at Goose Bay with the possibility that it may be extended to two at a later date,

ii) one squadron at Harmon Field, and

iii) one squadron at Argentia;

provided that the Canadian Government will give consideration to the lengthening of the runways at Torbay<sup>30</sup> which would allow for the use of Torbay for air defence operations in time of war, or at such time as the RCAF undertakes the air defence role in Newfoundland;

(c) the USAF have also indicated that they are prepared to place these squadrons under the operational control of the Canada-United States integrated air defence commander, and under Canadian operational control while operating in Canadian air space;

(d) The United States authorities have further indicated that they are prepared to withdraw their squadrons as and when the Canadian Government desires to take over these roles.

5. It is expected that the Canadian officials will be meeting in the near future to discuss these proposals with the United States authorities. It is suggested that these proposals are much more acceptable than those previously put forward by the USAF and it is recommended that consideration be given to them in order that instructions can be given the Canadian officials who will be discussing this matter within the next ten days.

XI. Canada-U.S. Military Installations on the Island of Newfoundland and in Labrador

31. The Minister of National Defence said that the Chiefs of Staff, after reviewing the military situation on the Island of Newfoundland and in Labrador, considered it desirable that the U.S. Air Force should be allowed to carry out air defence tasks on the Island of Newfoundland and in Labrador on condition that Canada might at any time take over the responsibility and that the stationing of U.S. air defence squadrons in Newfoundland should then be restricted to the U.S. leased bases and to Goose Bay.

He also read a letter from the U.S. Chairman of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence in which he informed the Canadian Chairman that the United States wished to withdraw its request to develop an air depot at Torbay. The U.S. Chairman indicated that the stationing of U.S. fighter aircraft there was being reviewed.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, Nov. 13, 1952, "Canada-United States military installations in Newfoundland and Labrador" — Cab. Doc. D-384; Letter from Chairman, U.S. Section, P.J.B.D. to Chairman, Canadian Section, Nov. 6, 1952 — Cab. Doc. D-385)†

32. Mr. Claxton added that he had received information that the United States would place its fighter squadrons at Goose Bay, Harmon Field and Argentia. The United States hoped that the Canadian government would consider lengthening the runways at Torbay to make it suitable for air defence operations in time of war.

33. The Minister of Defence Production considered it logical that Canada should be responsible for improving the standards of Torbay airport to allow its use by jet aircraft.

34. The Prime Minister said that a very satisfactory solution of the problem of U.S. military activities in Newfoundland appeared to be in sight and added that General McNaughton was to be congratulated for his work on this problem in the Permanent Joint Board on Defence.

35. The Committee, after further discussion:

- (a) noted the report of the Minister of National Defence;
- (b) recommended that Canada should accept in principle the responsibility for the improvement of Torbay airport to permit its use by fighter aircraft.

*"Canada-United States Military Installations

CABINET DEFENCE COMMITTEE PAPER OF NOVEMBER 13 (D-384)

This paper from the Minister of National Defence contains some phrases which I do not understand —

"the integrated Canada-United States air defence system;"

"the USAF have also indicated that they are prepared to place these squadrons under the operational control of the Canada-United States integrated air defence commander, and under Canadian operational control while operating in Canadian air space."

2. The structure of the "integrated Canada-United States air defence system" is not apparent from our files.

3. Do we know who is the "Canada-United States integrated air defence commander" and who gave him this job?<sup>32</sup>

No! RCAF have been prepared to agree to an overall command but as far as I know, not the USAF. R.A. M[ackay]

4. Finally, the reference to "Canadian operational control" doesn't mean much unless it is explained how a Canadian commander is to exercise this control in Newfoundland.<sup>33</sup>

5. We tried once before to get from Chiefs of Staff a definition of a similar phrase, "the coordinated Canadian and United States air defence system." They replied on July 30, 1952, as follows:

"The coordinated Canadian and U.S. air defence system is a system of radar, communications, anti-aircraft artillery and interceptor aircraft which has been developed and coordinated to provide for the mutual protection of those vital areas of Canada and the U.S. which are contiguous."

6. I wish we could find a way to extract precise definitions from National Defence but I don't know how to do it.

RECOMMENDATION OF THE PJBD DATED MARCH 30, 1950 REGARDING THE LEASED BASES AGREEMENT<sup>34</sup>

Reference: Our letter No. D-698 of February 12, 1951, and your WA-671 of Feb. 21/51.

Agreed. At present the lack of effective communications would prevent Canadian AOC (Montreal) from exercising effective operational control. R.A. M[ackay]

The recommendation modified the Leased Bases Agreement of 1941 with respect to income tax exemptions, customs and excise privileges, postal privileges and the jurisdiction of civil and military courts. The modifications would bring the legal status of United States forces at leased bases in Newfoundland and Labrador into line with that of American forces located elsewhere in Canada.

In February 1951, the State Department informally approved the procedure we suggested for the exchange of diplomatic notes called for by the PJBD Recommendation. There has been a long delay in carrying out this procedure because of the necessity of waiting for the enactment of the Canadian legislation called for by the Recommendation. As stated in our letter No. D-16 of January 3, 1952,† all the legislation has now been enacted and it is, therefore, possible to give effect to the agreed procedure.

2. The exchange of letters between the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General of Newfoundland called for by the "Jurisdiction" part of the Recommendation has just taken place. You are, therefore, authorized to give a note to the State Department in the terms of Appendix A to this letter.† The note conveys the assurances called for by paragraph (b) (2) of the "Jurisdiction" section of the Recommendation; the draft of this note was approved by the State Department in February 1951. It is understood that this note, and the letters exchanged between the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General, are not intended for publication.

3. When you give the State Department the note containing the assurances, will you please enquire whether there is any reason, from the U.S. point of view, against the immediate extension to Newfoundland of the Visiting Forces (USA) Act as contemplated by the Recommendation.

4. The next step will be an Exchange of Notes with the State Department for the purpose of recording the modification of the Leased Bases Agreement. Enclosed, marked Appendix B, is a draft note for this purpose.† It is identical in substance with the draft which the State Department approved in February 1951. This Exchange of Notes is intended for eventual publication but it is understood that it will not be published until a time to be mutually agreed. (The text of the Recommendation itself was made public on May 1, 1951.) Tentatively, I would think that it would be desirable to make public this Exchange of Notes at the same time as we make public the pending Exchange of Notes regarding the application of the NATO Forces Agreement to the Leased Bases.

5. The relationship between these two exchanges of notes may be rather difficult for the public to understand. The Exchange of Notes confirming the PJBD Recommendation will purport to state the jurisdiction position at the Leased Bases, and the Visiting Forces (USA) Act will be extended to Newfoundland in this context. On the other hand, the second Exchange of Notes referred to (effective on the date on which the NATO Forces Agreement comes into force for both countries) will have the effect of putting into cold storage the jurisdiction regime formally confirmed by the first Exchange of Notes. I am afraid that this somewhat confusing succession of notes is unavoidable. After all, the PJBD Recommendation deals with important matters other than jurisdiction. Furthermore, the Leased Bases Agreement has a longer life than the NATO Forces Agreement. For these reasons, it seems to us legally essential to complete the diplomatic and legal actions called for by the PJBD Recommendation.

Washington, January 23, 1952

RESTRICTED

Excellency,

I have the honour to refer to the Recommendation of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence made on March 30, 1950, regarding the revision of the Leased Bases Agreement of 1941 with respect to Newfoundland and particularly to the following paragraphs on the subject of jurisdiction:

“(a) That the Government of the United States, through an exchange of diplomatic notes, agree to waive its rights of jurisdiction under the Leased Bases Agreement over Canadian citizens, other British subjects, and alien civilians other than those subject to U.S. military law by reason of their accompanying or serving with the U.S. Forces.

(b) (1) That the Governments of the United States and of Canada, through an exchange of diplomatic notes, agree to suspend the exercise of their rights of jurisdiction under Article IV of the Leased Bases Agreement other than those waived by the U.S. Government under (a) above, for a period of five years, and thereafter subject to six months' notification of termination, except that in the event of war or other emergency the suspension shall, on notification given by either Government, cease to operate;

(2) That the Canadian Government, as a condition precedent to the waiver and suspension of the exercise of rights under Article IV and to the extension to Newfoundland of an amended Visiting Forces (USA) Act, give satisfactory assurances that the U.S. officials in Newfoundland will have a degree of jurisdiction comparable to that which they now in fact exercise. In this connection, the U.S. Section would regard the proposed letter from the Government of Canada to the Government of Newfoundland, with a reply from the Newfoundland Government that jurisdictional conditions would remain substantially as now exercised, as the basis for satisfactory assurances to be given by the Canadian Government.”

Enclosed is a copy of a letter dated December 22, 1951,† from the Minister of Justice of Canada to the Attorney General of Newfoundland and a copy of the latter's reply dated January 2, 1952.†

On the basis of these letters, I believe that the United States Government may rest assured that, after the waiver and suspension of rights recommended by the Board have come into effect, the United States officials in Newfoundland will nevertheless have in practice a degree of jurisdiction comparable to that which they now in fact exercise.

Accept, etc.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO P.J.B.D. OF MARCH 30, 1950
CONCERNING THE LEASED BASES AGREEMENT

Reference: Your letter D-110 of January 15.

1. Our note No. 68, dated January 23, which is identical in terms to Appendix A of your letter under reference was left with the State Department yesterday.<sup>35</sup>

2. You will recall that the State Department agreed on February 21, 1951 (my WA-671 of that date) that our note of assurance and the exchange of letters between the Department of Justice and the Attorney General of Newfoundland need not be published. State Department agreement at that time was given on the understanding that we did not wish to publish subparagraph (b)(2) of the Board's recommendations. We told the State Department that despite the Prime Minister's statement in the House on May 1, 1951, making public the full text of the recommendations, you would still prefer that our note of assurance and the exchange of letters with Newfoundland should remain classified as restricted. They agreed that there was no need to make this correspondence public.<sup>36</sup>

3. Now that the State Department have received our note of assurance on the jurisdiction question the next step, as you say, will be an exchange of notes recording the modification of the Leased Bases Agreement. According to the State Department this exchange of notes would have to be carried out and the notes themselves made public<sup>37</sup> before United States authorities could agree to the extension to the leased bases in Newfoundland of the Visiting Forces

(U.S.A.) Act as contemplated by the recommendations. We were assured that the United States authorities are anxious that the notes be exchanged as quickly as possible and the recommendations themselves brought into force (after publication of the notes) through any necessary executive action by Canada, such as a proclamation of the extension of the Visiting Forces Act. In the meantime, the State Department are studying the text of our proposed note recording the recommendations (appendix B to your letter under reference) in order to ensure that its terms are wholly satisfactory from their standpoint.

4. As the exchange of notes regarding the application of the NATO forces agreement refers to the Leased Bases Agreement "as it may be modified by the recommendations...", this exchange of notes would probably have to take place (or the notes themselves revised) in advance of the exchange of notes recording the Board's recommendations.<sup>38</sup> As regards the separate question of publication, it might be that if the two "exchanges" were made public at the same time some confusion would result as to the effect of the coming into force of the Board's recommendations at the leased bases (as distinct from the status of the leased bases once the NATO agreement has come into effect). As you have pointed out in your despatch D-3591 of December 18, the publication of the exchange of notes relating to the Status of Forces Agreement must await the completion and the publication of the Goose Bay lease. Your comments as to the timing of the several exchanges and their publication would be appreciated.

RECOMMENDATION OF THE PJBD OF MARCH 30, 1950 CONCERNING THE LEASED BASES AGREEMENT

Reference: My WA-251 of January 25.

1. The State Department have suggested the following revision of our proposed note recording the recommendation (Appendix B to your Letter D-110 of January 15). For convenient reference the changes suggested by the State Department are underlined.

Text Begins:

I have the honour to refer to the recommendation made on March 30, 1950, by the Permanent Joint Board on Defence relating to the agreement of March

---

Could be changed. Get on with E of N [Exchange of Notes] on LB [Leased Bases].

27, 1941, between the Governments of the United Kingdom and of the United States of America concerning bases in Newfoundland leased to the United States, the text of which recommendation is annexed hereto.†

(2) As you know, the Canadian Government approved this recommendation on March 21, 1951. I understand that the President of the United States of America approved it on August 1, 1950.

(3) Paragraph (a) of the section of the recommendation dealing with income taxation said that certain provisions should be included in the then proposed revised United States-Canadian double taxation convention. The suggested provisions were, in fact, included in the revised convention between our governments, which was signed on June 12, 1950 and came into force on November 21, 1951.

(4) Several provisions of the recommendation of the Board were to the effect that, by exchange of notes, certain changes should be made in the application of the Leased Bases Agreement of 1941. I propose, therefore, that this note and your favourable reply shall as from the date of the reply constitute an exchange of notes within the meaning of the annexed Recommendation, modifying the Leased Bases Agreement of 1941 in the manner set forth in the recommendation so far as the application of that agreement concerns Canada and the United States. Text ends.

2. The modification suggested to Paragraph 1 of our proposed note would, in the view of the State Department, ensure that the text of the recommendation was considered an integral part of the note. In Paragraph 3, the addition would make clear the date on which the United States-Canadian Double Taxation Convention actually came into force. The amendment suggested to Paragraph 4 would avoid any possible misconception that the proposed exchange was modifying a bilateral agreement between the United Kingdom and the United States. If these suggested revisions are acceptable to us (and I expect that they will be) the State Department are prepared to receive our note in final form.

3. On the assumption that the exchange of notes recording the Board's recommendations can be concluded in the near future, State Department suggests that the proposed exchange of notes regarding the application of the NATO Forces Agreement should be revised by changing the phraseology "as it may be modified" in the present drafts to "as modified". The exchange on the NATO Forces Agreement could then follow the exchange of notes recording the Board's recommendation. This suggestion by the State Department would seem to me to be a good one. Your early comments would be appreciated.

1. Please send by bag for our records an exact copy of your Note No. 68 to the State Department.

2. As the State Department has no objection, we shall go on the basis that the Exchange of Letters with Newfoundland and your note of assurance to the State Department (No. 68) will not be made public. If at some future time the State Department wishes to have them made public, we shall be glad to reconsider the matter.

3. We note that the State Department does not wish us to extend the Visiting Forces (USA) Act to Newfoundland until the proposed Exchange of Notes (confirming the PJBD Recommendation) has been carried out and made public.

4. The revised terms of the note confirming the Recommendation, as given in WA-278, are satisfactory. There is no substantial difference between that text and the one authorized in our Letter D-110 of January 15.

5. With reference to para. 3 of your WA-278 we agree that the Exchange of Notes confirming the Recommendation could precede the Exchange of Notes regarding the application of the NATO Forces Agreement. Therefore, as the State Department suggests, the phrase "as it may be modified" in the latter Exchange of Notes could be changed to "as modified".

6. With reference to para. 4 of your WA-251, it is difficult to know how best to arrange the timetable of publication of the different Exchanges of Notes. There will be a certain amount of confusion no matter what arrangement is followed. Perhaps it would be better to proceed first with the Exchange of Notes confirming the PJBD Recommendation, and then to publish them and extend the Act as quickly as possible. In the meantime the Exchange of Notes regarding the application of the NATO Forces Agreement to the Leased Bases could be completed but, if the State Department agrees, the publication of that Exchange of Notes could be delayed for some weeks after the publication of the first Exchange of Notes.

7. The order of arranging these pieces of paper does not seem important to us. What is important, after the unavoidably long delay, is to break the circle and get at least one of the Exchanges of Notes completed and published as soon as convenient.

3. Once the exchange of notes recording the Board's recommendation has been completed, the exchange of notes regarding the application of the NATO Forces Agreement (as amended) could be carried out. 4. Once the notes are exchanged, the Department of National Revenue will have new authority to assess duties, etc. on certain imports into the leased bases. Presumably circular regulations to the collectors of customs will not be issued immediately nor will the altered legal status with respect to duty-free privileges be made known to the public until three days after the exchange of notes is completed. In a conversation with Wight of the Canadian Desk of the State Department, the hope was expressed that National Revenue would not assess duties retroactively as from the date the exchange of notes was completed. It was emphasized that there was no disposition to challenge the legal right to assess such duties but it was believed that, from the practical standpoint, such a procedure might cause some confusion. State Department would also appreciate being advised, if possible in advance, of any Canadian administrative arrangements following, but in accordance with, the exchange of notes altering the application of the leased bases agreement. P.J.B.D. RECOMMENDATION CONCERNING NEWFOUNDLAND LEASED BASES

Reference: Your EX-380 of February 20.†

1. The State Department have now reversed their opinion that the notes must be exchanged and the notes themselves made public before the recommendations come into effect at the leased bases. They are quite prepared to go ahead with an unclassified exchange of notes but do not wish the exchange to be followed by any press release or any unnecessary publicity regarding the exchange. Their latest estimate is that we may expect to receive the State Department's reply to our note about February 27th.

2. This new attitude of the State Department is based on a concern over the present temper of Congress toward concessions made by the State Department in negotiations with other countries. In particular, however, it reflects their concern at Congressional criticism over the extent to which United States foreign expenditures are inflated by local taxes. The State Department believe that by drawing the attention of Congress again to the recommendations through a press release they might be called upon to justify the recommendations before Congressional committees. Publicity on the P.J.B.D. recommendations might also compromise the successful outcome of United States negotiations with European NATO countries for tax-free privileges. (See my WA-497 of today's date.)<sup>39</sup>

3. We told the State Department that we would pass their request to you for sympathetic consideration. In the event that you agree that a press release or any undue publicity should be avoided, the State Department would be wholly responsible for notifying those concerned at the leased bases of the altered status of the agreement.

4. With regard to publication of the exchange of notes regarding the application of the NATO agreement, we indicated that Canadian authorities believed the publication of this exchange of notes through tabling in the House to be desirable. A favourable decision, therefore, on their request to have no publicity on the exchange of notes regarding the P.J.B.D. recommendations would be without prejudice to the separate question of publishing the exchange of notes regarding the NATO Status of Forces Agreement.

P.J.B.D. RECOMMENDATION CONCERNING NEWFOUNDLAND LEASED BASES

Reference: EX-485 of March 5th, 1952.†

Following for Heeney, Begins:

1. The question of clarifying arrangements in connection with the United States reply to our note on the P.J.B.D. recommendations concerning Newfoundland leased bases and tabling in the House, was discussed with Raynor today. Raynor said that on the United States side they were fully in accord with our view that the agreement should now be completed promptly. The State Department was very appreciative of our willingness to drop the idea of making a press release in response to their request and they fully understood the desire of the Canadian Government to table the exchange during the present session of Parliament. Raynor explained that the Administration expected a sharp reaction from Congress during the hearings on the mutual security programme, due to commence next Monday, on the extent to which United States foreign expenditures are inflated by local taxes, and for this reason the State Department would greatly appreciate if tabling could be postponed for two or three weeks. The State Department expect that after a good deal of heated controversy on this issue at the beginning of the hearings, Congressional preoccupation with the tax questions will abate and tabling of exchange of notes in a routine manner in the House would pass unnoticed in the United States.

2. Raynor said that there was no connection whatever between the delay in the United States reply to our note and the question of publicity. He said that if we had derived that impression (as reported in paragraph 2 of WA-542 of February 27th)† this was unjustified by the facts. The delays resulted purely from the difficulty of obtaining the concurrence of the Pentagon to the terms of the United States reply in writing. Concurrence had been given informally and orally, but in a matter of this importance the State Department wish to have written concurrence. The reply will be submitted to Secretary Acheson early next week and Raynor hoped and expected that the United States reply would be forthcoming during the course of next week. Raynor observed that Bliss of the United States Embassy in Ottawa had explained our attitude on this question and he hoped that the United States position was now clear. If there were any points respecting United States intentions which were now unclear, he would be glad to help clarify them and again expressed the appreciation of the State Department for our willingness to co-operate on the matter of the press release. Ends.

We were informed by Raynor today that clearance of the United States reply has now been obtained from Secretary Lovett and that the State Department note was submitted to Mr. Acheson for his signature today. It is, therefore, expected that the State Department note will be sent to me at the beginning of next week. Raynor explained that the delay during this week resulted from the necessity of obtaining Secretary Lovett's own approval because tax problems were involved and he had been tied up with preparations for the hearings on the mutual security programme. ## P.J.B.D. RECOMMENDATION CONCERNING NEWFOUNDLAND LEASED BASES

At the State Department today Raynor gave us a United States note dated March 19, text of which is contained in my immediately following teletype, which constitutes a reply to our note No. 109 dated February 13, 1952.<sup>40</sup>

2. In submitting this note, Raynor made four points in comment. He repeated the request, which was transmitted to you in WA-634 of March 6, that the tabling of the exchange of notes be postponed. He said that the State Department would greatly appreciate it if the tabling could be put off for a minimum period of two weeks and that the document should not be tabled without further consultation with the State Department. In support of this request Raynor explained that the hearings on the Mutual Security Act had brought out sharp questioning of both Mr. Acheson and Mr. Harriman on the question of the incidence of foreign taxes on United States defence expenditures abroad. The United States Government moreover, was at present trying to come to an agreement with other NATO countries on this matter of taxes and that the negotiations for these agreements had not yet been concluded. The United States authorities are concerned lest there should be any hitch in concluding the agreements, and this might result if the terms of the arrangements made with Canada should become known.

3. Raynor also repeated the request transmitted to you in WA-634 of March 6, that the correspondence should be tabled in as inconspicuous a manner as possible to minimize possible congressional reaction to this transaction.

4. He also repeated the understanding that there would be no press release with regard to this exchange of notes.

5. He added the new point that in view of the current preoccupations of Congress with the problem of the incidence of foreign taxation on United States defence expenditures abroad, it was necessary to take into account the contingency that Congress might adopt far-reaching legislation which might

PROPOSED SIGNATURE OF GOOSE BAY LEASE

As you know, the terms of the exchange of notes constituting the Lease were approved by Cabinet in February 1951. The exchange of notes is to be accompanied by two documents — a letter regarding metes and bounds and a letter regarding privileges and immunities. The draft texts of all three documents, as settled between the two Governments, are annexed for reference.†

2. There have been two reasons for the long delay in executing the Lease. In the first place the two Air Forces took many months to settle the metes and bounds. Then the difficulties we were having with the United States regarding the terms on which GLOBECOM<sup>41</sup> stations could be established at various points in Newfoundland became mixed up with the discussion of the Goose Bay Lease, and it was thought best to postpone signing the Goose Bay Lease until the GLOBECOM question had been settled in principle. We have now reached that stage, and we shall be able in the near future to submit to Cabinet for official approval the revised formula on tenure of the GLOBECOM station at Harmon which you and Mr. Claxton tentatively approved some weeks ago. The GLOBECOM station at Northwest River, near Goose Bay, will be taken care of by a document which will be supplementary to the Goose Bay Lease but which need not be signed at the time the Lease itself is signed.

3. Although there is still some detail work to be done before the papers regarding the GLOBECOM stations can be signed, the United States Embassy on September 4 told us that the United States Government and in particular the Secretary of Defense is most anxious to avoid any further delay in the signature of the Goose Bay Lease itself (and the two collateral letters on metes and bounds and privileges). It seems to me that there is no reason to refuse the request of the United States to complete the Lease forthwith. GLOBECOM is not mentioned in the Lease and, subject to final Cabinet approval, solutions have been found, and have been approved by you and Mr. Claxton, to the GLOBECOM question.

4. If you and Mr. Claxton agree, we shall arrange to have the exchange of notes constituting the Lease and the two collateral letters set up for signature and exchanged forthwith. Presumably they will be signed by Mr. Claxton as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs.

5. As you know, it was agreed last year that the exchange of notes constituting the Lease, but not the two collateral letters, will be made public. Annexed for convenient reference is the text of the draft press release which you and Mr. Claxton approved some time ago and which has been cleared with the United States.<sup>42</sup> It would suggest that the press release, with the text of the Lease, be issued on the day following the signature. When Parliament meets the Lease can be tabled.

6. In view of the fact that Cabinet approved the text of the Lease back in February 1951, you or Mr. Claxton may wish to mention to Cabinet the reasons for the delay in signature and the fact that the signature is to take place shortly. The delay in signature has not impeded authorized U.S. activities at Goose Bay.

GOOSE BAY LEASE

While you were in Europe it was agreed with the United States Embassy that the notes constituting the lease of certain sections of RCAF Station Goose Bay should be exchanged on September 17, that our collateral notes should be signed at the same time, and that a press release should be issued the following day.

2. On September 15 or 16 Mr. Claxton discovered that Air Vice Marshal Miller had replied on September 4 to General Walsh's<sup>43</sup> letter of August 13 regarding the proposed stationing at Goose Bay of a U.S. fighter squadron. In his letter A/V/M Miller, who had not consulted his Minister, said that no further notification was required but that the subject should be reviewed when or if discussions were carried on between Canada and the United States on command arrangements in the area. We had informed A/V/M Miller

- a) that we agreed that no approval from Canadian authorities was required;
- b) that no further notification regarding the proposed deployment of a squadron was required; and
- c) that the deployment should be considered as subject to review when or if discussions were carried on between Canada and the United States on command arrangements in the Northeast area of Canada.

(I attach copies of my letter of September 2 to A/V/M Miller — Annex A — and A/V/M Miller's letter of September 4 to General Walsh, USAF — Annex B).†

3. Mr. Claxton refused to sign the notes until further consideration had been given to the question whether the proposed agreement would in fact confer on the United States the right to station fighter squadrons at Goose Bay. He raised the matter in Cabinet on September 17. Cabinet did not come to any clear decision on the matter but seemed to be of the opinion that further consideration should be given to the matter and that the Prime Minister, who was absent, should be consulted.

4. I informed Mr. Bliss of the U.S. Embassy of the reasons for postponement of signature.

5. On Mr. Claxton's instructions we prepared a memorandum going into the history of the negotiations and examining the question whether the proposed agreement did in fact confer on the United States the right to station fighter squadrons. The proposed agreement certainly authorizes the United States to operate military aircraft at the base but makes no provision whatever for the defence of the base. Our memorandum suggests that in view of the doubts as to the meaning there are three courses of action open to the Government, namely;

- a) to sign the proposed agreement and be prepared to concede the right of the United States to station fighter squadrons;
- b) to ask the United States to accept an amendment somewhat as follows:

Major General R.L. Walsh, United States Air Force; Member of US Section, PJBD.

“Notwithstanding any rights granted to the Lessee by this agreement, arrangements for the sea, air and land defence of Goose Bay shall be the subject of discussion and agreement between the two Governments.”; or,

c) to inform the United States of our intention to address another collateral note to the U.S. Ambassador stating that it is our understanding that the lease agreement does not make any provision for the defence of Goose Bay and that arrangements for such defence should be the subject of discussion and agreement between the two Governments.

6. I am still firmly convinced that we were right in expressing our opinion that the proposed agreement gives the United States a right to station fighter squadrons. I am inclined to agree with Mr. Claxton, however, that it is desirable to specify in the agreement that defence of the base is a matter which should be the subject of discussion and agreement between the two Governments.<sup>44</sup>

7. I have advised Mr. Claxton to defer further discussion in Cabinet and to authorize the Canadian Section of the PJBD to explore the matter with the U.S. Section during this week's meetings of the Board in Newfoundland. At the time of writing (afternoon, September 23) Mr. Claxton<sup>45</sup> had not given a decision.

8. I attach copies of our memorandum of September 20 for the Acting Minister on the Goose Bay lease (Annex C) and our longer memorandum of the same date (Annex D).†

POSTING OF U.S. FIGHTER SQUADRONS TO GOOSE BAY

You will recall that during your absence the USAF, through the U.S. Air Member of PJBD, notified the Canadian Air Member that they proposed to station an interceptor squadron at Goose Bay as of October 1 and that they assumed that no further notification of the Canadian Government was required. The Canadian Air Member of PJBD advised this Department that National Defence agreed with this assumption. Officials of the Department were inclined to agree that on the basis of the draft Goose Bay lease we could not object. However, Mr. Claxton felt strongly otherwise. His interpretation of the lease agreement was that it merely provided for the lease of land within the RCAF air base to the U.S. for the construction of their facilities and permitted the U.S. use of joint facilities such as the runways. The USAF were so advised although after a considerable lapse of time. In the meantime they had been given to understand through Service channels that there would be no objection and they had accordingly gone ahead to advise the squadron of the posting and make necessary arrangements including shipping arrangements. MacKay informs me that the Canadian Section of the PJBD, at its recent meeting, held firmly to the interpretation of the lease agreement in accordance with Mr. Claxton's views and as instructed by him. The American Section, however, did not fully agree with this interpretation. The conclusion of the meeting was that the draft lease should be clarified either by amendment or by exchange of correspondence so as to make more precise the U.S. rights at Goose Bay. MacKay feels strongly that there was no intention on the part of the USAF to "put anything over us" about posting a squadron there and that they quite sincerely felt that they were entitled to do so without special approval from us and that notice through Service channels was all that was required.

2. MacKay also feels strongly that, on military grounds, there is a strong case for stationing a fighter squadron at Goose Bay. Although there may be no immediate threat to the base, it might be difficult to get a squadron there in time should a threat develop. Further, the strategic concept on which SAC operations are planned is that SAC should be in a state of instant readiness to strike should occasion require. SAC operations over the northeast would be staged through or over Harmon and Goose and should an operation be decided on, fighter protection as far outward as possible would be a requirement. On these assumptions, there would appear to be a strong case for having a fighter squadron based at Goose, both for defence and for the protection of SAC operations. There is reason to believe the U.S. would be quite prepared to accept a Canadian squadron but it is quite clear that no Canadian squadron is available at present or will be for some time unless we reduce our NATO commitments in Europe.

3. A U.S. fighter squadron stationed at Goose would, of course, raise for us certain complications. It would be of little value for defence purposes if it could not intercept incoming planes. Under the present agreement with the U.S., interception by U.S. planes over Canadian territory can only be carried out under Canadian rules and, when over Canadian territory, U.S. interceptor planes come under Canadian command. There are no facilities at Goose for establishing a Canadian operational command. Communications with Goose are uncertain and sometimes there are blackouts of as much as twenty-four hours' duration. In practise, interception could only be carried out under U.S. command although we might insist on a U.S. squadron there following Canadian rules. However, there are not a great many commercial flights into Goose. TCA is the only commercial line scheduled for stop-overs; other lines use it only as a weather alternate to Gander. Further, trans-Atlantic commercial flights are always carefully flight-planned and there would be little occasion for interception of commercial planes. Under these circumstances, the danger of incidents would appear to be slight.

4. In view of all the circumstances, MacKay feels that we cannot very well refuse the stationing of a U.S. fighter squadron at Goose at an early date. It is suggested, however, that our consent might be made on the following basis:

(a) that it should be without prejudice to a decision on requirements to be taken following a re-examination of the needs by the Chiefs of Staff of each country;

(b) that it should be without prejudice to a decision on command of forces for the defence of Newfoundland-northeast area;

(c) that it should be without prejudice to a decision as to whether fighter defence forces at the base should be Canadian or U.S.;

(d) that in the meantime interception by fighter forces stationed at Goose Bay should be conducted strictly in accordance with Canadian regulations.

GOOSE BAY LEASE

Defence of the base

The Canadian Section of the PJBD discussed the matter of the proposed Goose Bay lease with the U.S. Section during the meetings of the Board in Newfoundland last week. The U.S. Section had apparently assumed that the lease did not restrict the right to station forces, and were surprised when the point was raised, but did not contest the Canadian view that the proposed lease does not confer on the U.S. the right to station a fighter squadron at the base. The U.S. Embassy has not contested our interpretation: Mr. Bliss by implication accepted our view when he told Mr. Wershof that he hoped we would be satisfied with a collateral letter rather than an amendment to the lease itself.

2. The question now arises whether we should ask the U.S. authorities to accept an amendment to the proposed lease or merely a collateral letter. An amendment might read somewhat as follows:

“Notwithstanding any rights granted to the lessee by this agreement, arrangements for the sea, air and land defence of Goose Bay shall be the subject of discussion and agreement between the two Governments.”

A collateral letter would record the understanding of the Canadian Government that the lease does not make any provision for the sea, air or land defence of Goose Bay and that arrangements for the defence of the base should be the subject of discussion and agreement between the two Governments.

3. There are several objections to an amendment to the lease itself:

(a) It would draw public attention both in Canada and in the United States to the problem of the defence of U.S. installations in Canada.

(b) It would certainly involve a considerable delay in the signing of the agreement and might lead to an effort on the part of the United States to open up other provisions of the agreement.

4. I do not think that, if the United States authorities are willing to accept a collateral letter, the absence of a safeguarding clause in the agreement itself would prejudice our rights<sup>46</sup> under the agreement. In the implementation of Canada-U.S. defence arrangements so much depends on the good-will of the parties that it is not necessary to spell out everything in formal agreements.

5. In the circumstances I recommend that the Department be authorized to take up with the United States authorities a proposal that we sign the lease and accompany it with a collateral letter along the lines set forth above (in paragraph 2).<sup>47</sup>

Stationing of forces

6. I understand that Mr. Claxton considers that the United States should be under an obligation to notify us from time to time of substantial changes in the character or numbers of U.S. forces to be stationed at Goose Bay. Under paragraph 6 of the proposed agreement, "the Lessee shall have ... such rights as are necessary to support the operation of United States military aircraft at Goose Bay, including the right (a) to station personnel within the Leased Areas ...."

The Lease also gives the United States the right to construct various kinds of facilities, including communication and navigation facilities, storage facilities, etc. It is therefore clear that the United States will have the right under the agreement to station personnel in quite large numbers. It is reasonable, however, to interpret the agreement as not conferring on the United States unlimited rights to station troops at the base. It would not be proper, for instance, for the U.S. to use its leased areas as a place in which to train land forces in Arctic warfare and it can be argued that the Lease does not confer a right to station units or formations of a kind whose presence would substantially affect the operation of Goose Bay as a Canadian air base or would over-tax base facilities outside of the leased areas.

7. The U.S. has at our request supplied quarterly reports on the numbers of its forces at U.S. installations in Canada, including the Leased Bases, although it is under no obligation to do so in so far as the Leased Bases are concerned.

8. It would be technically difficult to write into the Goose Bay Lease a provision requiring the United States to consult us before making substantial changes in the character and numbers of forces stationed in the leased areas: it

What do our legal advisers think of this?

OK — if the legal position is safeguarded by this procedure. L.B. P[earson] would involve recasting some of the principal provisions. What we wish, as I understand it, is to be consulted before the U.S. makes such substantial increases in the numbers of its forces, or stations such operational units, as would change the character of the air base or over-tax base facilities outside of the leased areas. In the circumstances, if the matter is to be mentioned at all, it should be sufficient to say in a collateral letter that the Canadian Government expects to receive quarterly reports on the numbers of its forces stationed at Goose Bay (as at other U.S. installations in Canada) and to be consulted with regard to proposals:<sup>48</sup>

(a) substantially to increase the numbers of U.S. personnel stationed at Goose Bay;

(b) to station units or formations of a kind not stationed at Goose Bay at or prior to the time the lease enters into force;

(c) to station units or formations of a kind whose presence would substantially affect the operation of Goose Bay as a Canadian air base;

(d) to station units or formations whose presence would over-tax base facilities outside of the leased areas.

Do you agree, and, if so, may we inform the U.S. Embassy accordingly?<sup>49</sup>

9. Both the matters treated in this memorandum might be covered in a "Dear Mr. Woodward" letter to the U.S. Ambassador.

10. Do you think it necessary to obtain the approval of Cabinet Defence Committee or, in view of the recent discussion in Cabinet, of full Cabinet?<sup>50</sup> As you know, Cabinet Defence committee will probably meet on Thursday, October 9.<sup>51</sup>

11. I am sending a copy of the foregoing to Mr. Claxton and am asking him to let us have his views.

12. Annexed for reference is the memorandum which I sent you on September 23.

POSTING OF U.S. FIGHTER SQUADRON TO GOOSE BAY

You will recall that as a consequence of the agreement between Mr. Pearson and Mr. Claxton that the CAS should concur in the temporary deployment of a U.S. fighter squadron at Goose Bay, this Department suggested to the CAS<sup>54</sup> on October 11, 1952, that his concurrence should incorporate the following understandings:

1) That it should be without prejudice to a decision on command of forces for the defence of the Newfoundland-Northeast area;

2) That it should be without prejudice to a decision as to whether fighter defence forces at the base should be Canadian or U.S;

3) That in the meantime interception by fighter forces stationed at Goose Bay should be conducted strictly in accordance with Canadian regulations.

2. Although the telegram from the CAS to General Vandenberg concurring in the temporary deployment of the 59th Interceptor Squadron to Goose Bay (copy of which you have already seen) was couched in identical terms to those suggested by this Department, we have now received through PJBD channels from the RCAF a copy of a letter from the Acting Chief of the Air Staff dated October 18, 1952, to the Air Officer Commanding, Air Defence Command, RCAF, (copy attached)† which goes far beyond the position taken by External Affairs. The letter makes the following statement:

".... In view of the fact that command and control of Air Defence Forces in the NEAC<sup>55</sup> area has not as yet been resolved and in view of the temporary nature of the deployment, you are hereby authorized to delegate the necessary authority to the Commanding General, NEAC, to intercept and engage hostile aircraft in accordance with Appendix B to Cabinet Document D 320 (copy attached)† in which the powers of the Canadian Air Defence Commander for the interception and engagement of hostile aircraft are defined. Since this unit is operating under the local direction of the Commanding General, Northeast Air Command, Air Defence Command will have no control over its deployment by U.S. authorities."

3. It was recognized in the Department of External Affairs when the condition regarding interception referred to in paragraph 1 above was first drafted, that lack of command and communications facilities in the Goose Bay area on the part of the Canadian Air Defence Command would pose a difficult problem in making the arrangements for the control of the operations of the squadron, and that it would be necessary to make special arrangements to meet the needs of the situation. I am doubtful, however, that the Acting CAS has power to delegate an authority which was vested in the AOC,<sup>56</sup> Air Defence Command, (as a Canadian exercising command over Canadian aircraft) to an American exercising command over American aircraft flying over Canadian territory. Moreover, I do not know whether Mr. Claxton is aware that this action has been taken.

4. Existing regulations give the USAF authority to intercept over Canada only when an unidentified aircraft gives evidence of intention to cross the border; USAF aircraft are not permitted to "engage" a supposedly hostile aircraft over Canada. New draft regulations now being considered by the PJBD would authorize USAF aircraft to intercept anywhere in Canada provided no RCAF aircraft are available, and to engage a hostile plane, but only on orders of the Canadian Air Defence Commander.

5. I am of the opinion that as a consequence of the discussions held at the November 13 [14] meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee on Canada-U.S. military installations in Newfoundland and Labrador,<sup>57</sup> and because the Military Cooperation Committee is to discuss shortly the specific question of the method by which Canadian control is to be exercised over air defence arrangements in northeastern Canada, a satisfactory solution to this problem should be forthcoming. However, if you agree,<sup>58</sup> I propose, in my capacity as External Affairs Member of the PJBD, to have a talk with the Canadian Air Member of the Board (A/V/M Miller), drawing to his attention my doubts about the procedure followed in authorizing the AOC to delegate authority to "intercept and engage" to the Commanding General of Northeast Command.

GOOSE BAY LEASE

The Notes and letters constituting the Goose Bay Agreement were signed and exchanged on December 5.

2. You will recall that the Notes and accompanying letter were all ready for signature in mid-September when Mr. Claxton wished to re-examine some of the implications of the proposed agreement. His concern had been aroused by the action of the U.S.A.F. in "notifying" the R.C.A.F. of its intention to station a fighter squadron at Goose Bay. Since mid-September, a great deal of consideration has been given to the implications of the proposed agreement as a result of which it was decided that there should be an exchange of collateral letters. Our letter records the understanding of the Canadian Government that existing arrangements between the Governments of Canada and the United States regarding the operational activity or stationing of tactical or strategic formations shall continue to apply to Goose Bay; and states that the Canadian Government will expect to be consulted with regard to any proposal substantially to increase the numbers of United States personnel to be stationed at Goose Bay. The United States reply concurs in the understanding. The collateral letters are classified as CONFIDENTIAL. If it should be desired to publish them, it will be necessary to obtain the concurrence of the United States Government.

3. The Goose Bay Agreement now comprises the following:

(a) A formal Note from the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs to the United States Ambassador setting forth the terms and conditions of the lease, and the United States Ambassador's reply, which together constitute the lease Agreement. These are to be published.<sup>59</sup>

(b) A formal Note from the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs to the United States Ambassador on metes and bounds. This is SECRET.†

(c) A letter, classified as SECRET, from the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs to the United States Ambassador stating that it is the intention of the Canadian Government to give effect at Goose Bay to certain recommendations of the P.J.B.D. on customs and excise privileges, application of the Visiting Forces (U.S.A.) Act and military postal privileges.†

HARMON, NEWFOUNDLAND; AGREEMENT WITH THE UNITED STATES

33. The Minister of National Defence as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that, on November 8th, 1951, the Cabinet Defence Committee had considered a request by the United States for permission to establish global communications stations near Harmon and Pepperrell Leased Bases, Newfoundland. It had not been possible at that time to reach agreement on conditions relating to tenure. Since then the request for a station at Pepperrell had been dropped and a station within the proposed U.S. leased area at Goose Bay was to be constructed. There was still for consideration the request for a station near Harmon. The area within the leased base there was not adequate for the purpose. About 1020 acres were required and the U.S. Air Force proposed to spend approximately $15 million. A formula on tenure had been drafted which was acceptable to the U.S. government. It would provide that, in the event either government wished to discontinue the arrangement, the question of continuing need would be referred to the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. If either government decided following consideration by the Board that the facilities were no longer necessary for mutual defence the land together with any immovable facilities on it would, on 12 months' notice, revert to the use of the Canadian government. It was recommended that authority be given for an exchange of notes with the U.S. Ambassador to conclude the arrangement.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

TORBAY AIRPORT, NEWFOUNDLAND

I. Facilities

Torbay airport, the only civil airfield serving St. John's, is used by international civil aviation as an alternate for Gander. A small RCAF Search and Rescue squadron is based on the field. As the headquarters of the Northeast Command at the U.S. Leased Base at Pepperrell possesses no airfield, it uses Torbay extensively.

Torbay airport has four 5,000 foot runways. It is therefore not suitable for B-36 aircraft or for jet planes. Jet aircraft could use the field only if one runway were extended about 2,000 feet at an estimated cost of 1.5 to 2 million dollars. It might also be necessary to strengthen existing hardstands and construct one new one.

Of the three hangars at Torbay, one is shared by the Department of Transport and the RCAF, and the other two are used by the USAF. There are about 64 buildings of temporary type construction, most of which were built during the last war. The Department of Transport and the RCAF have used only a few of them since the end of the war.

II. United States Interests

The USAF would like to use Torbay airport for two purposes. First, it would be an Air Force general depot or "airhead" for Northeast Command. In this role the buildings at Torbay would be used for administrative purposes, troop accommodation and storage, and the runways would, as now, be used by aircraft on administrative flights. The USAF has now no intention of using Torbay for B-36 operations.

As a second purpose, the USAF wishes to use Torbay as a base for a jet interceptor squadron of 25 aircraft for the air defence of the area. The USAF has not yet submitted this request formally. It has not made clear whether it wishes to station these aircraft at Torbay in the near future, or whether it merely wishes to make provision for them on the outbreak of war. The USAF has not yet expressed a view on the operational responsibilities of this defence squadron.

Canada has already agreed to short term commercial leases (terminable on 30 days' notice) for about half the unoccupied buildings at Torbay; National Defence is now considering whether to agree to a U.S. request for similar leases for all the remaining unoccupied buildings. We understand that the USAF is spending large sums on the renovation and improvement of the buildings which it is leasing.

Torbay airport is now administered by the Department of Transport, but we understand that the RCAF has agreed in principle to take over responsibility for the station, when and if the USAF leases the remaining buildings.

III. The Request for Buildings

It would be difficult to refuse the U.S. request to lease the remaining unoccupied buildings for administrative use.<sup>61</sup> The USAF needs them now and we do not. Although we maintain our right to assume occupancy of the buildings on short notice, there might nevertheless be practical difficulties in recovering buildings on which the USAF had spent money which may equal their original value. To forestall this difficulty, we might consider reminding the USAF, through PJBD channels, of the short tenure; we might at the same time suggest that if Canada wishes to take over the buildings, the Canadian Government would consider compensating the USAF for its expenditures on the basis on the residual value to Canada.

IV. Extension of Torbay Runways

The extensive administrative use of Torbay by the U.S. Northeast Command at Pepperrell will inevitably affect the character of the airport to some extent even though the rights of civil air operators are protected. If it is left to the United States to extend the runways, it may be all the more difficult to preserve complete Canadian control of Torbay. Before the U.S. makes a request for permission to extend the runways, therefore, Canada might well consider the possibility of undertaking this work itself. The cost does not seem unreasonably high, and Torbay is an airport where the facilities are almost bound to be of residual value to civil aviation when defence needs are no longer so pressing. It may be a long time until the defence of Newfoundland is no longer a matter of serious concern, but it is possible that strategic considerations would dictate a shift in the emphasis on defence from St. John's to some other part of northeast North America. In this event it would be unfortunate if, because of its financial stake in the Torbay facilities, the USAF were reluctant to leave the field entirely to the Canadian authorities. It would be particularly embarrassing to have the U.S. press a claim, whether legally founded or not, in a Canadian area of such political importance. Canadian expenditure on the runways, therefore, may be well justified by considerations of sovereignty both at the present time and in the future if Torbay is no longer needed as a fighter base.<sup>62</sup>

V. Torbay As a Fighter Base

A second aspect of the sovereignty question arises in connection with the stationing of a fighter squadron at Torbay. If the only fighter squadron in Newfoundland were supplied by the USAF, in practice that squadron would be responsible for the defence of a large amount of Canadian territory. Although it is true that Newfoundland is a possible target mainly because of U.S. military activities, it seems more realistic to accept the fact that, for whatever reasons, air defence will have to be provided for Newfoundland. We have never agreed to U.S. responsibility for aerial defence of Canadian territory, and the only alternative is RCAF responsibility, with or without U.S. assistance.

At present, the only RCAF operational unit on the east coast is one squadron (sometimes two) at Greenwood; this is not defensive in character. If one RCAF fighter squadron were assigned to St. John's, and only if an RCAF squadron were provided, we could make a strong case for a reasonable voice in the defence of Newfoundland and ensure that the responsibility for the protection of Canadian territory remains in Canadian hands.

Ottawa, May 1, 1952

My dear Colleague,

I am enclosing a copy of a memorandum† prepared in the Department of External Affairs on Torbay Airport, which I think you will find of interest.

I think that we may have to face three decisions concerning Torbay. I understand that your Department has now agreed to make available to the U.S.A.F. unoccupied buildings for use as a U.S.A.F. general depot. I agree that this accommodation should be made available to the United States if it is not needed by Canada, and I hope that this matter will soon be considered by Cabinet Defence Committee.

Secondly, we may have to decide whether or not we shall offer to pay for the improvement and extension of runways at Torbay. Although the United States has not yet made a request, it seems likely that some work will be required to make the airport suitable for jet aircraft. Whether or not the aircraft using the base belong to the defence forces of the R.C.A.F. or the U.S.A.F., I think that we should seriously consider undertaking this work ourselves. Any such improvements made at Torbay probably would be of continuing value to both military and Canadian civil air operations. Since United States expenditure on permanent improvement of the base might well limit our freedom of action later, Canadian expenditures on the runways, may well be justified by considerations of sovereignty both at the present time and in the future.

The third decision is perhaps the most difficult of all as it is related to complex problems of manpower and financing. I think, however, that at some stage and possibly soon, we shall have to decide whether Canada or the United States is to be responsible for the air defence of Newfoundland. It seems to me that only if Canada provides some air defence forces can we make a strong case for a reasonable voice in the defence of Newfoundland, and ensure that the responsibility for the protection of Canadian territory remains in Canadian hands.

Yours sincerely,

My dear Colleague,<sup>63</sup>

Thank you for your letter of May 1, 1952 about the requested expansion of Torbay airport and the more general question relating to the defence of Newfoundland.

You will probably recall that this matter came before the Cabinet Defence Committee on April 17, June 14, June 29 and December 12, 1951.

I enclose extracts of the decisions.†

A difficulty arising here is that apart from activities incidental to search and rescue, transport and maritime operations, which are relatively on a minor scale, the main role of the air forces based in Newfoundland is one for which the United States is exclusively responsible.

If we are going to take on the defence of the air stations there, we would have to provide appropriate fighter squadrons and ground defence forces, especially for the static defence of bases for which the U.S.A.F. had the primary need.

USAF REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL BUILDINGS AT TORBAY

In Note No. 129 of December 3, 1951, the U.S. Embassy asked for permission for the USAF to obtain on short term lease a list of unoccupied buildings at Torbay. Some of these were to be used temporarily for an Aircraft Control and Warning Unit, and some were to be used on a more permanent basis to establish a General Depot.

With the authority of Cabinet Defence Committee, on January 8, we informed the U.S. Embassy that the USAF might lease the buildings required for the AC&W<sup>64</sup> Unit; the request for the buildings required for the General Depot was to be studied further.

On May 18, Mr. Pearson agreed that we might tell the U.S. Embassy that the USAF may lease the remaining unoccupied buildings at Torbay for the General Depot. On May 17, in a conversation with the Chief of Air Staff, Mr. Claxton agreed that such a reply might be sent to the U.S. Embassy without further consideration by Cabinet Defence Committee. On May 18, the Director of Air Services of the Department of Transport reported that he could speak for his Department in expressing concurrence with a favourable reply to the U.S. Embassy.

I now attach, for your approval, a Note to the U.S. Embassy, which gives permission for the USAF to lease the buildings which they requested. This Note, in draft form has been checked by the Director of Air Services of the Department of Transport, and by the Joint Staff in the Department of National Defence.<sup>65</sup>

As you know, the U.S. have been considering the development of another airport in Newfoundland but have finally come to the conclusion that Torbay would suit their requirements best, largely for logistic reasons. They have informed us that they do not now propose another Strategic Air Command base but merely a base for supplying outlying stations for headquarters purposes of the Northeast Command, as a base for a fighter squadron, and for staging purposes for military air transport. They have not yet formally proposed a plan but have sent plans forward at Service levels for discussion purposes. Since they have put the question of Torbay on the agenda for the meeting of the PJBD next week, it is anticipated that they will wish to discuss plans as well as terms.

Attached is a memorandum prepared for the Panel on Economic Aspects of Defence suggesting possible alternative arrangements.† The Panel was however unable to reach agreement on the most preferable course. The general view of the Panel was that the Canadian Section of the Board should be rather cool towards the development and should endeavour to elicit as much information as possible about U.S. plans in the region, as well as for Torbay.

It might be useful if MacKay and I could have a talk with you and Mr. Claxton about Torbay in order to obtain guidance for the PJBD meeting.<sup>66</sup> General McNaughton will be away this afternoon and tomorrow.

MEMORANDUM FOR GENERAL MCNAUGHTON

TORBAY

Mr. Wilgress and I had a short session with Mr. Pearson and Mr. Claxton today on the question of Torbay. The sense of the meeting was that we should be cool towards the U.S. proposals and try to find out (a) whether they felt that the development of Torbay in the immediate future was really necessary, and (b) whether the programme which we have received informally is the final word, or whether there is a likelihood of further expansion of Torbay or development of another airfield in the area. It was felt further that we should emphasize to the American Section that expansion of their facilities in the vicinity of the Provincial capital is undesirable from our standpoint. On the other hand, it was felt that we should not press them into proposing another site in the Newfoundland area unless it is clear that they have ultimately very large developments in mind. With respect to tenure, no conclusion was reached except that we should be "tough".

Mr. Pearson expressed the view, although rather casually, that we should develop the field ourselves. Mr. Claxton did not seem averse to our doing at least part of it. Mr. Claxton seemed to feel also that sooner or later we should have a fighter squadron in the Newfoundland area. Mr. Pearson seemed to feel even more strongly that we should do so. Mr. Claxton said, however, that Air Force plans would not at present permit.

Development of Torbay; . . .*

14. The Secretary submitted the Journal of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence for June, 1952.†

15. The Minister of National Defence referred to the discussions at the Board's June meeting in the course of which tentative U.S. proposals for the development of Torbay airport had been outlined. Since this subject would be discussed by the Board in September, he thought it would be useful for the Committee to give some general guidance to the Canadian members.

He considered that every effort should be made to learn the full extent of possible U.S. development at Torbay and elsewhere in Newfoundland. Any arrangement for U.S. activities should not contemplate any long-term lease or delegation of Canadian authority. Canadian control should be exercised by the Department of National Defence.

Available construction might be leased to the United States on a short-term basis. New construction should be financed by the United States unless it was of continuing use to Canada for civil or military purposes.

If the United States considered it necessary to station a fighter squadron or other defensive formation permanently at Torbay or at other places in Newfoundland elsewhere than on the leased bases, and the Chiefs of Staff agreed, this should be the responsibility of the Canadian Services. It seemed desirable, if it were really necessary, even to reduce overseas commitments to ensure that fighter defence formations in inhabited areas of Canada would be provided by the R.C.A.F. rather than the U.S.A.F. If, however, a squadron was required for protection only at the time of staging operations of strategic air forces, there seemed no objection to allowing the United States to furnish it.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, August 21, 1952 "U.S. development at Torbay," Cab. Doc. D-3577)

16. The Prime Minister said that if the Chiefs of Staff agreed to the necessity of providing fighter squadrons anywhere in inhabited Canada, it would be desirable to have the R.C.A.F. provide those squadrons as it would be difficult to defend the posting of Canadian squadrons overseas while U.S.A.F. defensive formations were permanently stationed on Canadian soil.

II. Discussion Between the Chairman, Chiefs of Staff and General Bradley on US Installations in Canada

5. The Chairman said that he explained to General Bradley that it might be useful if he knew the views of the Canadian Government on any further US installations in Canada. The Canadian Government did not wish to enter into any long term leases or agreements for further US installations in Canada. It would be more acceptable if the US could limit their requirements to the leased bases. It was stressed that in time of war it was a different matter, but in peacetime public opinion had to be considered and that there were certain elements in Canada who voiced the view that Canada was allowing the US to defend certain parts of the country. Therefore, further requests for concessions in Canada would create a very difficult political problem.

With regard to Torbay, it was emphasized that US requests for facilities at this base presented a difficult problem, because Torbay is the airport of St. John's and still a civil airfield. If large American installations were established at this airfield it would create a further requirement for defence arrangements for these installations including fighter squadrons. This would pose the question as to whether these fighter squadrons were American or Canadian and neither solution would be satisfactory. It would be difficult for the Canadian services to undertake the responsibility for the defence of US installations. On the other hand, it would be politically unacceptable to have a US fighter squadron stationed at Torbay as this would be interpreted as a squadron for the defence of the city of St. John's as well as the base at Torbay.

General Bradley said that he was not convinced that there was a real requirement for an USAF depot at Torbay. It appeared that this request had arisen because the USAF, who now had depot space at Argentia, had been requested by the USN to vacate this space. General Bradley undertook to discuss this matter with the USAF to see if their request could not be withdrawn.

With regard to the question of fighter squadrons operating for the defence of Strategic Air Command operations, it was pointed out that it would be more acceptable if the US would avoid submitting requests for fighter squadrons to be permanently stationed on Canadian territory in peacetime. It would be more acceptable if fighter squadrons were brought up periodically in support of Strategic Air Command exercises or to protect Strategic Air Command operations in case of an emergency. In this way it should be possible to familiarize the pilots with these areas of operations and to make all preliminary arrangements for use in an emergency. General Bradley had said that he would discuss the matter with General Walsh, USAF.

The question of anti-aircraft sites on Canadian territory was also discussed and it was pointed out that the actual stationing of troops on Canadian territory would be a very difficult proposal for the Canadian Government to accept. General Bradley had said that they were trying to provide defence against a sneak raid and suggested that perhaps a reciprocal arrangement could be worked out to provide alternative sites for both Canadian and US anti-aircraft artillery on both sides of the border. It was emphasized that this arrangement would create a difficult problem for Canada as Canadian anti-aircraft artillery was only a reserve organization and no Canadian Troops could be stationed alongside US units in Canada. General Bradley had said that he was not aware of this situation and would undertake to discuss the matter with General Collins.

With regard to additional early warning sites in Canada, General Bradley had said that it was his understanding that these new stations were to be in addition to the present integrated air defence scheme but that he thought they should form part of the Canadian/US air defence scheme.

6. The Chief of the Air Staff suggested that, in order to avoid having US fighter squadrons permanently stationed in Canada, the US might arrange to rotate their squadrons.

7. The Committee noted the remarks of the Chairman, Chiefs of Staff.<sup>67</sup>

Ottawa, December 29, 1952

A few days ago I mentioned to you that we hoped to use the occasion of the presence in Ottawa of most officials interested in the Arctic to discuss some Arctic problems which did not appear on the agenda of our Canada-U.S. conference. It seems opportune that we should do so now since we have recently had an indication of the emergence of new Arctic problems as a result of increased U.S. activity in this area.

I have been in close touch with officials of other departments concerned with the Arctic, particularly Defence Research Board and External Affairs. We are to have an informal meeting on December 30 to discuss the ground which we might most usefully cover at the Canadian meetings in the first week of January. Officials in External Affairs are considering a memorandum to their Minister suggesting a general approach to the Deputy Minister of Resources and Development.

I should much appreciate an opportunity of a conversation with you on this subject in order to obtain guidance on the line we should take in the discussions on January 6-7. I have therefore prepared a memorandum which outlines some of the problems and which lists some of the possible steps which Canada might take to develop the Arctic. Few of the possible solutions may be practicable in the coming year, but I think that it would be useful as a starting point to consider all theoretically possible avenues of activity.

The attachment to the memorandum refers to a few unfortunate incidents which have taken place in the Arctic. I have checked the authenticity of these as carefully as possible, but I have been asked to use them with caution in order to avoid embarrassment to those who were kind enough to make some of the information available to me. One or two of the incidents have come very close to being made public. The first listed, for instance, appeared in a manuscript written by Peter Inglis, which he agreed to suppress at the request of Mr. Claxton.

The memorandum draws no conclusions and makes no recommendations. Perhaps you would be good enough to let me know when it would be convenient for us to have a word about this subject.

INCIDENTS

1. On 5 March 1952 an RCAF Lancaster aircraft carrying out photography of the coast of Baffin Island was in touch with Thule air base. When the nature of the mission was mentioned as a photography exercise, Thule Operations inquired on whose authority the flight was being carried out. They were advised that it was on the authority of the Canadian Government. Thule then passed instructions from base operations that photography was to cease immediately and the aircraft was to proceed and land at Thule and remain there until authority to proceed was granted. The instructions were not carried out.

2. In the spring of 1952 the USAF approached Canada through service channels for permission to use Alert for the support of a party to be landed on one of the ice islands. The USAF was informed that the request would have to go through State Department/External Affairs channels. A message was received by Tac Air Group from Alaska Air Command that the operation would nevertheless proceed. The USAF party was established on the ice island, Alert being used for refuelling on the return journey. This all took place before the official U.S. request had reached the Canadian Government.

3. In giving permission for the use of Alert in the spring of 1950 to support the station on the ice island T3, the Canadian Government explicitly stated that it would expect to be informed, prior to the event, if landings were to be made on any other ice island. In fact landings were made, not only on the ice island itself, but also on Ellesmere Island and on the Ellesmere shelf ice. No request for permission for these landings was sent to Canada.

4. Permission was given in 1952 for the establishment of a temporary shore station on Banks Island by the USN icebreaker Burton Island. The station was established. Unfortunately the personnel at the station largely destroyed an Eskimo archaeological site by digging for curios. The site was close to a native camp where the regulations protecting such sites were known and have been respected for many years.

5. During the time that Frobisher was still operated by the USAF, immediately prior to the RCAF taking over its operation in 1950, at least one RCAF aircraft was refused permission to land as it was a USAF base.

6. At Padloping in 1951 the USAF weather station was reluctant to let the C.D. Howe anchor, intimating that it was a U.S. base.

7. In 1950, while the establishment at Thule was beginning, a beacon was established by the USAF at Clyde Inlet. So far as can be determined this was done without reference in any way to any Canadian authority, and it was a complete surprise when the beacon was found to be operating.

8. Scandinavian Airlines has carried out its pioneer flights on the polar route from Edmonton to Thule to Copenhagen. The major part of this route lies over north Canada. It is understood that Scandinavian Airlines were taking USAF personnel on these flights to advise on facilities and navigation. Certainly USAF charts were being used for areas where superior Canadian aeronautical charts exist. It should be noted that in much of this area Canada is responsible for search and rescue.

9. Many of the meteorological summaries on the joint weather stations are published by the U.S. Weather Bureau. It seems unfortunate that the publication of such data as the meteorological conditions at Eureka Sound is not done by Canada.

10. Although air traffic control in northeast Canada is officially an RCAF responsibility, it has become the practice at Goose Bay for Northeast Air Command, USAF, to request flights north from Goose to be cleared through Northeast Air Command Operations. Under present conditions it can only be a matter of time before this practice is extended to Frobisher and in fact for the whole Northeastern Arctic.

DEVELOPMENTS IN THE ARCTIC

There follows a list of possible developments in the Arctic for the coming year, mainly as a result of U.S. requests. An explanatory map is attached.†

(1) Project Lincoln

In 1953, the United States will wish to establish three or four experimental early warning radar stations, probably on the extreme northwest of the Canadian mainland. According to plans favoured by many U.S. officials, this will be the beginning of a chain of about 40 radar stations to be established at tremendous cost across the Canadian Arctic. The stations would probably be manned by the United States. Although Canadian defence scientists have some differing views on the value of such stations, if the United States decides to go forward with this scheme we may anticipate heavy pressure, both official and public, since the installations would be designed for the protection of North American cities.

(2) Development of airfields at Alert and Eureka

The U.S.A.F. wishes to develop extensively the airstrips at the two northernmost joint Arctic weather stations, on Ellesmere Island. Although the U.S. Northeast Air Command has described their requirement as "emergency landing facilities", they wish to have runways suitable for the heaviest freighters and for jet aircraft. I understand that they are considering blacktop.

At these two joint Arctic weather stations there is now a total of seven Canadians. If the airfields were developed, the installations would probably assume the character of small U.S. bases, and Canadian control might well be lost.

(3) Loran station on Baffin Island

The United States wishes to establish a Loran station on the east coast of Baffin Island to assist ships and aircraft en route to Thule and other Arctic destinations.

It was only in 1952 that the government decided to take over the last three Loran stations under U.S. control on the Atlantic coast, and the transfer is to take place in 1953. If the Baffin Island station is opened and operated by the United States, the pattern of Canadian control over all Loran stations in Canada will again be broken.

(4) Radar stations in the Northeastern Arctic

Over a year ago, the United States asked to make surveys as a preliminary to the establishment of radar stations on Ellesmere and Coburg Islands for the protection of Thule. During the spring airlift in 1952, the U.S.A.F. investigated the possibility of putting these radar stations in the vicinity of the Joint Arctic Weather Stations at Alert, Eureka and/or Resolute. Resolute, with about 35 Canadians, has the largest Canadian community in the Arctic Archipelago. Alert and Eureka have seven Canadians between them. Each U.S. radar station would probably have about 200 U.S. servicemen.

(5) Communications facilities

The U.S.A.F. is concerned about the inadequacy of communications links for transmission of Arctic weather information and about the inadequacy of radio aids to navigation in the North.

Some of the needed improvements which may be suggested will probably be in southern regions where they are for the support of Arctic operations. Since this is a technical matter on which I am not well briefed, I can add no further details, but I expect that the improvements will be costly and will probably have to be provided, if they are provided at all, by the Department of Transport.

It is government policy to attach importance to the maintenance of Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic. Until now the main activity in that area has been the weather station programme. We have maintained our tenuous position by providing half the staff, but in the entire Archipelago we have less than 50 men. This figure is now matched by the United States. Any new U.S. activity is bound to change the delicate balance of manpower in the northern Arctic. This in itself, of course, is not necessarily serious, but I think that our experiences since 1943 have indicated the extreme care which we must exercise to preserve Canadian sovereignty in remote areas where Canadians are outnumbered and outranked.

About a year ago Mr. Pearson remarked in private that he wondered how good our claim was to some areas of the Arctic. If it must rest on discovery and continuous occupation, it may well be in future that our claim to some relatively unexplored areas will be shaky indeed. I am not now worried by formal claims, since the U.S. Administration has been eminently reasonable during the past six years that we have been working together in the Arctic. Probably of much greater concern is the sort of de facto U.S. sovereignty which caused so much trouble in the last war and which might be exercised again. There have already been incidents which, if they had reached the public ear, might have embarrassed the government. Attached to this memorandum is a list of incidents and some extracts from military reports, all of which bear on the question of sovereignty. Needless to say this list is not exhaustive, and contains references only to matters which have come to my attention in the past year or two. Most of the incidents are petty in themselves, but they indicate an atmosphere which is not ideal. And, of course, these incidents have occurred when Canada was more or less matching U.S. manpower in the Canadian Arctic, a situation which may not long continue.

In the entire Canadian Arctic Archipelago, there are only four places where there are exclusively Canadian installations. (The R.C.M.P. is, however, planning to establish a post at Cape Herschel on Ellesmere Island.) There are small weather stations at Arctic Bay and at Pond Inlet. At Resolute Bay, where there is a Joint Arctic Weather Station, there is also an R.C.A.F. station, which is manned entirely by the R.C.A.F. About two years ago, the U.S.A.F. suggested putting new radio equipment with U.S. operators there but the proposal was resisted. At Resolute, there is also a Canadian ionospheric station (6 men, 1 hut). There is at least a possibility that the United States will ask to put a U.S.-manned radar station with between 100 and 200 men at Resolute. The other Canadian installation is the Arctic survival school open in the winter months at Cambridge Bay in the Southern Archipelago. There are three or four Canadians at each of the Joint Arctic Weather Stations (Resolute — 6). The United States still mans the weather stations at Padloping Island. Although Cabinet directed that Canada should take it over by 1950, the Department of Transport has been unable to find the manpower to do so. In addition, of course, the United States also has an installation on an ice island known as T3 which, I am told, has now drifted well into the Canadian sector. Alert and Eureka have been used as staging points for supply, but I gather that the U.S.A.F. plans to use Thule as a base rather than Eielson in Alaska as hitherto. The U.S.A.F., and the U.S.N., are actively interested in finding and possibly manning other ice islands near the Pole. I understand that Canada makes no territorial claim to ice islands within the Canadian sector, and hence our main interest in these stations is in their support which may involve flights to and/over Canadian territory.

There is not a single agreement covering the presence of any Americans in the Arctic Archipelago. The Joint Arctic Weather Station Programme was established in 1947 under terms approved by Cabinet, but we never finished drafting an agreement with the Americans covering the conditions of their presence. At the present time, for instance, Canada has no clear right to increase its staff at any of the weather stations in Canada beyond 50% of the total staff. In view of the close relationships with the Americans, this is probably not a serious matter, except that it might be embarrassing if anyone asked under what terms they were operating in the Arctic. The lack of agreement may also tend to encourage the impression often held, it seems, by U.S. officers, that the Archipelago is a no-man's land. There was a general understanding that the weather station programme would last for five years but so far there has been placed before Cabinet no serious re-examination of the basis of the weather stations following that five-year period which expired almost a year ago.

Summary

You may conclude from this account that emphasis on the Arctic by Canadian officials would not be misplaced. Without assessing their value, their cost, or even their practicability, I list below some possible courses of action:

(1) Canada might gradually take over the manning of the whole Arctic weather chain. This would require only about 20 more men. We would still be dependent upon the United States for some equipment, for the sea supply, and would probably wish to have the help of the U.S.A.F. for part of the air supply. I believe that the U.S.-Danish joint arctic weather stations in Greenland are manned entirely by Danes, with U.S. assistance in money and transport only. There are advantages to such an arrangement in the maintenance of sovereignty, in the gaining of valuable experience and in the preservation of morale at the installation.

(2) Canada might gradually increase its part in the sea supply mission. Until now there have been no Canadian ships, but in 1954 the new R.C.N. icebreaker will probably take part.

(3) The R.C.M.P. might open up new posts in the Arctic. There is a proposal that the post at Resolute should be reopened and I recommend that we support this idea. The Department of Transport is in favour.

(4) Canada might, as Cabinet directed, assume responsibility for the Padloping Island weather station now manned by the United States. This would require no more than 12 men.

(5) Canada might adopt a policy that all radio aids to navigation in Canada be Canadian-operated. Now, for example, the beacon at Clyde is operated by the U.S.A.F.

(6) If it is necessary to improve the airstrip facilities at Alert and Eureka, Canada might take full responsibility, letting the United States provide only materials and transport.

(7) If a Loran station must be established on Baffin Island, Canada might man it.

(8) The expeditions of exploration and flag raising which the Canadian government sponsored in the past might be revived. They would now be particularly useful for we know enough about the Arctic to know what more we have to learn in the scientific field. The expeditions could be sponsored by such departments as Mines and Technical Surveys, Resources and Development, the Defence Research Board and the R.C.M.P., possibly with some U.S. participation. With the use of air transport, rather than ships, and of scientists already in government service, the cost would probably be modest, and much less than for expeditions earlier in the century.

(9) The government might consider extending the boundaries of the electoral district of Mackenzie River to include the whole of the District of Franklin; it now stops at the coastline of the mainland. There would probably be no material results, but the psychological and possibly legal effect might be useful.

(10) We might encourage greater emphasis on, and greater attention to, the Arctic in civilian and service departments by such methods as

(i) Using more effectively existing committees such as the advisory Committee on Northern Development.

(ii) Reorganization within government departments to facilitate the co-ordination of Arctic activities and the exchange of information.

(iii) Encouraging (orally and entirely informally) National Defence College and possibly the staff colleges to study Arctic problems more fully.

(iv) Lectures and films for government officials. External Affairs, for instance, now appears interested in devoting some time to the Arctic in the instructional period for new officers. There are some first rate films on the Arctic rarely seen outside small circles of Arctic specialists.<sup>68</sup>

(v) Occasional speeches by Ministers or senior government officials on the development of the Canadian Arctic.

(11) We might re-examine the basis of existing U.S. activities in the Canadian Arctic and try to have some form of unclassified written agreement setting forth the conditions of U.S. tenure.

NORTHERN ARCTIC DEVELOPMENTS

I wish to draw to your attention some of the prospective new developments in the Arctic of which this Department has become aware in recent months. While some may fail to materialize, the Canadian Government has already received, or can expect in the near future to receive, requests for approval for most of them. These prospective developments include the following:

(a) The establishment by the United States of three or four experimental early warning stations with a view to the ultimate development of a complete Arctic radar chain of possibly 40 stations;<sup>69</sup>

(b) The development by the United States of the air strips at Alert and Eureka and construction of a new air strip at River Clyde to a standard suitable for large transport aircraft and jet fighters to meet the need for emergency alternates for Thule and for Arctic resupply missions;

(c) The establishment of one or two Loran stations on the east coast of Baffin Island to meet the needs of ships and aircraft en route to Thule and other Arctic points;

(d) The establishment of two Early Warning/GCI radar stations, one on Coburg Island and one on Ellesmere Island as a part of the defensive installations in connection with the U.S.A.F. base at Thule;

(e) The opening of a commercial air route across the Arctic, from Edmonton to Thule.

2. As you know the Canadian Government at the end of the last war embarked on a vigorous programme intended to "re-Canadianize" the Arctic. It was carried out under the aegis of the Advisory Committee on Northern Development and included the take-over from the USAF of a number of wartime air fields, weather stations and communications facilities, the development of new transportation and communications facilities with a view to reducing Canadian dependence on U.S. resources, and the establishment in cooperation with the United States, of the joint Arctic weather stations. This programme was well on the way to completion by 1949 and the Advisory Committee has not met to review progress since December of that year.

3. These prospective new developments in the Arctic suggest to me that there is every likelihood in the course of the next three or four years of a new influx of U.S. citizens to the Arctic. One probable consequence is that the number of

(15 in the first string in Canada).

U.S. citizens in the District of Franklin will probably be substantially greater than the number of white Canadians. Furthermore, if Canadian transportation and communications facilities cannot meet the load that these developments are bound to create, there will be a demand from the United States that it be permitted to do so, thus involving additional U.S. commitments.

4. If this analysis of the situation is correct, then it would seem that now is the time to give serious consideration to the adoption at the highest level of a vigorous policy in all Canadian Arctic services including communications, transportation, aids to navigation, meteorology and police.<sup>70</sup> I am of the opinion that it should be considered as a matter of some urgency since past experience has shown that a lengthy period is required, when dealing with Arctic activities, to convert decisions into realities.

5. If you agree, I propose to write to General Young, both in his capacity as Deputy Minister of Resources and Development and as Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Northern Development, and suggest to him that this matter might be an appropriate subject for consideration by the Advisory Committee. However, in view of the current budgetary situation, I felt that before doing so I should obtain your views as to the usefulness and expediency of promoting a study of this problem at the present time.<sup>71</sup>

I am returning herewith the papers on "Northern Arctic Developments" which you were good enough to let me see.

You were right when you indicated that I had probably already seen the memorandum from Mr. Wilgress to myself, which I had returned to him with a notation that we should look into this whole question as one of urgent importance. My feeling in this regard has been very much increased by the impressive memorandum to you from Phillips. I wonder whether it would be possible for a copy of this to be sent to Mr. Wilgress.

One of the most important questions facing us now is this one of Arctic development and the danger of being excluded from such development on our own territory by U.S. penetration. I would like to have a talk with the Prime Minister about it as soon as possible preparatory to a full consideration of the

U.S. FACILITIES IN CANADA

At Frobisher Bay there are now about 37 members of the R.C.A.F. and about 150 members of the U.S.A.F. The R.C.A.F. is reluctant to increase its strength and might even be tempted to decrease it. Cabinet Defence Committee considers that Frobisher Bay should be a Canadian base under Canadian command and control. The situation at Frobisher Bay raises a much larger question: What is command and control?

2. I think it is quite clear that no dictionary meaning of command and control is useful to us. What we need is a definition of the term for the particular area of the Far North, for the particular time of 1952. On an air station, command and control might be exercised in one of three ways:

(1) A joint station in which the Canadians provide the commanding officer, the staff to control the important facilities especially the control tower, and the staff to provide all housekeeping facilities. Under this arrangement quite clearly the U.S.A.F. is present on a lodger basis and there is no threat to Canadian command and control;

(2) A joint station in which the Canadians provide the commanding officer and control only the important facilities, especially the control tower. Under this arrangement few Canadians would be needed and they would, of course, be far out-numbered by the U.S.A.F. which provides housekeeping in addition to performing maintenance tasks required by its own operations;

(3) A joint station with a Canadian commander but virtually no other Canadian personnel.

3. The question is which of these three is the Government prepared to accept, both at Frobisher and elsewhere in the North?

4. I think we may assume that the R.C.A.F. wishes to tie down as few men as possible in the North if the men's main function is to fly the Canadian flag and support U.S. operations. Unfortunately, the policy of appointing a Canadian commander without supporting forces can lead to administrative difficulties, and there may be some doubt whether this really guarantees the Canadian position.

5. I think it important to consider this problem now because it has arisen in immediate form at Frobisher Bay. The R.C.A.F., which this week has been discussing Frobisher Bay with the U.S.A.F., is disposed to leave at Frobisher Bay only a commanding officer and a few men to operate the control tower. This may be entirely satisfactory, but I do not think that it would be wise to accept this decision only at the service level without giving political consideration to the implications. The question is, of course, not only Frobisher Bay — Frobisher Bay is merely the first place where the question of command and control has arisen in acute form at the present stage of our defence relations with the United States.

6. I have already explored this question with W/C Hull who is sympathetic to the suggestion that political consideration should be given to this whole question of command and control. I think that it is necessary for us now to have a discussion with the R.C.A.F. (A/V/M Miller?) on our whole policy for air stations in the North.

7. Do you agree?<sup>72</sup>

COMMUNICATIONS FACILITIES AT FROBISHER BAY<sup>73</sup>

In November the Department of National Defence (Wing Commander Hull) requested by telephone permission to clear through the service channel two USAF requests in connection with communications facilities at Frobisher Bay. The first USAF request was for permission to man and operate existing VHF and HF/DF radio equipment at Frobisher Bay to be used for long range navigation. No new installations would be required.

The second USAF request was for permission to install and operate at Frobisher Bay a VHF radio station to be used for flying control purposes.

It was anticipated that if these requests should be granted the USAF would operate the existing VHF and HF/DF equipment referred to in the first request, and would install and operate the VHF equipment referred to in their second request. We raised this matter with the Under-Secretary in a memorandum dated November 15, 1951, which suggested that the requests should be cleared through the service channel on the understanding that operation and installation of the equipment in question should be in accordance with the terms of our Note No. D-270 of September 24. Mr. Reid, Acting Under-Secretary at the time, agreed, and in our letter of December 5, to Chief of the Air Staff we indicated that we would have no objection to the settlement of these particular requests at the service level subject, of course, to the concurrence of the Department of Transport.

With a letter dated February 7, to Mr. Phillips from Wing Commander Hull,† there were enclosed copies of correspondence between

- (a) the U.S. Air Attaché and the Assistant Chief of the Air Staff, and
- (b) Headquarters, Northeast Command, Pepperrell to the U.S. Air Attaché, Ottawa, and
- (c) from the Chief of the Air Staff (RCAF) to the U.S. Air Attaché.‡

In the letter from the Chief of the Air Staff to Colonel Pillet, it was stated that the Department of Transport had informed the RCAF that they would not be able to "reactivate" the HF/DF station nor would they be able to install and operate the VHF/DF facilities at Frobisher Bay. Transport would, however, have no objection to installation and operation of the necessary communications facilities for flying control purposes, but they would recommend that if the USAF is to operate the HF/DF station they should, for technical reasons, operate also the air-ground frequencies now operated by the Department of Transport. The RCAF indicated to Colonel Pillet that they would agree with the views expressed by Transport subject to the provision that "the RCAF reserve the right to take over the control and operation of the control tower at a later date." Accordingly, the RCAF authorized the USAF to install and operate the required communications facilities, and to operate on a temporary basis the VHF air-ground facilities in the control tower. The RCAF requested that the USAF inform them whether they wished to take over operation of the air-ground frequencies being operated by the Department of Transport.

Comment

You will notice that in their letter to Colonel Pillet, the RCAF made no mention of the conditions which we had specified in our letter of December 5, to the Chief of the Air Staff, namely that any USAF installation or operation of radio equipment at Frobisher Bay would have to be in accordance with the terms of Note No. D-270 of September 24, 1951.

In the meantime, Wing Commander Hull and Mr. Phillips had begun discussions concerning the question of command and control which had specific application to the situation at Frobisher Bay. In his memorandum of January 11, Mr. Phillips, you will recall, mentioned three possible ways of retaining Canadian command and control of an air station. Two of the methods mentioned in Mr. Phillips' memorandum required that control of the control tower should be retained by the Canadian services. The third method visualized a joint station with only a Canadian commander, and as Mr. Phillips pointed out, this would likely lead to administrative difficulties, and there would be some doubt whether the Canadian position was adequately protected.

Mr. Phillips drew attention to the political implications of the problem, and suggested that it was time for us to have a discussion with the RCAF on "our whole policy for air stations in the North."

It appears now that Frobisher Bay is rapidly approaching Mr. Phillips' third category, namely a "joint station with only a Canadian commander." Although the RCAF have reserved the right to "take over the control and operation of the control tower at a later date," I think they will be loathe to do so because of the additional commitment of men which would be required. The Department of Transport, who might have served as "protector" of Canada's political interests at Frobisher, have indicated that they are unable to accept any further commitments, and in fact, they are willing to turn over to the USAF the operation of communications equipment now being operated by Department of Transport personnel. This clearly is an undersirable situation at Frobisher, which points up the necessity of reaching some agreement with the RCAF on the question of "command and control."

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. MACKAY

RCAF-USAF PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH A MILITARY NETWORK OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL IN THE CANADIAN NORTH

Since our preliminary discussion concerning the attached correspondence from Mr. Chevrier to Mr. Pearson,<sup>1</sup> I have been in touch with W/C Woolfenden of the RCAF who gave me the following information.

2. The proposal to establish a network of air routes and a system of air traffic control in North-eastern Canada, the Canadian Arctic and Greenland was originated by RCAF Air Transport Command. The purpose of the proposal is to expedite military air traffic flying out of Goose Bay to Frobisher Bay, Coral Harbor, other points in Northern Canada and to the USAF Base Thule, Greenland.

3. According to W/C Woolfenden, the USAF would provide all the men and equipment needed for the air routes and traffic control for flights out of Thule, and the RCAF would provide the men and equipment for the air routes and traffic control for flights originating from air fields in Canadian territory, with one exception.

4. The one air base for which the RCAF would not provide the required men and equipment is Frobisher Bay. I should think that this is related to the other question concerning Frobisher which is currently being considered in this Division namely the RCAF's action in turning over to the USAF the operation of the flying control facilities at Frobisher.

5. I pointed out to W/C Woolfenden, that if the proposal for air routes and traffic control was a joint USAF-RCAF proposal, (as Mr. Chevrier stated in his letter to Mr. Claxton) then this Department should have been consulted. W/C Woolfenden agreed that we should be consulted on any joint USAF-RCAF project of this kind. He said at first that he was not sure that the proposal for air routes and traffic control was a joint project. Later, however, he agreed that in view of the arrangements proposed for Frobisher Bay, that in some respects, at least, the project was a joint one on which we should have been consulted. As I mentioned to you previously, W/C Woolfenden agreed to send us copies of the RCAF proposal and of the correspondence concerning it. He said also that S/L Austin would be available to discuss the question at our convenience. (I understood that S/L Austin attended discussions on this proposal at Goose Bay with USAF representatives.)

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. MACKAY

RCAF-USAF PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH A MILITARY NETWORK OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL IN THE CANADIAN NORTH —
FROBISHER BAY

Following my previous memorandum of February 16 on this subject, I have been in touch by telephone with Wing Commander Woolfenden and Wing Commander Hull of the RCAF, and the situation has been clarified slightly. You will recall that we were particularly interested in the proposal to establish a system of air route and air traffic control in the North in connection with Frobisher Bay, since it has been indicated in the letter by the RCAF to the U.S. Air Attaché that the USAF had been authorized to operate the flying control facilities at Frobisher Bay.

In today's telephone conversation with Wing Commander Hull, I raised this point and mentioned unofficially that we were rather concerned that the Americans would be operating the flying control facilities at Frobisher Bay, which station would be included as part of the system of air routes and air traffic control which the RCAF propose to set up. Wing Commander Hull stated that it was the eventual aim of the RCAF to take over operation of the flying control equipment at Frobisher Bay. He said that the RCAF have no flying control people at Frobisher Bay at present, but in view of the proposal to establish a system of air routes he understood that the Chief of Air Staff had changed this position slightly in connection with stationing additional RCAF flying control personnel at Frobisher. He understood that the RCAF intend to send to Frobisher Bay sufficient trained men to operate the flying control facilities. These men will probably replace some, or possibly all, of the RCAF personnel who now are engaged in housekeeping activities at Frobisher.

Wing Commander Hull explained that as soon as the RCAF personnel are available at Frobisher for the operation of the flying control equipment, the USAF would withdraw their operators. There might, however, be an interim period during which the USAF would continue to operate the flying control equipment. I asked Wing Commander Hull whether control of the flying control facilities would also mean control of the air traffic control area which it was proposed to establish at Frobisher Bay. He said that this would be so, but it would not necessarily mean that the RCAF would operate all of the equipment required in the air traffic control system. He said further that there may be other types of equipment in connection with the air traffic control area which would be operated by the USAF. However, all of this equipment would come under direct control of the RCAF flying control people.

Wing Commander Hull said that it was his understanding that the RCAF intended to supply the Commanding Officer at Frobisher Bay, as well as the personnel required for operation of the control tower facilities. According to Wing Commander Woolfenden, with whom I have also discussed this question, the number of RCAF flying control people would probably be in the neighbourhood of from 8 to 12.

I think this may be construed as a definite improvement from the point of view of retaining Canadian command and control at Frobisher Bay. I think it is more important that the RCAF should take over the important functions at Frobisher, even though this may mean a reduction in the total number of RCAF personnel at the station. Presumably, if we are satisfied with the RCAF's plans at Frobisher Bay, we should indicate our satisfaction in a letter so that the RCAF may be able to proceed with their plans for sending their flying control people to Frobisher Bay.<sup>74</sup>

In connection with the proposal to establish a system of airways and air traffic control in the North with which Mr. Chevrier expressed his concern in his letter of February 4, to Mr. Claxton, the RCAF have suggested that representatives from this Department and the Department of Transport might meet with them to discuss the problem, and to iron out any difficulties or misunderstandings which have arisen. If you agree, I suggest that we should ask the RCAF to arrange a meeting at which we will be represented.<sup>75</sup>

FROBISHER BAY

At its meeting of September 12, 1951, Cabinet approved the recommendation of Cabinet Defence Committee that the U.S. Air Force be permitted to station additional personnel at Frobisher Bay for the remainder of 1951. On December 22nd you approved a note to the U.S. Embassy in which the Canadian Government gave permission for the stationing of a detachment of approximately 150 members of the U.S.A.F. at Frobisher Bay on a continuing basis.

On the instruction of Cabinet we have told the United States that Canada is to maintain command and control of Frobisher Bay. In recent months the R.C.A.F. has been considering the number of men which it should place at Frobisher Bay.

We now understand that the R.C.A.F. intends to keep at Frobisher Bay from 20-24 men which would include the commanding officer and sufficient staff to operate the flying control facility. The U.S.A.F. staff at Frobisher Bay will probably number about 150.

Do you agree that the condition on command and control is met if the R.C.A.F. provides the commanding officer and the flying control staff?<sup>76</sup>

PROPOSED PIPELINE FROM HAINES TO FAIRBANKS

In August 1950, the Government gave the United States permission to make surveys for a pipeline from the Alaskan coast to Fairbanks. On the basis of the surveys which were completed that year, the United States Section of the PJBD reported in January 1951 that the United States would probably wish to build a pipeline from Haines, across the Panhandle and a corner of British Columbia to the point where the Haines Road meets the Alaska Highway. The pipeline would then follow the Highway to Fairbanks. Alternative all-Alaska routes are possible, but they are more vulnerable than the Highway route.

At the PJBD meeting of June, 1952, the United States Section outlined the proposals in further detail. Congress has authorized $40 million for the construction of an 8-inch pipeline. Half of this amount has been appropriated for the present fiscal year. The pipeline could carry 24 thousand barrels of petroleum products per day. In the event of war the full amount would probably be needed for military operations in Alaska; in peacetime the United States would be willing to allow Canada to tap the line for military petroleum needs in the Yukon. Without the pipeline, petroleum for Alaska must be taken by tanker to Whittier and by rail north. The inadequacy of these transportation arrangements will soon result in a petroleum deficit in Alaska which would become very serious in the event of war.

In addition to the pipeline, the United States intends to build new docking facilities in Haines, to make some improvements in that part of the Haines road which lies on United States territory, and to install pumping stations. There would probably be one pumping station in Canada, manned by about 24 men (civilians) and two small stations (manned by one or two men) which could be expanded in an emergency to increase the flow. The Canadian portion of the line is 284 miles long and would cost about $12 million. The right of way would be 50 feet wide and about 21 additional acres for pumping stations would be needed.

Discussed with Minister by USSEA [Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs] and R.A. M[ackay].

The United States Section of the PJBD gave a categorical assurance that the operation of the pipeline along the Haines Road would not require the winter maintenance of that highway except in an emergency.

The United States Section of the PJBD originally asked for a Canadian reply to their proposals within two weeks in order that bids might be invited from contractors by July 15 and construction begun by September 1. The Canadian Section explained that a final Canadian reply would require some time since the United States proposals raised difficult problems involving many departments of Government as well as Provincial authorities.

No mention was made to the U.S. Section of the possibility of Canada undertaking the construction of the Canadian section of the pipeline. Canadian construction and ownership would have advantages from the point of view of sovereignty. It is suggested that costs of the Canadian section might be amortized over a period of years by charging on a user basis. Canadian ownership of part of the line, together with some system of joint control, would also put Canada in a better position to influence the use of the line, either in relation to Canadian commercial facilities for the transportation of petroleum products, or for the use of Canadian supplies of petroleum from the Alberta oilfields, the possibility of which was mentioned in the course of the meetings at Whitehorse.

HAINES-FAIRBANKS PIPELINE

Reference: My EX-1561 of July 17.†

I should like to review briefly the action which has been taken on the proposal made at the last meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence for a pipeline from Haines to Fairbanks.

Immediately on the return of the Canadian Section of the PJBD, the U.S. proposal was brought to the attention of Ministers concerned. There was some feeling that serious consideration should be given to Canadian participation in the project, possibly by construction and ownership of the Canadian section of the line. Cabinet considered the proposal briefly on June 26 and instructed the Panel on Economic Aspects of Defence Questions, with suitable representation from the Department of Resources and Development, to consider the implications of the proposal. Accordingly both the Sub-Panel and the Panel studied the U.S. proposals and agreed that construction of the line should be approved in principle. The Panel also recommended that an interdepartmental committee, under the Chairmanship of the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, should be formed to study the project further, particularly in connection with the conditions which might be attached to Canadian approval. There was a difference of opinion within the Panel on the advisability of Canadian Government participation in the construction and financing of the Canadian section of the pipeline. For your own information I may say that the representatives of the Department of External Affairs and of Resources and Development were in favour of Canadian construction of the line if a sound scheme could be worked out for financing it. We had in mind the possibility of a Crown Company which might be financed initially by a loan to be repaid over a period of 10 or 20 years by profits from the operation of the line. This suggestion did not find favour in other Departments.

When Cabinet considered the pipeline proposal for the second time it agreed that approval in principle should be given, and accepted the recommendation of the Panel on the establishment of an interdepartmental committee. On July 11 the U.S. Minister was informed orally that the Canadian Government was favourably disposed in principle to the construction of a pipeline and that in a few days it would be possible to discuss the conditions which the Canadian Government wished to attach to the construction of the Canadian section.

The interdepartmental committee considered at length the conditions which should be attached and these were approved by Cabinet, with minor modifications, on July 15. I attach a copy of the Memorandum for Cabinet which was submitted by the interdepartmental committee.†

I also attach a copy of the Aide Memoire together with a brief memorandum on customs procedures which were handed to the U.S. Minister on July 16.† On the completion of negotiations between Canadian and U.S. officials there is to be an Exchange of Notes. We have suggested to the U.S. Minister that these negotiations should take place in Ottawa and that the United States should send to Ottawa a small team for the purpose. I shall, of course, keep you informed of the progress of these negotiations.

HAINES-FAIRBANKS PIPELINE

Reference: My letter No. D-1193 of July 17, 1952.

1. I should like to review briefly the action which has been taken with respect to the Haines-Fairbanks pipeline proposal since my letter of July 17.

2. A group of U.S. officials headed by Mr. A.F. Peterson of the Department of State, visited Ottawa on August 13 and 14 to discuss with Canadian officials the details of the project; in particular the points included in the Canadian Aide Memoire, a copy of which was attached to my letter to you of July 17. The principal issues developed around the terms of tenure for the new pipeline and the disposal of existing Canol lines. Subsequent to the discussions a memorandum was submitted to Cabinet on August 20 outlining the revised proposals with respect to these matters. This memorandum has now been approved by Cabinet. A copy is attached for your information.†

3. A number of discussions were also held between the U.S. representatives and Canadian officials with respect to such problems as taxation, unemployment insurance, labour regulations, etc. The problems involved in this area appear to be largely ones of detail. In this connection I attach two copies of a letter received from the Deputy Minister of National Revenue (Customs and Excise) dated August 21.† It would be appreciated if you would pass one copy to Mr. Peterson,<sup>78</sup> drawing to his attention the final paragraph of the letter which asks whether our understanding of the discussions is the same as theirs.

4. At the same time as the above negotiations have been going on, the Minister of Resources and Development has been in communication with the Premier of the Province of British Columbia with a view to obtaining the approval of the B.C. government for the project and an undertaking from it to transfer the land for the right-of-way to the Federal Government. It is expected that as soon as approval of the project has been received from the Province of British Columbia the United States will advertise the contract and call for tenders. It is hoped that the contractor will be able to start work during the coming winter.

5. I will keep you informed of the progress of these negotiations as they develop.

HAINES-FAIRBANKS PIPELINE PROJECT

Reference: My letter No. D-1391 of August 28, 1952.†

1. I should like to review briefly the action which has been taken with respect to the Haines-Fairbanks pipeline proposal since my letter of August 28.

2. Mr. Peterson visited Ottawa en route to Washington from the PJBD meeting, at which time there was further discussion of the proposed conditions which should govern Canadian approval for the construction, ownership and operation of the Canadian section of the pipeline. I attach a copy of the latest version of these proposed conditions for your information. As you will see, there is close agreement between the two countries at the official level on what the proposed conditions should be.

3. A draft press release has been prepared and concurred in by the Ministers of National Defence, External Affairs and Resources and Development. It has been submitted to the United States through the Embassy in Ottawa for concurrence. It is clearly understood by the officials concerned in both countries that the press release is not to be issued and that the contract for the pipeline is not to be advertised until agreement is reached with British Columbia on the transfer of land for the right-of-way through that province to the federal government. A copy of the draft press release is attached for your information.†

4. Some weeks ago, we requested from the U.S. Embassy an official statement of the urgency with which the U.S. Government considered the project and the approximate time-table which it was desired to follow. It was considered that such a statement would be useful to support the special efforts being made here to expedite approval of the project. The U.S. Embassy has now given us a copy of a letter, dated October 14, 1952, from the Secretary of the Army to the U.S. Secretary of State furnishing the desired information. A copy of this letter is attached for your information.

5. The principal stumbling block has been the problem of completing satisfactory arrangements with the Province of British Columbia for the land required for the right-of-way. It had been hoped that the land would be made available by a simple transfer from the provincial to the federal government. However, British Columbia decided not to do this and undertook to pass an Order-in-Council granting an easement to the federal government. A copy of the proposed Order-in-Council was sent to the Department of Resources and Development, which is the federal Department handling the negotiations with the province, but before comments could be obtained on this draft from the Department of Justice, the province passed the Order-in-Council. Justice has now informed us that the Order-in-Council is improper and in fact is based on an inappropriate section of the B.C. Lands Act. In addition, the order contained a number of paragraphs which almost certainly will be unacceptable to the United States including a requirement for the burying of the whole of the pipeline through the province. With the advice of the Department of Justice a new draft provincial Order-in-Council is being prepared based on the correct section of the B.C. Lands Act and modifying the conditions stipulated by the B.C. Government, where necessary. As soon as this draft is ready an effort will be made to convince the B.C. Government that it should be passed in place of the existing unsatisfactory one.

6. You will appreciate that because of the inexperience of the B.C. Government, and the uncertainty of its political future, it will not be possible to rush negotiations with the province. We have, therefore, informed the U.S. Embassy here that much as we appreciate the urgency of the project, we regret that there is every likelihood that some weeks will be required to bring negotiations with the Province to the point where we will be able to authorize the advertising of the project.

The United States will be granted without charge an easement for the pipeline for (twenty years, and thereafter for) such (further) time and upon such conditions as may be agreed pursuant to paragraph 3 of this agreement. The United States shall have free of charge the use of access roads to the pipeline under such reasonable terms and conditions as shall be mutually agreed upon.

2. Plans

[The detailed plans, description of the route and specifications of the pipeline and access roads will be approved by the appropriate Canadian authorities in advance of construction, and Canadian officials shall have the right of inspection during construction.] In order to safeguard Canadian interests, the detailed plans, description of the route and access roads and specifications of the pipeline (and access roads) will require the approval of the appropriate Canadian authorities in advance of construction, and Canadian officials shall have the right of inspection during construction.

3. Tenure

It is mutually agreed that the common defence interests of the two countries will require continuance of the pipeline for a minimum period of twenty years. At the expiration of this period, in the event that either Government wishes to discontinue the arrangement, the question of continuing need will be referred to the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. In considering the question of need, the PJBD will take into account the relationship of the pipeline and related facilities to the defense installations in Alaska. Following consideration by the PJBD, as provided above, (and without being bound by any recommendation of the PJBD,) either Government may terminate the arrangement, in which case the Government shall give due consideration in any subsequent operation of the pipeline to the defence needs of the other country.

4. Use of the Pipeline to Meet Canadian Requirements

The United States will connect the Haines-Fairbanks pipeline to the three-inch Whitehorse-Fairbanks pipeline at a point near Haines Junction. (and) The United States will permit additional connections to be made to both the eight-inch and the three-inch pipelines within Canada on reasonable terms and conditions as shall be mutually agreed upon. For the period of operation by the United States of the eight-inch pipeline the United States, if requested by Canada, (undertakes to) will continue to operate and maintain the three-inch pipeline and the storage facilities at Whitehorse (for a minimum period of twenty years from the date of this agreement). In the operation of both the eight-inch and three-inch pipelines and of the storage facilities at Whitehorse the United States (further) undertakes:

(a) to give assurance of equal consideration to Canadian defense requirements with those of the United States;

(b) to make available at the request of the Canadian Government, on reasonable terms to be mutually agreed upon, the use of these installations to meet Canadian civil needs as military requirements permit.

(Additional connections to these pipelines within Canada for Canadian use may be arranged at any time if such connections are desired by the Canadian Government.)

5. Understanding regarding Disposition of Title to Rights in Existing Pipeline in Northern British Columbia and Yukon Territory

Nothing in this agreement shall add to, or subtract from, the existing agreements between Canada and the United States regarding existing pipelines except as provided in paragraph 4 and paragraph 6 of this agreement.

6. Disposition of Four-inch Pipeline from Skagway to Whitehorse

In the event notice is given by the United States of the termination of operation of the existing four-inch pipeline between Skagway and Whitehorse, the United States will transfer to Canada, if requested by the Canadian Government, without compensation, any equity which it may have in that part of the pipeline located in Canada and, to the extent that it lies within the power of the United States, will undertake under such terms and conditions as shall be mutually agreed upon, to make available for use by Canada that part of the four-inch pipeline from the Canadian border to Skagway as well as the terminal and pumping facilities at that port.

7. Construction

(a) Canadian contractors will be extended equal consideration with United States contractors in the awarding of contracts and in the procurement of materials, equipment and supplies.

(b) (An equitable proportion of the labour force used on the entire project should be Canadian.) Any contractor awarded a contract for construction in Canada will be required to give preference to qualified Canadian labour for such construction in Canada. The rates of pay and working conditions for such construction will be set after consultation with the Canadian Federal Labour Department and will be not less than in accordance with the Canadian Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act of 1935.

(c) Canadian materials will be used on the Canadian portion of the line as far as feasible (if available at a competitive price.)

(d) Canadian Law (e.g. tax laws, labour laws, Workmen's Compensation, unemployment insurance, etc.) will apply.

(e) Subject to the agreement of the appropriate Canadian authorities, the United States may be granted permission to use, without charge, timber, gravel, and other construction material on federal Crown Lands; these materials to be used only for construction in Canada.

(f) The United States will be responsible for the satisfactory disposal of any construction camps and materials abandoned in Canada after completion of the pipeline.

(g) The Canadian government will take the necessary steps to facilitate the admission into Canada of such United States citizens as may be employed on the construction or maintenance of the pipeline, it being understood that the United States will undertake to repatriate at its expense any such persons if the contractors fail to do so.

8. Maintenance

Qualified Canadian civilian labour will be used as far as feasible for the maintenance of the Canadian section of the pipeline.

9. Non-transferability of Rights

Rights granted by Canada under this agreement are granted to the Government of the United States and may not be transferred or alienated by the Government of the United States to any person or corporation without the express consent in advance in writing of the Canadian Government.

10. Supplementary Arrangements and Administrative Agreements

Supplementary arrangements or administrative agreements between authorized agencies of the two Governments may be made from time to time for the purpose of carrying out the intent of this agreement.

11. Telephone and Telegraph Facilities

This agreement does not cover telephone and/or telegraphic facilities required in the construction and operation of the pipeline. Arrangements for these facilities will be the subject of separate consideration.

HAINES-FAIRBANKS PIPELINE PROJECT

Reference: My letter No. D-1642 of October 25, 1952.

1. I wish to review the progress on the Haines-Fairbanks pipeline proposal since my letter of October 25, 1952.

2. You will recall that in my last letter I reported that the principal stumbling block has been the problem of completing satisfactory arrangements with the Province of British Columbia for the land required for the right-of-way. The Department of Justice, in consultation with the Departments of Resources and Development and External Affairs, has drafted a proposed provincial Order-in-Council to replace the unsatisfactory version promulgated by the B.C. Government on October 7, 1952. It has been agreed by the Departments concerned that this new draft should first be shown informally to the U.S.

officials and, assuming that it is generally satisfactory, representatives from the Departments of Resources and Development and Justice should then go to British Columbia to convince that Government that it should replace the existing Order-in-Council with a new Order based on the Department of Justice draft. Once agreement in principle has been obtained both from the United States and British Columbia, we can proceed to settle any outstanding details. Only after this has been done should the new Order-in-Council be passed by the B.C. Government.

3. In accordance with the above procedure, Mr. Morgan of the U.S. Embassy was called in today and given copies of the enclosed informal memorandum on the progress of the Haines-Fairbanks pipeline project (dated November 13, 1952).† He was also given copies of the proposed draft provincial Order-in-Council, a copy of which is attached,† but was not given a copy of the covering memorandum from the Deputy Minister of Justice to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs. Assuming that the reaction of the U.S. officials to the draft is favourable, it is hoped that representatives of Resources and Development and Justice will be able to go to British Columbia during the last week in November or the first week in December.

HAINES-FAIRBANKS PIPELINE

Attached for your information is a copy of the reply of the Deputy Minister of Resources and Development, dated December 24, 1952, to our letter of December 15, 1952, regarding the Haines-Fairbanks pipeline.† The letter opens by agreeing that it would be useful to separate the considerations affecting the proposed B.C. Order-in-Council from those which relate only to the Canada-United States agreement. It then contradicts itself by suggesting that since the position taken by the United States is now different from the position taken last August on several important points, we should not open discussion with British Columbia before complete agreement is reached with the United States on the Exchange of Notes. It also adds the cheerful thought that Cabinet approval would doubtless have to be obtained in connection with some of these points if changes are to be made.

I have re-studied the pertinent documents and I am unable to see the necessity of following the course of action proposed by the Deputy Minister of Resources and Development. The principal U.S. objection to the draft Order-in-Council was related to the paragraph dealing with the indemnification of the Province of British Columbia in event of liability incurred by British Columbia in connection with the construction or operation of the pipeline. This Department proposes to meet the U.S. objection, and the Department of Resources and Development has agreed to our proposal. The U.S. Embassy gave us preliminary comments on certain other paragraphs of the draft Order-in-Council and while it has not, as yet, provided us with the additional comments, which it indicated would be forthcoming, I think that enough information is at hand to make it clear that they deal with minor points. In any event since the object of the mission to British Columbia was not to obtain the final text of the Order-in-Council, but only to obtain agreement in principle, there would be no reason why any additional proposed changes could not be dealt with subsequently by correspondence.

The one remaining complication is the matter of a right-of-way for communications facilities. In view of the recent correspondence with the Department of Transport on this subject, I am of the opinion that it should be kept quite separate from the pipeline Order-in-Council and that the mission to British Columbia should confine itself to a discussion with the provincial authorities of the need for the right-of-way and the possibility that it may later be necessary to request the B.C. Government to promulgate an additional Order-in-Council to cover this requirement.

I have not listed the problem of "stumpage" as one of the unresolved problems since the B.C. Government will require to be paid in any event. The question of who pays is one to be settled between the Canadian and U.S. Governments. Actually I think we should refuse to consider the U.S. contention that Canada should absorb this item.

It seems to me that the various issues between the Canadian and U.S. Governments including the tenure clause, the cost of surveys and other details have no bearing on the draft B.C. Order-in-Council and I can see no reason or necessity for deferring the discussion with British Columbia until these matters have been settled.

If we are to overcome the current log-jam in the negotiations in time to be able to report some real progress at the next meeting of the PJBD, quick action will be necessary. I suggest that the best method might be to attempt to convene a meeting on Monday or Tuesday (December 29 or 30) attended by you, Mr. Wershof and Mr. Barton from this Department and Messrs. Jackson and Sivertz from the Department of Resources and Development. An alternative which you may wish to consider would be for you, Mr. Wershof and Mr. Barton to call on General Young.

PROPOSED VISIT OF U.S. CIVILIAN SCIENTISTS TO RESOLUTE — "PROJECT LINCOLN"

During the past few weeks the Air Attaché of the U.S. Embassy has made approaches to the R.C.A.F. and through them to the Department of Transport, and more recently he has spoken to the Department of External Affairs, with a view to obtaining permission for three civilian scientists to go to Resolute in connection with "Project Lincoln" acoustic tests. It seems that further parties would follow.

2. This Department has no information regarding the nature of "Project Lincoln" and assumes that it is a new U.S. defence project which, under the rules adopted by the Governments of Canada and the United States, should be submitted to the Canadian Government for approval through the diplomatic channel. We so informed the Air Attaché on September 12 in response to his telephone inquiry.

3. We have been told informally that the R.C.A.F. has approved the visit of these scientists to R.C.A.F. Station Resolute Bay. We do not know whether the scientists will wish to use the facilities of the Weather Station or the Ionospheric Station at Resolute in addition to the facilities of the R.C.A.F. Station.

4. I should be grateful if you would let me know whether you agree that the appropriate procedure in this case would be for the U.S.A.F. to submit through the diplomatic channel, with suitable explanations and details, the request for permission to carry out at Resolute the test or series of tests with which the three scientists are connected.

5. I am sending copies of this letter for information to the Chief of the Air Staff, the Defence Research Board, the Deputy Minister of Transport and the Meteorological Division in Toronto.

1. The visit to Washington, extending from the evening of September 29 to the morning of October 4, had as its primary object the discussion with U.S. defence officials of questions relating to developments in Korea and Europe and the defence of North America. It also created an opportunity to visit major Army establishments at Monmouth, Fort Benning and the Aberdeen Proving Ground, where we saw in operation the latest types of military equipment. Instructions had gone out that we were to see and be told everything without reservation and this was certainly the way we were treated.

2. A separate report has been prepared by service officers on the equipment, organization, training, etc., we saw during our visit. The present paper will deal with questions of policy which arose in the course of our visit.

3. Those we saw included:

Hon. Robert Lovett, Secretary of Defense;
Hon. William C. Foster, Under-Secretary of Defence;
Hon. Frank Pace, Secretary of the Army;
Hon. Karl R. Bendetsen, Under-Secretary of the Army;
Hon. Earl D. Johnson, Assistant-Sec. of the Army;
Hon. F. Korth, Assistant-Sec. of the Army;
General Omar Bradley, Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff;
Lieutenant-General L.L. Lemnitzer, Operations and Plans, just returned from a year in Korea;
Dr. W.G. Whitman, Director, Research and Development;
Dr. H.V. Gaskill, his Deputy;
Ambassador Philip C. Jessup, and numerous other officials and senior officers both at Washington and at the various stations. The same subject was frequently dealt with in several conversations and the result of these will be set out here.

Defence of North America

19. Both Mr. Finletter and General Vandenburg were away from Washington so I did not have an opportunity to discuss Air Force matters. Dr. Whitman, head of Research and Development, stated that the United States government was beginning to have great concern about the possibility of air attack in substantial force across Canada. This had been considered in what is known as Project Lincoln.

20. This project was a large scale study operated during July and August of this year by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Participating were a number of United States officers and others representing American institutions concerned with various aspects of air defence. Professor J.S. Foster of McGill University and Dr. G.R. Lindsey of the Defence Research Board Operational Research Group were present.

21. The main reason for this study was American concern about what they regarded as the increased probability of a war being started off with a sneak raid on North America. The attention given to this possibility comes about in consequence of the enormous increases achieved by the United States in the power and number of A-bombs. They feel that if they have increased the power of the A-bomb so many times that a single bomb can now destroy a city of a million inhabitants, of whom half would be killed, it is entirely likely that the Russians will be able to make similar advances.

22. It follows from this dismal picture that the enemy could afford to expend a considerable effort in order to ensure delivery of such decisive weapons. If the defence can inflict heavy attrition on light raids, it would pay the enemy to despatch heavy raids. If any one of several bombers allotted to a given target should get through, then the defence has failed. Consequently, the defence should strengthen itself to the point where it can exact almost complete attrition against a very heavy attack.

23. In these circumstances early warning becomes of paramount importance. The type of warning considered desirable by the study would be achieved by a chain of forty-five small early warning radar stations each staffed by nine men and stretching from Aklavik to Thule in Greenland. The estimated cost of this would be $225 millions, but my experience shows that it would be very much more. This would be backed by another similar chain stretching across the continent somewhere south of Churchill.

24. When Dr. Whitman spoke to me about this, I had not yet received from Dr. Lindsey the report which has subsequently reached me. Dr. Whitman said that while the whole plan might be considered impracticable, he felt that early warning against a sneak attack had become a primary defence requirement. He said that the paper on this which would be put before the President would be the subject of further consideration.

25. Dr. Whitman suggested that in the absence of Mr. Finletter and General Vandenberg I might wish to discuss this project with Mr. Foster. When I saw Mr. Foster, however, he did not mention it and I did not raise it myself as I had not yet seen the report. (For similar reasons I did not bring up the Goose Bay lease or the proposed development at Torbay.)

26. The facts and reasoning back of this study have the most serious implications for this country.

27. Defence of the north depends on the efficiency of the radar and communications system to get the aircraft into the air in time to defeat an attack. This was practicable with existing equipment. What was needed was a longer period of warning. They believe that the next development would be towards automatic plotting and prediction consequent on radar identification, thereby speeding the whole process and eliminating human error. It might even reduce manpower requirements.

3. Mr. Claxton said that on his recent visit to the United States he had found that U.S. officials concluded that it was safe only to assume that the large-scale development of atomic weapons in the United States would in large measure be matched in the U.S.S.R. They were therefore much concerned about air attack on North America. With the tremendous power of the new weapons it would be profitable to an enemy if only one bomber got through to a North American city. For this reason serious consideration was being given to the development of further radar warning facilities across the top of North America.

MEMORANDUM FOR: MR. MACKAY

PROJECT "LINCOLN"

As you know, I have had a number of discussions during the course of the past few weeks with Dr. Lindsay<sup>81</sup> and other members of the staff of the Defence Research Board with respect to Project "Lincoln". In view of the interest which this project has occasioned among senior officials, and Mr. Claxton's report on his recent discussions in Washington, I thought that I should record some facts which may not be generally appreciated.

2. The object of the summer study at MIT, reported on by Dr. Lindsay, was to attempt to find some new method of warning which would lead to an improvement of real significance over existing methods. In actual fact, the study merely produced an expensive scheme involving an expanded use of existing methods. The purpose of an early warning "fence" is merely to give the most advanced interceptor forces sufficient warning to reach a point where they can attack the enemy with greatest effectiveness. The U.S. proposal, which I understand is quite likely to ensue from Project "Lincoln", is that this fence should be located in the Arctic. It would involve forty-five stations, and would cost an estimated $225 million.

Dr. G.R. Lindsey, Defence Research Board.

3. The DRB has been carrying out studies of a similar nature to Project "Lincoln" but on a much less ambitious scale. DRB came to the conclusion independently that it would be feasible to locate such a "fence" much farther south than the U.S. proposal, on a general line which would be much more accessible than the proposed Arctic sites. The DRB proposal is described briefly towards the end of Lindsay's report on Project "Lincoln". Lindsay informs me that, bearing in mind the relative costs of the two schemes and the scant knowledge of some of the basic problems involved in the U.S. proposal, the Canadian scheme is inherently a sounder one. He felt that it was quite possible that the U.S. scheme could turn out to be as much a fiasco as the LF "Loran" project of a few years ago.

4. Lindsay informed me today that the head of Project "Lincoln" was to appear before the National Security Resources Board in Washington next week, and that he was coming to Canada to see Dr. Solandt<sup>82</sup> on October 20. I suggested to Lindsay, and to the chief of his division, that it would be most worthwhile to commence immediately a comparative analysis of the two schemes. I believe that they intend to take up this suggestion.

5. I thought you would wish to know these facts in view of the possibility that this subject might be discussed at the policy level in the near future.

Dear Peter [Towe],

Some time has gone by since our telephone conversations and exchange of telegrams in connection with the proposed visit of Dr. Hubbard<sup>84</sup> to the joint U.S.-Canadian arctic weather stations. However, there were a number of issues involved in the decision not to grant authorization for his visit, and I think it would be worthwhile to set them out so that there will be a full understanding of the situation from our point of view.

As you will have seen from our letter (...) of September 15, 1952, to the Chairman, Chiefs of Staff, a copy of which was referred to you, the request put forward in your WA-2262 of September 16, 1952,† had been preceded by an earlier request made by the U.S. Air Attaché in Ottawa to the RCAF, for three scientists engaged on project Lincoln (one of whom was Dr. Hubbard) to visit the weather stations. In spite of the inconvenience to the RCAF, the Canadian meteorological services and the U.S. Weather Bureau, none of which knew of the project, all these agencies concurred in the visit in an effort to be cooperative. Then at the last minute the scientists decided that it was not convenient to make the journey after all. Likewise at the last minute this Department learned of the proposed visit and pointed out to the Canadian agencies concerned that on the basis of the information available it would appear that project Lincoln was a new defence project which, under the rules adopted by the governments of Canada and the United States, should be submitted to the Canadian Government through the diplomatic channel. The U.S. Air Attaché was so informed on September 12, 1952.

As you know, the problem of educating the Armed Forces of both countries as to the proper channels of communication has been a vexing one for a long time. As recently as November 1951 the Canadian Chairman of the PJBD reminded the U.S. Section of the importance of submitting requests for defence projects as far in advance as possible, and, in cases when it was necessary to submit a proposal on short notice, for an explanation of its urgency and the reason why it could not have been presented at an earlier date.

One of the principal reasons for insisting on the clearance of new projects through diplomatic channels is that not infrequently this provides us with a first intimation of schemes which involve U.S. activities in Canada on a large scale both in terms of numbers of troops and expenditures of money. In the case of project Lincoln information received here during the past few weeks suggests that there is every possibility that in the near future proposals may be made involving activities on at least as large a scale as the Pinetree project. Under such circumstances, you will appreciate that it is highly desirable to receive at the start from the State Department an explanation of the project. By the same token, it would have been undesirable for this Department to have had to solicit information from U.S. Air Force officers stationed in Ottawa, i.e., the two colonels mentioned in your telegram.

The final point which influenced the decision to refuse the authorisation was the fact that according to the RCAF the aircraft in which Dr. Hubbard planned to travel was already loaded to capacity and his name was not on the passenger list. In addition, while DRB had some knowledge of what "Lincoln" was, they did not know exactly what plans were being proposed for the Canadian Arctic.

This letter is not intended to be a sermon. However, even at this late date I felt that it was desirable for you to know and appreciate why Max Wershof, with the approval of the Under-Secretary, did not approve of the request and why we are still interested in obtaining any available information on the character and scope of project Lincoln.

Yours sincerely,

W.H. B[ARTON]

PROPOSED VISIT OF U.S. CIVILIAN SCIENTISTS
TO RESOLUTE BAY — "PROJECT LINCOLN"

1. Reference your [letter] . . . dated 15 September 1952.
2. Project Lincoln is an organization for research on air defence operated by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology for the U.S. Department of Defence. Personnel include attached service officers as well as scientists. The organization is also known as the Lincoln Laboratories, which is a more appropriate name in as much as it comprises several permanent buildings and undertakes numerous projects known by other names but all connected with air defence. These range from weapon design to radar to data transmission systems. The Lincoln Laboratories also conduct "Summer Studies" which are called for under its general terms of reference. In its latest study two Canadians have participated; namely, a McGill University professor and a member of DRB.
3. Because the terms of reference of Project Lincoln are so general as to include all phases of air defence, and these have been applied to the problem of Continental Air Defence, it is probable that there will be numerous requests from Project Lincoln to gather data in order to determine the feasibility of schemes being studied.
4. Provided no permanent or semi-permanent installations are planned, it is not considered that this would be a "new U.S. project" which would require Canadian Government approval and which would have to be submitted through diplomatic channels, but one which could be cleared on a service-to-service basis.

I wish to acknowledge your letter of October 28, 1952, and to thank you for the information you have provided about Project Lincoln. Ottawa, December 9, 1952

PROJECT LINCOLN

On Sunday, December 7, 1952, General McNaughton and Mr. Barton attended a meeting called by Dr. Solandt to discuss with U.S. research and development officials the details of U.S. proposals regarding an early warning radar chain across the Canadian Arctic. The U.S. delegation was headed by Mr. Walter Whitman, the Chairman of the U.S. Research and Development Board, and included representatives from the three U.S. armed services, the Lincoln Laboratories, and the Bell Telephone Laboratories. The Canadian representation was made up of officials from the Defence Research Board and the RCAF. It was explained at the outset that the only purpose of the meeting was to facilitate an understanding of the project by all concerned and that no commitments were involved.

2. The U.S. representatives opened the discussion by expounding their views on the necessity for a much greater degree of early warning against possible air attack than the existing air defence system provided. For this purpose it was proposed to circle the North American continent by a distant early warning system of which the section across the Canadian Arctic was only a part, although a very important one. To illustrate the magnitude of the project reference was made to another link which would consist of a ship and air borne early warning link spreading from Hawaii to Alaska. A similar ship and air borne link would extend from Greenland or Iceland down the Atlantic coast. The Canadian Arctic link was considered to be of primary importance.

3. Although the urgent necessity for some form of distant early warning was agreed upon by all United States agencies concerned, there was considerable difference of opinion as to the feasibility of the Arctic link and the type of information required. To settle this question approval had been obtained from the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the National Security Research Board, the National Security Council and the President, to undertake on the highest priority investigation of the feasibility of building such a chain and the problems involved therein.

4. The basic plans for the chain would be in accordance with the plans evolved during the summer study project of the Lincoln Laboratories, a summary of which has already been circulated in this Department. A sum of $20 million has been allocated for the investigation for the coming year, $15 million of which would be spent on the erection of three or four Arctic test stations during the summer of 1953, and $5 million for research and development. It has been decided that the most expeditious way of getting the work done would be to place a contract with the Bell Telephone System for the whole operation. All the components of the Bell Telephone System, including the Bell Laboratories and Western Electric and Bell of Canada in this country, would play a part. It was agreed that until the results of this feasibility study were available (probably in two or three years time) there could be no decision as to whether or not it was wise or necessary to proceed with the installation of the whole Arctic chain. However, it was pointed out that an important part of the feasibility trials involved the immediate survey of sites for all the stations which would be required across the Canadian Arctic if the system were to be adopted.

5. It has been concluded for a variety of reasons that it would probably be most desirable to erect the three or four test stations about 80 miles apart in the Western Arctic, in the region of the North Alaskan coast line and the Mackenzie River delta. The exact location of these test sites would depend on the results of site surveys, and on a more detailed study of the current Alaska radar construction programme than has been carried out to date. It was agreed by all concerned that if this research study was to be carried out it should be a joint U.S.-Canadian project, with the Defence Research Board and the RCAF providing the Canadian contribution. This contribution would consist of research advice and assistance, but not dollars.

6. There was considerable discussion of the purpose of a distant early warning system and the type of information required from the system. Basically the U.S. scheme involves the use of radar manned by small crews of not more than 10 men per station. The total number of stations in the Canadian Arctic would be about 40, spread along two lines, one threading in a northeasterly direction from the Mackenzie River delta through the Arctic archipelago to Thule. The other line would extend along the Arctic coast across the entrance to Hudson Bay to a point where it would link up with the radar chain on the Labrador coast. The radar installation to be used would give some information of numbers and size of aircraft, and their speed and direction. The principal objections are that the system would not be very difficult to deceive, that the information is so far forward that it would be of little help to the air defence forces, and that without other detecting devices in the area between it and the main air defence installations, it would be susceptible to false alarms if the Russians were to use parrying tactics.

7. Dr. Solandt at this point described work which has been carried out by the Defence Research Board during the past two years on a "poor man's" early warning system. This system consists of a series of small cheaply constructed sets made of standard radio components operating on the Doppler principle. Each station would consist of a transmitter and a receiver. The simplest analogy to describe its operation would be that of the photo electric cell which opens the door of a theatre. Any aircraft which interrupted the beam travelling from the transmitter at one station to the receiver at the next station would ring an alarm. Prototypes of this equipment have been constructed and a small production order has been placed in order to carry out operational tests, although no operational requirement for such a device has yet been stated by the RCAF.

8. The Defence Research Board and the Canadian Air Defence Command has envisaged the employment of this "poor man's" early warning chain along the northern-most line conveniently accessible by existing Canadian communications routes. In rough terms the chain would stretch along the 54th parallel. It is understood that the U.S. Air Defence Command is very keen on the Canadian proposal and would like to see the Canadian early warning fence and particularly the segment which would stretch from Churchill to Jasper installed within the next 12 months. It has been reported, in fact, that behind the scenes the U.S. Air Defence Command resisted the proposals of the Lincoln Laboratory for fear they would prejudice an attempt to be made by the U.S. Air Defence Command to solicit Canadian support of immediate installation of the Canadian chain. Whether this is really the case remains to be seen. Needless to say, none of this was mentioned at the meeting on Sunday. However, it was suggested by the U.S. representatives that the Canadian equipment should be tested in the Arctic in conjunction with the U.S. radar installations.

9. The U.S. representatives concluded the discussion by asking what procedure they should follow to obtain Canadian concurrence in this Arctic early warning experiment. General McNaughton suggested that the best way would be to have the U.S. Air Member of the PJBD submit the proposals to the Canadian Air Member for consideration prior to the January meeting of the PJBD, at which time there could be further discussion between representatives of the two countries. Arrangements could be made to have the technical experts of both countries attend the PJBD meeting for this discussion.

10. It is concluded from the discussions reported above that the Canadian Government can expect to receive almost immediately a request from the United States for permission to carry out a research project to test the feasibility of an Arctic early warning radar chain. This will involve site surveys for the whole of the proposed chain and the erection of up to four radar stations, probably in the Western Arctic. The proposal will be put forward on the understanding that it involves no commitment by either government with respect to the installation of the complete chain.

11. It is quite possible that the USAF will submit in the near future a separate and unrelated proposal for immediate installation of all or part of the proposed Canadian chain along the 54th parallel. It is assumed that such a request, if advanced, would include an offer to meet the costs involved or at any rate to share in them.

PROJECT LINCOLN

I refer to the Memorandum from this Division dated December 9, 1952, reporting on a meeting held on December 7, 1952, to discuss the details of U.S. proposals regarding an early warning chain across the Arctic. This meeting was arranged by the Chairman of the Defence Research Board and was intended to be no more than a technical discussion of the project with a view to facilitating an understanding of the scheme by scientists of the Defence Research Board. It was clearly understood by all concerned that the meeting was not intended as an approach to the Canadian Government either unofficially or officially. Canadian representation at the meeting was limited to technical personnel of the Defence Research Board and the RCAF concerned with air defence. Dr. Solandt personally invited General McNaughton and Mr. Barton to the meeting since they had some technical appreciation of the problems involved through Mr. Mackay.

and because they would undoubtedly be concerned with the proposal as Chairman and Secretary, respectively, of the Canadian Section of the PJBD.

In the course of the discussions General McNaughton made it very clear that any request for authority to carry out surveys would have to be made through the State Department-External Affairs channel. He suggested that prior to any such request the United States Air Force should submit a very full exposition of its plans to Canada through the medium of the PJBD. He explained that the Canadian Section of the PJBD would not be able to indicate any approval of the U.S. proposal but that the submission of the necessary background information through this channel would facilitate consideration by the Canadian authorities.

The U.S. Section of the PJBD has just supplied the Canadian Secretary with a tentative agenda for the next meeting of the Board which is to be held on January 26, 1953, at Aberdeen Proving Grounds, Maryland. The U.S. Section reported that it did not know as yet whether it would be ready to discuss the project at the January meeting or not. I would suggest that until such time as this Department has been informed that the United States wishes to raise the matter at the PJBD, no action should be taken to raise the matter in Cabinet.<sup>86</sup>

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AND POWER PROJECT;
APPOINTMENT OF BOARD OF ENGINEERS;
COMMENTS ON U.S. LEGISLATION

19. The Minister of Transport, referring to discussion at the meeting of December 29th, 1951, said an exchange of notes on the St. Lawrence development project had taken place on January 11th between the U.S.

OK. L.B. P[earson]

Secretary of State and the Canadian Ambassador at Washington.<sup>87</sup> These notes had referred to the understanding reached by the Prime Minister and President Truman at Washington on September 28th, 1951, and to subsequently enacted Canadian legislation relating to both the seaway and power phases of the project. The Canadian note had suggested, and Mr. Acheson had agreed, that, to avoid delay in proceeding with the all-Canadian seaway in the event Congressional approval of the 1941 Agreement was not gained at an early date, steps be taken in the immediate future to prepare concurrent applications to the International Joint Commission in respect of power development in the International Rapids Section based on the assumption that the deep waterway would be developed unilaterally by Canada. To this end, it was agreed that a series of meetings between appropriate Canadian and U.S. representatives should begin towards the end of January either at Washington or Ottawa.

Before concurrent applications to the I.J.C. were put in final form, however, agreement would have to be reached between the Federal, Ontario and Quebec governments on the one hand and the United States on the other as to the detailed conditions governing the manner in which water was to be used for power purposes in the International Section. With this in mind, the Continuing Committee on the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project had recommended that, as had been done in 1941, a Board of Engineers comprising nominees of the Federal, Ontario and Quebec governments be established immediately to prepare the Canadian application and ancillary governing conditions to the I.J.C. in respect of the power phase of the project.

The Continuing Committee had also examined the two St. Lawrence resolutions concurrently before the U.S. Congress seeking approval of the 1941 Agreement, and had recommended that the Canadian Ambassador at Washington be requested to pass on informally, to the U.S. State Department, Canadian views on certain of the provisions in these resolutions which appeared to be unacceptable to Canada. The principal change suggested would be the elimination from both resolutions of provisions which would make it possible to charge tolls only on the 27-foot waterway and not on the all-Canadian 14-foot waterway. It might well be that the Canadian government would wish at some time to impose tolls on the 14-foot waterway since otherwise encouragement might be given to the perpetuation on a large scale of shallow draught shipping which would likely result in the Welland Canal reaching the congestion stage much earlier than might otherwise be the case. Mr. Wrong should also, in the Committee's view, be asked to point out to the U.S. State Department that the formulae for the allocation of the cost of "common works", as presently set out in the Congressional resolutions, would undoubtedly have an effect on the negotiations of an agreement with Ontario in this respect. The Committee thought that it would be best to base the tolls on the cost of works undertaken solely for navigation as was the case under Federal legislation providing for an All-Canadian seaway. It was appreciated, however, that Congress might not be prepared either to assign the entire cost of the common works to power or to have some portion of that cost not subject to amortization. If this was the view of the U.S. State Department, it was felt that the resolutions should be reworded in such a manner as to make more explicit their apparent intent that the investment by each country shall include expenditures made on works constructed after 1941 and required for navigation or for both power and navigation, whether made by the Federal governments or State or Provincial governments or by Agencies thereof, and shall also include compensation to be paid by Canada to Quebec for common works at Soulanges constructed prior to 1941.

An explanatory note was circulated.

(Memorandum, Continuing Committee on the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project, Jan. 23, 1952 — Cab. Doc. 15-52)†

20. The Secretary of State for External Affairs felt that comments on current U.S. legislation along the lines suggested by the Continuing Committee should probably be passed on informally to the U.S. State Department. It was important, however, that any amendments to the resolutions which might result from these comments should appear to originate not with the Canadian government but with the U.S. administration itself, since otherwise President Truman, who had publicly stated that he would support the all-Canadian route in the event Congress failed to approve the 1941 Agreement, might be placed in an awkward position if it could be made to appear that Canada itself had made the joint seaway impossible by insisting on changes in the authorizing resolutions which were unacceptable to the United States Congress.

21. The Prime Minister pointed out, in this connection, that the Canadian government had always taken the stand that it would prefer development of the seaway to be on a joint basis as contemplated in the 1941 Agreement. That Agreement, however, made no provision for the amortization of the scheme through the imposition of tolls. The situation would be substantially altered if the United States now proceeded to alter the 1941 Agreement by attaching thereto toll provisions which were clearly unacceptable to Canada.

22. The Minister of Trade and Commerce questioned the advisability of appointing a Board of Engineers as recommended by the Continuing Committee before the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority was established under the terms of the legislation enacted at the last session of Parliament. In view of the numerous conflicting interests involved, he feared that a Board of Engineers might possibly reach a stalemate and for this reason it would be useful if the Authority could be appointed in the near future to exercise some overall control over the Board of Engineers.

23. Mr. Chevrier suggested that it might not be possible to consider establishment of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority for a few weeks at least. In the meantime, however, there was a considerable amount of technical work urgently required in connection with the preparation of power applications to the International Joint Commission. He thought, therefore, that a Board of Engineers should be established immediately comprising three members appointed by the Federal government and one each by the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

24. The Cabinet, after considerable further discussion:

(a) approved in principle the establishment of a Canadian Board of Engineers comprising three members appointed by the Federal government, one by Ontario and one by Quebec; draft terms of reference for such a Board to be prepared and submitted by the Continuing Committee; and,

(b) agreed that the Canadian Ambassador at Washington be directed to pass on informally to the U.S. State Department comments along the lines suggested by the Continuing Committee on certain provisions contained in U.S. legislation presently before Congress; the message to the Ambassador in this connection to be subject to the approval of the Minister of Transport and the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

ST. LAWRENCE DEVELOPMENT PROJECT; BOARD OF ENGINEERS; ESTABLISHMENT; TERMS OF REFERENCE

1. The Minister of Transport, referring to discussion at the meeting of January 23rd, 1952, submitted and read draft terms of reference for a Board of Engineers to be established for the purpose of co-ordinating the interests of the governments concerned in the application to the International Joint Commission on power development in the International Section of the St. Lawrence River.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

Mr. Chevrier submitted recommendations as to the three Federal members of the Board. He added that he would be absent from Ottawa during the next few days and suggested that the Minister of Trade and Commerce might communicate by telephone with the Premiers of Ontario and Quebec in order to obtain their concurrence in the appointment of one member from each of those two provinces.

2. The Cabinet, after discussion:

(a) agreed that a five-man Board of Engineers, of whom three were to be appointed by the Federal government and one each by the governments of Ontario and Quebec, be established to co-ordinate the interests of the governments concerned in the application to the International Joint Commission on power development in the International Section of the St. Lawrence River;

(b) approved the terms of reference for the said Board as submitted by the Continuing Committee on the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project; and,

(c) agreed that, if and when the Minister of Trade and Commerce obtained the concurrence of the Premiers of Ontario and Quebec in the proposed course of action, Orders in Council be passed establishing the Board of Engineers and providing for the appointment thereto of three Federal members.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT; U.S. CONGRESSIONAL RESOLUTIONS; PROPOSED NAVIGATION TREATY; OGOKI-LONG LAC DIVERSIONS

16. The Minister of Transport, referring to discussion at the meeting of February 4th, 1952, said the government's objections to certain features of the Resolutions currently before Congress for approval of the 1941 Agreement on the St. Lawrence Development Project had been discussed informally by the Canadian Embassy at Washington with the State Department and other officials of the U.S. Administration. The U.S. Administration had not acted on the Canadian suggestions, since they felt very strongly that any attempt to do so at this stage would seriously jeopardize the chances of approval of the 1941 Agreement.

It was understood that the Senate Foreign Relations Committee would conclude hearings and perhaps vote on Senate Resolution S.J. 27 that day.

The Continuing Committee on the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project had recommended that, if and when the Resolution was reported out by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, an appropriate occasion might be found for putting on record with the State Department the position of the Canadian government with respect to the resolutions before Congress. This might be done in the form of a memorandum making the simple statement that it might be difficult for the Canadian government to accept some of the proposed modifications of the 1941 Agreement and referring to the oral discussions already held on the particular points.

(Memorandum, Chairman, Continuing Committee on St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project, March 3, 1952 — Cab. Doc. 75-52)†

17. The Secretary of State for External Affairs thought that, in submitting such a memorandum to the State Department, every care should be taken to ensure that the U.S. Administration assumed responsibility for sponsoring any amendments that might result from our suggestions.

18. The Minister of Trade and Commerce felt Canada should do nothing likely to jeopardize approval of the 1941 Agreement by Congress. If it were found, after approval, that the Congressional measures contained certain features which were completely unacceptable to the Canadian government, it would no doubt be possible to obtain from the U.S. Administration assurances that amending legislation would be put through Congress.

19. Mr. Chevrier also submitted draft treaties on navigation rights in the St. Lawrence River and Great Lakes System and on the diversion of waters into the Great Lakes. The first treaty would be designed to establish on a permanent basis U.S. and Canadian navigation rights in all boundary waters including the St. Lawrence and Great Lakes System. The second treaty would confirm Canada's right to use for hydro-electric purposes the waters diverted into the Great Lakes System at Ogoki and Long Lac.

Explanatory notes had been circulated.

(Memoranda, Chairman, Continuing Committee on the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project, March 3rd. 1952 — Cab. Docs. 76 and 77-52)†

20. The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that:

(a) if and when Senate Resolution S.J. 27 were reported out by the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the Canadian Ambassador at Washington be asked to put on record at the State Department a memorandum making the general statement that it might be difficult for the Canadian government to accept some of the provisions of the Senate Resolution which would have the effect of amending substantively the 1941 Agreement, and stating further that, notwithstanding such objectionable features, the Canadian government did not wish to place any insuperable barriers in the way of eventual approval of the 1941 Agreement by Congress; and,

(b) the Continuing Committee discuss with U.S. officials during the forthcoming meetings on the St. Lawrence Project the possibility of negotiating treaties on navigation rights in boundary waters and on diversion of waters into the Great Lakes System along the lines recommended by the Committee.

ST. LAWRENCE DEVELOPMENT PROJECT

36. The Minister of Transport, referring to discussion at the meeting of March 4th, 1952, said that during meetings, on March 6th and 7th, with U.S.

officials on the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project, it had been hoped some assurances would be obtained as to a target date for submission to the International Joint Commission of concurrent applications for power development based on the assumption of an all-Canadian seaway, and that, if Congress did not approve the 1941 Agreement, Washington could find some method to develop the U.S. share of power without giving rise to constitutional or legal problems that would create further delays. The discussions had made it clear, however, that such assurances could not be obtained immediately.

The resolution on the project presently under consideration by the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee might be reported out by the committee in a few weeks, without vote, and it was thought unlikely that it would then obtain the support of the required Senate majority. No action by the House Public Works Committee on the resolution that had been before it since last October appeared likely during the current session.

Mr. Wrong, the Ambassador in Washington, had suggested that the U.S. government's reluctance to designate a power-development authority probably resulted more from conflict between the U.S. and New York power policies than from fear of the possible effect of such designation on the attitude of Congress to the 1941 Agreement. United States officials had indicated earlier that, if it became necessary to proceed without express Congressional approval, it would probably be impossible to devise a plan for power development on the U.S. side that would definitely remove the risk of litigation and delay. Mr. Wrong thought that, if as seemed likely, the 1941 Agreement failed to gain Congressional approval, the major difficulties in implementing the Canadian plan would possibly arise from conflict between the U.S. and New York power policies rather than the legal or constitutional problems mentioned.

Recently the Legal Adviser of the State Department had suggested that, as the 1941 Agreement would probably not be approved at this session, Mr. Wrong should inform Mr. Acheson that, in Canada's opinion, it had not been possible to secure approval of the 1941 Agreement at an "early" date within the meaning of the agreement between the Prime Minister and the President, and ask that the U.S. government now consider designating a power-development authority. He had also intimated that, if this step were not taken soon, it might be difficult for Mr. Truman later to designate the New York Power Authority as the U.S. agency.

In the light of the government's declared intention to proceed with an all-Canadian seaway if Congressional approval of the 1941 Agreement were not obtained at an early date, and although litigation in the United States might considerably delay construction, he recommended that a request for immediate designation of a power-development authority in the United States be forwarded to Mr. Truman by Mr. Wrong through Mr. Acheson, and that the Board of Engineers be asked to prepare the Canadian application to the International Joint Commission as soon as possible.

37. The Minister of Trade and Commerce favoured pressing the U.S. government in the manner proposed.

38. The Prime Minister thought he should not make a direct request to the President unless an approach through Mr. Wrong failed. The Secretary of State for External Affairs could discuss with Mr. Wrong the timing of the latter's approach.

39. The Cabinet, after further discussion, approved the recommendations of the Minister of Transport and agreed that:

(a) a request for immediate designation of the appropriate power-development authority in the United States be forwarded to the President by the Ambassador in Washington, through the U.S. Secretary of State; the timing of the request to be settled by the Secretary of State for External Affairs with the Ambassador;

(b) the Board of Engineers be requested to make every effort to complete drafting of the Canadian application to the International Joint Commission at the earliest possible date.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

Confirming our telephone conversation of a few moments ago, would you please see the Secretary of State as soon as possible and tell him that in accordance with arrangements previously agreed upon by the President and the Prime Minister, and subsequent discussions, the time has now come, we think, that the President should designate the appropriate U.S. Power authority so that the submission for the Canadian waterway can be made to the International Joint Commission. The recent information which you have sent us from Washington on this matter indicates that we should now act without delay and as formally as possible.

2. For your own information, it may be necessary later for the Prime Minister to approach the President direct in this matter, so that the earlier undertakings may be carried out. However, that time has not yet arrived, and the first step should, in any event, be your approach to Mr. Acheson. Ends.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

1. In accordance with your instructions telephoned this morning, I saw the Secretary of State this afternoon. I referred to the passage in the communique of September 28th last in which the President undertook to "support Canadian action as second best if an early commencement on the joint development does not prove possible". I said that the Canadian Government considered that there was now no serious possibility that the 1941 agreement would be approved by this Congress and that therefore the time had come to take the steps necessary to proceed with the Canadian waterway. The first of such steps would be for the President to designate a United States authority to develop, in conjunction with Ontario, the power facilities. Application could then be made to the International Joint Commission for approval. I asked Mr. Acheson to take the matter up with the President as a matter of urgency as soon as he could do so after the President's return to Washington tomorrow.

2. Mr. Acheson undertook to do this. We then had a discussion of the congressional situation during which Peterson, who was with Mr. Acheson, gave a gloomy account of the prospects. He said that the Foreign Relations Committee was tied up with the mutual security program until probably April 20th, and that if it then reported the St. Lawrence Project, there would certainly be a filibuster by the opponents on the floor. (Senator Lehman's office takes the more optimistic view that the Senate Committee would probably vote next week and informs us that in caucus the majority leader in the Senate announced that the St. Lawrence Project ought to be brought forward at an early date, without arousing opposition from Senator Connally.)

3. Mr. Acheson also said that he would discuss the various legal problems involved with Mr. Adrian Fisher. He thought it might be feasible to go forward with the application to the I.J.C. while keeping alive the possibility of reverting to the 1941 agreement if Congress should approve it before the I.J.C. made recommendations.

4. I mentioned to him that I understood that the Prime Minister was ready to approach the President directly if that would be of assistance. (I had not then received your EX-643 of today in which this was mentioned for my own information.) He said that he would prefer to talk first to the President himself and would let me know if the President considered that a letter from the Prime Minister would be useful to him.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

62. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of March 28th, 1952, said the U.S. Secretary of State had seen the President over the week-end about the Canadian request that Mr. Truman take early action to designate an authority in the United States responsible for the development of power on the U.S. side of the international section of the St. Lawrence River. Mr. Truman had indicated appreciation of Canada's patience over the years in awaiting U.S. action on the St. Lawrence project. Mr. Acheson had subsequently suggested that Mr. Pearson discuss the matter with Mr. Truman and it had now been learned that Mr. Truman was prepared to receive him on April 14th. He and the Minister of Transport, who would be in Washington at that time, could therefore call on Mr. Truman as proposed if this were considered desirable. It appeared wise to take advantage of this opportunity with a view to obtaining a decision at the earliest possible date. Mr. Acheson was hopeful that Mr. Truman would be prompt in arriving at a decision although it would be recalled that his Secretary of the Interior was opposed to designation of the New York Power Authority.

63. The Minister of Transport mentioned that the Board of Engineers established to prepare a draft of the Canadian reference to the International Joint Commission and of a set of conditions to govern the operation of the power project appeared to have nearly completed its task. A difficulty had arisen, however, in that the Quebec member of the Board had now raised questions with regard to "Method of Regulation No. 5" which had long since been approved by engineering officials in both countries. The Chairman of the Board planned to have the Quebec and Ontario members meet shortly in the hope of clearing up this matter.

It would still be necessary to hold a further meeting of Canadian and U.S. officials to discuss certain outstanding engineering and legal problems.

64. The Prime Minister thought the proposed visit to the President would be useful as it was desirable that Mr. Truman be made to feel that he was committed to early action on the power project and that he would be falling down on the undertaking he had given in the autumn if he did not now designate a power development authority. If he agreed at an early date to take action, it might be necessary for the government to proceed with its reference to the Commission without the express agreement of the Quebec member of the Board of Engineers. The position was that the Board was expected to give advice but that the government had the responsibility for making a reference to the Commission.

65. The Cabinet, after further discussion, noted the report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and agreed that:

(a) the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Transport accept an invitation to call on President Truman on April 14th to press the Canadian request that he take prompt action to permit reference of the St. Lawrence Power Project to the International Joint Commission;

(b) every effort be made to ensure early completion of the work of the Board of Engineers and of discussions with U.S. officials so that there might be no risk of delay in submission of the Canadian reference to the International Joint Commission in the event of Mr. Truman acting promptly.

Compte rendu d'une discussionRecord of Discussion

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, April 14, 1952

AGREED RECORD OF DISCUSSION WITH THE PRESIDENT ON THE ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT HELD AT THE WHITE HOUSE ON APRIL 14TH

At the meeting in the President's Office at 12:30 p.m. on April 14th there were present from the Administration:

President Truman,
Mr. Dean Acheson, Secretary of State,
Mr. David Bruce, Under-Secretary of State,
Mr. Stanley Woodward, United States Ambassador to Canada, and Mr. Charles Murphy, Special Counsel to the President.

The Canadian representatives were:

The Honourable L.B. Pearson, Secretary of State for External Affairs,
The Honourable Lionel Chevrier, Minister of Transport, and Mr. Hume Wrong, Ambassador to the United States.

The President opened the meeting by saying that there had been more than enough delay in getting the St. Lawrence project under way and that he was anxious that it should be started as soon as possible. There was, however, some prospect that the Senate would act on the 1941 Agreement; the Senate Foreign Relations Committee was to consider the matter on April 22 and it was expected that the Committee would report the joint resolution endorsing the agreement. He therefore asked that the Canadian Government should consent to wait for thirty days in order to determine what action the Senate might take, adding that this was the last time on which he would make a suggestion for a further delay.

He asked Mr. Acheson whether he had any comments to make on his opening remarks. Mr. Acheson said that he fully agreed that the patience shown by the Canadian Government was extraordinary, and he supported the views expressed by the President.

Mr. Pearson welcomed the remarks made by the President. The Canadian Government however was anxious that there should be no delay in taking the first step necessary to clear the way for the construction of the waterway by Canada, which was agreement on a reference to the International Joint Commission of the power phases of the project by both Governments. Such a reference as soon as possible would not prejudice the joint project if Congress were to act before the end of the session.

Mr. Truman said that he had no objection whatever to the two governments proceeding to a reference to the International Joint Commission without any delay. He asked Mr. Murphy to speak on the problem of designating a United States agency to share in the construction of the power facilities.

Mr. Murphy said that it would not be necessary immediately to specify any particular agency. Later on a particular agency could be named after it became clear that the Congress would not act on the joint project. He asked whether the reference to the I.J.C. would cover the Canadian waterway as well as the power facilities.

Mr. Pearson said that it was not necessary to refer the Canadian waterway to the I.J.C. The Canadian Government, however, was prepared to give the most definite assurances that the waterway would be constructed by Canada. The engineers designated by Canada to sit on any engineering board set up for the power facilities by the I.J.C. would be the same men who would be responsible for the plans for navigation.

Mr. Acheson then inquired whether any issues concerning water levels in the St. Lawrence would arise in connection with the building of the canal in Canadian territory. Mr. Chevrier explained that in constructing the Canadian waterway the plans employed for regulation of levels were those embodied as Method No. 5 in the plans for the joint project and that these plans had been fully agreed by the engineers of both countries. Mr. Pearson remarked that if it was found that the building of a Canadian waterway involved matters coming within the scope of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909, the question of levels in the river might have to be considered by the I.J.C.

In answer to a question by Mr. Acheson, Mr. Chevrier gave an assurance that the plans for power development would be the same as those worked out in the 1941 Agreement if the waterway was to be constructed by Canada.

Mr. Pearson and Mr. Chevrier remarked that it would be an advantage if the United States agency which would co-operate with Ontario were the New York Power Authority. They explained that Ontario and New York had already worked out an agreement on the tricky question of the division of costs between power and navigation facilities and that it would be very convenient not to disturb this.

The President agreed that the two governments should go ahead at once in preparing an application to the I.J.C., remarking that this might stimulate the Congress to move on the joint project. He asked Mr. Murphy to urge the United States departments and agencies concerned to get on with the preparation of an application as rapidly as possible. He added that he would do anything that was legal, legitimate and fair to further the project at this time.

Mr. Murphy observed that one of the things that would need doing would be to get before the Federal Power Commission an application of a United States entity for permission to construct the United States share of the power facilities.

Mr. Acheson then said that he wished to be quite clear on the agreement which had been reached. Was he correct in understanding the discussion as concluding that a period of thirty days would be left after the Senate Foreign Relations Committee consider the joint project on April 22nd before an application would be submitted to the I.J.C., and that later on if it became apparent that the joint project was dead, a specific agency would be designated by the President to develop the United States part of the power works?

Mr. Pearson said that that was not his exact understanding. What he understood was that an application would be filed with the I.J.C. as soon as it could be prepared without any necessity for waiting thirty days from April 22nd if the application was ready before then. During the thirty-day period, the designation by the United States of a particular agency to undertake the power development was not expected, but this would follow if Congress had taken no action in due course. If the Congress were to approve the joint project within that time, or indeed at any time while the application was under consideration by the I.J.C., both governments would be ready to revert to the 1941 Agreement and withdraw the matter from the I.J.C.

The President endorsed the interpretation given by Mr. Pearson, and it was agreed to proceed as rapidly as possible with the preparation of the application to the I.J.C. It was also agreed that the press should be informed at once.

HIGH WATER LEVELS IN THE GREAT LAKES;
REFERENCE TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

39. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of March 28th, 1952, submitted a revised draft reply to the U.S. government's request that the question of high water levels on the Great Lakes be referred to the International Joint Commission. The draft note, as revised, indicated that the government was prepared to concur in the suggested reference to the International Joint Commission on the understanding that the reference would be drafted in such a manner as not to delay, in any way, consideration and approval of the application on the St. Lawrence development project when submitted.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, April 26, 1952 — Cab. Doc. 133-52)†

40. The Minister of Transport pointed out that it now seemed possible that concurrent applications in respect of the St. Lawrence development project might be filed with the International Joint Commission in a few weeks' time. In the circumstances, it might be preferable to postpone our reply to the U.S. request regarding water levels until such time as the St. Lawrence applications had actually been submitted to the Commission.

41. Mr. Pearson thought it would be politically and otherwise undesirable to withhold any longer Canadian concurrence in the reference of the high water levels problem. The draft reply to the U.S. request, however, might be reworded to make it unmistakably clear that the St. Lawrence application would have priority consideration by the International Joint Commission even if submitted later than the high water levels reference.

42. The Cabinet, after discussion, approved in principle the draft reply to the U.S. government's request for reference of the high water levels problem on the Great Lakes to the International Joint Commission subject to revision along the lines suggested by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and clearance with the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Transport.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT; PREPARATION OF CANADIAN AND U.S.
APPLICATIONS TO THE INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION FOR POWER DEVELOPMENT

1. The Minister of Transport, referring to discussion at the meeting of May 6th, 1952, said copies of the draft U.S. application to the International Joint Commission on development of power in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River had now been received.

One of the more important differences between the Canadian and U.S. drafts was that the U.S. version provided that a Board of Control should be appointed by and remain under the supervision of the International Joint Commission. The Canadian application had provided that such a Board should be appointed by and remain under the direction of the two governments. Federal, Ontario and Quebec engineers apparently favoured the Canadian proposal. They had pointed out that the International Joint Commission was in many respects a quasi-judicial body and that for this reason, amongst others, it would seem inappropriate for the Commission to carry out administrative functions such as those with which the proposed Board of Control would be charged.

It was further feared that the present wording of the clause in the U.S. draft relating to allocation of costs between the Canadian and U.S. power developing entities might prejudice our existing agreement with the Province of Ontario, and the Interdepartmental Committee on the St. Lawrence Project had suggested that the looser wording in the Canadian draft application would be preferable from our point of view.

2. The Prime Minister pointed out that the federal government had committed itself to construct the seaway as an all-Canadian undertaking on the clear understanding that allocation of costs would be on the basis as outlined in the 1951 Canada-Ontario Agreement. Any substantial departure from that basis might place the government's commitment respecting development of the seaway in a different light. He did not see why it would not be possible for the Canadian and U.S. applications to be drawn in such a manner as to allow for costs to be allocated in each country on whatever basis seemed most desirable.

3. The Secretary to the Cabinet pointed out that a clause requesting the International Joint Commission to allocate costs between the power developing entities had been inserted in the application at the suggestion of the U.S. State Department, because it was felt in Washington that this might be one way in which New York State could be allowed to develop power, without violating the U.S. Constitution, by entering into an agreement with Ontario. It seemed important to the Interdepartmental Committee that the relevant clauses in both sections should be drafted in such a manner that it would be possible, during I.J.C. hearings, to submit to the Commission a suggested allocation of costs for both countries which would be along the lines of the 1951 Canada-Ontario Agreement. It should be borne in mind that for practical purposes the allocation of costs to power would probably have to be identical in both countries, as the Province of Ontario could not be expected to agree to pay more for electric energy than New York State, because, in both cases, the power would be coming from the same development.

The Chairman of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission had been informed, in confidence, by the head of the New York State Power Authority, that there was every indication that the U.S. government would, in the near future, name New York as the power developing agency in the United States. If this were true, it might be possible to suggest to Washington that the U.S. government now agree to seek New York's acceptance of an allocation of costs similar to that agreed to by Canada and Ontario.

4. The Minister of Trade and Commerce thought the question as to whether the proposed Board of Control should be appointed by the two governments or by the International Joint Commission, as suggested by the State Department, was relatively unimportant and that Canada should accept the U.S. suggestion if there was any thought that any other course of action might jeopardize the project.

5. Mr. St. Laurent believed there might indeed be some merit in the American suggestion that the Board of Control be appointed by and remain under the general supervision of the International Joint Commission, since the latter body had been established as a result of a treaty between the U.S. and Canada which was legally binding on both countries.

6. Mr. Chevrier said the Canadian Ambassador at Washington had been asked to arrange a meeting between appropriate U.S. and Canadian officials for the following Friday, May 16th, with a view to reaching agreement on the more important points of difference between the U.S. and Canadian draft applications.

7. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that the U.S. Senate had now agreed to place the St. Lawrence resolution (Senate Resolution S.J. 27) on its agenda. There were only two other important items ahead of the St. Lawrence Resolution on the Agenda and it was possible that discussion on the St. Lawrence measure might take place in a week or two. It was possible that, as a result of such discussion, a favourable vote might be secured in the Senate which might cause the U.S. Administration to seek a further postponement of any action on the all-Canadian seaway, even though there did not appear to be any hope that action of any kind would be taken in the House of Representatives during the course of the present session. For this reason, it was important that preparations for the submission of concurrent power applications to the I.J.C. should be completed as quickly as possible.

8. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the report of the Minister of Transport on the reference to the International Joint Commission on the St. Lawrence Power Project and:

(a) agreed that the U.S. suggestion that the proposed Board of Control be appointed by and remain under the general supervision of the International Joint Commission be accepted, if it seemed likely that non-acceptance would in any way jeopardize the chances of an early submission of concurrent applications for power development to the International Joint Commission;

(b) that every effort be made to secure U.S. acceptance of an allocation of costs to power similar to that envisaged in the 1951 Canada-Ontario Agreement and that the relevant clauses in both applications be drafted in such a manner as to make such an allocation of costs possible; and,

(c) noted with approval the proposed meeting of Canadian and U.S. officials at Washington on May 16th for the purpose of reconciling differences between the Canadian and U.S. draft applications to the International Joint Commission.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AND POWER PROJECT;

PREPARATION OF APPLICATIONS TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

3. The Minister of Transport reported that members of the Canadian Interdepartmental Committee on the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project had met with members of the U.S. Inter-Agency Committee on May 16th in Washington, to discuss differences between the Canadian and U.S. draft applications to the International Joint Commission respecting power development in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River with a view to achieving consistent and mutually satisfactory texts. All differences between the two drafts, with one major exception, were reconciled with relative ease and agreed drafts were produced in which, although there were still some textual differences, the substance of both applications remained consistent. The one point on which it was not possible to reach agreement was the question as to whether the whole of the costs of the common-works (as contemplated in the 1951 Canada-Ontario Power Agreement) or only a portion of such costs was to be attributed to power.

U.S. officials had advanced many arguments to demonstrate that the allocation of the whole cost of the common-works to power, as envisaged in the Canadian proposal, might jeopardize the project by making its acceptance in the United States difficult since the Federal Power Commission might find itself unable to grant a licence to the power developing entity in the United States if it were established that power consumers would be called upon to pay any portion of costs which might not reasonably be attributed to power.

Members of the Canadian Committee were inclined to feel that many, if not most, of the arguments advanced by U.S. officials were none too valid and that, in the long run, the Canadian proposal, as it stood, might be accepted in the United States. In the circumstances, however, the government might wish to consider adding to its present commitment regarding the seaway certain costs which could be considered exclusively required for navigation needs, such as the $14 million that Ontario and New York were expected to remit to the Federal government in lieu of provision for maintenance of the 14-foot navigation, which would become unnecessary with construction of the 27-foot waterway, a certain percentage of the $20 million dredging above the power works, which would not be required if power were to be developed alone, and finally the cost estimated at $1.5 million of further deepening the channel on the U.S. side of the boundary in the Thousand Islands Section.

An explanatory note was circulated.

(Memorandum, Continuing Committee on the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project, May 19, 1952 — Cab. Doc. 156-52)†

4. Mr. Chevrier thought it might be unwise to reopen at this time the question of the $14 million repayment in lieu of maintenance of 14-foot navigation. In so far as the $20 million additional dredging above the power works was concerned, Canadian engineers were of the view that this would be required for a sound development of power quite apart from navigation needs. However, there did seem to be some merit in Canada agreeing at this time to undertake the $1.5 million of additional dredging in the Thousand Islands Section if, as seemed probable, the United States could not undertake this work in view of the Administration's inability to secure the required funds from Congress.

5. The Prime Minister believed it would be unwise to modify substantially the nature of the government's commitment on the Seaway. The situation was completely different now from that in 1941, when a joint and all-embracing Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Basin development programme was contemplated with Canada receiving credit for work already done, such as the $132 million spent on the Welland Canal. As a consequence, Canada could not now consent to a return to the concept of allocation of the so-called common-works costs between power and navigation. In view of the apparent impossibility of obtaining Congressional approval for the 1941 Agreement and, since both the Province of Ontario and the State of New York were prepared in 1948 to share alone all the costs, including common-works, of developing power in the International Rapids Section without the deep waterway, the government's proposal was and remained that Canada would agree to build whatever works were required to provide a 27-foot waterway between Lake Ontario and the Port of Montreal, after Ontario and a suitable entity in the United States had agreed to construct and pay for all the works required for the development of power alone. He agreed, however, that the United States might be informed that Canada was prepared to do whatever dredging was required in the Thousand Islands Section and to include the costs of such dredging in the proposed toll structure on shipping.

6. The Minister of Trade and Commerce thought it would be inadvisable to modify the extent of the Federal government's commitment on the Seaway in any manner which would involve a modification of the 1951 Agreement with Ontario on Power Development.

7. The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that the extent of the Canadian government's undertaking on the International Section of the St. Lawrence project should remain on the basis outlined in the 1951 Canada-Ontario Power Agreement but that, in addition to this commitment, the government was prepared to provide a 27-foot waterway between Lake Ontario and the Port of Montreal including approximately $1.5 million dredging on the U.S. side of the boundary in the Thousand Islands Section which latter cost would be included in the toll structure.

ST. LAWRENCE DEVELOPMENT PROJECT;
CLARIFICATION OF THE CANADIAN COMMITMENT TO CONSTRUCT THE DEEP WATERWAY

21. The Minister of Transport, referring to discussion at the meeting of May 20th, said that the Canadian Ambassador at Washington had suggested that the best means of clarifying the nature of the Canadian commitment in respect of the St. Lawrence Seaway, insofar as U.S. officials were concerned, might be for Mr. Wrong to address a letter to the Chairman of the U.S. Inter-Agency Committee on the St. Lawrence Project containing a brief statement on the scope and intent of the Canadian government's proposal for an alternative all-Canadian deep waterway. The Interdepartmental Committee on the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project had concurred in this suggestion and had prepared a draft letter which was submitted for consideration and approval.

The letter would make it clear that the application to the International Joint Commission now contemplated in both Canada and the United States was an application for the development of power in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River and not an application for the development of navigation and power. As a consequence, the United States suggestion that the International Joint Commission be asked to allocate costs as between power and navigation was unacceptable, although Canada would agree to the applicants requesting the I.J.C. to allocate between the power developing entities the costs of all the works and undertakings for which those entities were to be responsible. The letter would go on to explain that the Canadian proposal was based on the assumption that approval of the 1941 agreement was not possible in the near future and that, since it has been determined that power could be developed economically as an independent project in the International Rapids Section and since there was clear evidence that agencies in both Canada and the United States were anxious to develop power on such a basis, the Canadian government had, with Parliamentary approval, committed itself to build whatever additional works were required to allow uninterrupted 27-foot navigation between Lake Erie and the Port of Montreal provided arrangements could be completed to ensure development of power on the basis outlined in detail in the December 1951 Canada-Ontario Agreement on Power. It was the Canadian government's expectation that all the costs of the works and undertakings relating to power development, as set out in that Agreement and in the Annex thereto, would be borne equally by the power developing agencies in both countries.

An explanatory note was circulated.

(Memorandum, May 30, 1952, Chairman, Continuing Committee on the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project. Cab. Doc. 168-52)+

22. The Secretary of State for External Affairs thought it likely that the opponents of the project in the United States would argue before the Federal Power Commission and the International Joint Commission that the Canadian proposal would result in charging power with certain costs which should rightfully be allocated to navigation.

23. The Prime Minister agreed that U.S. opponents of the project would no doubt seize upon every opportunity to block the development of the deep waterway. The Canadian Government should nonetheless, at least for the time being, maintain its position and simply offer a clear explanation of the nature of the Canadian proposal as outlined in the draft letter submitted by the Minister of Transport.

24. The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that the Canadian Ambassador at Washington be instructed to forward immediately to the Chairman of the U.S. Inter-Agency Committee on the St. Lawrence Project the explanatory message as submitted by the Minister of Transport.

ST. LAWRENCE DEVELOPMENT PROJECT;
MODIFICATION IN FINANCIAL BASIS OF CANADIAN PROPOSAL

5. The Prime Minister, referring to discussion at the meeting of May 30th, reported that the U.S. Senate had, that day, effectively killed for the time being the 1941 Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Basin Agreement by voting 43 to 40 in favour of referring S.J. Resolution 27 back to the Foreign Relations Committee for further study. He hoped this new evidence that early Congressional approval of the Agreement would not be possible would help to expedite filing with the International Joint Commission, the Canadian and U.S. applications for development of power in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River which was a necessary pre-requisite to the construction of the all-Canadian deep waterway.

During the latest meeting between members of the Canadian Interdepartmental Committee and the U.S. Inter-Agency Committee on the St. Lawrence, held in Washington on June 11th, it had been pointed out that the U.S. government might not find it possible to agree to filing with the Commission an application which involved charging to power the cost of all the features contained in the 1951 Canada-Ontario Power Agreement and the annex thereto. U.S. officials had stated categorically that neither the government nor the New York State power authorities would be able to reimburse the Canadian government for half the amount which would be saved because construction of the deep waterway by Canada made continuance of 14-foot navigation unnecessary. In addition, they suggested that, out of a total of approximately $75 million of dredging and excavation in the river bed, about $25 million was required exclusively for the purposes of the deep waterway and the whole of this sum should therefore be allocated to navigation rather than to power. It was further suggested that, since power experts disagreed as to the need for a control dam at Iroquois purely for power purposes, approximately half of the cost of this dam ($10.5 million) should also be allocated to navigation. It was finally suggested, but not pressed very strongly, that navigation might be charged with an additional amount of approximately $10 million representing alleged savings in constructing the waterway which would result from concurrent construction of navigation and power works.

Together with the Ministers of Trade and Commerce, Transport and Finance, he had, the previous day, discussed the details of the U.S. proposal with members of the Interdepartmental Committee. It had been felt that, since 14-foot navigation would not in actual fact be continued, it would be difficult to insist that New York reimburse Canada for half the amount which would otherwise have been expended in continuing present shallow-draft navigation. Furthermore, since Canadian engineers were of opinion that approximately $18 million of the channel excavations to be done in the International Rapids Section might not be required for power purposes alone, it might be indicated that Canada was prepared to contribute approximately $15 million to the cost of the dredging to be undertaken jointly by Ontario and New York in that section of the river. In view of the opinion expressed by our engineers that the control dam at Iroquois could not be considered an aid to navigation and that its essential purposes were to provide adequate protection for downstream power interests and to help control water levels in Lake Ontario, he did not think Canada should agree to allocation of any part of the cost to navigation. In so far as alleged savings resulting from concurrent construction of navigation and power works were concerned, these would, in all probability, be more than nullified by the speeding up of construction of navigation works in order not to interfere with early development of the full power potential at Barnhart Island. In the circumstances, no additional allocation of costs to navigation should be made on this score.

He pointed out that, under the terms of Article XII of the 1951 Canada-Ontario Agreement, the Province of Ontario could probably be required to reimburse Canada the total estimated cost of continuing 14-foot navigation. If, however, it was now agreed that New York should be relieved of reimbursing half of the savings, consideration should be given to whether or not the Province of Ontario should have similar treatment or whether there would be justification for attempting to collect from Ontario either the whole or half of the cost of continuing 14-foot navigation. No decision need be reached in this matter immediately.

If New York State and the Province of Ontario were treated in precisely the same manner, the net effect of the proposed modifications would be to reduce the cost of producing power in the International Rapids Section from an estimated $403 million to $374 million and to increase Canada's investment in the seaway from an estimated $245 million to approximately $274 million. To this last figure would have to be added another $1.5 million if Canada undertook the dredging yet remaining to be done on the U.S. side of the boundary in the Thousand Islands Section. It had already been indicated informally to Washington that if, for any reason, the United States could not do this work, Canada was prepared to undertake it. The addition of $30-odd million to the total estimated cost of the deep waterway would probably necessitate an increase of 8 or 9 percent in toll rates.

It had also been suggested that further discussions at the official level of the remaining differences between the Canadian and U.S. positions would serve no useful purpose and that the matter might now be taken up by the Prime Minister with President Truman. He thought the Canadian Embassy at Washington might ascertain whether the suggested further concessions would be acceptable to the U.S. administration and, in the event of an affirmative answer, it might not be necessary for him to see the President. There might nonetheless be advantage in having the Minister of Transport go to Washington in order to reach formal agreement with the Secretary of State of the United States as to the contents and time of filing of the joint applications to the International Joint Commission.

An explanatory note was circulated.

(Memorandum, Privy Council Office, June 18, 1952 — Cab. Doc. 190-52)+

6. The Minister of Transport thought the Province of Ontario might be willing to bear the whole cost of reimbursing Canada in lieu of continuance of 14-foot navigation if U.S. agreement could be secured to Ontario Hydro having exclusive use of the additional waters resulting from the Ogoki-Long Lac diversions.

7. Mr. St. Laurent believed it inadvisable to interject this question in to any discussions he might have with the President. However, it was not impossible that following submission of the applications to the International Joint Commission, Ontario Hydro and the New York State power authorities might reach some agreement on this question.

8. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the Prime Minister's report on United States suggestions for modifications in the financial basis of the Canadian government's commitment on construction of the St. Lawrence deep waterway and agreed that;

(a) it be indicated to Washington that Canada was prepared to agree that reimbursement in lieu of continuance of 14-foot navigation be excluded from the total costs to be allocated between the Canadian and U.S. power-developing entities and that, in addition, the Canadian government was prepared to make a contribution of approximately $15 million to the costs of dredging to be undertaken in the International Rapids Section by the power-developing entities; and,

(b) the Prime Minister arrange an early interview with President Truman, if this were felt to be necessary, in order to reach agreement on the terms of the proposed joint applications to the International Joint Commission for the development of power in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River.

INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION;
APPLICATION RE ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT. . .

1. The Prime Minister, referring to discussion at the meeting of June 19th<sup>88</sup> said information had been received from the Canadian Embassy at Washington that the latest Canadian proposal on the St. Lawrence seaway and power development appeared to have been accepted by all U.S. Federal agencies concerned. The Chairman of the New York State Power Authority was absent and it had not been possible as yet to clear with him. However, U.S. officials had arranged a meeting with him in New York City on June 26th.

It was possible that complete agreement on the terms of the joint applications to the International Joint Commission might be reached by Friday, June 27th, at which time it might be advisable for the Minister of Transport to proceed to Washington and meet formally with the Acting Secretary of State of the United States. The publicity attendant upon such a meeting might be advantageous both in Canada and the United States.

(b) agreed that the Canadian reference to the International Joint Commission on water levels in Lake Ontario be forwarded to the Commission immediately and that a public statement be made, as suggested by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to the effect that the reference was made on the express condition that the joint applications on the St. Lawrence project, if and when submitted, would take priority over the reference in question.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT; APPLICATIONS TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION RE POWER DEVELOPMENT

1. The Prime Minister, referring to discussion at the meeting of June 25th reported that all U.S. Federal agencies concerned had now accepted the terms of the latest Canadian proposal on power development in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River and the extent of the Canadian government's undertaking regarding the 27-foot waterway. Although reluctant at first, the New York State Power Authority had accepted the proposal on Friday, June 27th. The following day, June 28th, President Truman had given his formal approval to the arrangement.

That morning he had signed, for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the two originals of the Canadian application which had now been forwarded to the offices of the International Joint Commission in Ottawa. The two U.S. originals would be signed later that day by Mr. Bruce, the Acting Secretary of State of the United States, and forwarded to the Washington offices of the International Joint Commission.

The Minister of Transport, accompanied by Mr. R.A.C. Henry,<sup>89</sup> was now in Washington and would at 3:00 p.m., that day, meet formally with the Acting Secretary of State of the United States. At that time, the Canadian Ambassador at Washington and Mr. Bruce would formally exchange notes which outlined fully the terms of the agreement respecting development of power in the International Rapids Section and the extent of Canada's undertaking in respect of the deep waterway to be provided between Lake Erie and the Port of Montreal.

The following day he proposed to table in the House of Commons the text of the Canadian application and of the notes to be exchanged in Washington. He would also at that time make a brief statement outlining the more important developments in connection with the St. Lawrence project.

(Memorandum, Privy Council Office, June 30, 1952)†

2. The Cabinet, after discussion,

(a) noted the report by the Prime Minister on recent developments in the preparation of joint applications to the International Joint Commission for development of power in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River; and,

(b) agreed that the text of the applications and of the notes to be exchanged in Washington that day be tabled in the House of Commons by the Prime Minister the following day, and that he make a brief statement at that time outlining the more important developments in this connection.<sup>90</sup>

Agreement once we proceed with detailed engineering work on the all-Canadian alternative and that we are anxious to get on with this work as soon as possible. In view of President Truman's eleventh hour appeal to the Congress, the Prime Minister recognizes that it would not be opportune to give this notice right away, but he is anxious to have you make our position clear as soon as you think it can be done without jeopardizing the whole project.

2. With respect to the application before the International Joint Commission, the Prime Minister approved the recommendation of the Interdepartmental Committee that, subject to your concurrence, the State Department should be advised that the Canadian Government envisaged having the application for approval of the power development presented by counsel representing the Government of Canada who might be assisted by counsel for the Government of Ontario if that Government so desired. Engineers would be available both from the Federal Government service and from the Ontario Hydro to explain the details of the project which would mean that, so far as Canada is concerned, the entity would appear quite openly though under the wing of the Canadian Government. It was felt that in informing the State Department you would ask them if they would let us know, as soon as convenient, whether the United States application would be presented along parallel lines or whether they had any suggestions for a different line of procedure.

3. Following the suggestion you made to me on Saturday, I have been in touch by telephone with the Chairman of the Canadian Section of the International Joint Commission. General McNaughton tells me that he has had an informal discussion with his American colleagues and that they seem to be prepared to hear the application and reach a decision regardless of whether the entity is named or not. He says that what is concerning them particularly is a desire to meet the wishes of the Administration and particularly the War Department by holding a hearing on the Lake Levels at Rochester, New York, as soon as possible. What General McNaughton has suggested, informally, is that hearings should be started in Toronto both on the St. Lawrence power application and on the Lake Levels and that they should be followed quickly by a hearing in Rochester on the Lake Levels. He feels this concession to his American colleagues will be much appreciated and help to smooth the passage for the St. Lawrence application. This seems to be good sense. General McNaughton also approved of our suggestion of having counsel for the Government present the application. He plans to have further discussions with his American colleagues and to telephone me on Wednesday evening or Thursday and bring me up to date.

4. Meanwhile, I think it would be desirable to get the views of the Administration on our suggested mode of procedure before the International Joint Commission as we want to lose as little time as possible in appointing counsel, consulting the Ontario Government and getting the detailed case ready for presentation.

5. I have shown this telegram to Mr. Howe who is Acting Prime Minister, and it carries his approval. Ends.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

Reference: Your telegram EX-1504 of the 8th of July.

Following for Pickersgill from Wrong, Begins: This afternoon at the State Department I saw Tate, the Acting Legal Advisor, and told him of the arrangements that the Canadian Government has in mind for presenting the Canadian application to the International Joint Commission, as outlined in paragraph 2 of your telegram. I said that we would be grateful to receive any comments the United States authorities would like to make, and also to hear how it is proposed to present the United States application. Although Tate was not in a position to give any firm indication of how the United States case will be presented, I gathered that their arrangements will probably be very similar to those contemplated in Ottawa. He said that, even if the President had not named the New York State Power Authority as the "entity" by the time hearings were begun before the International Joint Commission, it would still be possible for New York representatives to play an active part in the proceedings before the Commission, since, according to its established procedures, it can receive evidence from any comer who is able to throw light on the question in hand.

2. I think that our talk may have been helpful in hastening action by the President to nominate the New York State Power Authority. I stressed that the sooner this could be done the better, from the Canadian point of view. Not only would it facilitate the hearings before the International Joint Commission, but it would also make possible technical discussions between the Ontario Hydro and its counterpart in New York.

3. Early in the interview Tate said that he thought it would be some time before the President could name the New York State Power Authority as the "entity". But later, after having spoken over the telephone to the general counsel of the Federal Power Commission he was more optimistic. He assured me that the President has no objection to naming the "entity" now, apart from the technical one that such action might delay early consideration and approval by the Federal Power Commission of New York's application. The Third Circuit Court in Philadelphia, as you know, has now before it an appeal from the adverse decision of the Federal Power Commission on the application made in 1948 by the New York State Power Authority. Tate confirmed that the present intention is to try to have the application remanded from the Third Circuit Court to the Federal Power Commission. For that to be done, the initiative would have to be taken by the New York State Power Authority acting after agreement had been reached with the Federal Power Commission.

The counsel of the Federal Power Commission said that talks were going forward with the New York State Power Authority to determine how this manoeuvre could best be carried out. Tate has undertaken to confer with the Power Commission's counsel next week to insure that the State Department and the Federal Power Commission are thinking along parallel lines and that everything possible is being done to speed up consideration by the Power Commission of the New York application and nomination by the President of the New York State Power Authority as the "entity".

4. I gave Tate the information about the plans for hearings by the I.J.C. which you had secured from General McNaughton. When you receive further information, I should like to pass it to him, as this is probably the quickest way of having the State Department informed of the I.J.C.'s intentions. If the hearings can be started soon, the need for preparation for them should be an effective spur to activity here. On our side, I think it in order now to appoint counsel, consult with Ontario and get the detailed case ready. Ends.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

Reference: Our telegram WA-1813 of the 10th of July.

We learned yesterday that the State Department fully expect that the 1948 application of the New York State Power Authority will be back before the Federal Power Commission by the 1st of August. A draft request by the New York State Power Authority to the Third Circuit Court in Philadelphia to remand the 1948 application for reconsideration has now been sent to the FPC; and it is expected that within a few days the Commission will formally express its willingness to reconsider the application in the light of altered circumstances. The Third Circuit Court will then remand the application automatically, we were told.

2. The State Department now estimate that the Federal Power Commission will require approximately 4 or 4½ months to reconsider and act on the 1948 application from the New York State Power Authority. In other words, if the application is remanded to the Commission by the 1st of August, as is now expected, an order of approval might be handed down about the end of November or the middle of December. The procedure before the Commission comprises the following steps:

(a) a period of 30 days' notice must elapse before hearings are held on any application;

- (b) the main hearings might last for two or three weeks;
- (c) an examiner is then appointed who scrutinizes all the evidence and brings in a finding on the application. This step might take perhaps a month to complete;
- (d) a period of 20 days' notice must then elapse to allow any briefs opposing the examiner's findings to be filed;
- (e) finally, the Commission holds final hearings and issues its order.

1. This will confirm message given to LePan by telephone today.
2. I passed on to the Minister of Transport, who is in Cornwall today attending hearings of the International Joint Commission, the contents of your message under reference. His first reaction was to wonder whether the State Department consider the procedure outlined in this telegram as the equivalent of actually naming the U.S. power-developing entity. Mr. LePan has now informed us that his understanding is that the resubmission of New York's 1948 application to the Federal Power Commission is not considered by the State Department to be in any sense the equivalent of a formal naming of an entity.
3. Nonetheless, Mr. Chevrier thinks it would be advisable if you could endeavour to ascertain when and how the U.S. Administration is to give formal notification to the International Joint Commission as to the identity of the U.S. power-developing agency. In this connection Mr. Chevrier said that he had been told informally by the Canadian members of the International Joint Commission that the Commission would doubtless find it impossible to hand down a final decision until both entities are formally named. Furthermore, it is felt that the Commission's work would be both facilitated and expedited if the naming of the entity could take place at an early date.
4. You will also be interested to know that during the course of a conversation he had with Mr. Chevrier in Cornwall, Mr. Danielian agreed that we should do everything we can to get an early and favourable decision from the International Joint Commission on the power aspect of the St. Lawrence project but suggested that Canada should not press too urgently with the deep waterway as he, Danielian,<sup>91</sup> was hopeful that U.S. cooperation could still be obtained on this latter score. Mr. Chevrier pointed out to Danielian that with every day that passed it was becoming more and more difficult to contemplate reverting to joint development of the seaway, not only because of the ever increasing commitments in money and personnel being made by the Canadian Government on the all-Canadian scheme but also because Canadian public opinion generally favoured, in some cases enthusiastically, the all-Canadian project and might view with disfavor any switch at this time to a joint development. Mr. Chevrier consequently urged Danielian not to do anything to jeopardize the all-Canadian scheme which at this juncture still appeared as the only project which was likely to succeed.

5. As you probably have seen from press reports the series of three hearings held in Toronto, Ogdensburg and Cornwall were fairly uneventful and remarkable only by the almost complete lack of representations opposing the scheme. Ends.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

Reference: Your telegram EX-1622 of 25th of July.

Following for Pickersgill from Lapan, Begins: This morning at the State Department I had an interview with Tate, the Acting Legal Adviser, to discuss the points raised by Mr. Chevrier as a result of our telegram WA-1915 of the 23rd of July. Tate confirmed that the resubmission of New York's 1948 application to the Federal Power Commission is not to be regarded in any sense as the equivalent of a formal naming of the entity.

2. When I told Tate of the views that had been expressed to Mr. Chevrier by members of the Canadian Section of the International Joint Commission, he said that all the United States authorities fully realized the importance of taking the wraps off the New York power authority, so that the International Joint Commission could get on rapidly with its task of considering the St. Lawrence application. However, he did not see how the President could formally nominate the New York power authority as the entity until the Federal Power Commission had handed down a new ruling on the 1948 application; and, as you know, this is not expected to take place until about the

N.R. Danielian, Executive Vice President, Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Association.

1st of December. The reason is that given in paragraph 1(d) of our telegram WA-1769 of the 4th of July.† The Federal Power Commission is a quasijudicial body, whose formal findings even the President may not prejudice.

3. However, Tate went on to say that he had been in touch with Bell of the White House staff and with Kunen of the Federal Power Commission to consider how this difficulty might be circumvented. They had agreed that there was no reason why the New York power authority should not apply almost at once to be heard by the International Joint Commission as an interested party and as the prospective entity. This step could be taken as soon as the 1948 application had been remanded to the Federal Power Commission. Tate expected that the 1948 application would be resubmitted to the FPC by about the 1st of August. A few days afterwards, the flimsy concealment now draping the New York power authority would be removed and it would appear as the prospective entity. Tate thought this procedure should enable the International Joint Commission to go forward with its work realistically and expeditiously.

4. He admitted, however, that a difficulty would still remain about the timing of the IJC's formal recommendation. It would be difficult, and perhaps impossible, he agreed, for the IJC to make a formal recommendation until the entity had been formally named. This would mean that the IJC's recommendation could not be made until immediately after the Federal Power Commission had issued its order. But, according to present plans, he did not think this should involve any delay. Ends.

MEMORANDUM OF INTERVIEW WITH DR. N.R. DANIELIAN, EXECUTIVE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE ASSOCIATION

Dr. Danielian discussed with me the situation regarding the St. Lawrence Power and Seaway development, emphasizing that he and his organization now supported a Canadian Seaway and would do what they could to assist the progress of the hearings now before the International Joint Commission. At the same time, he mentioned that the supporters of the international Seaway were still anxious that the Seaway should be built as a joint project and felt that a good deal of progress had been made in the last Congress to that end. Therefore, he added, if there were long delays in the hearings before the International Joint Commission, he and his people felt that it would be desirable to plan for alternative action on an international basis. He thought that there was a better chance now than previously to get congressional approval for such action; they had just missed out this year.

I told Danielian that we had always preferred joint action and had done everything we could in Canada to bring it about. However, we had now decided that Congress had made such action impossible and we were now determined to go ahead on our own as that was the only way. If there were delays before the International Joint Commission and if the situation was such that the project could still become an international one, in principle we would still support that. However, we would resent the creation of delays and difficulties before the Joint Commission for the purpose of another attempt to get congressional approval for an international waterway. Danielian professed to understand our position and emphasized that he was all for the Canadian Seaway, but was concerned only to take the necessary further preparatory measures for alternative action in case the Canadian scheme was unduly delayed. Dr. Danielian, who is a smooth and smart "operator" may, I suspect, cherish a lingering hope that the preparatory action required may in its turn have some delaying affect on the Canadian application before the I.J.C., though I should add he emphatically denied any such intention.

He pointed out that there were three interests that would do what they could to confuse and delay the issue before the I.J.C., though they might have to work behind the scenes, namely: the federal power interests, the private power interests, and those who were opposed to any kind of Seaway. He also said that there were two individuals who might find it desirable to hold up the present application:

1. Senator Lehman, if he considered that the public vs. private power aspect of the question would be a good election issue against Dewey in New York State; and

2. The next President of the United States, who might, during the campaign, have to make certain political commitments which would require interference with the International Joint Commission process.

Mr. Danielian told me that he appeared before the Democratic Platform Committee in Chicago and tried to get an endorsement of the St. Lawrence Waterway in simple, frank terms written into the platform. He received support, but not enough, as the railway and coal interests who were present were able to prevent anything but an ambiguous and somewhat meaningless reference.

Dr. Danielian is meeting his board in Cleveland in a couple of weeks and while he assured me that he and his board would maintain their position of favouring the Canadian Seaway, they might also find it desirable to discuss confidentially measures which should be taken in case the I.J.C. reference is delayed or confused.

I was not too happy over my talk with the gentleman in question because I got the uneasy feeling that he was confident that the present hearing before the Joint Commission would go on and on and on, and that this delay would give the American supporters of the international scheme another opportunity.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT; RECENT DEVELOPMENTS

Mr. N.R. Danielian telephoned to Mr. Cox<sup>92</sup> last week to give an account of what had transpired at the meeting of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Association in Cleveland on August 14. You will recall that Mr. Danielian discussed this with you immediately before the Cleveland meeting. Danielian telephoned from the Brockville home of George Fulford, M.P., who seemed to be with Danielian at the time.

Danielian said that the Association had decided, as a result of his reports on his conversations in Ottawa, to support action relating to the plan for a Canadian seaway but that they also planned to be prepared to support Congressional action next year if present arrangements do not result in "definitive action" by January 1. He said, however, that he was worried by the fact that we had created the impression in Canada that there was clear sailing ahead and that success would be assured in obtaining the approval of the International Joint Commission and of the Federal Power Commission. Danielian said that he believes there is only a slim chance that New York will obtain a licence from the F.P.C. and the political results in Canada of failure would be unfortunate for harmonious relations between the two countries. He also reported that a new lobby had been organized, known as the "Electric Consumers Information Committee", which had decided to oppose New York's application to the F.P.C. This committee was organized by Leland Olds, now associated with the Connecticut Valley Association, and a recent meeting in Washington at which the decision to oppose New York was made, was attended by many organizations including the National Rural Electrification Association, the National Farmers Union, the United Automobile Workers (CIO), Labor's League for Political Education (AF of L), many "Co-operative" organizations and two representatives from the Department of the Interior. (One of these, Ralph Sucher, has long been identified as an opponent within the administration of our present plans.) This is a group with little in common with the railroad and port interests but a powerful ally in their fight against New York in the F.P.C. Moreover, the port and other Great Lakes interests above Toledo are reluctant to show any interest in the Canadian plan as they feel that the seaway will terminate, for many years, at the entrance to the Detroit River.

Danielian suggested that, if we are really pinning all our hopes on our present plans we should do two things: First, request the State Department to intervene with the F.P.C. with a definite statement on our behalf that this is the only way in which Canada would cooperate in proceeding with the project.<sup>93</sup> (We could obviously do this only if the New York State Power Authority had been named as the U.S. "entity".) Secondly, we should make our views known immediately to both candidates. (He suggested that Stevenson could be approached through David Bell, who has left the White House and is now working for Stevenson in Springfield. Bell, as you know, is thoroughly conversant with the province. Danielian thought that Eisenhower could be approached through Arthur Vandenberg, Arthur Summerfield or Henry Ford, with each of whom his organization has some direct contact.)<sup>94</sup> This would have to be done very cautiously, of course, and Danielian thinks it would have to be done immediately so that no definite commitments would be made by either candidate before the campaigns really get under way in September. Although this is the sort of activity we have always refrained from engaging in, Mr. Wrong has made the same suggestion independently.

With regard to the second suggestion, Danielian points out that all members of the F.P.C. must be reappointed by the new President (their terms of office are five years) and that the most recent appointee, Doty, is a "Chapman man" and therefore opposed to the New York application. He suggests, therefore, that the commissioners will wait until the new President is chosen and has given them some indication of his wishes before making a decision. With regard to the first suggestion, we have again sounded out the counsel representing the United States Government on the I.J.C. on the question of naming the United States "entity". You will recall that in your meeting with President Truman, the undertaking was to name the entity "in due course". The United States officials now take the position that it would be improper for the President to name the entity before the F.P.C. has decided the New York case. Apart from the legality of such action, it might be argued, both before the Commission and in the courts, that it prejudged the Commission's decision and further delay would result.

The United States lawyers connected with the project, who were in Ottawa this week, told us that Senator Green intends to introduce a measure endorsing the 1941 Agreement early next January. They also indicated that the F.P.C. would hold new hearings on the New York application, that they would allow all comers to intervene and that the hearings would commence in October. They have no exact ideas on the timetable other than this, but it is evident that the time in which Mr. Truman would be able to act in naming the United States entity is extremely limited unless he acts before the F.P.C. reaches its decision. Moreover, some of the Canadian officials present got the impression that the current arrangements for proceeding with the project with the Canadian waterway were merely "window-dressing" or "steaming up" for a new attempt to secure approval of the 1941 Agreement at the next session of Congress.

In a recent letter from Mr. Chevrier, and in a memorandum on it, it was suggested that we should now urge the United States Administration to designate the entity to develop power in New York State. In view of the foregoing, you may wish to consider whether we should also ask the State Department to put before the F.P.C. the factors in Canada — such as the urgent need for power, etc. — which would lead us to support the application of the New York State Power Authority to the Commission for a licence. This could only be done, of course, if the U.S. Administration designates the New York State Power Authority as the United States entity. You may also wish to discuss with Mr. Chevrier whether an approach could be made to the presidential candidates with a more positive statement of our position (including, perhaps, a statement of intention to withdraw from the 1941 Agreement).

It is evident that, whatever transpires during the remainder of this year, new legislation will be introduced in the 83rd Congress to endorse the 1941 Agreement unless it has been denounced. It would appear to be desirable, if you concur, to discuss the draft legislation informally with Danielian.<sup>95</sup> (He will undoubtedly, as heretofore, draft the endorsing legislation.) Danielian himself has made this suggestion in an effort to avoid difficulties which might result from the passage of legislation which would be unacceptable to Canada.<sup>96</sup>

ST. LAWRENCE DEVELOPMENT PROJECT;
APPLICATION TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

18. The Secretary submitted a progress report on recent developments respecting hearings held by the International Joint Commission on Canada's application for the development of power in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River.

<sup>96</sup>Notre copie du document porte la mention manuscrite suivante :

The following was written on this copy of the document:

These developments are very disturbing. I think that Mr. Wrong should make a high level & formal approach to the State Dept. as indicated above but I would not approach the presidential candidate at least at this stage. L.B. P[earson]

The counsel for Canada at the hearings, Mr. Mundell<sup>97</sup> had sought direction on certain problems that had arisen.

It appeared that removal of the Gut Dam, although not relevant to the power application, had now become a very important matter in the eyes of the United States section of the Commission. United States counsel had suggested that it would greatly facilitate Canada's application and probably dispose completely of the Gut Dam issue if it could be stated on behalf of the Canadian government at forthcoming hearings to be held at Albany, N.Y., that Canada would be prepared to accept, as a condition of the order of approval, that the Gut Dam be removed as early as adequate engineering precautions would allow. Canadian engineers were now studying the matter to determine whether it could be removed without prejudicing navigation, power and other interests above and below the dam and without necessitating any fundamental changes in the power development plans as presently drawn. In the event the engineering reports on this matter were favourable and in view of Canada's approval in principle of early removal of the Dam it was recommended that counsel for Canada be authorized to make a statement, whenever it appeared to be desirable, to the effect that the Canadian government would not object to inclusion in the International Joint Commission's order of approval of a condition requiring removal of the Gut Dam provided engineering studies revealed that such removal could take place without prejudice to navigation, power and other interests above and below the Dam.

A decision would also be required as to whether or not Ontario's claim for exclusive use for power purposes of the Ogoki and Long Lac diversion waters should be raised in conjunction with the request to be placed before the International Joint commission by Canada and the United States for allocation of costs between the power developing agencies under Section 11 of the joint applications. There seemed to be little likelihood of the United States agreeing to exclusive use by Ontario of these waters, but, in the improbable event that such a concession were made it was quite clear that a sine qua non condition would be that Ontario would bear a proportionately greater share of the total cost of the works. The situation was rendered more difficult by the fact that, under the terms of the Boundary Waters Treaty, the International Joint Commission had no alternative but to allocate waters equally between the two countries. For this and other reasons therefore it was thought that the Ogoki and Long Lac problem should not be interjected into International Joint Commission discussions. However, with a view to keeping Ontario's claim open, an effort might usefully be made to have the International Joint Commission's order allocating costs equally between Ontario and New York, qualified by a reference to the possibility of such allocation being altered in the future by a collateral agreement between the Canadian and United States governments. This course of action was recommended as the most practical and certainly the least likely to delay further consideration of the joint applications.

19. Mr. Chevrier also referred to a letter which the Premier of Quebec had addressed to the Commission in which Mr. Duplessis seriously questioned the constitutional jurisdiction of the Commission to deal with the St. Lawrence application.

(Letter, Premier of Quebec to Secretary, I.J.C. Aug. 15, 1952)†

20. The Prime Minister said he had been given to understand that Mr. Duplessis had not intended to place any difficulties in the way of the St. Lawrence Project but merely wished to have counsel for the Province appear before the Commission and state that the Province of Quebec would insist on prior consultation with that province in any project or development which would have an effect within the boundaries of Quebec.

21. The Secretary of State for External Affairs stated he agreed with representations made to him a few days previously by the Minister of Transport that renewed efforts might usefully be made at this time, on a high level, to obtain from the United States administration the naming of the power developing entity in the United States without delay. Early naming of the United States entity was of importance in view of the stand which it was understood had been taken both by the United States and Canadian members of the International Joint Commission that the Commission could not properly hand down an order of approval on the application until the identity and credentials of the power developing agencies in both countries had been established formally.

He might be proceeding to Washington shortly on other business and if this was thought advisable he could, at that time, see the Secretary of State and impress upon him the importance the Canadian government attached to the early naming of the United States entity. If, for any reason, he were unable to see Mr. Acheson, the Canadian Ambassador at Washington could be directed to take the matter up with the Secretary of State.

22. The Cabinet, after further discussion:

(a) agreed that counsel for Canada at hearings of the International Joint Commission on the Joint Canada-United States applications for power development in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence be authorized,

(i) to state that the Canadian government was prepared to agree that a condition be attached to the order of approval of the International Joint Commission to the effect that the Gut Dam be removed at an early date provided current engineering studies established that such removal could take place without prejudice to navigation, power and other interests above and below the Dam; and,

(ii) to agree to an equal allocation of costs without any mention of Ontario's claim to exclusive use of the Ogoki-Long Lac diversion waters; it being understood that an effort would be made to have included in the final order of approval a qualification expressly referring to the possibility of such allocation of costs being varied in the future by agreement between the Canadian and United States governments;

(b) agreed that the Secretary of State for External Affairs attempt to obtain from the Secretary of State of the United States an undertaking that the United States power developing entity would be named in the near future in order that the International Joint Commission might act without delay on the joint applications of June 30th; it being understood that if Mr. Pearson were unable to see Mr. Acheson, the Canadian Ambassador at Washington would raise the matter with the United States authorities.

2. As you may have already learned from the Minister, Cabinet recently decided that Mr. Pearson would attempt to obtain from Mr. Acheson an undertaking that the U.S. "entity" would be named in the near future in order that the International Joint Commission may issue an Order of Approval with propriety and without delay. If Mr. Pearson is unable to see the Secretary of State during his present visit, it was decided that you should take this matter up on a high level as soon as possible. As you will see in the papers being sent to you by bag, the United States officials indicated that the propriety of naming the U.S. "entity", before the Federal Power Commission has reached a decision on the New York Application, might be questioned and that legal arguments on this point, either before the Commission or in the Courts, might cause further delay. However, the designation of the U.S. "entity" might be made conditional upon the "entity" being duly licenced in accordance with U.S. law. Further, the position of the I.J.C. in continuing hearings on such a large project with one quantity still technically unknown, is difficult. In any case, the "entity" has been pretty widely recognized, particularly with the appearance of its officers before the I.J.C. in Albany yesterday.

3. The Minister also considers that it would be desirable to ask the State Department to inform the F.P.C. that the arrangement envisaged in the applications of the two Governments to the I.J.C. and in the exchange of notes of June 30, is the only one in which Canada would cooperate in proceeding with the project. (This statement might include a reference to the urgent need for power in Ontario and to the joint statement of Principles of Economic Cooperation of 1950.) As anything that may be said in this respect might be construed as a withdrawal from the 1951 agreement (whereas Mr. Pearson probably meant only that the arrangement mentioned above was the only one in which Canada would cooperate on the basis of the project as now planned with the waterway in Canada), it would seem advisable to discuss this matter with the Minister before approaching the State Department.

4. You will be interested to know that the U.S. Ambassador, Mr. Woodward, discussed the St. Lawrence Project with President Truman in Washington last week and in reply to a question the President informed Mr. Woodward that he saw no reason why there should be any undue delay in the issuing of a licence by the F.P.C. to the New York State Power Authority, and that he himself hoped that the licence would soon be granted.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

After dinner at the Canadian Embassy last night Mr. Pearson had a brief discussion with Mr. Acheson on this subject. This was limited to the question of the early naming by the United States of the entity which would construct and operate the United States share of the works necessary for power. Mr. Pearson suggested that the proceedings before the International Joint Commission would be facilitated by the prompt naming of the entity and that members of the Commission were anxious that this should be done, as they were reluctant to reach a decision on the applications of the two governments without knowing what agencies in the two countries would construct and operate the works.

Mr. Acheson answered that the Administration was limited by the terms of the opening sentence of paragraph 12 of the U.S. application to the I.J.C. This sentence reads as follows: "The entity or entities in the United States which will construct and will operate the United States part of the project will be such entity or entities as may be authorized by the Congress, or licensed by the Federal Power Commission under the Federal Power Act." This meant in his view that the New York Power Authority could not be designated formally as the United States entity until the Federal Power Commission had approved its application for a licence (or alternatively until Congress had passed a measure designating it). He went on to say that the failure to name New York as the U.S. entity need not, in his view, affect the completion of the proceedings before the I.J.C., since representatives of the State of New York were appearing before the I.J.C. and it was evident that the New York Power Authority would be formally designated as soon as the Federal Power Commission had approved its application for a licence.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

Reference: Your WA-1792 of September 4th.

1. There follows a brief report of the discussions on the St. Lawrence Project which took place during your visit here yesterday and today.

2. After dinner at the Embassy last night there was a brief discussion with Mr. Acheson on the question of the early naming of the United States entity to construct and operate the United States share of the works. I had let Mr. Acheson know before your arrival that you wished to take this matter up with him, and he was ready with his reply. He said that the administration was governed by paragraph 12 of their application to the International Joint Commission, the opening sentence of which reads as follows: "The entity or entities in the United States which will construct and will operate the United States part of the project will be such entity or entities as may be authorized by the Congress, or licensed by the Federal Power Commission under the Federal Power Act." This meant that the New York Power authority could not be formally designated as the United States entity until the Federal Power Commission had approved its application for a licence. He went on to say that the failure to designate the power authority soon as the United States entity need not, in his view, affect the completion of the proceedings before the I.J.C., since New York representatives were appearing before the I.J.C. and it was evident that the power authority would be formally designated whenever the F.P.C. approved its application.

3. There was a further discussion of this matter and related issues at lunch today at the Embassy with Messrs. Fisher and Tate, legal adviser and assistant legal adviser of the State Department. It was suggested to them that it might be possible to designate the power authority as the entity subject to the approval by the F.P.C. of the issue of a licence to it. Fisher thought that this would cause a lot of trouble and would increase the difficulties in the F.P.C. proceedings, as the objection might well be made that the conditional designation of New York by the administration was a trespass on the functions vested by law in the F.P.C. and therefore in effect prejudged the issues before it.

4. We then discussed the course of the proceedings before the F.P.C. Fisher said that New York had not yet submitted its amendments to the original application of 1948, which had now been remitted to the F.P.C. by the District Court of Appeals. He thought it probable that under the rules an interval of thirty days would be required after the receipt of the amended application. In his view it was not unlikely that the F.P.C. would take its decision before Christmas, although it was impossible to forecast the course of the proceedings. The State Department would do what it could with propriety to prod the F.P.C. so as to prevent any unnecessary delays. It was apparent, however, on current prospects that the applications to the International Joint Commission were likely to be dealt with before the proceedings in the F.P.C. could be completed.

5. Fisher and Tate said that the administration was anxious that the proceedings in both commissions should be satisfactorily terminated before the new Congress meets. They understood our difficulties in reverting to the 1941 agreement, which they seemed to regard as defunct in fact although formally still in suspense. They did not appear to take seriously the prospects of any move in the new Congress to revive the joint project, and they showed little concern about the possibility that either candidate for the presidency might make commitments in the campaign which would be inconsistent with the project as now envisaged.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT; CANADIAN WITHDRAWAL FROM 1941 AGREEMENT

1. The Prime Minister, referring to discussion at the meeting of October 23rd,<sup>98</sup> reported that the International Joint Commission had on the previous Wednesday, October 29th, issued an Order of Approval in respect of the applications submitted by the governments of Canada and the United States on June 30th, 1952, for the development of power in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River. An application for the development of the U.S. share of the power was now before the U.S. Federal Power Commission. This was the last remaining step to be taken before actual construction could begin on both the seaway and power aspects of the project.

He had received, on October 21st, through the U.S. Ambassador to Canada, a personal message from President Truman regarding the possibility of allocating to navigation a greater share of the costs of the works described in the joint applications for power development in the International Rapids Section. He had replied to Mr. Woodward and later had written to him to the effect that the question of allocation of costs between power and navigation had been settled by the Exchange of Notes of June 30th, 1952.

Mr. McWhorter, one of the members of the U.S. Section of the International Joint Commission had dissented from the Order of Approval signed by the three Canadian members and the other two American members. Although the reason for Mr. McWhorter's dissent was not set out in the Order, it was understood that it was on the grounds that too great a proportion of the overall costs involved in the St. Lawrence development had been allocated to power. The dissent was disturbing in that Mr. McWhorter, in addition to being a member of the International Joint Commission, was also the Chief Engineer of Power of the Federal Power Commission which was now considering the application of the New York State Power Authority.

2. Mr. St. Laurent recalled the agreement reached at the White House on April 22nd [14] during the course of a meeting between the Minister of Transport, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and President Truman. It was agreed at that time that joint applications for power development on the basis of the alternative Canadian proposal would be submitted to the International Joint Commission immediately but that, if Congress approved the 1941 Agreement while the applications were under consideration by the Commission, both governments would agree to withdraw the applications and revert to the 1941 Agreement. Now that I.J.C. approval had been secured without favourable action having in the meantime been taken by Congress, it was suggested that the U.S. government be informed that Canada considered the 1941 Agreement as having been completely superseded and, therefore, did not intend henceforward to take any steps towards ratification of that Agreement. In order to avoid the accusation of injecting a controversial issue into the current Presidential elections in the United States or of being influenced by a new Administration in that country, it was further suggested that a formal note declaring Canada's position in this matter be handed to the Secretary of State of the United States on November 4th, the day of the Presidential elections. As a matter of courtesy, he proposed to send a personal letter to Mr. Truman giving him advance notice of the course of action proposed.

A draft letter was submitted and read.

(Draft letter, Prime Minister to President Truman, Oct. 31, 1952)†

3. Mr. St. Laurent said he was particularly anxious that Mr. Truman should not feel that the Canadian government had misled him into believing that Canada would still be prepared to revert to joint development and then had withdrawn from the 1941 Agreement as soon as favourable action had been taken by the International Joint Commission. With this in mind, it was made perfectly clear in his letter to the President that it would be unrealistic to expect Canada to revert now to the actual terms of the 1941 Agreement and that a new agreement would have to be negotiated between the two countries before joint development could be considered.

4. The Secretary stated that he was informed that the Federal Power Commission was obliged by its governing statute to give preference to the most inexpensive form of power and the mere existence of the 1941 Agreement consequently prejudiced to a certain extent the chances of success of the current application by the New York State Power Authority. This was one of the arguments in support of early Canadian withdrawal from the 1941 Agreement.

5. The Cabinet, after considerable further discussion, approved, subject to certain changes suggested during the course of discussion, the draft letter proposed to be sent by the Prime Minister to the President of the United States informing the latter that Canada intended to send a formal note to the Secretary of State of the United States on November 4th informing the latter that the Canadian government now considered the 1941 Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Basin Development Agreement as having been completely superseded and therefore did not intend to take any action towards ratification of that Agreement; an Order-in-Council to be passed accordingly.

Prime Minister to President of United States*

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, October 21, 1952

Dear Mr. President:

We are naturally delighted here in Canada that the International Joint Commission has approved the application made by our two Governments for the power development in the St. Lawrence River, and we will be deeply grateful for anything it is possible for you to do to facilitate or expedite the hearings before the Federal Power Commission, which is the last remaining obstacle to the commencement of this great power and navigation project, which means so much to both our countries. Your many friends in Canada would like to feel that the actual commencement of this historic undertaking would be associated with your term of office as President of the United States.

You will recall that, at the time you received my colleagues, Mr. Pearson and Mr. Chevrier, on the 14th of April last, when the two Governments agreed to submit applications to the International Joint Commission, it was also agreed that, if the Congress of the United States were to approve the joint project at any time while the application was under consideration by the International Joint Commission, both Governments would be ready to revert to the 1941 Agreement and withdraw the matter from the International Joint Commission.

Now that the International Joint Commission has approved the applications, and particularly as we have already taken certain preliminary steps with respect to the construction of the Seaway, my colleagues and I have concluded that it would no longer be practicable for the Canadian Government to revert to the actual terms of the 1941 Agreement which has never been ratified, and that the proper course for us to take is to inform your Secretary of State that the Canadian Government now regards that Agreement as having been completely superseded.

We feel there are two reasons for taking this course. One is that, so long as there appear to be two alternatives, it seems to us that the opponents of the St. Lawrence will endeavour to play one off against the other, and thereby thwart the development itself. The second consideration, which I feel sure you will fully understand, is that public opinion in Canada, and particularly in the Province of Ontario, has now become solidified in support of the plan which has been approved by the International Joint Commission.

In the circumstances, I do not believe it would be realistic to ask our Parliament to approve the actual terms of the 1941 Agreement, and any attempt to provide for a joint undertaking without a new agreement between our two countries would certainly be in the highest degree embarrassing to the present administration which, as you know, is going to have to face a general election in the relatively near future.

In these circumstances, we have felt here that the most appropriate time to advise the United States Government of our position would be November 4th, since, on that day, our action could not be used by anyone in any attempt to influence the course of the Presidential campaign, nor could it be interpreted as having, in any way, been influenced by the outcome of that campaign. Moreover, our action at this particular time seems a natural consequence of the decision of the International Joint Commission, and any delay in making our position clear might be open to misinterpretation.

I did not want to have formal action of this kind taken without advising you privately, as long as possible in advance, and the only reason this word was not sent to you earlier is that our decision as to timing, which was necessarily governed by the date of the decision of the International Joint Commission, has only just been made.

I should like, before concluding this letter, to say once more how deeply I have valued the close and understanding relationship we have had since I became Prime Minister of Canada, and to assure you again that I will not, and I know the Canadian people will not, forget the immense and courageous services you have rendered in these post-war years in strengthening the ramparts of freedom and reducing the awful prospect of a third world war.

With warmest personal regards and every good wish for the future.

Believe me, Mr. President,

Yours very sincerely,

[L.S. ST. LAURENT]

1. I have given Mr. Acheson the note stating that the Canadian Government regards the 1941 Agreement as having been superseded.<sup>99</sup> He told me that he had talked to the President yesterday, and that Mr. Truman took no objection at all to this course and told him that he would do his best to assist in having the steps completed which remain before construction can be begun. Mr. Acheson said that there had been some slight objection taken in the State Department (which I gathered he did not share) to our notification being made without prior discussion aiming at agreement if possible. He had mentioned this to the President, who considered the point unimportant.

I appreciated most highly your good letter of October thirty-first and, after receiving it, I instructed the Secretary of State to confer with your Ambassador here and inform him that I am in agreement with your proposal.

I am sincerely happy that this great project will be carried to a successful consummation. One of my first votes in the Senate of the United States in 1935 was for the Saint Lawrence Seaway. One of my last messages to the Congress covered the Saint Lawrence Seaway project.

I am most happy that there is now a prospect of its being built and completed by your Government.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY; F.P.C. PROCEEDINGS

Reference: WA-2752 of November 28.

The following is the text of the Canadian Government's petition to intervene which was filed with the Federal Power Commission Friday afternoon:

United States of America
Federal Power Commission

In the matter of Power Authority of the State of New York Project No. 2000

Petition to Intervene of the Government of Canada

The Government of Canada, through its duly accredited representative to the United States, hereby petitions the Commission for leave to intervene in the above-entitled proceeding for the purpose of supporting, for reasons set out below, the application of the Power Authority of the State of New York for a license for a hydro-electric power project in the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence River. Pursuant to Section 1.8 of the Commission's Rules and Regulations, the petitioner sets forth following facts showing that the petitioner has an interest which may be directly affected in the proceeding, which is inadequately represented by existing parties and as to which the petitioner may be bound by the Commission's action in the proceeding and also that the petitioner's participation in the proceeding will serve to further the public interest of the United States.

1. Canada has a direct and vital interest in approval by the Federal Power Commission of the project of the Power Authority of the State of New York for the following reasons: The immediate development of the power potential of the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence River is of vital concern to Canada. The location of the international boundary along the St. Lawrence River makes it impossible for Canada to proceed alone with the necessary construction. The project must, in view of the geographical facts of the situation, be a joint bi-national venture. Canada is ready to proceed immediately with its part of the project. It cannot do so, however, until the appropriate United States entity is named to proceed with the joint construction project. There appears to be no entity other than the Power Authority of the State of New York, which is prepared to go ahead at once with construction of the United States half of the project. Therefore, the licensing of such project is a necessary step to enable Canada to proceed immediately with the development of the hydro-electric power potential of the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence River.

2. The inherently bi-national character of the project and the urgency of undertaking immediate construction are emphasized by the actions already taken by the two national governments. The project contemplated by the Power Authority of the State of New York is an integral part of the plan for the development of the hydro-electric power potential of the St. Lawrence River which was submitted by Canada and the United States to the International Joint Commission on June 30, 1952. The International Joint Commission, which is a permanent body consisting of representatives of the Canadian and United States Governments and which was established pursuant to the provisions of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909, approved the plan on October 29, 1952. The plan calls for construction of the necessary works by entities to be designated by the two countries. Construction will be under the supervision of the Bi-National Joint Board of Engineers. Upon completion of the project, control over the discharge of water from Lake Ontario and the flow of water through the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence River will be exercised by the International Joint Commission, acting through the Joint Board of Control.

The Government of Canada has designated the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario as the Canadian power-producing entity. That body stands ready to undertake immediate construction of the Canadian half of the project as soon as the Power Authority of the State of New York is licensed by the Federal Power Commission.

3. Construction of the Canadian half of the St. Lawrence Power project is in the direct interest of the United States. Such construction will avert a power shortage in eastern Canada. Such a shortage would inevitably affect the continuing supply to the United States of critical raw materials, such as nickel and cobalt, which are indispensable to that country's production for both civilian and defence needs; and might well jeopardize the production in Canada of defence munitions and supplies for the United States armed forces. Moreover, the maintenance and expansion of Canadian industrial production is of particular concern to the United States because of that country's long and continuing interest in strengthening the economic structure as well as the defence potential of the North American Continent. This interest has been declared to be a fundamental tenet of United States policy in a number of official declarations made by that government — e.g., the Hyde Park Declaration of 1941; the subsequent exchange of notes between the two governments of May 1945 extending the Hyde Park Declaration; and the Statement of Principles of Economic Cooperation approved by the President on September 20, 1950. This policy has also received official recognition in the report of the United States-Canada Joint Industrial Mobilization Committee of August 13, 1952; and in the numerous directives and orders promulgated by various agencies of the United States Government, including the Munitions Board, the Defense Department and the National Production Authority, implementing such policy declarations.

4. Petitioner seeks to intervene in this proceeding in order that it may amplify the foregoing by presenting evidence and testimony at the hearing which will commence December 9, 1952, and in such other ways as may be appropriate.

Wherefore, the Government of Canada, through its Ambassador to the United States of America, asks leave to intervene and participate in this proceeding as a party.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

In a recent conversation, Mr. Hugh Burns, Vice-President of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Association, told a member of my staff that the Association is confident that the Federal Power Commission will issue a licence to the Power Authority of the State of New York before January 20. The Association's information is to the effect that three members of the Commission are in favour of licensing the project. However, Burns considers that the action of the Commission will be contested in the courts and that litigation will continue for one and a half to two years. Burns also believes that the Power Authority will not be able to float bonds or proceed with its part of the project until the litigation is completed. (We have also heard, on the other hand, that the Power authority will attempt to deal with this possibility by seeking an appropriation of funds by the New York State Legislature.)

2. The Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Association, therefore, argues that work on the project cannot commence, under present plans, for about two years and, as an alternative, the Association is drafting legislation for a joint seaway project which it hopes to have introduced in the Congress around February 1, 1953. Burns declined to reveal what was in the proposed legislation, but said they had reason to believe that many of those whom General Eisenhower has designated to fill Cabinet or other important posts in his administration would support a joint project. He specifically mentioned Dulles, Humphrey, McKay, Sommerfield, and Vandenberg. Burns also said that they expected increased support from the two committees of Congress which would consider the legislation. Consequently, an effort will be made to push the proposed legislation through both houses of Congress during the "honeymoon" which the administration is expected to enjoy with Congress for six to eight months. One new factor favouring congressional approval is the realization that Canada is able and willing to construct the seaway alone, and that the United States might therefore forfeit its own interests in the St. Lawrence.

3. Burns' references to the specific sources from which the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Association expects to get support for its proposed legislation indicates that the association is already engaged in drumming up support. It would appear that they have already canvassed the key members of the new administration. When Burns asked what the attitude of the Canadian Government would be to the new proposals it was pointed out to him that the 1941 agreement has been superseded and that, although we were aware of the likelihood of delay due to litigation, we were presently concerned exclusively with the project approved by the I.J.C. and with the all-Canadian seaway.

4. As the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Association is appearing in the F.P.C. hearings this week, we may hear more of the Association's plans and will endeavour to keep you informed. There was no indication whether the proposed legislation included a joint power development. However, you will note that the Association's proposal fits in with the only public statement that General Eisenhower appears to have made on the seaway since his nomination last July. That statement was revised after consideration, to indicate that he thought it would be wrong for the United States to forego its interest in the waterway.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

Reference: WA-2821 of December 8.

The Canadian Desk at the State Department has orally informed us that a letter has been received from Congressman George Dondero (Republican, Michigan) who will be Chairman of the House Public Works Committee in the 83rd Congress, asking the State Department to inform the Canadian Government that he intends to introduce legislation in the next session of Congress requesting the administration to negotiate a new agreement with Canada for the development of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Basin, as provided in the 1941 Agreement, but taking into account later developments.

2. The Canadian Desk intends to give us a memorandum with the substance of Dondero's letter, in a day or so. It is not clear, however, whether it is Dondero's intention to include the power project in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River in the proposed new agreement, and it may not be clear even when we obtain the text of the relevant parts of his letter. In any case, it would probably be beyond his control as soon as any such measure reached Congress.

3. It appears that Michigan, and possibly some of the other upper lake States, are worried because the Canadian commitment to provide deep water navigation extends only to Lake Erie, and that they would still have to get Congress to appropriate about 90 million dollars to complete deep water navigation to Lake Superior. Most of the work would have to be in the Toledo and Port Huron area.

4. With reference to WA-2821 of December 8, Danielian has now added that the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Association is under great pressure from its membership in the upper lake area to support the sort of proposal that Dondero intends to put forward and to do whatever is possible to ensure that the United States will participate in the seaway. It is only thus, they claim, that they can ensure that the waterway will be completed to the head of the Lakes because of the necessity of obtaining such a large appropriation to complete the job. They point out that this is approximately one-third of what Canada expects to spend on the Canadian waterway. Danielian is emphatic in giving what assurance he can that the proposals which he is discussing with proponents of the seaway in Congress cover only the seaway phase of the project and that he is advising that such legislation should be introduced only after the Federal Power Commission has acted upon New York's application (i.e. after the middle of February). Danielian, of course, would have no control over the timing of the introduction of whatever measures the proponents may wish to introduce and Dondero, as a firm supporter of the seaway, will undoubtedly be under great pressure to act as soon as possible.

5. Although the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Association still consider that delay in starting the project due to litigation is likely, Danielian is seeking, on behalf of his supporters in the upper lakes region, some assurance that the Canadian Government will not take irrevocable steps towards the construction of the seaway in the International Rapids Section of the River until Congress has had an opportunity to urge a new agreement to cover the seaway phase of the project only. If they could be assured that sufficient time for Congress to act would elapse between the granting of a licence and the taking of the first irrevocable step toward the Canadian Seaway in the International Rapids Section (even if the F.P.C. action is not challenged in the courts), the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Association will continue to urge its members in the upper lakes region to refrain from challenging the F.P.C. licence if granted. They would attempt to limit the proposals of supporters in Congress to the seaway only and to counsel that such proposals be delayed until the F.P.C. has acted.

6. We have refrained from stating that irrevocable steps toward the construction of the Canadian Seaway have already been taken and, indeed, it may be best to suggest to Danielian merely that we would only be able to consider any new proposals when and if they were properly put forward. This is approximately what the Minister told Danielian when he was in Ottawa last August and he has drawn conclusions from those conversations which are satisfactory to him. In this connection it should be remembered that the Examiner now hearing the New York application rejected it in 1950 because it did not encompass the development of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Basin as provided for in the 1941 Agreement. Although it would be far-fetched to claim that arrangements for a power project in the St. Lawrence should ensure navigation works above Lake Erie, the Canadian commitment to construct the waterway to Lake Erie does not completely answer the former objection.

7. Danielian intends to pursue the question referred to in paragraph 5, however, and has asked us specifically whether it is physically necessary that there be a time lag between commencement of construction of the power project and commencement of construction of navigation facilities in the International Rapids Section. We have said only that we have no information in this connection, and it is, therefore, probable that he will try to approach Mr. Henry, or Department of Transport officials in Ottawa, in the next few days. (Incidentally, the Examiner said on the record, but in an off-hand manner, on Thursday, that he did not think New York's application should be referred to Congress again.)

8. It would appear that, regardless of the outcome of the present proceeding before the F.P.C., measures will be introduced in Congress which may cause embarrassment and delay. It is also possible that our attitude towards such measures may cause some proponents to change their position with regard to court action on New York's licence if granted. The Associated Press reporter covering the F.P.C. hearing, and other newspaper men here, have commented that recent conversations they have had on Capitol Hill indicated that many Congressmen have been worried by the administration's warnings that United States national interests may be forfeited if the seaway is built entirely by Canada. Regardless of the facts, they feel this may be good election material. Any comments on the possibility of United States co-operation in the seaway should, therefore, be carefully considered. Meanwhile, it would perhaps be best to point out to Danielian that the most time consuming part of the construction of the waterway would be in the Lachine area and that it would therefore be logical to commence construction there ahead of the International Rapids Section, and to let him draw his own conclusions from this. Your comments would be appreciated.

Repeated to Canadian Delegation, New York for Mr. Pearson #264.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT — F.P.C. LICENCE

The Interdepartmental St. Lawrence group, chaired by Mr. Pickersgill and including Mr. Lessard and Mr. R.A.C. Henry, met yesterday afternoon to consider whether anything should be done immediately if the Federal Power Commission hearing on Spalinski's application<sup>101</sup> ends Friday. It was felt that Canadian action in the next few weeks (including any reply to Danielian's approach to the Embassy or to the State Department's memorandum on Congressman Dondero's plan to introduce a bill calling for a new navigation and power agreement — your teletypes W.A. 2867 of December 12 and W.A. 2876 of December 13)† would depend largely on whether Spalinski's application is dismissed by the F.P.C. later this week, making it legally possible for the Commission to issue a licence to New York more or less immediately.

2. In the light of reports from you and those who have been in Washington for the hearings and of the mounting interest in the United States in a new agreement with Canada covering navigation alone or navigation and power, it appeared that, if the Spalinski hearing is not concluded until after the new administration takes over, favourable F.P.C. action on the New York application will be problematical.

It was considered, that in such circumstances, the best solution might be to address a note to Mr. Dulles very shortly after January 20, pressing for action on the power project. Even if this were done, however, the possibility of early construction of the power project seems doubtful if the F.P.C. does not approve the project before January 20.

3. In view of these factors, the urgent need for power and doubt about the likelihood of the F.P.C. reaching an early and favourable decision after January 20, the Interdepartmental group felt that everything possible and reasonable should be done in an effort to obtain approval of New York's application before January 20 if the Spalinski application is dismissed this week and the F.P.C. is thus, technically at least, placed in a position to issue an early license. It was believed that, even in that event, one or two of the Commissioners who are favourable to New York would be reluctant to approve the project before January 20 because of uncertainty as to their personal future. The Committee concluded, therefore, that we should explore with you and Mr. Pearson the possibility of his having a talk in New York in the next few days with someone in the incoming administration, such as Mr. Dulles or Mr. Brownell, if the Spalinski case is dismissed. The suggestion was that Mr. Pearson would presumably do this only with the knowledge of the present administration and that he might take the line that the need for power was urgent; that the United States has delayed the power project for a considerable period; that if the incoming administration let this project hang fire until they took over and were faced with new resolutions and bills in Congress involving power, they would find themselves in considerable embarrassment with regard to such domestic matters as the claims of the other Eastern states to a share of the power; that if they were to use their influence with a view to obtaining a favourable decision by the F.P.C. early in January, they would have one knotty problem out of the way; and that any further delay on the part of the United States in facilitating construction of the power project would have very damaging results for Canada-U.S. relations. It was contemplated that before the proposed talk Mr. Pearson would be given a background brief on the St. Lawrence project.

4. While it is a question whether such a talk would have the desired effect, it seems here to be the only step that can usefully be taken to obtain a prompt decision if the Spalinski application is dismissed and it would not seem to be out of line with the aims of the present administration.

I should be grateful if you would let me have, at your earliest convenience, your views on this proposal, including any suggestions as to whom Mr. Pearson might approach and how the present administration could be informed of the action contemplated. It would be helpful if your reply could be repeated to Mr. Pearson in New York.

5. At a Cabinet meeting held this afternoon, the Prime Minister brought this message to the attention of Ministers. There were some members of the Government who were somewhat doubtful as to the wisdom of the proposal that Mr. Pearson should have a talk with Dulles or Brownell before the new Administration takes over on January 20, but Cabinet would nevertheless be glad to have your views in this matter.<sup>102</sup>

OK. C. E[berts]

We agree that our course of action will depend largely on what the F.P.C. does with Spalinski's application; and that if the F.P.C. has not by January 20 approved New York's application, we should press the new administration very shortly after January 20 to stimulate action on the power project.

2. If the F.P.C. dismisses Spalinski's application, we think there is not much the Canadian Government can do to further the prompt issuance of a licence to New York before January 20. We doubt if Mr. Dulles, particularly before he assumes office, can, or would seek to, influence a semi-judicial body to act on a matter on which evidence has been taken and judgment is awaited. From the practical point of view, it seems to us that if anything of the sort can be done, Governor Dewey might be able to do more than anyone, and I suspect he is already doing what he can.

3. It might possibly help, however, if Mr. Pearson could find a convenient opportunity to tell Mr. Dulles how badly we need power; that, after twenty years of effort, I.J.C. has approved a project acceptable to both governments; that now there is but one remaining step — approval by the F.P.C. of New York's application — to be taken before construction can begin. We prefer such a broad statement of our interest because it makes clear not only our desire to have New York's application approved but it implies that we are in no mood to welcome any alternative.

4. If it is decided to approach the new administration before January 20, I see no difficulty in advising the present administration of what we are doing. It can be done here easily through the State Department.

5. In short, if the Spalinski application is dismissed, I think we should leave the question of seeking to influence the F.P.C. to New York State. There is one possibility we might bear in mind. The present administration might designate New York conditionally as the entity to deal with Hydro. If that were done it would leave only one step to be taken — the approval by the F.P.C. of New York's application — and remove one possible source of delay.

6. In our approach to all these questions we are strongly influenced by the belief that the action taken by the F.P.C. will be a resultant chiefly of the domestic forces interested in the production and distribution of power in the United States. Our best hope lies in the political strength of Governor Dewey and the New York Power Authority. I believe that we should encourage New York rather than attempt ourselves directly to put pressure on the F.P.C. through either the present or the new administration. If Governor Dewey and Mr. Pearson were to be in New York at the same time, I should think a private talk between them might be advantageous.

7. Today's events at the hearing, on which we shall report shortly, may have a bearing on the contents of this message.

Addressed Candel New York No. 28, repeated External Ottawa as WA-2926.

Following for Mr. Pearson, Begins:

1. You will now have seen from my message of yesterday (repeated to you as Candel No. 26) that we are in full agreement on what might appropriately be said to Mr. Dulles at this time. We delayed our reply in hope that yesterday the diversion caused by the application of Spalinski to build the power works would have been disposed of. Spalinski seems to be unbalanced, and his complete incapacity to undertake the project was exposed during cross examination at the F.P.C. hearing. When the hearing ended yesterday, however, the F.P.C. examiner adjourned proceedings until February 2nd, when the hearings will be resumed. The examiner will, therefore, not be able to make his formal report to the full commission before February. It is certain that the Spalinski application will be dismissed.

2. When it became clear that he had no solid backing, I authorized Mundell yesterday to say at the hearing that Spalinski's proposals were unacceptable to the Canadian Government. This was done with the approval of the examiner and of counsel for the F.P.C. (It appeared, incidentally, that his application envisaged payment by Canada of a substantial part of the costs of the United States half of the project.)

3. I am afraid that we cannot now expect the F.P.C. to issue a licence to the New York Power Authority before March, and I think there is not anything that we can do officially to hasten action, at any rate until after the new Administration takes over. Ends.

UNITED STATES IMPORT RESTRICTIONS ON DAIRY PRODUCTS, ETC.

The question of possible further Canadian action on this matter has been discussed between the Departments concerned in the light of information gathered by Bull in Washington last month and of Hopper's<sup>103</sup> letter to Isbister of December 28. It was agreed that no retaliatory action ought to be taken at this time. On the other hand, it was considered desirable to remind the U.S. authorities of Canada's continuing and active interest in the removal of these restrictions. Hence it was agreed that a note of reminder ought to be handed to State Department and, unless you see objections, we would be grateful if you would do so. The text of the proposed note follows at the end of this telegram.

2. We are thinking of giving copies of this note to the other governments directly concerned in the removal of U.S. restrictions but would not do so if it would embarrass the U.S. Administration. Would you please raise this question with State Department. If State Department asked to publish our note we would gladly agree, but we would not take the initiative.

3. Text of note follows: Begins: Sir, I have the honour to refer to my Note No. 496 of August 27, 1951, regarding the restrictions imposed upon imports of fats, oils and dairy products under Section 104 of the Defense Production Act of 1951. These restrictions are a matter of continuing concern to the Canadian Government. It will be remembered that in my previous Note the Canadian Government drew attention to the damage being done to Canadian trade with the United States in dried milk products and cheese in particular. It referred in addition, at that time, to the far-reaching implications of these controls which are inconsistent with the obligations assumed by the United States under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

It will be remembered also that these import restrictions were the subject of detailed consideration at the Sixth Session of the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. A resolution, adopted on October 26, 1951, recognized that these measures constitute an infringement of Article XI of the Agreement. At the same time, the Contracting Parties took note of the determination stated, on the part of the United States Government, to seek repeal of Section 104 of the Defense Production Act, and they took note also of the high priority and urgency which it was stated would be given to further action to this end.

The Canadian Government was informed to its great satisfaction of the efforts which were made in the United States in the fall of 1951 to secure the passage of remedial legislation, although the current session of Congress came to an end before a successful conclusion could be reached. The Canadian Government wishes to take this opportunity to urge that these import restrictions be removed without further delay so that normal trade and normal commercial relations may be resumed in the fields affected.

I have, etc. Ends.

UNITED STATES IMPORT RESTRICTIONS ON DAIRY PRODUCTS

On receiving teletype No. WA-166 of January 17 from the Canadian Embassy in Washington, I telephoned Dr. Isbister and Mr. Reisman to discuss with them the most appropriate procedure for transmitting copies of our latest note to the United States Government to other governments directly interested in the removal of the United States restrictions.

We agreed that copies of the note should be made available to the governments of the Netherlands, Denmark, Norway, France, Italy, Finland, New Zealand, Australia and the United Kingdom, all of which had taken an active part in the debate on this issue at the last session of the Contracting Parties to the GATT. In addition, Dr. Isbister suggested that a copy be forwarded to the Swiss Government which, although not a member of the GATT, was no doubt closely following the steps which were being taken with a view to the repeal of the import control amendment to the Defence Production Act.

It was also agreed that, instead of distributing copies of the notes through the representatives of the countries concerned in Ottawa, we should ask our missions in these countries to undertake the distribution. This procedure would serve to keep our missions informed of the latest developments in connection with this question.

U.S. IMPORT RESTRICTIONS ON DAIRY PRODUCTS, ETC.

We learn from Isbister (John English)<sup>104</sup> and Willoughby<sup>105</sup> (State Department) that the U.S. Senate decided yesterday, by a substantial majority, to defer action designed to eliminate the "Andresen Amendment"<sup>106</sup> of the U.S. Defence Production Act. Apparently this means that Congress will not rescind the Amendment before the Act expires at the end of June. Willoughby adds that a new Defence Production Act will be under consideration in the near future and that, of course, State Department will continue to fight the inclusion of anything resembling the Andresen Amendment.

2. We must now consider whether or not to take retaliatory action. The tentative thinking of officials immediately concerned is running along the following lines:

(a) Action in this particular field cannot be isolated either from general relations with the United States or from the whole future of GATT.

(b) In regard to GATT the decision whether or not to retaliate would probably depend on how far we thought we were going to be able to keep the United States up to the full spirit of its undertakings or how far we should now envisage a gradual crumbling. In the latter case immediate and ad hoc considerations might predominate over strict compliance with the Agreement.

(c) It is quite probable that Ministers will not want to take any retaliatory action unless there is an outbreak of criticism in Canada.

(d) On the other hand, as State Department officials have been at pains to point out, if we are going to retaliate, there is much to be said for doing it quickly so that the point of our action will be clear; delay might lead to misunderstandings of our motives at the time when the action was actually taken.

3. This matter will, no doubt, have to receive the attention of top officials and also of Ministers in the near future. In the meanwhile we should greatly appreciate your comments and guidance.

1. From Thorp's remarks reported in my WA-337 of today,† it is apparent that retaliation would not surprise the United States Administration. I doubt that, in the circumstances, it would have any disadvantageous effects on Canadian-United States relations.

2. If retaliatory measures which would affect farmers in the Northern United States and would not cause serious difficulties within Canada could be adopted immediately, I think they should be taken.

3. However, if retaliatory measures would cause as much difficulty for Canada as for the United States or if they could not be adopted until a comparatively short time before passage of the new legislation can be expected, I think action should be suspended until we know whether Section 104 will or will not be renewed.

4. If the new legislation contains a provision similar to Section 104, I think retaliatory measures should be adopted, even though the effect might be serious in Canada. If GATT is to continue to mean anything such action would appear to be essential. If it looks as though this section were to become semi-permanent, our retaliation need not be directly aimed at northern United States agriculture, although immediate retaliation ought to be so aimed if it is to be undertaken.

UNITED STATES IMPORT RESTRICTIONS ON DAIRY PRODUCTS

I understand that, at to-day's meeting of the Cabinet, Mr. Howe will raise the question whether the Canadian Government should undertake retaliation in relation to these restrictions as we are entitled to do under the provisions of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Mr. Howe will suggest that no retaliatory measures be taken by the Government.

Before his departure Mr. Pearson indicated that he would be prepared to concur in any suitable plans for retaliation, if Mr. Howe and Mr. Abbott so decided and if Cabinet concurred. I do not think that he meant to imply that he was urging retaliation. He did feel, however, that the Government ought to take some sort of notice of the United States restrictions which, despite the determined efforts of the United States Administration, have not been repealed to date; if the Government did not do so, the General Agreement would become virtually meaningless.

Mr. Howe has also been giving some consideration to the desirability of issuing a press release outlining the position of the Canadian Government. He may raise this matter in Cabinet. My own view is that there would appear to be little advantage in issuing a statement dealing with measures which the Canadian Government is not prepared to take. In the circumstances a brief statement to the House after Parliament reconvenes would perhaps be preferable.

U.S. IMPORT RESTRICTIONS ON DAIRY PRODUCTS; RETALIATION

16. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, referring to discussion at the meeting of August 22nd, 1951, said that the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy had considered whether any measures of retaliation should be taken by Canada now that it appeared unlikely that Section 104 of the Defence Production Act, which placed restrictions on the import of dairy products into the United States, would be rescinded by this Congress. There had been a difference of view within the Committee. It would be most undesirable to start a war of retaliation with the United States and he recommended that no such measures be adopted at present.

17. The Minister of Finance expressed agreement. It would be difficult to impose tariff restrictions that would not add to the cost of living. Any measures would have to be taken by legislation and this would provoke a general debate on tariff and trade questions in Parliament. It would be desirable, however, for Ministers who had occasion to speak in the United States to draw attention to the undesirable effects of the action of Congress in breaking the agreements that had been made by the United States.

18. The Minister of Resources and Development as Acting Minister of Agriculture said the Department of Agriculture was in agreement that measures of retaliation at present were undesirable.

19. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and agreed that no measure be taken at the present time in retaliation for the restrictions imposed by the U.S. Congress through the amendment of the Defence Production Act on the importation of dairy products into the United States.

NORTH ATLANTIC COMMUNITY;
U.S. RESTRICTIONS ON DAIRY PRODUCTS

Dear Claude [Isbister],

On my way to the Lisbon Conference of the North Atlantic Council it occurred to me that an occasion might arise there to emphasize, within the framework of the North Atlantic Community and Article II of the North Atlantic Treaty, the concern felt by the Canadian Governments and other North Atlantic Government over the "Andresen Amendment".

As you know, Mr. Pearson did refer to this at the one meeting of the Committee on the North Atlantic Community that was held in Lisbon. Immediately afterwards I wired home for the views of your Department and the Department of Finance and duly received them.

At the same time I asked the U.S. Delegation what they would think of some reference to the matter in full Council. They asked for instructions from Washington and received, not a telegram, but an informal telephone call. They were told that an informal reference to the matter in full Council would certainly not be taken amiss; indeed a little needling might be useful. On the other hand, they doubted the desirability or propriety of any formal expression of views by the Council.

All this information was passed on to Mr. Pearson. However, when the report of the Committee came up in the full Council, the circumstances did not seem propitious for any mention of this matter. There were a lot of delicate issues unsettled in completely different fields and it did not seem wise to needle the United States on this subject. Accordingly neither Mr. Pearson nor any other Minister made any reference to it in full Council.

Yours sincerely,

A.F.W. PLUMPTRE

New York Times despatch from Geneva reporting that Canada was preparing programme of sharp and extensive retaliatory restrictions on imports of United States farm products, which was carried in Canadian press and over radio, prompted question in House of Commons yesterday (Feb. 29).

2. Mr. Howe replied that Canadian Government had decided, in present circumstances, not to take retaliatory action. Situation had not reached point where retaliation would be either effective or appropriate. Geneva despatch was therefore erroneous and did not reflect views of Government which had authorized no new statement of policy and regretted press report. Canada deplored United States import controls which had been introduced in direct contravention of our trade agreement with United States and seriously impaired value of certain tariff concessions negotiated at Geneva and Torquay.

IMPORT CONTROLS ON CHEESE AND OTHER DAIRY PRODUCTS

Following for Dr. C.M. Isbister, Director, International Trade Relations Branch, Dept. of Trade and Commerce and G.R. Paterson, Esq., Director, Agriculture and Fisheries Branch, Dept. Trade and Commerce, Begins:

1. In Hopper's absence, Hillhouse<sup>109</sup> was called to a meeting this afternoon to which had been invited the agricultural representatives of all countries interested in the import controls on dairy products. The meeting was held just prior to the issue by the USDA of press release 1458, copies of which are going forward by bag.

2. The meeting and the press release were concerned with the changes in defence food order No. 3, which result from the modification of Section 104 of the Defence Production Act as amended, and from changes in supply factors affecting several of the commodities covered by Section 104.

3. It was stressed that the changes announced today have been determined by the secretary on the basis of presently anticipated effects of imports on domestic production, marketing, storage and price support programs, during the current period, and that the secretary will continue to review the situation affecting commodities or products included under Section 104 and, as a result of such reviews, possibly increase, decrease or eliminate entirely the quotas which have been established.

4. From the Canadian standpoint, the most important part of the announcement was to the effect that the import quota for cheddar cheese for 1952-53 from all countries has been established at an annual rate of eight and one-half million pounds, which is approximately equal to the annual rate of cheddar cheese imports authorized during the 1951-52 period. It was estimated that Canadian share of this will amount to about 25 per cent of the total but we will report further when this point is clarified. In apportioning the total quota a new formula will be used. In 1952-53 the quotas for each class of cheese will be apportioned among individual importers on the basis of the proportion of the United States total which was imported by each importer in 1950 subject to certain allowances.

W.F. Hillhouse, Assistant Commercial Secretary (Agriculture), Embassy in United States.

5. Controls in effect during the 1951-52 control period on butter, butter oil, flaxseed (except screenings, scalplings, chaff and scourings) linseed oil, nonfat dry milk solids, peanuts and rice (except meal, flour, polish, bran, starch), are continued without change.

6. Emmenthaler, gruyere process, roquefort, and certain less important special varieties, are being freed from import controls as are also the rice and flaxseed products bracketed in paragraph five above.

7. The import quota for casein has been established at an annual rate of 40 million pounds or approximately 25 percent less than last year's. However, last year's quota was not completely filled and it is expected that the 40 million pound quota will take care of anticipated imports for 1952-53.

8. Licences will be issued to individual importers as quickly as possible for approximately one-third of their annual quota. These quotas need not be used necessarily before June 30, 1953.

9. Strong representations were made at the meeting by Dutch and Italian officials who indicated their distress at the very narrow interpretation which the Department of Agriculture had placed upon the provisions of the new Section 104 and the intent of Congress as expressed in the conference report. It was pointed out by the Dutch representative that, by removing emmenthaler, gruyere and roquefort, from control while retaining quotas upon certain special Dutch and Italian types, the United States was in fact contravening the anti-discriminatory provisions of the GATT.

10. Haggerty, the new Director of OFAR, stressed that little time had been available to make adequate analysis of the situation and that it was his hope that the continuing reviews of the situation to be made by the secretary might, at some future date, make possible some revision in the present regulations. Ends.

U.S. IMPORT RESTRICTIONS; ACTION UNDER G.A.T.T.

42. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of February 12th, reported that the amended version of the U.S. Defence Production Act, which entered into force on July 1st, contained a section substantially similar to section 104 of the 1950 Act restricting imports of fats, oils, cheese and other dairy products. At the Intersessional Committee of the G.A.T.T. in February 1952, a working party had been established, of which Canada was a member, to receive any notifications by Contracting Parties of their intention to suspend application of concessions to the United States. The Danish government had now enquired whether Canada intended to request the convening of the working party and, if not whether Canada would support a Danish initiative along similar lines.

The Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy had considered the question and agreed that there would be little purpose in having the special working party convened at this time since the regular session of the Contracting Parties was scheduled to open on October 2nd. It was recommended that a reply be sent to the Danish note accordingly.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, July 14, 1952 — Cab. Doc. 219-52)†

43. The Cabinet approved the recommendation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and agreed that a reply be sent to the Danish note on the convening of the working party under G.A.T.T. to consider import restrictions imposed by the U.S. Defence Production Act stating that:

(a) the Canadian government thought it would be desirable to postpone discussions until October or November when the next regular session of the Contracting Parties was expected to be held; but that

(b) as a member of the special working party, Canada would be willing to participate in any discussion which might be held in advance of the regular session at the request of a complaining contracting party.

Ottawa, August 14, 1952

UNITED STATES IMPORT RESTRICTIONS ON DAIRY PRODUCTS

In our letter of July 24† we asked our Embassy in Washington to give consideration to the following questions:

(a) Is retaliation by Canada likely to be instrumental in focusing the attention of the United States Congress and public on the harmful effects of the type of protectionist policy exemplified by Section 104 and the later revision of the Defence Production Act;

(b) In the event that retaliatory action were considered to be both practicable and effective, what timing would be most appropriate for such action; and

(c) Which of the tariff concessions initially negotiated by Canada with the United States might best lend themselves to compensatory suspension from the point of view of their impact on United States exporters and bearing in mind the provisions of Article XXIII (2) of the General Agreement which stipulates that the Contracting Parties may authorize the suspension of a concession to the extent that it is considered "appropriate in the circumstances."

It was felt that the views of our Embassy on these questions would provide a useful basis for any further consideration which might have to be given to the practicability of retaliatory action by Canada prior to the opening of the Seventh Session of the Contracting Parties and, possibly, prior to a meeting of the special working party between now and the regular GATT session in October.

2. I now attach for your information a copy of Letter No. 1787 of August 8 which embodies our Embassy's reply. You will note that, in the view of our Embassy, retaliation by Canada might well have a tangible effect both on the United States public and Congress, probably more so than similar action by any of the other affected countries. On the matter of timing our Embassy makes a cogent case for initiating whatever action it might be decided to take some time after the Presidential elections and before Congress reconvenes in January. A date in late November or early December would, accordingly, appear to be indicated. This timing would have the additional advantage that it could be brought into direct conjunction with a decision of the Contracting Parties whose Seventh Session is likely to last until some time toward the end of November.

3. As for the possible commodities to which the retaliatory suspension or modification of Canadian tariff concessions to the United States might be applied, our Embassy suggests that selected types of dried fruit products would seem to offer the most practical basis for consideration.<sup>110</sup> The exact scope of our retaliatory restrictions would, of course, have to be considered carefully here with a view to ensuring that our recourse to the provisions of Article XXIII was endorsed by the Contracting Parties as "appropriate in the circumstances."

4. According to our latest information from The Hague it is still possible that the Netherlands may request the convening of the special working party which was set up last February to consider the United States import restrictions on dairy products in the light of subsequent action by the Congress. If the Netherlands decide to proceed with their complaint prior to the regular session of the Contracting Parties,<sup>111</sup> I assume that Ministers would wish to review the Canadian position on the question of retaliation so that our representatives on the special working party could be provided with appropriate instructions.

UNITED STATES IMPORT RESTRICTIONS ON DAIRY PRODUCTS

In your marginal note on my memorandum of August 14 you suggested that it might be possible for us, by way of an approach to the Netherlands Embassy in Ottawa, to dissuade the Dutch from submitting their complaint to the special working party in advance of the regular session of the Contracting Parties which is scheduled to open in October.<sup>112</sup>

2. You may be interested to know that the Dutch have already approached us in this matter, not only through their Commercial Counsellor here, but also in Geneva and The Hague. They were anxious to find out if the Canadian Government was prepared to take retaliatory action either at this time or at some subsequent date which might be considered more appropriate in the light of the impending United States elections.

3. In reply we informed the Dutch that, while Ministers had not so far given consideration to the substance of the question of retaliation, they had agreed that the present time did not appear to be particularly suitable for a discussion of the continued United States restrictions in the GATT forum and that we should prefer to postpone such a discussion until the October session. In the event that retaliatory action were decided upon, it was, in any case, likely to have a substantially greater impact on the United States Administration and Congress either immediately before or immediately after the Presidential elections.

4. At the same time, we made it clear to the Dutch that, if the Netherlands Government pressed for the convening of the special working party prior to the Seventh Session, we would of course expect to participate in the discussions.

5. While the Dutch are ostensibly reluctant to proceed without the active co-operation and support of other interested countries, they would nevertheless appear to be determined to call for a meeting of the special working party, possibly in conjunction with the meeting of the Intersessional Committee in early September. They recently intimated to us once again, through our Embassy in The Hague, that they would go ahead as planned unless (a) we could offer strong reasons against their proposed course of action or (b) "promise support to them for retaliatory action at a later date." Although our Embassy did not clarify the meaning of (b), I assume that what the Dutch had in mind was an advance commitment on our part to impose retaliatory restrictions rather than merely to support in the Contracting Parties such retaliatory action as the Dutch intended to take. In any case, we informed our Embassy that there was nothing we would wish to add to the explanation of the Canadian position which had already been provided to the Dutch.

6. In the light of these circumstances I should be inclined to doubt if there would be any tangible advantage in making a further approach to the Dutch at this time.<sup>113</sup>

UNITED STATES IMPORT RESTRICTIONS ON DAIRY PRODUCTS

Repeated London for Bull and Deutsch.

We have had an informal meeting of delegates principally affected by United States restrictions on dairy products, for the purpose of exchanging preliminary views on what further action to take at 7th session. The following were represented: Australia, Canada, Denmark, Italy, Netherlands, New Zealand and Norway.

2. In view of continued violation of agreement by United States, consensus of representatives of other countries was that those suffering injury should take strong and concerted steps of a compensatory nature to preserve integrity of GATT and to restore the balance of concessions. Members of United States delegation had informally indicated to one or two of those present its agreement with this view. Most countries felt relaxations which had been recently introduced pursuant to amended section 104, repeat 104, had not repeat not significantly altered impact of restrictions although problem had been somewhat eased particularly for Italy.

3. Netherlands has decided to reduce its purchases of wheat flour from United States by 15000, repeat 15000, metric tons, in other words to impose an upper limit of 57000, repeat 57000, metric tons on imports of wheat flour from United States. They tell us amount diverted from United States will probably be bought from Canada at a higher price.

4. Australia is prepared in principle to retaliate but is inclined to await outcome of current United States tariff commission investigation on wool before announcing actual measures. As a method of retaliation Tonkin of Australia has indicated privately to us his interest in restoring preferential position on dried fruits which prevailed in Canada prior to (Geneva?). When we told him Canada must reserve its position with regard to compensatory action against United States he went so far as to ask whether we might not be obliged to reinstitute preferential margins provided in Canada-Australia agreement if Australia were to retaliate against United States by withdrawing her acquiescence to reduced margins in Canada. In reply we said such action by Australia might conceivably raise for Canada whole question of status of Canada-Australia trade agreement. We counselled him not to force us into a position where we might be unable to avoid renegotiation of agreement.

5. New Zealand is also prepared to retaliate at this session by withdrawing concessions on tobacco and several other products. Denmark has decided against retaliation because their imports from United States are now limited to bare essentials so that any further reduction would be more damaging to themselves than to United States. Italy has not, repeat not, yet taken any decision on retaliation but appears to be influenced by recent relaxations in restrictions which have benefited Italy more than other countries. Norway's interest in exports of dairy products to United States is not such that retaliation would be appropriate for her.

6. We explained that Canada continues to be deeply concerned with the failure of United States to withdraw section 104 and that we are prepared to associate ourselves with criticism of flagrant United States violation of GATT. We explained we would put no, repeat no, obstacle in the way of those who have decided upon retaliation in near future. We pointed out, however, we had taken no, repeat no, decision with regard to retaliation and that Canada would have to reserve its freedom with respect to this matter. We added our view that retaliation at present might not make much impression upon United States in view of (group corrupt) preoccupation of American press and public with elections. We indicated it was our intention to re-examine question of retaliation in a few months time.

7. Several other countries disagreed with our views about retaliation and expressed disappointment that joint measures of retaliation might be greatly weakened by the absence of Canada from the list. In their view the producers in the United States affected by the withdrawal of concessions would not, repeat not, fail to feel the impact and this was far more important than the reaction of the general public in getting corrective action. At the same time it seemed clear that other countries will be influenced by the course decided upon by Canada.

8. We suggested that one possible approach would be for contracting parties to pass a critical resolution going beyond resolution passed at sixth session. In essence, such a resolution would condemn continued United States violation of GATT and state that contracting parties which considered themselves hurt by restrictions would now be justified in withdrawing concessions from United States. The chairman of the contracting parties might withdraw advice he gave last year to those injured to delay until the United States could remedy the situation. Such an approach would meet the diverse positions of various governments on the question of retaliation. Some of those present expressed interest in a solution along these lines.

9. Finally representatives undertook to report the views expressed to their respective governments and to meet again as soon as further advice could be received. It is expected that the informal group will meet again about Saturday October 11, repeat 11. If there is any possibility of Canadian position being modified we should be advised before this date.

10. Please repeat London.<sup>114</sup>

Canadian position remains as set forth in your paragraph 6. In our view retaliatory measures prior to forthcoming United States elections would be unlikely to result in positive or favourable action and we do not, therefore, see any practical advantage in asking Ministers at this time to consider substantive question of possible retaliation by Canada.

2. Strong resolution along lines of your paragraph 8 is acceptable and support for it entirely consistent with your instructions as approved by Ministers. We assume that authorization given affected Contracting Parties to withdraw concessions from United States would be authorization in principle and would not commit retaliating countries to consult with Contracting Parties in advance as to timing and extent of their retaliatory measures.

Following from Isbister, GATT delegation, Begins:

1. Tonkin of Australia has returned to the question outlined in paragraph 4 of our telegram under reference. He has received further instructions and he arranged specially for presence of Leckie of the United Kingdom when he saw me.

In a further discussion along the lines indicated in our telegram under reference I felt impelled at one point to indicate that preferential item in question is in Canadian tariff not, repeat not, in Australian tariff.

3. Tonkin told me Australian ministers will raise this question with Canadian ministers at Commonwealth conference in November.

4. When contracting parties discuss United States restrictions on dairy products Tonkin intends to say that Australian retaliation against the United States may take the form of reinstitution of preferential margins and he wants to know if such a statement on his part will cause Canada any difficulty. I told him a general statement of this kind would not, repeat not, require any comment whatsoever from Canada as long as he makes no, repeat no, specific reference to the idea that Australia can retaliate against the United States via Canadian tariff. I made clear that Australia should not, repeat not, then interpret silence of Canadian delegation at that point as creating even by implication an obligation on our part to undertake future point retaliation against the United States. I emphasized that Canada reserves for the future its freedom to reach its own decisions. Ends.

UNITED STATES IMPORT RESTRICTIONS ON DAIRY PRODUCTS

Reference: My telegram No. 120 of October 22nd.

Following from Canadian Delegation, 7th Session, GATT, Begins: Our immediately following telegram contains the text of a draft decision on this item of the agenda which has been prepared by the Executive Secretary. We are aware that such a decision would not, repeat not, be fully in accord with our instructions since it provides no, repeat no, authority for a country which has suffered injury to take compensatory action without receiving detailed prior approval from contracting parties. As instructed we have urged assiduously here that Article XXIII permits of that interpretation but we have met with no, repeat no, support, except recently from Australia. When Executive Secretary made it clear that, if chairman were asked to deliver a ruling on the meaning of Article XXIII, he would be forced to advise that detailed prior consultation with contracting parties would be required under terms of the article before an injured country could take a particular compensatory action, it became apparent that there would be little point in pressing our interpretation of the article further.

2. The three countries now whose positions on this issue are furthest apart and must be reconciled if at all possible are Netherlands, Australia and United States.

(a) Netherlands is anxious that no, repeat no, loophole be left through which legality of compensatory withdrawal it intends to make might be impugned. To avoid getting itself into an exposed position, however, it does not, repeat not, want any alternative procedure other than that indicated by a strict interpretation of Article XXIII to be opened up for other countries which might want to retaliate later. This understandable position has been wrapped up by Van Blankenstein in verbiage about rule of law and about breaking integrity of agreement which we have found rather unpalatable when brought into relation with way in which Netherlands and other countries have stretched, for example, prior consultation provisions of Balance of Payments Articles of Agreement.

(b) Australia wants to retaliate but is not, repeat not, yet prepared to announce form of its retaliation. The portfolio of this Australian position is provided in our telegram No. 120 of October 20. Australia would like to be free to act either during present session or afterwards, as Australian Government might decide.

(c) United States naturally would not, repeat not, be averse to any course of action which would lessen chances of some countries announcing retaliatory measures at this session. For this reason they have been somewhat attracted by our interpretation of Article XXIII. Ultimately, however, they have found it impossible to accept. One important element in their thinking is their desire that such retaliatory measures as might be taken should not, repeat not, be excessive and should not, repeat not, lead to additional counter measures and hence to a general unravelling of existing tariff schedules.

3. When we became convinced that there was no, repeat no, hope of securing acceptance of our interpretation of Article XXIII we concentrated our efforts on urging that contracting parties should decide that, in light of clear damage that was still being done to trade of a number of countries by these United States restrictions (in spite of long period that had been given United States Administration to try to remedy situation) and also in the light of lack of any practicable means for securing between sessions the approval of contracting parties, a list of countries to be specifically named should be free to withdraw concessions from United States without prior approval of contracting parties provided that such action be promptly reported to contracting parties and be subject to strict review at next session. However, at an informal meeting of all delegations principally concerned on Wednesday, repeat Wednesday, our proposed solution ran into heavy opposition from the Netherlands and from the United States. The Executive Secretary, who was also present, was far from enthusiastic about it and as a compromise suggested in the course of the meeting idea which is embodied in draft we are forwarding. Will see that Wyndham-White's suggestion is based on doctrine of negative consent. Had hoped that a compromise more closely in accord with our instruction might be reached, but under all circumstances we feel this draft provides in general best possible solution. It is almost certain to be accepted by the Netherlands and the United States. It would be our guess that Australians would also ultimately accept it, although it would clearly cause considerable difficulty in Canberra.

4. No, repeat no, date has yet been set for contracting parties to consider this item of agenda in plenary session, but a meeting for this purpose will probably be scheduled shortly. We should, therefore, be grateful to receive your comments as soon as possible. If it becomes necessary to take a firm position on this draft decision without having received further instructions from you, we would propose to acquiesce in it. Ends.

Following from Canadian delegation to GATT, Begins: Following is the text of draft decision prepared by Executive Secretary. Text begins:

Whereas by resolution of October 26, 1951, contracting parties recognized that concessions granted by United States Government to contracting parties under General Agreement had been nullified or impaired within meaning of Article XXIII of general agreement and that import restrictions imposed in pursuance to Section 104 of United States Defence Production Act had resulted in such nullification or impairment and constituted an infringement of Article XI of agreement and recognized further that a number of contracting parties had indicated that they had suffered serious damage as a result of this nullification or impairment and that circumstances were serious enough to justify recourse by those contracting parties to Article XXIII, paragraph 2, and whereas by said resolution contracting parties:

(i) Counsellor the contracting parties affected in view of continuing determination of the United States Government to seek repeal of Section 104 of United States Defence Production Act to afford to United States Government a reasonable period of time in order to rectify situation through such repeal, and

(ii) Requested United States Government to report to contracting parties at as early a date as possible and in any case not later than opening of 7th Session of contracting parties on action which it had taken and whereas report and supplementary report submitted by United States Government to 7th Session on 10th September, 1950, and 6th October respectively fails to remove aforesaid nullification and impairment and where majority of contracting parties affected in view of last [late?] date at which aforesaid reports by United States Government were presented, have not, repeat not, had sufficient time to decide upon specific measures to which they may resort in accordance with Article XXIII, paragraph 2, and therefore are not, repeat not, in a position to submit these measures to contracting parties with a view to a determination by contracting parties as required by said Article XXIII, paragraph 2.

2. The contracting parties decide as follows:

(1) If an affected contracting party decides to take action in accordance with Article XXIII, paragraph 2, it shall communicate to contracting parties and to Executive Secretary details of obligations or concessions which it proposes to suspend;

(ii) No action shall be taken to make such suspension effective for a period of 30 days from date of such communication.

3. If by expiry of this 30 day period no objection has been lodged either as to appropriateness of suspension proposed or to effect that serious damage would be caused to interests of another contracting party, contracting party concerned shall be free to put proposed suspension into effect as if the specific measure had been expressly approved in accordance with paragraph 2 of Article XXIII.

4. If objections are lodged in accordance with paragraph 2 above, contracting party proposing suspension shall enter into consultation with objecting contracting party and if a satisfactory adjustment is arrived at as a result of such consultation, shall be free to proceed to make suspension effective. If no, repeat no, satisfactory adjustment is effected in accordance with paragraph 3 above, matter shall be referred to contracting parties either at next regular session or to a special session of contracting parties convened in accordance with rules of procedure. Text ends. Message ends.

It has occurred to us that, although resolution prepared by Executive Secretary would not permit Canada or other affected contracting parties to take retaliatory measures without prior notice and consultation, where necessary, it does in the final analysis serve equally to safeguard Canadian interests. ANIMAL CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACT;
FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE; OUTBREAK NEAR REGINA

1. The Prime Minister, referring to discussion at the meeting of February 19th,† said the Animal Pathology Laboratory at Hull, Quebec had confirmed on February 24th that the outbreak of animal disease near Regina was foot and mouth disease. It would be necessary to make a public announcement immediately for which a draft press release had been prepared by the Department of Agriculture.

The release would outline the measures taken to prevent the spread of the disease before its exact nature was known. In addition to the quarantine and the prohibition on outward movement of livestock, all known movements prior to issue of the quarantine orders were being traced. Now that the disease had been identified, immediate action was being taken to stamp it out. This consisted of the destruction of all animals known to be infected or to have been in any way in contact with possible infection. Animals destroyed would be cremated or buried deeply. All premises known or suspected to have been contaminated would be disinfected and quarantined. Owners of livestock would be fully compensated for the value of animals destroyed. Where it was necessary to take over premises or equipment to facilitate extermination, the owners would be paid reasonable compensation. Emergency authority would be given to officers of the Department of Agriculture to take whatever action might be needed on the spot. Special measures might have to be adopted to prevent the accumulation of surplus meat products in one area while shortages prevailed in others. There might be problems connected with prices of livestock, costs of transportation and other matters that would have to be kept under constant review.

For general information the press release would add that the U.S. Department of Agriculture had been kept fully informed and that special efforts would be made to inform all farmers and others of procedures being adopted. It seemed unlikely that susceptible animals had been the carriers that had introduced the disease. It would be added that the danger of humans contacting the infection was "extremely remote". Unless the outbreak were allowed to get completely out of hand, the meat supply in Canada would not be noticeably affected. Fewer than 400 animals were presently under quarantine and likely to be slaughtered immediately. The animals were on 24 different premises, all in the Regina area.

(Draft press release, undated)*

...

3. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said the most serious consequence of the outbreak might be that the U.S. border would be closed to the movement of Canadian livestock and meat. The best means of ensuring that U.S. action would not be taken on a broader basis than was necessary might be for the first move to be made by Canada. If this were agreed, enquiry might be made in Washington as to whether it would make it easier for the U.S. government to avoid restrictions if the Canadian government were to ban exports from the area from the eastern boundary of Alberta to the head of the lakes. There was little danger that the disease could have spread westward from the present contaminated area as stock did not move in that direction.

4. The Minister of Justice had some concern about the effect of suggesting restrictions over so wide an area. It might imply that the disease was much more widespread than it was thought to be.

5. The Deputy Minister of Agriculture advised that an expert of the U.S. Department of Agriculture was in Regina and fully acquainted with the situation. He thought there would be no danger of its misinterpretation. It might be desirable to have the eastern limit of the prohibited area as far east as Sudbury since meat for that area came from the West.

6. The Cabinet, after considerable discussion, approved:

(a) the draft press release concerning the outbreak of foot and mouth disease in the vicinity of Regina, Saskatchewan, subject to the modification proposed by the Prime Minister;

(b) the authorization of compensation to owners of premises or equipment taken over to facilitate the extermination of the disease and the according of emergency authority as necessary to officers of the Department of Agriculture to take action that might be required to combat it; and,

(c) the proposal of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that enquiry be made of the U.S. government, through the Canadian Ambassador in Washington, as to whether it would be helpful for the Canadian government to prohibit the export from Canada of animals and meat from an area from the eastern boundary of Alberta eastward to about Sudbury.

FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE;
OUTBREAK IN SASKATCHEWAN; U.S. EMBARGO

19. The Prime Minister, referring to discussion the previous day, said U.S. authorities were enforcing a complete embargo against all Canadian exports of cattle, sheep or other domestic ruminants, or swine, or of fresh, chilled, or frozen beef, veal, mutton, lamb, or pork. It had first been hoped that the prohibition would apply only to such animals or food products originating in the quarantined area in Saskatchewan or in some larger but still restricted area. U.S. laws, however, made the full embargo mandatory. Section 1306 of the U.S. Tariff Act of 1930 (Chapter 4 of the Customs Duties) read as follows: "If the Secretary of Agriculture determines that rinderpest or foot and mouth disease exists in any foreign country, he shall officially notify the Secretary of the Treasury and give public notice thereof, and thereafter, and until the Secretary of Agriculture gives notice in a similar manner that such disease no longer exists in such foreign country, the importation into the United States of cattle, sheep, or other domestic ruminants, or swine, or of fresh, chilled, or frozen beef, veal, mutton, lamb, or pork, from such foreign country, is prohibited."

He suggested that consideration might usefully be given to the negotiation with the United States of a treaty governing restrictions, for health reasons, on movements of domestic animals and foodstuffs between the two countries. Under the Ogdensburg Agreement the border had, in effect, been obliterated for certain purposes that required handling on a continental rather than a national basis. Possibly some similar approach could be worked out.

20. The Minister of Trade and Commerce thought it might be preferable to clear up the outbreak of foot and mouth disease in Saskatchewan before attempting to negotiate an international instrument along the lines suggested.

21. The Minister of Finance did not expect too serious consequences to result from the U.S. embargo provided it were not maintained for more than two or three months. If the United States prohibition against certain Canadian exports was maintained for any much longer period, the consequences from a balance of payments point of view alone might be serious.

22. The Minister of Resources and Development, as Acting Minister of Agriculture, said the press had been enquiring why the Deputy Minister of Agriculture had not been sent to Washington immediately as originally contemplated. He proposed to reply that since U.S. laws made a complete embargo against all Canadian exports of certain livestock and foodstuffs mandatory no immediate purpose would be served by Mr. Taggart visiting

Washington. First priority was being given to domestic measures required to eradicate the disease before any approach was made to the U.S. government with a view to a relaxation of the prohibition against Canadian exports.

23. The Cabinet, after considerable discussion:

(a) noted the Prime Minister's report on the legal position in the United States with respect to livestock and foodstuffs emanating from foreign countries in which foot and mouth disease existed;

(b) agreed that, until such time as the current outbreak of foot and mouth disease had been eradicated or brought definitely under control in Canada, no negotiations be entered into for an agreement or treaty with the United States on restrictions for health reasons on movement of livestock and foodstuffs between the two countries, although study might be given in the interim to such an approach;

(c) agreed that a suitable reference be included in the Speech from the Throne to the recent outbreak of foot and mouth disease and to the measures being taken to circumscribe and eradicate it and to protect the Canadian economy generally; and,

(d) approved the reply proposed to be made by the Acting Minister of Agriculture to enquiries why the Deputy Minister of Agriculture had not proceeded immediately to Washington as had originally been contemplated.

FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE; PURCHASE OF PORK

8. The Prime Minister said the Minister of Agriculture had reported that, as a result of the United States and provincial embargoes on movement of hogs and pork, marketing had become unmanageable on the basis of the present method of price support. Further measures were needed to maintain prices at the authorized level and to preserve stability in the hog market. The Minister, accordingly, had submitted a recommendation to Council that authority be granted to the Agricultural Prices Support Board to purchase pork in any form at a price equivalent to 26 cents per pound for warm dressed carcasses basis Toronto and Montreal.

Copies of the submission were circulated.

(Minister's submission, Mar. 6, 1952 — Cab. Doc. 81-52)†

9. The Minister of Trade and Commerce pointed out that instructions had been sent to Trade Commissioners to report on the possibility of selling Canadian pork and meat products abroad. It seemed probable that sales might be possible to the U.S. Army, for Korean relief and in South American markets. Until these possibilities were known he thought it was not desirable to take specific action to buy all types of pork as proposed. He also doubted the desirability of having more meat canned if sales would be more difficult in that form.

10. The Minister of Finance believed that the immediate problem was one of storage capacity. Purchasing by the government, other than of canned pork which could be moved into dry storage, would not affect it. He would be opposed to a general policy of buying until it was known what disposal would be made of the meat.

11. Mr. St. Laurent suggested it might be desirable to have an interdepartmental committee keep under consideration measures to meet the economic consequences of the outbreak of foot and mouth disease.

12. The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that:

(a) decision be deferred on the recommendation by the Minister of Agriculture that the Agricultural Prices Support Board be authorized to purchase pork in any form at a price equivalent to 26 cents per pound for warm dressed carcasses basis Toronto and Montreal; and,

(b) the Secretary arrange that economic matters relating to the outbreak of foot and mouth disease be kept under consideration by a committee to include representatives of the Departments of Agriculture, Finance, Trade and Commerce and External Affairs.

BEEF AND PORK; PRICE SUPPORT

16. The Minister of Agriculture, referring to discussion at the meeting of March 11th, 1952,† reported that, with the loss of practically all external markets for meat and livestock, there would undoubtedly be a substantial surplus of beef and pork which could not be consumed in Canada. It was estimated that, for the balance of 1952, the surpluses would be 90 million pounds of beef and 80 million pounds of pork. If no further action were taken to relieve the situation, it seemed likely that prices would drop to still lower levels, resulting in panic marketing by farmers which in turn might bring about a general collapse of livestock prices.

It was recommended, therefore, that, until the U.S. embargo was removed or for one year (whichever period was the longer):

- (i) the present arrangement on hogs be continued; and
- (ii) Canadian packers be informed that the government would assume financial responsibility for beef in storage, provided such beef had been purchased by the packers at a price based upon $26.00 a hundred weight for good steers at Toronto and Montreal (with appropriate price differentials for other qualities and at other markets).

He further reported that the possibility of arranging a switch under which Canadian beef would be provided to the United Kingdom to release Australian and New Zealand meat to be sold in substitution in the United States was currently under discussion with U.K. authorities.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, March 24, 1952 — Cab. Doc. 102-52;+ memorandum, Secretary to the Cabinet to Prime Minister, March 24, 1952)+

17. The Prime Minister, referring to discussion at the meeting of March 7th, 1952, said it might be advisable to have this proposal examined and reported upon by the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy before a final decision were reached.

18. Mr. Gardiner said he had no objection to the committee reviewing the proposal provided a report was submitted to Cabinet before the end of the week.

19. The Minister of Trade and Commerce questioned the desirability of fixing floor prices at such high levels. He thought, offhand, that lower prices might be a greater inducement to producers to hold back livestock rather than the higher prices suggested.

20. The Cabinet, after discussion, deferred decision on the beef and pork price-support proposal put forward by the Minister of Agriculture pending examination and report, before the end of the week, by the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy.

ECONOMIC EFFECTS OF FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE;
PRICE SUPPORT FOR BEEF

1. The Prime Minister, referring to discussion at the meeting of March 25th, 1952, said the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy had now submitted a report on the proposal that price support for beef be instituted. The committee recommended that officials go to London immediately to see if an arrangement could be worked out under which Canadian meat could be delivered to the United Kingdom in exchange for Australian and New Zealand meat to be released by the United Kingdom for delivery to the U.S. market. The committee felt the level at which price support should be established depended to a large extent on what the prospects were of disposing of beef.

As to the basis of support, the committee recommended that, instead of establishing a price for a long forward period, the method of support should be through a price that would be adjusted, probably on a weekly basis, in some fixed relation to the Chicago price. In so far as a normal differential could be established, it appeared to be one in which Toronto prices were about $5.50 per hundred pounds below the comparable Chicago price. In a policy to meet the situation it would be reasonable to enlarge the differential to something like $6.00 or $7.00 per hundred pounds.

The committee recommended that no definite announcement as to any level of support be issued until the results of the U.K. discussions were known. Any announcement before that should be limited to a statement that the government would be instituting a plan to support the market for beef; that the basis of support would be related to the Chicago price and would vary with it; and that the differential between the Chicago price and the support price would depend in part on the likelihood of being able to dispose of Canadian beef and on the clearing up of the domestic position now complicated by provincial embargoes.

9. The Cabinet, after considerable discussion, agreed that:

(a) officials of the Departments of Agriculture and Trade and Commerce proceed to London as soon as possible to discuss the possibility of concluding an arrangement as recommended under which Canadian meat would be delivered to the United Kingdom in exchange for Australian and New Zealand meat to be released by the United Kingdom for delivery to the U.S. market;

(b) in any discussion with the provinces before further decisions were taken, no commitment be made as to the basis on which support would be given for beef by the government, and,

(c) decision be deferred to a subsequent meeting on action to be taken to support the price of beef.

PORK; PRICE SUPPORT AND GENERAL POLICY

10. The Prime Minister, referring to the discussion at the meeting of March 31st, 1952, said the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy had submitted a further report on the pork position. Hog marketings since January 1st had exceeded those of 1951 and in the weeks until the end of June it was expected that there would be a surplus of from 205,000 to 260,000 hogs.

This was the equivalent of 15 to 20 million pounds of canned pork or 25 to 32 million pounds of Wiltshire sides. The authorization to can 20 million pounds of pork had been exhausted. As of April 1st there were 11 million pounds more meat in cold storage in Canada than on the same date in 1951. If no extra beef whatever was added to storage it was estimated that all space would be filled with pork before May 1st.

Discussions were under way in the United Kingdom about a triangular arrangement for an exchange of meat. It seemed doubtful whether any pork could be disposed of but this should be known shortly. Export outlets were limited by present Canadian prices. The support price was now well above the U.S. price of pork. The conditions stated in the announcement of February 14th as justifying a reconsideration of the support price were now present.

As to the form in which to hold the pork coming to market, there was no case for adding to the supply of pork cuts. If pork could be disposed of to the United Kingdom, it would be desirable to put Wiltshire sides into cold storage. However, unless pork could be moved in some form the only resort would be a further canning programme.

It was for consideration whether the government should not start to take its losses on the canned pork programme by pushing the pork into consumption, both domestic and foreign, at competitive prices. The pork could not be sold at a price that would cover its cost. Government institutional buying should be directed toward it. There was a possibility, although not a good one, that some of the pork might be disposed of to the U.S. army or Korean relief if prices were reduced. However, it seemed that such possibilities would not meet much of the problem. Consideration might be given to discussion with the U.K. government about providing the meat needs of the United Kingdom and Canadian forces in Germany. Possibly such an arrangement could be related to the current discussions with the United Kingdom as to whether Canadian barrack and other requirements were to come out of the U.K. share of German contributions to European defence.

Copies of the report had been circulated.

11. The Minister of Agriculture said the facts of the position were substantially as outlined in the report. He thought it undesirable, however, to reach any decisions on policy until the results were known of the discussions currently underway in London. If pork could not be disposed of by a triangular arrangement there would probably have to be consideration of a plan to give some of it away. There should be authorization to take pork in the form of Wiltshire sides and a recommendation for such authority was submitted.

12. The Minister of Finance agreed that it might be desirable to hold off decisions until the results of discussions with the United Kingdom were known. He was strongly of the view that the support price for pork should be considered and adjusted downward.

13. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said there were a number of pork products that could be exported to the United States if prices were right. Canned hams could be disposed of in that way.

14. The Cabinet, after considerable discussion:

(a) agreed that decisions on support price for pork and future policy in relation to pork be deferred until the results were known of discussions currently under way in the United Kingdom for a triangular arrangement for the exchange of meat; and,

(b) approved the recommendation of the Minister of Agriculture that the pork price support programme be extended to fresh frozen Wiltshire sides at a price equivalent to 26 cents per pound for warm dressed carcasses basis Toronto and Montreal; an Order-in-Council to be passed accordingly.

MEAT; PROPOSED EXCHANGE ARRANGEMENT WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM AND NEW ZEALAND; PORK CANNING AUTHORIZATION

1. The Minister of Agriculture reported that discussions with United Kingdom and New Zealand representatives for a 3-way exchange arrangement for meat had now been completed. It appeared that 50 million pounds of beef could be exchanged for the same amount of New Zealand beef and 10 million pounds of pork for New Zealand pork. The New Zealand representatives had indicated that to make the plan acceptable to their producers they would have to participate in the difference between the U.S. price for their meat and the U.K. contract price, plus freight, duty and selling charges. They had originally suggested that they ought to receive 50 percent in dollars. The Canadian representatives had proposed either 25 percent in dollars or, alternatively, that Canada provide the United Kingdom with additional meat equivalent to 50 percent and that the United Kingdom pay New Zealand agreed values in sterling. There might have to be room for negotiation on the participation arrangement. There would be a substantial loss for Canada in the deal. Our meat f.o.b.<sup>115</sup> Canadian seaboard would cost about 48 cents per pound. New Zealand beef would sell in the United States at about 32 cents. There was thus a loss of about 16 cents a pound there, plus an estimated 8 cents for freight, duty and selling charges, making 24 cents without any New Zealand participation. On a 25 percent basis the participation would work out to about 3 cents per pound and on a 50 percent to 6 cents. The total loss would thus be 27 cents or, more probably, 30 cents a pound. This would amount to $15 million on 50 million pounds. For pork the loss would work out to about 10 cents a pound on 10 million pounds or $1 million.

The Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy had discussed the arrangement and, while the losses were severe, had come to the conclusion that, in the circumstances, it could only recommend that the arrangement ought to be accepted. At the same time, if alternative markets could be found for Canadian beef at any price over roughly 20 cents a pound such an arrangement would be better than the 3-way deal. Consequently, if possible, there should be no firm commitment to provide 50 million pounds of beef and other markets should be sought immediately and while the exchange progressed.

The Committee had pointed out that canned pork could not sell at 64 cents a pound. It suggested that the government might absorb the cost of canning (12 cents) and offer the canned pork to packers at 52 cents.

Copies of the report had been circulated.

2. Mr. Gardiner said that with storage now full and with an urgent need to dispose of some of the surplus meat he thought the exchange arrangement would have to be accepted. It would also be necessary to remove pork from cold storage by doing more canning. He recommended that purchase by the Agricultural Prices Support Board of an additional 15 million pounds be authorized over the 20 million pounds already covered.

3. The Minister of National Revenue suggested that, in effect, the arrangement would amount to subsidizing consumption of Canadian meat abroad to the extent of $16 million. The government would have to explain why it was doing that and at the same time leaving the domestic price of meat at its present high level. He thought that many families were holding back on meat consumption because of the cost. It would be desirable, if possible, to see what lower prices might do for domestic consumption.

4. The Prime Minister pointed out that the loss on the proposed arrangement amounted to a subsidy on only 50 million pounds of beef, which was a very small fraction of domestic consumption. Any reduction of prices to increase domestic use would have to be on all meat. If support prices were withdrawn the market might fall to a point at which producers would suffer severe losses. An overall subsidy would be costly and difficult to operate but it should be feasible to make canned pork available at reduced prices. If that were done the cut in prices for export sales might be more acceptable.

5. The Minister of Agriculture said that, if support prices were withdrawn and meat prices allowed to find their own level, there would be very disparate situations in different parts of Canada. The provincial controls would result in relatively high prices in Manitoba and probably in British Columbia and Quebec. Prices in Saskatchewan and Alberta would fall sharply. It would not be inconceivable that beef in Alberta might fall to about 15 cents a pound. A general subsidy on meat would be administratively impossible. So far as the reduction in the price of canned pork was concerned, it might cut somewhat into consumption of fresh pork. It could, however be attempted if it seemed desirable.

6. The Minister of Trade and Commerce thought the arrangement with the United Kingdom and New Zealand had to be accepted but that at the same time something should be done that would be helpful domestically. The most feasible policy seemed that of reducing the price of canned pork. This could be done either by absorbing canning costs and making the pork available at 52 cents or by going further and offering it at 50 cents. It seemed improbable that export markets would be found for any substantial quantity of meat but all possibilities should continue to be investigated.

7. The Secretary of State for External Affairs felt that, as Canadian troops in Korea were eating meat from U.S. sources, it should be possible at least to get the U.S. army to accept Canadian meat to the amount equivalent to that consumed by the Canadian troops. It might be worthwhile taking this up at a high level in Washington.

8. The Cabinet, after considerable discussion:

(a) agreed that the Canadian representatives in the discussions with the United Kingdom and New Zealand be authorized to say that the Canadian government would be prepared to enter into an arrangement for the exchange of meat along the lines proposed and that the government would agree to New Zealand participation in the price margin involved in the sale of New Zealand beef in the United States on the basis either of 25 percent payable in dollars or 50 percent payable to the United Kingdom in the form of meat with agreed values to be paid to New Zealand in sterling; the representatives to try to arrange for an agreement without any firm commitment for delivery of a specified quantity of beef and to be authorized to negotiate alternative arrangements for the calculation of New Zealand participation;

(b) agreed that the Department of Agriculture consider immediately arrangements to allow canned pork held by the government to be offered to packing houses and others for sale in Canada at a price that would involve the government absorbing canning costs of 12 cents per pound and possibly additional amounts; and,

(c) approved the recommendation of the Minister of Agriculture and agreed that the Agricultural Prices Support Board be authorized to purchase an additional 15 million pounds of canned pork; an Order-in-Council to be passed accordingly.

SURPLUS CANADIAN MEATS FOR ALLIED TROOPS IN KOREA

5. The Minister of National Defence, referring to discussion at the meeting of April 22nd, 1952 said that, under U.S. law, it would not be possible for Congressional appropriations to be used for the purchase of Canadian or any other foreign foods for use by U.S. troops. However, it was thought probable that a scheme might be worked out under which Canada would supply canned and other Canadian meats to Allied troops other than U.S. in Korea, and be reimbursed by a reduction in maintenance charges payable in respect of Canadian troops in Korea by an equivalent amount.

SURPLUS CANADIAN MEATS; PROPOSED SUPPLY TO CANADIAN AND COMMONWEALTH FORCES IN KOREA

18. The Minister of National Defence, with reference to his report at the meeting of June 5th said discussions were held in Washington on June 12th, and 13th with U.S. Army officials to consider the supply of Canadian meat to the Korean theatre during the period of the meat emergency in Canada. Mr. Pace, Secretary of the Army had confirmed in writing the arrangements arrived at in Washington.

It was agreed that Canada could supply Canadian forces in Korea with their meat requirements and the value of such meat, to be determined by the cost of equivalent quantities had they been secured in the United States during the contract period in which shipment was made, would be excluded from the charge for rations from the U.S. Army to the Department of National Defence. The Agricultural Prices Support Board would charge the Department of National Defence for the cost of the meat or for the amount of the deduction from the U.S. account, whichever was the lower. Meat requirements for Canadian forces in the Korean theatre would amount to 100,000 pounds monthly.

It had also been agreed that there would be no objection to Canada making similar arrangements in respect of the meat requirements of the Korean forces of other Commonwealth countries. The meat so supplied by Canada would be deducted from the capitation charges on such Commonwealth countries. Negotiations were under way to ascertain whether suitable operating and financial arrangements could be made with Commonwealth countries in this respect. The monthly meat requirements of Commonwealth forces other than Canadian would total 226,000 pounds.

19. The Minister of Agriculture said the arrangement under which New Zealand meat was being diverted to the United States and replaced on the U.K. market by Canadian meat was not preceeding any too satisfactorily and it would therefore be very useful if arrangements could be completed as soon as possible along the lines mentioned by the Minister of National Defence, for the supply of Canadian meats to Commonwealth forces in the Korean theatre of operations.

20. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted with approval the report by the Minister of National Defence on arrangements made with the United States for the supply of Canadian meats to Canadian and other Commonwealth forces in the Korean theatre of operations.

CONFIDENTIAL

CANADIAN MEAT FOR COMMONWEALTH FORCES IN KOREA

1. Discussions have recently taken place with United States Secretary of the Army regarding supply of Canadian meat to Korean theatre during period when exports to United States are subject to embargo. United States has agreed that Canada will procure and ship meat in quantities to meet needs of Canadian forces in theatre. This amounts to 100,000 pounds monthly and arrangements will be made retroactive to at least April 1, 1952. United States has also agreed that Canada could supply meat in quantities required for other Commonwealth forces serving in Korea amounting to an additional 226,000 pounds monthly.

2. With respect to supply for other Commonwealth forces, Canada would have to make necessary arrangements with Commonwealth countries concerned. If these arrangements can be agreed upon, United States would reduce capitation or other charges to Commonwealth countries in the amount of cost of meat which United States has thus far been supplying.

3. Commonwealth countries concerned are United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand. These countries participate in Commonwealth Korean operations pool for which Australia is administrative authority.

4. We should like you to raise this matter with appropriate Australian authorities as one of urgency and obtain their approval for Canada entering into necessary arrangements with United States to undertake to supply this meat from Canadian sources. Meat would be supplied at no additional cost to that of equivalent supplies from United States sources. Financial settlement with Commonwealth countries would be made in accordance with principles agreed upon for other maintenance through Commonwealth pool. Meat would go through United States supply channels and detailed arrangements regarding inspection would be worked out with United States authorities. We would like to have this arrangement also made retroactive to at least April 1, 1952.

5. Canadian Government has purchased large quantities of Canadian meat to avoid disruption in livestock industry and these purchases are now filling almost all available storage space in Canada. It is therefore important that arrangements with Commonwealth countries be concluded as rapidly as possible since we should wish to start shipping meat within the next few weeks. Would you, therefore, bear in mind desirability of reaching agreement on this matter without delay so that detailed arrangements can be worked out immediately.

BEEF: PRESENT SUPPLY POSITION;
PLANS FOR DISPOSITION

9. The Minister of Agriculture reported that inspected slaughterings of cattle in Canada from January 1st to May 3rd were lighter than in 1951. The price in Toronto on June 21st was above the support price — $26.50 as compared with $25.00. To June 28th, 33,184,743 pounds of beef had been bought for shipment to the United Kingdom under the tripartite exchange arrangement. Of this, 11,357,758 pounds had been shipped. It appeared that the total amount available for diversion from New Zealand would be 60.5 million pounds rather than 80 million pounds as originally estimated. This would probably take care of things until about October.

10. The Minister of National Defence said he had reported on June 18th on his discussions with the U.S. Secretary of Defense about supplying meat to Canadian forces in Korea. The United States had indicated that they would be prepared to have Canada supply meat to other Commonwealth forces as well. Aides memoire on this matter had been given to Lord Alexander and Mr. Menzies and the High Commissioner in Canberra had been directed to take the question up with those in charge of the pool for the financing of supplies to the Commonwealth forces in Korea. He had also discussed with Lord Alexander the possibility of having Canadian forces in Europe supplied with Canadian meat rather than with meat from the United Kingdom. He had pointed out that it would reduce the strain on U.K. meat supplies. Lord Alexander had said that it would involve a dollar question but that he would have it looked into.

11. The Cabinet noted the reports of the Minister of Agriculture on the beef position and of the Minister of National Defence concerning the possibility of supplying meat to Canadian and Commonwealth forces in Korea and to Canadian forces in Europe and agreed that discussions of possible arrangements be continued.

MEAT; . . . ACCESS TO THE UNITED STATES MARKET

4. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that, in accordance with the decision of the Cabinet of July 31st, 1952,† the Embassy in Washington had been instructed to raise with the U.S. government the question of removing the embargo on the importation of Canadian animals and products. There had been discussions on August 4th with the Acting Secretary of Agriculture and officials. The results were not encouraging. The Acting Secretary had stated only that the matter would be given sympathetic consideration. The Assistant Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry had indicated that the matter had not been given any real thought up to the present. He had pointed out that foot and mouth disease could lie dormant and undetected for many months and then spring up again. There were thus technical reasons to wait for some time. There was also pressure by U.S. producers, whose livelihood was dependent on inter-state shipment of livestock which would cease should a case of foot and mouth disease be discovered in their state. This was added cause for great caution. Altogether it appeared unrealistic even to hope that the Secretary of Agriculture would consider declaring Canada free of foot and mouth disease at any early date after August 19th.

5. The Minister of Agriculture said the report was not too encouraging but it had to be expected that an attitude of caution would be expressed at the present time. He thought that the end of the calendar year was the earliest that could be counted on for opening the U.S. border but it was possible it might take place as early as November 30th. He did not believe there was any risk that the U.S. market would still be closed in the summer of 1953.

6. The Cabinet, after considerable discussion:

U.S. EMBARGO ON CANADIAN ANIMALS AND ANIMAL PRODUCTS;
DATE OF LIFTING

1. The Minister of Agriculture referred to the announcement that the U.S. embargo on Canadian animals and animal products would be raised on March 1st, 1953. The date was later than had been hoped and he had arranged to go to Washington to see whether it might not be possible to get it advanced. He read a draft letter to the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture. The letter would state that, while the Canadian government had been pleased to learn of the decision to lift the embargo and realized the need for a time between the decision and the actual opening of the border, they were disappointed that the interval was so long. The letter would refer to the need of feeders in the New England area for feed stuffs from eastern Canada and to the interest of dairy farmers in the United States in replenishing their herds from surplus Canadian dairy stock. It would also refer to the desirability of spreading the inflow to the U.S. of the backlog of slaughtered cattle over the winter and early spring months. While decision as to the date could be made only by the U.S. government, it was hoped that a date earlier than March 1st might be possible.

2. The Acting Prime Minister said it had been indicated that the United States would require cattle or meat from the formerly infected area to be passed by a veterinary before being admitted to the United States. It might help if an undertaking could be given that no animals or animal products from that area would be exported to the United States.

3. Mr. Gardiner believed there would be no difficulty about such a limitation. A similar undertaking could be given with regard to hay and feed. Following his return from Washington it would be desirable to discuss several matters relating to the opening of the border and its effect on the meat position.

4. The Cabinet, noted the report of the Minister of Agriculture concerning his visit to Washington and agreed that a letter be transmitted to the Secretary of Agriculture in the terms submitted to urge that the U.S. embargo on Canadian animals and animal products be raised at a date earlier than March 1st, 1953.

UNITED STATES EMBARGO ON CANADIAN ANIMALS AND ANIMAL PRODUCTS; DISCUSSIONS IN WASHINGTON

31. The Minister of Agriculture, referring to discussion at the meeting of December 4th, said he had discussed with the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States the possibility of advancing the date on which the United States embargo on Canadian animals and animal products would be lifted. The original intention of the United States authorities had been to have the embargo lifted before the present Administration went out of office. It turned out, however, that the earliest the formal measures could be initiated was December 19th or 20th, which would make the actual lifting January 19th or 20th. It was thought that that might be criticized and, consequently, the later date had been set. Mr. Brannan now proposed to discuss the matter with the Secretary of Agriculture-Designate, Mr. Benson, and, if he agreed, to advance the date of lifting to something like the original schedule. If a lifting around January 20th was not agreeable, February 1st or February 15th would be considered. At worst, the date would be the present one — March 1st.

He had spoken to Mr. Brannan about the desirability of admitting hay from eastern Canada for feeders in the New England States. Mr. Brannan agreed that special measures ought to be taken and, subject again to the agreement of Mr. Benson, he would try to have admission made possible immediately.

The original intention of the United States authorities had been to have special provision against the admission of animals and meat from the entire province of Saskatchewan. It had been explained that this would be almost impossible to administer as most of the live-stock from northern Saskatchewan was marketed through Winnipeg. He thought the difficulties had been understood, and that an attempt would be made to eliminate the special provision.

32. The Cabinet noted with approval the report of the Minister of Agriculture concerning his discussions with the United States Secretary of Agriculture relating to the date of lifting the United States embargo on Canadian animals and animal products.

SECTION D

SITUATION FINANCIÈRE DES REVUES CANADIENNES FINANCIAL POSITION OF CANADIAN MAGAZINES

845.

PCO

Note pour le Cabinet
Memorandum to Cabinet

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, July 10, 1952

FINANCIAL POSITION OF NATIONAL CANADIAN MAGAZINES

On March 19 the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance received a delegation from the Magazine Publishers Association of Canada which submitted a brief concerning the financial position of national Canadian magazines. The substance of the brief was that the financial position is precarious and becoming increasingly so, and that unless some relief is found continued publication may become financially impossible. The brief pointed out that Canadian magazines are an important instrument in the development and dissemination of Canadian culture, as was recognized by the Massey Commission, and that their increasing difficulties are mainly due to the competition of American magazines. These, owing to their very much larger circulation can be produced on more favourable terms. The brief particularly directed attention to the effects of the development of "Canadian editions" of American magazines such as Reader's Digest and Time. These editions secure a substantial amount of Canadian magazine advertising, which is one of the principal sources of revenue for Canadian magazines. The brief recommended:

(e) That a specific duty, as well as sales tax, be charged on imported magazines carrying Canadian advertising.

(b) That the exemption from duties and sales tax on paper, engravings, art work, ink, etc., accorded to Canadian periodicals should be confined to publications where editorial content (space devoted to non-advertising matter) is 75% or more of Canadian origin. (This would exclude "Canadian editions".)

(c) That all magazines printed and published in Canada be granted a statutory postal rate of 1½ cents per lb. in Canada, with no distinction between local and non-local delivery and that this rate be granted only to those publications with 75 per cent or more Canadian editorial content.

The brief was referred to the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy. The Committee had an economic survey of the position of Canadian magazines made by the Department of Trade and Commerce which substantially confirmed the representations in the brief as to their financial position. So far as the recommendations in the brief were concerned the Committee were of the view that they either presented difficulties that were too serious to enable them to be adopted or, in some cases, that they would not be effective in aiding the Canadian magazines. It was finally concluded that only two means were available to the government of providing any measure of assistance:

(a) to have greater public attention drawn to the national Canadian magazines through programmes and commentaries on the C.B.C. with the hope thereby of raising their circulation; and,

(b) to give some financial help through directing a larger amount of government advertising to them.

So far as the first is concerned, the Chairman of the C.B.C. has indicated that they think it would be feasible to arrange some commentaries or programmes so that attention would be directed from time to time to national magazines. Details are being worked out.

The total of government advertising expenditures and its allocation is shown in the attached table. In 1952 Canadian government advertising amounted to $4,723,000 of which $382,000 or 8 per cent went to Canadian magazines and Canadian editions of American magazines combined. In 1953 government advertising had dropped to $4,311,000 but the share to Canadian magazines and Canadian editions had dropped much more sharply to $195,000 — about 4½ per cent. While it would not be possible to do anything very substantial through directing government advertising to Canadian magazines, even a relatively modest amount might be quite important in the marginal financial condition of many of the magazines. The Committee accordingly recommend that, without increasing the overall amount of government advertising, additional advertising to the total of $100,000 per year be directed to national Canadian magazines rather than to other media. This diversion should not include “Canadian editions” of U.S. magazines.

The diversion could be effected by having a directive sent to the departments with the largest expenditures on advertising informing them of the government's desire. It would then be for the departments to take action individually to divert a part of their advertising. The departments most concerned, with their advertising expenditures for 1953, are the following: National Defence ($2,186,000), Resources and Development ($1,103,000), Finance ($481,000), Labour ($240,000), Citizenship and Immigration ($134,000), Post Office ($120,000), R.C.M.P. ($79,000), Trade and Commerce ($44,000), National Revenue ($43,000).

CANADIAN MAGAZINES; FINANCIAL POSITION

18. The Prime Minister referred to the interview he and the Minister of Finance had had on March 19th with a delegation from the Magazine

Publishers Association of Canada, at which time a brief was submitted on the financial position of national Canadian magazines. The brief had been referred to the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy for consideration and report.

The Committee was of opinion that most of the remedies suggested by the Association were either impractical or would not achieve the results desired. The Committee concluded that there were only two means available to the government of providing some measure of assistance.

The first would involve calling the public's attention to national Canadian magazines through programmes and commentaries on the C.B.C. network with the hope thereby of raising their circulation. The Chairman of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation had indicated that this could be done and details were now being worked out.

The second measure would involve diverting a larger amount of government advertising to Canadian magazines of general character. This diversion would not include Canadian editions of U.S. magazines such as Time and Reader's Digest. It was noted, in this latter connection, that Canadian government advertising in 1952 amounted to $4,723,000 of which $382,000, or 8 percent, went to Canadian magazines and Canadian editions of U.S. magazines combined. In 1953, government advertising had dropped to $4,311,000 but the share to Canadian magazines and Canadian editions had dropped much more sharply to $195,000, or about 4.5 percent.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Memorandum Secretary to the Cabinet, July 10, 1952 — Cab. Doc. 213-52)

19. The Cabinet, after discussion, noted the Prime Minister's report on the financial position of national Canadian magazines and agreed that:

(a) an effort be made to increase the circulation of national Canadian magazines by arranging with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to provide programmes and commentaries calling the public's attention to them; and,

(b) without increasing the overall amount of government advertising, additional advertising to the total of approximately $100,000 per annum be directed to national Canadian magazines rather than to other media; it being understood that this diversion would not include Canadian editions of U.S. magazines and that the departments with the largest advertising programmes (National Defence, Resources and Development, Finance, Labour, Citizenship and Immigration, Post Office, Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Trade and Commerce and National Revenue) be directed to carry out this diversion on a more or less pro rata basis.

UNITED STATES-CANADA TELEVISION ARRANGEMENT 587401

MEMORANDUM TO THE DIRECTOR OF AIR SERVICES

1. The problem of providing for the future of Television in Canada resulted, as the first definitive action, in a meeting held in February 1948 in Washington. The purpose of this meeting was the drafting of an allocation plan for the assignment of television channels along the Canada-United States border. This first provisional plan was predicated on the best technical information available at that time but the engineers who were responsible for the negotiations were not altogether satisfied with the geographical separations provided by the plan. The Federal Communications Commission decided to investigate these technical aspects at greater length and initiated a series of television hearings. In the meantime the draft plan served to establish Canada's position with regard to future television allocations.

2. In the latter part of June 1949 a further meeting was held in Washington to discuss television channel allocations and the original draft plan was reviewed in the light of current technical knowledge. Consideration was given at that time to the possible use of ultra-high frequencies to augment the very limited number of very high frequency television channels. Although this meeting produced a revised plan, it was generally felt that this plan was merely an interim document subject to review when the status of the art had been better established.

3. In March 1951 a meeting was held in Ottawa and a plan drafted for both VHF and UHF which appeared to be consistent with the best technical information available and the known requirements of industry for television facilities. The United States procedure for handling these matters required, however, that the plan drafted by this meeting pass through what is known as the F.C.C. rule making procedure in which industry has an opportunity to comment. The hearings under the F.C.C. rule making procedure were closely followed by Canadian engineers so as to get the best possible information on the status of the art.

4. Upon conclusion of the F.C.C. hearings on television a further meeting was held in Chicago March 31st and April 1st, 1952, for the purpose of correlating the conclusions reached by the F.C.C. as a result of their hearings and the requirements of Canada for television service. In attendance at this meeting were Mr. P. Walker, Chairman F.C.C., Mr. R. Hyde, Commissioner, F.C.C., Mr. C. Plummer and Mr. H. Copperthwaite, F.C.C., Mr. Browne and Mr. Smith of the Department of Transport and Mr. Santo of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

5. The March 1951 allocation plan was found to be basically quite satisfactory with the exception of one or two minor changes affecting Canada. One of these changes involved the assignment of channel 12, formerly assigned to Chilliwack, B.C. to Bellingham, Washington, and the assignment of channel 3 to Chilliwack. This change made no appreciable difference to the Canadian allocation picture but did allow for the assignment of one more channel in the Washington area. Two additional UHF channels, numbers 68 and 78 were obtained for the Hamilton area.

6. A number of changes in the United States picture were discussed but in practically all cases these changes had little or no effect on the Canadian allocation structure. In those cases where Canadian coverage would, in any way, be jeopardized, the Canadian delegation protested and the F.C.C. withdrew their proposals. In two cases, namely Wheeling, West Virginia and Green Bay, Wisconsin the proposed United States changes technically encroached somewhat on the coverage of future Canadian assignments but in each case the interference areas either lay outside of Canada or in unpopulated areas so the Canadian delegation agreed to these changes.

7. In view of the fact that Canada has at the present time no television stations in operation and only two under construction, i.e. Montreal and Toronto, and the United States have a large number of stations already in operation and have been active in this field for many years, it is felt that the drafting of a television allocation plan for the Canada-United States border area which assures the future of television in Canada, has been extremely worthwhile. The F.C.C. have been most co-operative in the preparation of this allocation plan and have also co-operated with Mexico in drafting a similar plan for the United States-Mexico border regions.

8. A draft text of an (U.S. draft) agreement between the United States and Canada for the assignment and utilization of television channels along the common border has been prepared and will, in due course, be sent through the diplomatic channels so that the document, the letters of transmittal and acknowledgment will form an exchange of notes between the respective Governments. A draft of the text is appended hereto.†

9. Engineering recognition was given to the use of off-set carriers as a means of obtaining better service and minimizing inter-station interference. The actual off-sets are not indicated in the tables since these are primarily matters to be worked out by the allocation engineers as assignments are made. It is expected that many of the off-sets can be worked out in advance and it is the intention of the F.C.C. and our own engineers to get together in the near future towards this end.

10. It may be noted that the geographical separations in Canada between stations on the same and adjacent channels are somewhat greater than the corresponding separations in the United States. The reason for these differences is the fact that Canadian metropolitan centers are generally much farther apart and consequently much of the rural areas will obtain only fringe service, and it was felt that by keeping inter-station interference to an absolute minimum this fringe service could be made much more useful. Furthermore, it is doubtful if Canadian economics could stand the strain of establishing and operating the large number of TV stations contemplated in the United States planning. It therefore appears logical to arrange for the maximum possible exploitation of each Canadian assignment by keeping the geographical separations as wide as possible.

11. The F.C.C. are particularly anxious to obtain Canadian approval of this arrangement at technical level so that they may advise their industry. The long delays which have been necessary through the F.C.C. hearing procedures has caused considerable concern in the United States industry. Furthermore, it would be in Canada's interests to have our position established. It is therefore recommended that approval be obtained of the work done and the agreement reached as set forth in the appended documents so that the more formal ratification by exchange of notes can take place in due course. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation are in full accord with the details of this arrangement as set forth.

GREAT LAKES WATER LEVELS:

PROPOSED REFERENCE TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

27. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that recent high levels in the Great Lakes had given rise to complaints of damage, particularly on the shores of Lake Ontario. The main cause was heavy precipitation in the Great Lakes basin. The levels in the lakes had also been slightly increased by the Long Lac and Ogoki diversions and, in Lake Ontario, by the Gut Dam built nearly fifty years ago by Canada. This dam normally raised the level of Lake Ontario 5½ inches but, when the water was high, as much as 7¾ inches.

Those complaining in the United States had directed their attention to the Gut Dam and to the conditions under which the United States had consented to its construction. These were that, if the dam materially affected the level of the lake or caused injury to U.S. interests, Canada would undertake necessary alterations and regulatory works and that, if it caused damage to U.S. property, Canada would pay compensation. Complaints of damage on the shores of the lakes had aroused considerable attention in the United States. Several bills on the matter had gone before Congress, some requesting the President to refer the question to the International Joint Commission, and the State Department had been pressed by Congressmen for such a reference.

The United States now proposed a joint reference of the high level of Lake Ontario for study and recommendation of remedial measures. Plans for the St. Lawrence project, whether for power and navigation (as under the 1941 Agreement) or for power alone (with a Canadian waterway) were based on a "Method of Regulation" to govern the out-flow and level of Lake Ontario which had been accepted by the officials of both governments. If the 1941 agreement were not approved, the "Method" would have to be approved by the commission as inherent in the construction and operation of the project submitted for approval. The Department of Transport and the Department of Resources and Development felt that, if the commission were already embarked on a lengthy study of remedial works not exclusively concerned with the St. Lawrence development, the time when plans for the St. Lawrence project could be referred to the commission would be postponed indefinitely.

This was done on June 23, 1952. See Canada, Treaty Series, 1952, No. 13.

In the circumstances, with the concurrence of the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Resources and Development, he submitted for approval a draft reply to the U.S. government to the effect that:

(a) construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project would mean regulation of the level of Lake Ontario on the basis of the agreed "Method", and establishment of a commission to report on the desirability of works for compensation and regulation in the Great Lakes system; and,

(b) it was already agreed to refer the St. Lawrence project, including the "Method", to the International Joint Commission for approval if the 1941 Agreement were not approved.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, March 20, 1952 — Cab. Doc. 98-52+)

28. The Minister of National Health and Welfare said there was flooding in the Windsor area and on Lake Erie which was likely to become worse before summer and result in increasing demands for action by the government. This condition had existed before the diversions were made into Lake Superior and recurred every fifteen years or so. In the circumstances, he felt some consideration would have to be given to the question of water level on the lakes in general.

29. The Minister of Transport pointed out that, under the new agreement with Ontario on power development in the international section of the St. Lawrence, the government had undertaken to do everything possible to obtain the approval of the International Joint Commission for works that would be constructed in accordance with the "Controlled Single Stage Project" which envisaged recourse to the "Method of Regulation" mentioned. Ontario would probably have to be consulted, therefore, if there were a question of a reference to the commission of the problem of levels in Lake Ontario.

His department felt that, if it became necessary, it would probably be possible to blow up Gut Dam, although the effects of such action would require careful study.

30. The Minister of Resources and Development said a reversal of the Long Lac and Ogoki diversions would not become fully effective for some five years and would provide no appreciable early relief on the lakes.

31. Mr. Pearson thought it would be advisable to try to make the proposed reply to the U.S. government more positive and to take the general position that the government would be glad to see the present problems in Lake Ontario met by implementation of the 1941 Agreement or, if that agreement were not approved, by reference of the power project to the commission.

32. The Cabinet after further discussion:

(a) approved the recommendation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, concurred in by the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Resources and Development, and agreed that a reply on the question of water levels in Lake Ontario be communicated to the U.S. government along the lines of that submitted; on the understanding that the three ministers would approve any drafting changes made; and,

(b) agreed that the Minister of Resources and Development provide data on water levels in the Great Lakes for consideration at a subsequent meeting.

Memorandum from American and Far Eastern Division to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, April 16, 1952

HIGH WATER LEVELS OF THE GREAT LAKES; EFFECT OF THE GUT DAM

A suit was filed in the District Court of the District of Columbia on April 9, on behalf of landowners on the south shore of Lake Ontario seeking a mandatory injunction, directed to the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of State, to accomplish the destruction or reconstruction with movable gates of that portion of the Gut Dam within the United States.

2. In concurring in the construction of the dam in 1902, the Secretary of War set forth two conditions:

"1. That if, after said dam has been constructed, it is found that it materially affects the water levels of Lake Ontario or the Saint Lawrence River or causes any injury to the interests of the United States, the government of Canada shall make such changes therein, and provide such additional regulation works in connection therewith, as the Secretary of War may order.

"2. That if the construction and operation of the said dam shall cause damage or detriment to the property owners of Les Galops Island, or to the property of any other citizens of the United States, the government of Canada shall pay such amount of compensation as may be agreed upon between the said government and the parties damaged, or as may be awarded the said parties in the proper court of the United States before which claims for damages may be brought."

Those making the complaints asked the State Department for advice as to how they should proceed in obtaining redress from the Canadian Government for the damage to their property, alleged to have been caused by the Gut Dam. The State Department has informed them that the United States Government will raise no objection if they wish to present their claims directly to Canadian officials for their consideration. (Under Title 18, Section 953 of the U.S. Code, a citizen of the United States may not, without authority, carry on correspondence with any foreign government or any officer or agency thereof.)

3. The United States Embassy has informed us that those making the complaints state that they are ready to present claims to the Canadian Government. The Embassy has informally asked for advice as to the proper channel through which the claims may be sent to the Canadian Government direct by those making the complaints. For the moment, at least, attention has been centered on the Gut Dam, constructed and maintained by the Department of Transport, but the diversions made by the Province of Ontario may also be drawn into the attempts to obtain redress.

4. The second condition set forth by the Secretary of War in concurring in the construction of the Gut Dam would appear to require that an attempt be made to settle claims by direct negotiations between those claiming redress and the Canadian Government. The normal approach of a U.S. citizen to the Canadian Government might be through the Canadian Embassy in Washington but we should, perhaps, avoid inviting the presentation of claims to the Embassy. On the other hand, the State Department appear to have avoided becoming a channel of communication in this particular respect and the only other course would seem to be to have the claims addressed direct to the Department of Transport.<sup>117</sup>

HIGH WATER LEVELS IN THE GREAT LAKES;
REFERENCE TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

39. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of March 28th, 1952, submitted a revised draft reply to the U.S. government's request that the question of high water levels on the Great Lakes be referred to the International Joint Commission. The draft note, as revised, indicated that the government was prepared to concur in the suggested reference to the International Joint Commission on the understanding that the reference would be drafted in such a manner as not to delay, in any way,

<sup>117</sup>Notre copie du document porte la mention manuscrite suivante :

The following was written on this copy of the document:

If our Embassy in Wash[ington] is used as a channel for documents it will involve the Embassy in a great deal of detail work. Claims should be submitted to us by U.S. Embassy in Ottawa with whom we are in direct touch & from where we can easily & quietly get any additional data we may need. How the claims reach U.S. Embassy (i.e. through the State Dept. or otherwise) is a matter for the U.S. H.O. M[oran] consideration and approval of the application on the St. Lawrence development project when submitted.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, April 26, 1952 — Cab. Doc. 133-52)†

40. The Minister of Transport pointed out that it now seemed possible that concurrent applications in respect of the St. Lawrence development project might be filed with the International Joint Commission in a few weeks' time. In the circumstances, it might be preferable to postpone our reply to the U.S. request regarding water levels until such time as the St. Lawrence applications had actually been submitted to the Commission.

41. Mr. Pearson thought it would be politically and otherwise undesirable to withhold any longer Canadian concurrence in the reference of the high water levels problem. The draft reply to the U.S. request, however, might be reworded to make it unmistakably clear that the St. Lawrence application would have priority consideration by the International Joint Commission even if submitted later than the high water levels reference.

42. The Cabinet, after discussion, approved in principle the draft reply to the U.S. government's request for reference of the high water levels problem on the Great Lakes to the International Joint Commission subject to revision along the lines suggested by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and clearance with the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Transport.<sup>118</sup>

1. The Secretary of State for External Affairs referring to discussion at the meeting of April 30th, 1952, said the United States Embassy had submitted a draft of the proposed reference to the International Joint Commission on the high water level of Lake Ontario. The draft had been revised and put in a form to ensure that the Commission would neither delay consideration of the St. Lawrence project nor entertain a discussion of alterations in the project as a result of the present reference. The U.S. government was desirous of having the reference submitted to the Commission as soon as possible. It was recommended that the draft be approved.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT; REMOVAL OF GUT DAM

26. The Acting Prime Minister said that at hearings held in Rochester, New York, on July 22nd on the Lake Ontario water levels reference to the International Joint Commission vehement representations had been made in favour of the removal of the Gut Dam. This dam had been constructed in 1904 by the Canadian government between two islands in the St. Lawrence River just below Prescott, Ontario and it would be recalled that at the time of construction, Canada undertook to indemnify any U.S. residents who suffered injury as a result thereof and to construct any remedial works if required to do so by the U.S. Secretary of State for War. During the course of the Rochester hearings, opposition to the power project was threatened if Canada did not cooperate in the removal of the dam. At the end of the hearings the U.S. section of the Commission pressed the Canadian section for an immediate interim recommendation under the water levels reference for removal of the dam.

General McNaughton, the Chairman of the Canadian section had suggested to the Counsel for Canada on the St. Lawrence power application that the Canadian government might at this time consider a unilateral offer to remove the Gut Dam. This proposal had been considered by an ad hoc committee comprising representatives of the departments most immediately concerned. As there was some likelihood that an awkward request might be forthcoming from the United States to remove the dam, in which event Canada would have no alternative but to comply with the request, and with a view to facilitating early approval of the St. Lawrence application by the International Joint Commission, it was recommended that General McNaughton be authorized to inform the U.S. section that instructions had been given to the appropriate Canadian agencies to ascertain as quickly as possible whether the dam could be removed in advance of the construction of the power project without injury to navigation, to the power project itself or to downstream power and other interests. It would seem that removal would have to take place progressively in order to avoid the danger of serious flooding in the Lachine and other areas downstream. It was further recommended that an engineering committee comprising representatives of the government of Canada and of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec be established immediately to consider and report on the possibility of removing the dam and on the manner in which such removal might take place.

A draft letter from General McNaughton to the Chairman of the U.S. Section of the International Joint Commission was submitted.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

(Memorandum, Privy Council Office, July 30, 1952, Cab. Doc. 226-52)†

27. The Secretary of State for External Affairs generally favoured the suggestion regarding early removal of the Gut Dam but thought that the letter proposed to be sent by General McNaughton to Senator Stanley might usefully be modified in certain respects.

28. Mr. Howe, said the Minister of Transport, after consultation with General McNaughton and Mr. R.A.C. Henry, had recommended that the National Research Council be asked to build a model which would be required to ascertain the effects that removal of the dam might have particularly regarding flooding and navigation.

(Memorandum, Minister of Transport, to Acting Prime Minister July 29, 1952)†

29. The Cabinet, after discussion,

(a) agreed in principle that an early start be made on the removal of the Gut Dam providing this could be done without injury to navigation, to the proposed development of power in the International Rapids Section or to power and other interests downstream;

(b) agreed that the Chairman of the U.S. Section of the International Joint Commission be informed of this decision, it being understood that the Secretary of State for External Affairs would revise the proposed letter to Senator Stanley in consultation with General McNaughton; and,

(c) agreed that an engineering committee comprising representatives of Canada, Ontario and Quebec be established immediately to consider and report on the possibility of removing the dam and the manner in which such removal should take place.

Washington against the United States Government, claiming damages as a result of the effect of the Gut Dam on the level of Lake Ontario.

2. Without arousing any unnecessary interest in the matter, would you please endeavour to find out, informally, the nature and extent of these claims and when they are likely to be heard by the Court of Claims.

ST. LAWRENCE DEVELOPMENT PROJECT;

LAKE ONTARIO WATER LEVELS; REMOVAL OF GUT DAM

42. The Minister of Transport, referring to discussion at the meeting of August 27th<sup>121</sup> reported that Mr. H.W. Lea, whose services had been retained for the purpose, had now submitted an interim report on the practicability of removing the Gut Dam at an early date. Mr. Lea's preliminary conclusions were to the effect that it was not practical to attempt to remove the Dam by blasting, that it should be removed progressively, that it was doubtful whether any part could be removed this year although some preparatory work could be done and that early removal would not cause any objectionable increase in water levels downstream nor any serious disturbance to navigation although there would be some changes in currents and velocities above the entrance to the Galop Canal. Mr. Lea thought that if removal was to be completed in one open water season (and this should probably be between August 1st and December 15th) the total cost might be approximately $300,000. If the work was to extend over two seasons, the cost would be much greater and might reach a figure of $500,000.

The Chairman of the Canadian Section of the International Joint Commission was rather disturbed by Mr. Lea's suggestion that it would be impracticable to consider removal before the autumn of 1953. General McNaughton feared that it might be difficult, if not impossible to secure an Order of Approval for the St. Lawrence project from the International Joint Commission unless something more positive was done towards removal before freeze-up this year. He felt confident that if he were authorized to state that the Canadian government was prepared to remove at least a portion of the dam this year, an Order of Approval would probably be issued by the International Joint Commission before the end of October.

If any work was to be done this autumn there would not be time to call for tenders and it would probably be necessary to select a contractor on a cost-plus basis.

43. The Prime Minister noted that several claims for damages caused by high waters along the shores of Lake Ontario had been filed in the United States

Court of Claims at Washington. In view of the terms of the 1904 Canada-U.S. Agreement respecting the Gut Dam, Canada might be faced with the obligation of paying substantial damages if the Court of Claims upheld the damage suits now lodged with it.

In the circumstances and in order to ensure early action by the International Joint Commission on the St. Lawrence power application, it might be advisable to authorize General McNaughton to state at the October 20th hearings of the Commission that the Canadian government was hiring a contractor immediately to undertake early removal of the Dam.

44. Mr. Chevrier mentioned that the Secretary of State for External Affairs had suggested that, in view of the above damage claims, there might be some advantage in asking Mr. Lea to undertake a study of the actual effects of the Gut Dam on Lake Ontario water levels. If, as anticipated, such a study revealed that the Dam had very little if any effect, Mr. Lea's report in this matter should be filed as soon as possible with the U.S. Court of Claims.

45. The Cabinet, after further discussion, agreed that,

(a) the Minister of Transport retain immediately the services of a competent contractor to undertake early removal of the Gut Dam and that General McNaughton be authorized to state that this was being done at the October 20th final hearings of the International Joint Commission on the St. Lawrence power application; and,

(b) Mr. H.W. Lea be requested to review and report as soon as possible on the actual effects of the Gut Dam on Lake Ontario water levels.

WATER LEVELS OF LAKE ONTARIO

Reference: EX-2001 of October 11.

1. The State Department have already sent to the United States Embassy at Ottawa copies of the suits which have been entered recently in the Court of Claims, for transmission to the Department and to the I.J.C. The suits involve a request by about seventy-nine property owners for indemnification by the United States Government for damage caused to property as a result of the effect of Gut Dam on the level of Lake Ontario.

2. Mr. Vallance, with whom we later spoke about this matter, said that he had instructed the Embassy at Ottawa to suggest that the Department might wish to have someone participate on the side of the defendants in the litigation, or take some other action to help bring about a dismissal of the suits.

3. Vallance said that normally cases are not heard for two or three months after submission, but in this instance, he thought the plaintiffs would make an effort to have the case treated as a priority item. The plaintiffs are disturbed by the fact that if the dam is not removed this fall, their property will again be flooded next spring. The claims might be taken up, therefore, within four to six weeks. We were promised a copy of the suits, but since you are to receive the documents from the United States Embassy in Ottawa, we shall not transmit our copy unless you so indicate.

4. There is another suit which was entered in Northern New York State a day or two ago. This suit asks for the outright removal of the dam. According to Vallance, it requests authority for local officials to remove the dam at the expense of Canada.

5. Vallance also has information that Kenneth Keating (Republican representative for Rochester, New York), intends to introduce in the House in January a Bill to require the removal of the Gut Dam.

6. In our letter No. 848 of April 10,† we summarized the suit filed in the United States District Court at that time, in which the plaintiffs sought a mandatory injunction directing the Secretaries of the Army, Defence, and State to destroy or reconstruct the portion of the Gut Dam in the United States. On looking up the docket at the District Court, we have found that on July 1, 1952, Judge David A. Pine ordered the case dismissed. A summary of his opinion is being forwarded by bag.<sup>†122</sup>

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT; REPORT ON FINAL HEARINGS OF INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION; PROPOSED EXCHANGE OF NOTES WITH THE UNITED STATES ON EARLY REMOVAL OF THE GUT DAM

5. The Minister of Transport reported on the final hearings of the International Joint Commission on the joint applications for power development in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River held at Washington on October 20th.

Although it had been expected that these hearings might be fairly lengthy and rather difficult, they had in fact lasted less than one day. Very little serious opposition had been voiced to the project although property-owner associations from both the U.S. and Canadian shores of Lake Ontario had again attempted at some length to establish that the Gut Dam was largely responsible for damage to the property of riparian owners along the shores of Lake Ontario. The Canadian position in this matter was rendered more difficult because of the fact that Senator Stanley, the Chairman of the American Section of the International Joint Commission, had during the course of the final hearings, as on several previous occasions, concurred in the view that much of the damage could be attributed directly to the Dam. Senator Stanley had even indicated privately that he would not agree to an Order of Approval being handed down until after the Canadian government had taken action to remove the Dam. He had since, however, somewhat modified his position although it was not unlikely that the Order of Approval might contain a condition providing for early removal of the Dam. It now seemed probable that the International Joint Commission would issue its Order of Approval in the very near future.

Although it had been reported earlier that, even if work were to be put under way immediately, only part of the Gut Dam could be removed this year. The Canadian engineers who have been studying this matter now were inclined to the view that it might be possible to continue work on the project even after freeze-up on the St. Lawrence. If the project were undertaken in the near future it was thought that removal might be completed by February 1953. The Canadian Dredge and Dock Company of Kingston was now engaged in the preparation of detailed plans in this connection.

There were two matters which should be considered in anticipation of early approval of the power application by the Commission. The first was whether the 1941 Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Basin Agreement should be denounced by Canada following approval. He felt such a course of action might advantageously be followed although the matter should probably be discussed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs with the Secretary of State of the United States to ensure that Canadian withdrawal from the 1941 Agreement at this time would in no way jeopardize the successful conclusion of hearings soon to be undertaken by the U.S. Federal Power Commission on the St. Lawrence power development project. Consideration should also be given to the desirability of having Canada represented by counsel at the forthcoming Federal Power Commission hearings on the St. Lawrence power application. Ontario Hydro was anxious that Canadian interests should be protected by active intervention before the Federal Power Commission and he felt that this had perhaps best be done by counsel representing Canada rather than the province or the Hydro-Electric Commission. It was difficult at this stage to forecast how long it would be before the Federal Power Commission concluded its hearings on the project. The view was held in several U.S. quarters that the hearings would doubtless give rise to protracted litigation in the courts and that for this and other reasons the Federal Power Commission would in all probability not be in a position to issue a licence for some considerable time, if at all. There were others, including Senator Stanley and the U.S. Ambassador to Canada, who felt that the Federal Power Commission would, in all probability, be in a position to issue a licence some time before the spring of 1953.

6. The Prime Minister said that several claims for damages attributed to the Gut Dam amongst other causes had been filed with the U.S. Court of Claims at Washington. In view of the terms of the agreements reached between Canadian and U.S. authorities in 1903 and 1904 respecting the Dam, it seemed likely that Canada would be under obligation to pay damages if the claims now lodged with the U.S. Court of Claims were upheld. Consequently if the Dam no longer served any useful purpose, it seemed desirable to make every effort to have it removed at the earliest possible date.

7. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration suggested that before the Dam was removed, every effort be made to collect accurate engineering and other evidence as to the actual effects of the Dam on the levels of Lake Ontario. Such evidence might in future be used to advantage in refuting claims for damages.

8. Mr. Chevrier pointed out that Mr. H.W. Lea, whose services had been retained to consider how the Dam could be removed without injury to other interests, had now been asked to review and report on the actual effects of the Dam on the outflow and water levels of Lake Ontario. It was hoped that Mr. Lea's report in this matter would indicate that the Dam had very little if any effect on Lake Ontario levels.

He added that Mr. R.A.C. Henry was of opinion that the present high water levels on Lake Ontario were in many respects comparable to the high water-level period between the years 1860 and 1875. It could reasonably be expected that the present high levels would continue for several years, perhaps 5 or 6, in which event removal of the Dam now would have no injurious effect on navigation. If, however, extremely low water levels were to occur after removal of the Dam and prior to completion of the power and seaway project, it might be necessary for ships using the Galop Canal to reduce tonnage. In view of all the other circumstances, this seemed to be a calculated risk well worth taking.

9. The Prime Minister said that since removal of the Dam might affect the natural level or flow of the River within the meaning of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909, prior agreement would have to be sought from the U.S. Government. This might be achieved by an Exchange of Notes between the two Governments.

An explanatory memorandum and draft note had been circulated.

(Memorandum, Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, Oct. 22, 1952 — Cab. Doc. 341-52)†

10. Mr. St. Laurent thought that, before the Note was delivered to the U.S. Ambassador to Canada it might with advantage be examined carefully by the Department of Justice to ensure that it would not in any way jeopardize Canada's chances of resisting successfully the various claims for damages now lodged with U.S. courts.

11. The Secretary said that one of the main purposes of the Note was to withdraw from the position taken in an earlier Note sent to the U.S. Embassy in October 1951 in which it had been admitted specifically that the Gut Dam did have the effect of increasing the levels of Lake Ontario by several inches.

12. The Cabinet, after discussion,

(a) noted the report by the Minister of Transport on the final hearings of the International Joint Commission held at Washington on October 20th on the application for power development in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River.

(b) agreed that a Note be sent to the U.S. Ambassador to Canada seeking the concurrence of the U.S. Government in early removal of the Gut Dam; the Department of Justice to ascertain before despatch of the Note that it was in such terms as not to jeopardize a successful defence against the various claims for damages now lodged with U.S. courts;<sup>123</sup> and,

(c) agreed that Canada be represented at forthcoming hearings of the U.S. Federal Power Commission on the application of the New York State Power Authority for the development of power in the St. Lawrence River and at proceedings of the U.S. Court of Claims on damage suits now lodged with that Court; the Secretary of State for External Affairs to take the steps required to arrange for such representation.

No. X-262

Ottawa, November 4, 1952

The Secretary of State for External Affairs presents his compliments to His Excellency the Ambassador of the United States of America and has the honour to refer to the Note of the Department of External Affairs of February 27, 1952 (No. X-51), and to previous correspondence concerning the level of Lake Ontario, and in particular to the effect of the Gut Dam.

Examination of this dam and studies of its effect on the level of Lake Ontario and of the downstream effects of its possible removal, have led to the conclusion that the dam can be removed now without causing damage to other interests involved and equipment is in fact now being moved to the site to begin work on removal.

In the Department's Note under reference, some statements were made based on calculations of what was considered to be the possible effect of the dam on the level of Lake Ontario. As a result of further study of this matter, however, additional information has come to hand which indicates that the previously calculated effect of the Gut Dam on the high water levels of Lake Ontario is greatly exaggerated. The additional information relates to the enlargement of the channel on the Canadian side of the river by dredging and to the possible effect of scouring which may have compensated in large part for the effect of the Gut Dam, especially in periods of extreme high water. Moreover, this additional information indicates that examination of other factors will be necessary.

The original purpose of the dam was to eliminate dangerous cross-currents and eddies in the navigation channel of the river. Any effect it may have on the level of the water has tended to compensate for the effect of the dredging undertaken in connection with the improvement of the river for navigation and for the effect of other factors tending to increase the out-flow of Lake Ontario.

On the other hand, because of the present high level of the water in Lake Ontario, it would be desirable to increase the outflow capacity of the St. Lawrence River. Although the increase resulting from removal of the dam will probably not be great, it may be sufficient to afford a measure of relief from the high water level of Lake Ontario. The dam would have to be removed, in any case, in the course of construction of the St. Lawrence project, arrangements for which now appear to be nearing completion.

In view of the above, the Canadian Government considered it desirable to make immediate arrangements for removal and this has been done. While removal of the dam may affect the level or flow of the river within the meaning of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909, the condition attached by the International Joint Commission, with the consent of counsel for both Governments, to its recent order of approval of the St. Lawrence Project, is presumed to eliminate the need for any further authority or approval for removal of the dam. On the other hand, the dam is situated on both sides of the international boundary and, in these circumstances, it is hoped that the United States Government will confirm that it agrees to the removal of the dam being undertaken by the Canadian Government.

WRIT AGAINST CANADIAN GOVERNMENT RE GUT DAM

Reference: EX-2145 of November 6.

Addressed External as WA-2621, repeated to Consul General, New York as No. 401.

1. On receipt of your teletype this morning, we got on to Dean Brown<sup>124</sup> at the State Department immediately. He has just given us the preliminary views of the legal division on this question. The legal experts claim, first, that Canada has recognized its vulnerability in a suit and has waived its immunity to be sued in the United States courts for damage to property in view of the conditions under which construction of the Gut Dam was approved. Brown referred to condition 2 of the permit of the United States Secretary of War of 1903 which states that "the Government of Canada shall pay such amount of compensation.....as may be awarded the said parties in the proper court of the United States." He also referred to the other statements quoted in the United States Embassy's note No. 64 of October 22.†

2. We said that the immediate problem seems to us to be whether the Consul-General at New York is subject to the summons served upon him by the United States District Court for the Northern District of New York. Brown's first reaction was that since we have stated that the courts could make a decision in the matter, we would not be able to refuse a summons since we would be the defendants in the case. However, Brown was not definite on this point. He is trying to arrange for us to meet with the legal experts to discuss this question some time this afternoon.

Possibly L.D. Brown, Office of British Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs, Department of State of United States.

3. Incidentally, with respect to the summons, if it had been addressed not to "Dominion of Canada" but to the Consul-General, New York, personally, as the defendant, the State Department's view would have been that the Consul-General would be liable to appear before the court. This is based on the consideration there is no consular convention between Canada and the United States and therefore Canadian consular officers in the United States have no automatic immunity from process in the United States courts. However, when we told Brown that the summons names as defendant the "Dominion of Canada", he stated that, in that case, the above consideration would not apply.

4. The above confirms telephone call to Eberts this noon. We urgently await your views which are needed for meeting this afternoon. Saturday and Tuesday are holidays and we have very little time.

5. Understand you are considering sending someone down from Legal Division for Monday but will await results of this afternoon's meeting.

1. In my immediately following telegram there is included the text of a note which I would ask you to deliver as early as possible on Monday to the State Department. I understand that Tuesday is a holiday and that the time limit for service of an "answer to the complaint" upon the Plaintiffs' Attorney, Perry Rauch, 1104 State Tower Building, Syracuse, N.Y. is twenty days after October 23, the date of service of the summons. Accordingly, the answer would have to be delivered on or before Wednesday, November 12.

2. For confidential information, I may say that the draft convention entitled "Competence of Courts in regard to Foreign States" prepared by the Harvard Research on International Law contained in the Supplement to volume 26 of the American Journal of International Law and which is frequently regarded as an authoritative exposition of the international law on this subject, contains the following article:

"ARTICLE 20

A State shall permit another State to bring, through any specifically authorized agent, a claim of immunity in accordance with the provisions of this Convention, directly before the court for its decision. At the request of such other State, the State of the forum, without obligation to comment on the merits of such a claim of immunity, shall transmit it to the court for its decision."

3. If you should be asked if a copy of this note might be transmitted to the Court or the Plaintiffs' Attorney, or both, you should inform the State Department that we assume that they will do whatever is required by United States law to have the immunity upheld but that, subject to this assumption, we have no objection to a copy of the note being so transmitted.

Following is text of note referred to in my immediately preceding telegram:

1. I have the honour to refer to the action which has been commenced in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York by Arthur Oster and Dorothy Oster, as plaintiffs, against the Dominion of Canada, as defendant. A copy of the complaint (No. 4511) was served on the Canadian Consul-General in New York. Since a further copy was transmitted to the Government of Canada by the Embassy of the United States in Ottawa, I assume that the text of the complaint is also recorded on the files of the State Department.

2. I am directed also to inform you that the Government of Canada recognizes in principle its obligation to pay compensation for damages to United States citizens provided they are attributable to the construction or operation of Gut Dam in the sense of condition numbered (2) in the instruments of approval of the United States Secretary of War of August 18, 1903 and October 10, 1904. However, my Government does not consider that it has, by reason of its acquiescence in this condition or otherwise, at any time waived the sovereign immunity of Canada from suit in the courts of the United States.

3. The Canadian Government has taken note of the fact that there are a large number of claims arising out of the high water levels of Lake Ontario and that many of these claims have been asserted against the Government of the United States. It is in the common interest of United States claimants, of the United States, and of Canada that some effective arrangement be made by which all claims by United States citizens for damages arising out of the high water levels of Lake Ontario can be processed at the same time and with a minimum of effort and expense. Accordingly, the Government of Canada would be prepared to facilitate the submission of all claims to an appropriate tribunal which would have power to determine the extent to which damage may have been caused by high water attributable to the existence of Gut Dam, as well as the quantum of damage. The Canadian Government is prepared to enter into immediate discussions with your Government for the purpose of selecting or establishing such a tribunal and the procedure to be followed.

4. I am, therefore, requested by my Government formally to ask that the sovereign immunity of Canada from suit in the domestic courts of the United States should be upheld both in regard to the above action and in regard to any other actions which any other persons may institute against Canada arising out of the construction or operation of Gut Dam.

5. I would accordingly be grateful if you would take immediate action to terminate the proceedings in the District Court, and if you would, in due course, inform me of the reaction of your Government to the foregoing suggestions.

Following from Erichsen-Brown for Pierce, Begins:

1. The text of the two immediately preceding telegrams was approved by the Prime Minister. On the latter's instructions, Mundell of Justice Department is flying to New York Sunday. He and Burbridge, who is now in New York, will consult attorneys in New York City.

2. Immediate objective will be to secure advice on procedure and in particular to clarify functions of the executive (State Department) and the courts on determination of sovereign immunity of a foreign state.

3. Consider it inadvisable to inform State Department that we have retained counsel, because this might lead State Department to relax efforts to take any further steps, although under international law responsibility is on State Department to do so. The purport of our note is to place onus squarely on State Department. However, the fact that counsel has been retained may have to be revealed later.

4. I was informed by Cleveland<sup>125</sup> of our Consulate in New York about ten days ago that the immunity of foreign states has been the subject of discussion in the consular law society of which he is a member, and that the consensus of opinion of its members is that the courts of New York State are prone to take jurisdiction if it is possible to do so. What would be particularly objectionable from our point of view would be to have jurisdiction sustained by the court and a precedent established which might result in our having to defend a large number of actions in New York State.

K.A. Greene, Consul-General in New York.

Following for Mr. Greene and Mr. Burbridge, Begins:

1. We have just been informed orally by Brown that the State Department is unable to accept our claim to sovereign immunity from suit in domestic courts of the United States in the Gut Dam case on the grounds that

(a) The conditions under which agreement to construct the dam was reached in the permits constituted a waiver of immunity on our part;

(b) Even if this were not the case, sovereign immunity cannot be claimed in any suit involving real estate. In this instance, at the time of construction of the dam, Canada purchased a few acres of ground adjoining the dam on the United States shore. The present suit for damages in New York State, therefore, is regarded as a claim involving real estate.

2. The State Department have no objection to discussing the setting up of a tribunal to determine damages. However, this will not in any way affect the rights of citizens to go to the courts independently with their claims for compensation for damages.

3. The State Department will try to send us a formal note embodying the above by Wednesday. We have given Ken Burbridge in New York an outline of the above by telephone, and are repeating this message to him.

4. Burbridge has advised us of the course which he, Mundell, and Counsel in New York have worked out. We are to receive a text of a letter to be signed by the Ambassador setting forth that we do not believe the court has jurisdiction. We are to deliver this letter to New York tomorrow, and it will be taken by Counsel to UTICA tomorrow night. We understand that our appearance will prevent judgment by default and will not prejudice our position on immunity. Ends.

GUT DAM LITIGATION — UTICA, NEW YORK

Addressed Beaver No. 60, Immediate, repeated External No. 219 as Important.

Following for Pierce from Burbridge, Begins:

1. As explained in our telephone conversation this afternoon Wyatt of the legal firm of Sullivan and Cromwell here, after careful examination of our problem, has advised Mundell and myself that the best and safest course for the Canadian Government to follow at the present time is to have the Canadian Ambassador in Washington personally sign a letter to the Judges of the United States District Court, Northern District of New York (the text of such a letter follows). This letter should be delivered to Burbridge in care of the Canadian Delegation to the United Nations at the Biltmore Hotel, New York, by a member of your staff not later than 3 p.m. Tuesday, November 11. Burbridge will arrange to have the letter given to Wyatt who will take it with him to UTICA and deliver it personally to the Judge there and also a copy to the Clerk of the Court before 4 p.m. on Wednesday, November 12. Original of letter should be accompanied by two copies.

2. For Mr. Wrong's information the Prime Minister personally instructed Mundell to consult Wyatt with Burbridge and act on Wyatt's advice to take any steps to avoid default judgment and to obtain dismissal of the action.

3. The following is the text of the letter which has been approved by the Department of Justice in Ottawa and which Mr. Wrong may wish to sign in triplicate if he approves. Text Begins:

To the Honourable the Judges of the United States District Court for the Northern District of New York:

Information has been given me that on October 23, 1952, a United States Marshal called at the office of the Canadian Consulate General in New York, New York, and left on the desk of the Consul General, in the presence of the Consul General, a copy of the summons and of the complaint in an action entitled in the United States District Court for the Northern District of New York, Civil Action No. 4511, Arthur Oster and Dorothy Oster, plaintiffs, against "Dominion of Canada", defendant.

I have the honour to represent in the United States Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II in right of Canada as Ambassador and I am instructed by her Majesty's Government in Canada respectfully to address Your Honours with reference to the action above described. It is likely that the designation "Dominion of Canada" as defendant is intended to refer to Her Majesty in right of Canada, but the designation is not accurate or appropriate.

Her Majesty's Government in Canada have instructed me respectfully to suggest to Your Honours that, as a sovereign and under well established principles of international law, Her Majesty in right of Canada is not subject to suit in your Honourable Court without Her consent, which consent has not been given and is not given in the action above described. There is the following averment in the complaint in the action:

"The defendant has waived any immunity from suit and has consented to be sued as hereinafter set forth." I am instructed that Her Majesty has not waived immunity from suit in your Honourable Court and has not consented to be sued in your Honourable Court, either as set forth in the complaint or otherwise. It should also be pointed out that the Canadian Consul General in New York would not in any event be a person authorized to receive writs, notices or other forms of process on behalf of Her Majesty.

The purpose of this letter is solely to invite the attention of Your Honours to a lack of jurisdiction in your Honourable Court and does not in any way constitute an appearance or a submission or a consent to jurisdiction. Her Majesty in right of Canada asserts and relies upon an immunity from suit as a sovereign and, in consequence, suggests that your Honourable Court should proceed no further in the subject action.

Respectfully submitted,

Ambassador of Canada to the United States

GUT DAM — UTICA LITIGATION

Addressed Ottawa No. 271, repeated Washington No. 80.

Following from Burbridge, Begins: I learned this morning from Wyatt that upon his arrival in Utica on Wednesday he found that the judge and clerk of the court were in Syracuse. He proceeded to Syracuse and handed Mr. Wrong's letter to the judge and a copy to the clerk of the court and explained orally the legal precedents objecting to the procedure on grounds of improper service and immunities. The judge assured him that he certainly would not agree to a default being entered in view of the points raised by Mr. Wyatt. This assurance was also made by the clerk of the court who stated moreover that if any further action were contemplated he, (Wyatt) would be immediately informed.

2. Wyatt informs us that he sent a full report of what happened to Mr. Varcoe<sup>127</sup> a couple of days ago. That report should be in Ottawa now.

3. Wyatt also got in touch with the solicitor for the plaintiff and left with him a copy of Mr. Wrong's letter. He thinks that this letter was handed to the plaintiff who probably made a statement to the press. In talking to the solicitor for the plaintiff Wyatt got the impression that he anticipated our objections particularly that relating to sovereign immunity and in view of the objections being registered he seemed inclined to take no further action. In view of this Wyatt intends to phone the plaintiff's solicitor on Monday suggesting to him that in view of the commitment of the Canadian Government that it would be willing to consider claims submitted in the proper forum that he should advise his clients to take the matter up with the State Department and discontinue court proceedings. Wyatt intends to suggest this procedure to the plaintiff's solicitor unless instructed by Justice Department to the contrary.

<sup>127</sup>F.P. Varcoe, sous-ministre de la Justice.

4. Although I have not yet seen it, Cleveland informs me that there is something about this matter on page 8 of the New York Times of today's date to the effect that the statement of claim will be revised to include Her Majesty Elizabeth II in right of Canada as defendant. Ends.

LAKE ONTARIO WATER LEVELS; CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES

24. The Prime Minister, referring to discussion at the meeting of October 23rd, reported that, in view of the terms of the 1903-04 agreements on construction of the Gut Dam, the U.S. State Department had been unwilling to forward, as suggested by Canada, a certificate confirming to the District Court of northern New York the sovereign immunity of Canada.

The New York legal firm of Sullivan and Cromwell had been retained to advise in this matter and, following consultation with Mr. Wyatt of that firm the Canadian Ambassador had signed a letter to the Judges and Clerk of the above Court suggesting that, in view of Canada's sovereign immunity, the Court lacked jurisdiction in respect of the claims for damages entered by Oster and Oster. After delivering the Ambassador's suggestion to the Judges and Clerk of the Court, Sullivan and Cromwell had reported to the Deputy Minister of Justice that although the case had not yet been dismissed it was unlikely the plaintiffs would be able to sign any default judgement. In any event, the Court had undertaken to keep the firm informed as to future developments.

At the same time, Sullivan and Cromwell was informing the plaintiffs' solicitor that, in view of the Canadian government's statement that it would be willing to consider claims submitted in a proper forum agreed upon by the Canadian and U.S. governments, he should advise his clients to take the matter up with the State Department and to discontinue court proceedings in northern New York.

With a view to counteracting any unfavourable reaction which the Ambassador's suggestion of lack of jurisdiction might have had, a press release had been issued the previous Saturday outlining in detail the government's position and the desirability of Canada and the United States reaching agreement on the establishment of an appropriate tribunal to dispose of the various claims as expeditiously and equitably as possible.<sup>128</sup>

It had been suggested by the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs that it might now be advisable to retain counsel to advise the government generally with regard to claims of U.S. citizens for damages arising out of high water levels on Lake Ontario allegedly caused by the Gut Dam. If the general retainer of counsel (presumably Sullivan and Cromwell) was approved, the Department of External Affairs proposed, in consultation with the Department of Justice, to press the State Department for an early reply to the Canadian request for discussions on the setting up of a tribunal and to proceed with such discussions in Washington as soon as possible after consultation with Counsel.

(Memorandum, External Affairs, Nov. 17, 1952)†

25. Mr. St. Laurent thought counsel should be retained immediately as recommended and that the question of reaching agreement on the setting up of a tribunal to hear the various claims for damages arising in the United States should be pursued actively in view of the cases now pending in the U.S. Court of Claims at Washington and in the Court of the northern district of New York at Utica. He did not think that Canada, as a sovereign foreign power, could or should submit to the findings of ordinary domestic courts in the United States.

26. The Cabinet, after discussion,

(a) noted with approval the report by the Prime Minister on recent developments on the disposition of claims lodged in U.S. courts for damages allegedly attributable to the Gut Dam; and,

(b) agreed that the New York legal firm of Sullivan and Cromwell be retained to advise the Canadian government generally with regard to claims of U.S. citizens and, if required, to act in specific cases.

GUT DAM

The State Department has replied to our note No. 802 of November 10, 1952, by note dated November 17th as follows: Begins: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note No. 802 of November 10, 1952.

<sup>128</sup>Ministère des Affaires extérieures, communiqué de presse, n° 74, 15 novembre 1952.
Department of External Affairs, Press Release, No. 74, November 15, 1952.

concerning the action commenced in the district court of the United States for the Northern District of New York by Arthur Oster and Dorothy Oster, plaintiffs, against the Dominion of Canada, Defendant, for abatement of a nuisance, mandatory injunction, and damages, in connection with the construction and operation of Gut Dam.

You requested that Canada be recognized as enjoying sovereign immunity from suit in the courts of the United States in connection with this and other actions arising out of the construction of operation of Gut Dam.

The instruments of approval of the Secretary of War of August 18, 1903, and October 10, 1904, contain two conditions, the second of which you will recall, reads as follows:

"2. That if the construction and operation of the said dam shall cause damage or detriment to the property owners of Les Galops Island, or to the property of any other citizens of the United States, the Government of Canada shall pay such amount of compensation as may be agreed upon between the said government and the parties damaged, or as may be awarded the said parties in the proper court of the United States before which claims for damages may be brought."

It seems clear to me that the Dominion of Canada by accepting the permits with the above-quoted condition and constructing the dam pursuant thereto agreed to submit itself to the jurisdiction of the appropriate courts of the United States where suit was instituted by an American citizen for damages arising from the construction or operation of the dam. Moreover, apart from the question of waiver, I consider that the action instituted by the Osters is essentially an action involving real property located in the United States. It is a well recognized principle of international law that the doctrine of sovereign immunity has no applicability to suits involving rights or interests in or to the use of real property located in the state of the forum.

Since this appears to be an action of a kind in which a foreign government may be made a party defendant in the courts of the United States, and since, in any event, the Canadian Government has consented to be sued in cases of this nature, I regret that my government cannot comply with Your Excellency's request that steps be taken to have a suggestion of immunity made to the court.

With respect to Your Excellency's suggestion of a uniform procedure for the settlement of all claims arising out of the construction and operation of Gut Dam, I will be pleased to arrange for discussions between representatives of your government and of the United States concerning this question.

Accept, etc.

for the Secretary of State

In order that United States ships and other interests may be informed, the Ambassador would appreciate receiving advice as to the Canadian Government's plans for removal of the dam and for completion of the work of removal.

There follows hereunder text of note which I would ask you to deliver at once to the State Department. Text of letter to Wyatt will follow by later telegram but you need not hold up delivery of the note pending its arrival. Text of note is as follows, Begins:

1. I have the honour to acknowledge your Note of November 17, 1952, concerning the action which had been commenced against Canada in the District Court for the Northern District of New York State. In this note you signified the willingness of your Government to accede to the request contained in my note No. 802 of November 10 that there be discussions between representatives of our respective Governments looking toward a uniform procedure for the settlement of all claims arising out of the construction or operation of Gut Dam. It would be for consideration in these discussions what tribunal might be selected or established for this purpose. The Government of Canada would be prepared to send appropriate officials to Washington so that these discussions can take place immediately.

2. The Government of Canada does not accept the views set forth in your note concerning the effect of the documents of 1903 and 1904 upon the sovereign immunity of Canada from suit in United States Courts. The Canadian officials participating in the discussions will be prepared to expound our views concerning the lack of jurisdiction of United States Courts at greater length, if this should be necessary.

3. The Government of Canada desires that the discussions take place before it makes any comment upon the suggestion of the United States Embassy at Ottawa, in its Note No. 64 of October 22, 1952, that it might wish to take appropriate action in connection with the defence of the suits against the United States in the Court of Claims. ## GUT DAM LITIGATION

Mr. Wyatt of Sullivan and Cromwell has asked me to put the attached letter to Mr. Wilgress in the diplomatic bag tonight.† In his telephone conversations with me, he stated that he considered it was now in our best interest to begin discussions as soon as possible with the State Department on the establishment of some sort of tribunal or agency to deal with United States claims arising out of the construction of the Gut Dam. He said he had several telephone conversations with Messrs. Murphy and Burwell who are the Washington solicitors acting on behalf of all U.S. claimants. These lawyers are prepared and I think rather anxious to drop the New York State litigation if the State Department and our Government can agree on some procedure to deal with the claimants. They are also anxious to participate in these discussions. Wyatt feels that this would be a good thing and he also thinks that it would be desirable for him and myself to take part in the discussions in Washington. Vallance of the Legal Adviser's Office in the State Department is apparently handling this matter for the State Department. In view of my long and rather intimate association with Vallance in connection with I.J.C. matters, there may be some advantage in my taking part in the talks, at least in the opening stages. There may be other developments in Ottawa regarding this matter of which I am not aware. It seems that Wyatt has called Mundell of Justice who maintains that this aspect of the question is now a matter for our Department and not for the Department of Justice. I agree of course with this.

2. I shall await your further views and instructions before talking to Wyatt again. I do think we should not delay too long in commencing our talks with the State Department in view of our press release.

DESPATCH L-1851

Ottawa, December 13, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

GUT DAM CLAIM

Reference: My telegram No. 2337 of December 8, 1952.†

I would be glad if you would suggest to the State Department that the discussions take place in Washington on Wednesday or Thursday next, December 17 or 18. I suggest that your communication to the State Department should be oral and that you might call on Mr. Vallance for this purpose.

2. Our object in suggesting these dates is to remove any misapprehension that we are stalling on the holding of these discussions. There are a variety of reasons why we think that it would be much better if the discussions were to take place later. It may be that after you have talked to Vallance this view will also be shared by the State Department. However, we are prepared to proceed with the discussions on either of these dates.

3. It is possible that the State Department may wish to bring Counsel for the Plaintiffs into the discussions at some stage. In such event it would no doubt be appropriate for Mr. Wyatt of the firm of Sullivan and Cromwell (Mr. Dulles' firm) also to be present. The latter, in his letter of December 3 to Mr. Wilgress (copy of which is annexed), disclosed that Counsel for Plaintiffs desired to be present.

4. It seems clear that we could not effectively present certain arguments to the State Department in the presence of the Counsel for the Plaintiffs. These arguments may be summarized as follows:

(a) The condition of the 1903-4 agreements was foisted on the Canadian Government by arbitrary action of the United States Secretary for War. It is phrased in language inappropriate to an international instrument. It may be considered ambiguous and was certainly drafted without adequate regard to the basis upon which claims are made by one state against another on behalf of its nationals. (Note: Available files indicate pretty clearly that Canada had agreed to indemnify the owner of Galops Island but had not agreed to an omnibus clause requiring it to indemnify United States citizens at large. The condition was of course acquiesced in by Canada.) Accordingly we have a strong moral position in insisting that the State Department assist us in every way to secure a reasonable and possibly even a restrictive interpretation of the condition.

(b) The purpose of Gut Dam was to improve the navigation facilities enjoyed by citizens of both countries. It is unreasonable and inequitable and also inconsistent with the general practice of the two countries to have one of them shoulder full responsibility for damage resulting from a work of benefit to both countries.

(c) The Foreign Office of any state has the responsibility of protecting foreign states against violations of their immunity in domestic courts. I am annexing copy of Mr. Wyatt's letter to Mr. Jakkett of December 8+ and also of Mr. Burbridge's telegram No. 515+ of December 12 from which you will see that Mr. Wyatt has expressed strong views of the inappropriateness of the action taken by the State Department in filing its own views in opposition to our claim.

(d) During the War we had a number of agreements with the United States including those dealing with the Alaska Highway which gave rise to claims by Canadians against the United States. We accepted the normal procedure in International Law by which nationals are required to exhaust their local remedies in the courts of the state against which the claim is asserted. At the present time we have under consideration the Haines Pipeline Project where the United States wishes to run the pipeline through Canadian territory. We have been discussing the claims clause and gave consideration to the desirability of our insisting that the United States submit to the jurisdiction of Canadian Courts, but decided not to do so. The policy which we have pursued in regard to claims of Canadians against the United States is in marked contrast to that of the United States Secretary of War in the case of the Gut Dam Agreement.

5. All of the observations in the preceding paragraph are in a sense "irrelevant". However, they add up to this: that we have every right to receive the utmost co-operation from the State Department. The necessary corollary is that the conduct of the State Department should not be responsive to domestic political pressures.

6. In our view the discussions with the State Department are not likely to serve a useful purpose, unless they get off on the right foot. It is essential that we break down at the outset the present disposition of the State Department to do its utmost to wash its hands of responsibility. This attitude was apparent in the observations made to Mr. Pierce that the dates suggested originally by the State Department would be appropriate if we wished to discuss claims but inappropriate if we wished to discuss immunity. We asked for the "selection or establishment" of a tribunal. This wording obviously envisaged a complete appraisal of the suitability of existing courts. (We incline to the view that there is in fact no "appropriate court" in the sense of the 1903-4 condition.) In this connection, I am also enclosing copies of Mr. Wyatt's letters of December 6th to Mr. Wilgress and Mr. Burbridge. You will note that Mr. Wyatt suggested an International Tribunal and has also set forth the reasons for his opinion that the Court of Claims would be unsuitable. Some of the aspects to which he refers may render the New York Courts equally unsuitable if the initial premise is to be that there should be a fair and just appraisal of all the evidence. A jury trial would of course be rejected out of hand.

7. Returning to the question of the date for the discussions I direct your attention to the fact that Mr. Wyatt will be in Europe from December 20 to January 10. I do not know at this time whether he could go from New York to Washington on short notice to participate in discussions in the presence of Counsel for Plaintiffs, if the participation of Counsel were desired by the State Department. As you will have gathered from the foregoing there would, from our point of view, be every advantage in at least commencing the discussions on the diplomatic level only. If the discussions continued with Counsel present obviously we might be in some difficulty in getting Mr. Wyatt to attend in Washington say the day after and prior to his departure for Europe. Mr. Pickersgill suggested that our best course might be not to agree to participation of Counsel at all but to merely indicate that if the State Department were unwilling to discharge its normal responsibility to present the case on behalf of its own citizens that we would be prepared to "hear" the representations of Counsel for the Plaintiffs.

8. The distinction between "hearing" counsel and "discussing in the presence of counsel" is important. It might be difficult, without the active co-operation of the State Department, to obtain the agreement of all participating (including counsel) to a satisfactory tribunal, if we were obliged to debate all the issues in the presence of counsel. The reason is that when stating our preferences we might well confirm the plaintiffs in a determination to pull all wires to circumvent us.

9. To sum up it is our purpose:

(a) to ask you to convey our willingness to start discussions on the 17th or 18th;

(b) to give you background information with which to manoeuvre to have the discussions take place later, preferably after New Year's;

(c) to give you also information so that you can handle the question of participation of counsel if it should be raised.

P.S. If the discussions take place next week our present plan would be to have both Burbridge and Erichsen-Brown attend. It is possible, but not convenient, for the former to leave the delegation before the legal committee is finished with its work. Mundell's presence would also be desirable although not essential.

GUT DAM CLAIMS

1. Burbridge has telephoned the substance of Pierce's discussions with him. We agree that it would now be impossible for Burbridge to go to Washington, also there is every advantage in having the discussions start, even although nothing is immediately accomplished.

2. Accordingly, if Mundell can take the time to accompany Pierce, it might be well for you to start the discussions without representation from Ottawa, simply to ascertain the general line of thinking of the State Department.

3. In these discussions you could state our general objective to secure a hearing before a tribunal with a judicial approach. Qualification of one of its members from an engineering point of view might be desirable. However, the prime essential is a judicial approach to complicated and technical evidence with broad experience of legal principles in the field of negligence and tort.

4. There could be no trial by jury in an action against the Crown in Canada and we understand there can be no trial by jury in an action against the United States in the Courts of the United States. It is obvious that the tribunal should not sit with a jury.

5. Subject to the foregoing, it might be advantageous to have a tribunal which could take evidence at different points, including Canada, with liberty of making on the spot inspections either at the scene of the dam, or, at a later stage if necessary, at the scene of the damage.

6. The use of the words "proper court of the United States" in the condition may be invoked by the State Department in opposition to an international tribunal. We suggest that your approach should be to indicate the essentials of a tribunal in a general way and to reserve our position completely on any questions arising out of the construction of the condition of the 1903-04 agreements.

GUT DAM CLAIMS: DISCUSSIONS WITH STATE DEPARTMENT

Addressed External Ottawa as WA-2927, repeated to Mr. Burbridge Candel
New York as No. 29.

We report more fully in this teletype on the discussions with the State Department about the Gut Dam claims of which we advised you briefly in our WA-2905 of December 18.

2. We opened the meeting by stating in the clearest terms we could command that our desire was to see that all legitimate claims were settled as quickly as possible on a reasonable basis. We were removing the Gut Dam and had every interest in dealing with outstanding claims as promptly as we could. We had hoped to start the talks earlier but the head of our Legal Division, who was to have taken part and who would attend future discussions, could not leave our United Nations delegation in New York. We said we wished now to explore the ground to be covered; discuss informally some of the factors involved in the adjudication of claims; and set a date for the next talks.

3. The ground to be covered was "the selection or establishment of a tribunal," in the words of our note of November 10. Such a tribunal should meet this requirement: it should provide "a judicial approach to complicated and technical evidence with broad experience of legal principles in the field of negligence and tort," in the words of your teletype EX-2395 of December 17.

4. We said we preferred a special tribunal to the courts. Both our countries and all claimants would benefit if one specified and qualified body dealt with all claims. Such a tribunal possessed many advantages over a court. It could move about, make "on-the-spot inspections either at the scene of the dam, or, at a later stage if necessary, at the scene of the damage;" and take testimony in both countries. Moreover, it could decide once and for all on issues common to all claims. Such issues were: had the Gut Dam affected the water levels of [Lake] Ontario? If so, had it caused the damage, and if it had, to what extent? Then the tribunal could proceed to process speedily the multitude of individual claims which would swamp the ordinary courts. We considered, moreover, that a special tribunal was appropriate to the relationship which now existed between our two countries. We had come a long way since 1903-04 and now dealt with our differences and our common purposes in a spirit of understanding and in close co-operation.

5. We objected to any trial by jury. We thought it inappropriate to the actions and to our status as a government. We considered, moreover, that we were immune from action in the courts. We did not agree that "a proper court" had been determined nor that we had in the 1903-04 agreements waived our immunity.

6. The Deputy Legal Adviser, Mr. Tate, agreed on the ground to be covered: the United States authorities were willing to discuss the establishment or selection of a tribunal.

7. He hoped at the next meeting we could say what type of tribunal we had in mind. Did we contemplate having a single person adjudicate? He was opposed to a tribunal consisting of two, one United States and one Canadian national, where Canada could deadlock a decision. We assured him that we would not press for such a body.

8. He asked how the tribunal would be financed, for it would be difficult to justify a request to Congress for funds. We were non-committal though we said we did not think this would be a stumbling block.

9. He asked how we intended to pay established claims. We replied that we did not intend to set up a limited fund from which all claimants would have to be paid. We expected to meet all damages that were properly established.

10. He asked how we would propose to set up a tribunal; by exchange of notes or by treaty? We thought that it could be done in the way the United States preferred, having in mind the question of congressional ratification.

11. Mr. Tate raised the question of alternative methods of dealing with the problem. He wondered whether it should be referred to the I.J.C. under the 1909 treaty. He felt tentatively that the treaty could, but need not, apply to this matter. Hence if a tribunal were set up, it probably could not be alleged that the United States was trying to avoid its responsibilities and depart from the procedures set forth in the 1909 treaty. We did not examine the desirability of setting up a tribunal under the I.J.C.

12. On the question of immunity, Mr. Tate said with conviction that he had no doubt that we had indeed waived immunity when we signed the 1903-04 agreements. We had specifically agreed then, once and for all, to accept the finding of the proper court. He considered the court of the district where the damaged real estate was located to be the proper court to hear claims for damage to that real estate. They interpreted the clause "the proper court" generally to mean any competent court. Certainly in his view the district court where suit had been taken was here competent.

13. We made the point that under Canadian law the government could not agree to waive its diplomatic immunity in general but could merely waive it as a matter of fact in any particular case. In support, Mr. Mundell referred to the case, Kelantan vs. Duff Development Co. We must admit we made little impression with our arguments about immunity.

14. On the subject of the advantages of a tribunal over a court, Mr. Tate and Mr. Vallance observed that a court could in fact enjoy many of the advantages we claimed for a tribunal. The court could appoint a lawyer as a "master" who could travel and take evidence on the spot. Court action did not in fact require us even under the present procedure, to deal with each case separately. The Oster case was a test case for the majority of claimants who were represented by the same counsel. It was observed that in the Court of Claims the decision would probably be left to a judge. However the Americans did not consider the Court of Claims a proper court since it entertained claims against only the United States.

15. Mr. Mundell referred to our original estimate of the increase in the water levels of Lake Ontario attributable to the Gut Dam. He said that this estimate had been based on projections of calculations. Our studies had since indicated that our original estimate was wrong. These investigations were still being continued. Our present position was that we did not admit that the Gut Dam had raised the water levels of Lake Ontario to the extent we previously indicated.

16. In general discussion, Mr. Tate said that he wished to impress upon us the serious obstacle in the way of any arrangement to substitute access to a special tribunal for access to the proper United States court provided for in the 1903-04 agreements. If the State Department now suggested to the United States citizens — and there was an excited group of them to deal with — that they forego recourse of United States courts, there would have to be important and obvious advantages to the claimants.

17. If we decide to press our argument for a separate tribunal, we must bear in mind that this is a serious barrier and we should prepare a case that will appeal as much to a claimant as to the State Department.

18. The Americans mentioned a possibility to which they would like us to give thought — the selection of the United States jurist to adjudicate the claims. Judge Knox was once selected, we were told, to adjudicate United States claims against the United Kingdom Government after World War I.

19. Mr. Tate made the point that there was an advantage to us in having the claims handled by a United States authority. Awards in a matter of this nature were always far below the claims and never satisfied the claimants. We might prefer to have Americans dissatisfied with Americans rather than with Canadians or a tribunal in which Canadians participated.

20. If a tribunal were established, Mr. Tate thought we would have to consider revoking the 1903-04 permits or taking some other action to avoid claims being made both to the tribunal and to the courts as well.

21. The date for the next meeting was agreed at some time in the first half of January to be arranged later. The United States side does not want to have counsel present at the discussion. We all agreed that the talks should be inter-governmental. If either government wished to consult counsel, it is free to do so. If it wishes to have counsel present for a specific purpose at any session it can raise the question at the time. It need not be considered now.

22. We closed by repeating our desire to have the matter settled as soon as possible and said we would co-operate fully in a search for a satisfactory solution.

23. Mr. Vallance said that council for plaintiffs Burwell was pressing him. Burwell was worried that his client's position might be weaker with the Gut Dam out. Certainly plaintiffs would have to amend their pleadings. Mr. Vallance thought it important to reach some agreement quickly. He said Burwell feared that we might be contemplating postponement since Mr. Wyatt, our counsel, would be in Europe from December 20 to January 10. We stressed that we wished to press on with the discussion and Mr. Vallance intended to so assure counsel for the claimants.

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

VISIT OF MR. ACHESON TO OTTAWA

Following for Mr. Pearson from Mr. Wilgress.

Text begins as follows:

I was privileged to be present at the meeting of the Cabinet this morning, which was attended by Mr. Acheson and the American Ambassador.

2. After being introduced by the Prime Minister, Mr. Acheson spoke and gave one of those masterly surveys of the world situation for which he is becoming so well known. His remarks were designed to act as a vehicle for conveying to the Canadian Government his views on the Indian Resolution on Korea, now before the General Assembly. Although he did not mention Canada by name, nor did he refer either to yourself or to Mr. Martin, he left the implication that by our tactics in supporting the Indian proposal we were siding with the less responsible and more disruptive elements in the United Nations.

3. Mr. Acheson commenced by responding to an invitation of the Prime Minister to comment upon the probable effect of the change in administration on Canadian-United States relations. He said that he foresaw no change in basic policy on those matters which most directly affected Canada. As regards the St. Lawrence Seaway he referred to the important influence of the Governor of New York. On trade, he mentioned the traditional high tariff policy of the Republican Party but said that as they see the necessities of the world there may be a change in their traditional policy. On Defence, he pointed out that the views of General Eisenhower should be very much the same as those of President Truman.

4. Mr. Acheson said he wanted to direct attention to two disturbing factors in the world situation which had been causing him grave concern. One concerned the United Nations and the other Europe. Speaking first of the United Nations, he said the situation was very disturbing. Institutions never develop the way their founders think they will develop and this was to be expected in the case of the United Nations. However, the tendency to form voting blocs recently had been developing in a way that could eventually destroy the whole organization.

5. He mentioned that there were two main voting blocs, the Latin-American group which controlled 20 votes and the Arab-Asian group which controlled 13 votes. Together these two groups had a majority of the General Assembly. Three characteristics distinguished the members of both groups. Each member was without power, was politically unstable and was irresponsible in the sense that not having power they had no responsibility for implementing the decisions resulting from their votes. All the countries in the two groups were concerned with the economic development of their territories and suffered from the obsession that they had been exploited in the past. There had been two predominant ideas underlying the setting up of the United Nations, namely, security and well-being. The members of these two voting blocks had taken up the latter as being the primary aim of the organization, whereas for the founders of the United Nations this objective had been secondary to that of security.

6. Mr. Acheson then said he could give two examples of the disruptive character of the activities of the two voting blocs. One was the Arab-Asian attack on France over Morocco and Tunisia and the other the Indian attack on South Africa. Both of these attacks were misguided in that nothing could result from these actions except trouble.

7. He then very cleverly introduced the subject of Korea, which he said affects his country very much. He referred to the armistice negotiations and said that while it was impossible to predict what other questions the Communists might raise, the negotiations had led to the solution of all outstanding questions except that of prisoners of war. It was necessary to see if the other side really wanted an armistice. The Twenty-one Power draft resolution would have tested out the desire of the other side for an armistice. The activity of Mr. Menon, however, and the attitude of other members of the Arab-Asian group, were tending to obscure the issue which would have been clear-cut if there had been a vote on the Twenty-one Power resolution.

8. The Communist view from the outset had been to leave prisoners of war out of the questions demanding solution before agreement could be reached on an armistice. The Western attitude had been that this question must be solved, otherwise there could be a complete breakdown of the armistice through some question emerging pertaining to prisoners of war. Moreover, the proposal put forward by Mr. Menon left much to be desired. At this point Mr. Acheson asked if we should drive prisoners of war against their will into the machine for resolving their fate which would be set up by the Menon proposal. He went on to elaborate some of the well known American objections to the Indian proposal. He said that it is the view of the people responsible for the operation that it would be disadvantageous to our side to agree to this proposal as it stood. He then said that instead of listening to the views of those responsible for the operation "there is this playing around with Mr. Menon."

9. Mr. Acheson then reverted to his original theme by referring, once more, to the blocs manoeuvring for position in the General Assembly and stressing again that these blocs are made up of countries without the responsibility for the exercise of power. He regarded this as a serious development which if not checked will have most disastrous effects on the United Nations and may end up in destroying that organization.

10. Mr. Acheson next turned to his second source of disquiet, namely, Europe. He began by explaining that there are elements which create a vigorous forward movement in international relations and then the momentum behind these movements dies down. This appears to have been the case in Europe. Last May that continent was on the threshold of a most brilliant future, based on closer political and economic integration. In this connection he referred to the Schuman Plan and the E.D.C. Treaties. Today he said all of that momentum is gone. Nobody appears to be taking the necessary steps to ratify the E.D.C. Treaties. One of the factors undoubtedly has been the United States election and the long period before the new administration takes office. This has given rise to doubt and each doubt has given rise to some new doubt so that action has been slowed down and the effect has been cumulative.

11. As an illustration Mr. Acheson mentioned that a short time ago Chancellor Adenauer had been supremely confident. Mr. Schuman then got back to Paris and made what proved to be most unfortunate remarks indicating that it might be several months before France ratified the E.D.C. Treaties. The result on the Bundestag had been immediate, and Chancellor Adenauer had been defeated on a procedural motion concerning ratification. This has led to a paralysis of the situation. The other countries are waiting on France and Germany, both of whom are watching each other. It may be some time before the United States can speak out on these questions. Mr. Acheson expressed the hope that the new United States administration will be encouraged by other governments, including the Canadian Government, to adopt a positive attitude. He hoped the new administration would urge ratification of the E.D.C. Treaties with the same vigour as he had urged this course in the past. It is only in this way that we can have real defence in Europe and a real deterrent to aggression.

12. When Mr. Acheson had concluded his remarks it was nearly time for him to proceed to a luncheon at Government House so that the Prime Minister, in thanking Mr. Acheson, confined himself to some general remarks and did not have an opportunity of taking up in detail the points Mr. Acheson had made about Korea. Ends.

RESTRICTED

OEEC has recently completed a re-examination of its policy towards trade liberalization with special attention being given to the Common List technique. A special four-day session of the Trade Committee, at which most countries were represented by top trade officials, was held for this purpose from February 5th to 8th.

2. Meeting in the shadow of the recent difficulties experienced by a number of member countries in continuing the liberalization of trade, the circumstances were not auspicious. Nevertheless the Committee resolved that the elimination of quantitative restrictions on imports by Member countries among themselves remained one of the basic aims of OEEC and that the results already achieved should be safeguarded and extended. In order to achieve this end the Trade Committee decided that the Common List approach to liberalization should be overhauled and that the Organization should set up a Trade Policy Board to supervise and give direction to the commercial side of the Organization's activities.

OEEC TRADE LIBERALIZATION DISCUSSIONS

Reference: My letter No. 64 of February 13th.

Addressed External as No. 44 repeated Dominion London as No. 171.

The special session of the Trade Committee reconvened on March 4th to consider the detailed proposals for (a) Principles of commercial policy applicable to an expanding common list, and (b) the new Trade Policy Board.

2. As soon as the proceedings commenced it was evident that the favourable climate of the last meeting no longer existed. This deterioration arose from the sudden and unexpected adoption by the United Kingdom of a policy that OEEC should not press on with common list negotiations at present. (Text of United Kingdom statement is given in my immediately following message)†. The United Kingdom now takes the position that, in view of the critical disequilibria at present in intra-European payments, it would be more realistic for liberalization efforts to be directed towards "an immediate examination of the efforts of each country to liberalize trade to the fullest extent that it can afford". The United Kingdom representative also declared that what was required was more liberalization by creditor countries. However they have not proposed that the existing common list should lapse. The multilateral approach towards liberalization which is inherent in the common list is therefore rejected in favour of unilateral action under OEEC auspices. The United Kingdom favours the creation of the commercial policy board — now termed the "steering group of trade" — but they would charge it with the responsibility of examining the overall efforts of each country to liberalize trade under the OEEC methods, and to report on countries which appear to be making a smaller contribution than they might reasonably be expected to undertake in present circumstances.

3. The United Kingdom were supported in part by Sweden and Portugal. The French, without a government, are unable to take a firm stand but they seem to favour the United Kingdom. Germany, the Netherlands, Switzerland and Denmark have spoken in favour of pressing on with the common list technique.

4. It is realized that the gap between the United Kingdom and those countries which favour the common list cannot be bridged at this meeting. The committee therefore is now examining the formal proposals which have been prepared concerning the establishment of the steering group for trade with the intention of preparing a report for the council explaining in detail the points of agreement and disagreement.

5. The United States considers that the new United Kingdom policy reflects (a) Reluctance to go ahead with further economic integration and (b) De-emphasis of OEEC. We are not sure how much significance should be read into the new position taken by the United Kingdom. In some respects their alternative proposal for an examination of the relative trade liberalization efforts being made by the different countries appears to be tactical. This is not an entirely new suggestion in OEEC and there have always been grave doubts about the practicability of this approach. However the willingness of the United Kingdom to go ahead with the creation of the steering group for trade would seem to indicate that the United Kingdom are prepared to continue liberalization efforts within OEEC albeit not on the basis of the common list. The terms of reference would probably include a comprehensive examination of country commercial and financial positions, in consultation with the EPU managing board, with a view to recommending appropriate national policies.

5. If efforts to enlarge the present common list are suspended, the present list may well be placed in jeopardy. We have previously reported that several countries accepted the list only on the understanding that it would in due course be balanced with the addition of food and agriculture products and engineering equipment.

6. We will forward a further report on the progress of the session.

CANADIAN RIGHT TO ATTEND MEETINGS OF PROPOSED OEEC STEERING GROUP FOR TRADE

Reference: Our telegram No. 44 of March 5th.

1. The OEEC Trade Committee proposals to Council concerning the establishment of the Steering Group for Trade which were agreed at the March 7th meeting contain the following paragraph:

"A representative appointed by the administration of the United States of America may attend the meetings of the Steering Group for Trade with the right to participate in discussions but not in decisions. This representative may nominate a deputy who may attend meetings of the Steering Group for Trade and who shall exercise the functions of the representative if the latter is unable to attend."

2. During the discussion of this paragraph the Swiss delegate stated, without prompting from us, that he considered Canada should have the same status at Steering Group meetings as the United States. He drew a distinction between our interest in the EPU Managing Board and the proposed Steering Group. The United States, as a large provider of EPU resources, had obviously more cogent interest in the E.P.U.M.B.<sup>1</sup> than ourselves. In the Steering Group on Trade, however, our interest is equally strong.

3. We immediately welcomed the Swiss proposal and indicated privately to the Chairman our desire to have equal status with the United States. You will note that there would be no obligation on us to attend meetings of the Steering Group.

4. The text was not changed to include Canada at the Trade Committee meeting but unless we hear from you to the contrary we intend to ask for this amendment when the report is considered by the Council probably in the week of March 15th.

CANADIAN RIGHT TO ATTEND MEETINGS OF PROPOSED OEEC STEERING COMMITTEE FOR TRADE AS OBSERVERS

Reference: Your telegram No. 22 of March 12th.

1. Proposals concerning composition, terms of reference and functions of the above committee are to be made to the OEEC Council on Wednesday next. Agreement has not been reached on the size of the committee but there is no provision at present for Canada to sit with the United States as an observer. We think Swiss delegate will request Council to give us this right if we wish them to. The odds are that the Council would not refuse us this right if requested, although United Kingdom and perhaps others might suggest a less formal association in view of certain new factors. These may suggest to you also the desirability of asking for something less than continuous representation.

2. Firstly, a strong effort is being made to keep the composition of the committee down to 7, plus the United States observer, in the interests of efficiency, despite the efforts of some countries to enlarge the committee by three or four more members so as to provide wider representation. If it seems that the concept of a small committee may win out, as we think it should, the demand for representation by Canada would prove embarrassing to those countries pressing for a small committee. If a large committee is inevitable we should feel less embarrassed in pressing our claims.

3. The Steering Committee for Trade will consist "of members chosen for their personal qualifications, by reason both of the knowledge they have of problems of trade policy and the standing which they enjoy within the organization or within their respective countries" and it is understood that this high level committee will be engaged on intensive work and negotiations somewhat after the fashion of the EPU managing board, which meets continuously for about ten days every month. It seems that it will usually report directly to Council without prior review by one of the larger and more general committees. It will have to negotiate new principles to form the basis for the common list, handle complaints against countries which threaten to abandon their obligations and persuade creditor countries to liberalize more trade. Canada will not be greatly interested in all of this work and the delegation might find itself unable to provide the senior personnel for continuous attendance at its lengthy meetings.

4. Notwithstanding this, we could continue to press for a seat on the committee with the idea of attending only those meetings which deal with matters of special concern to Canada. An alternative would be not to ask for observer's seat but to request the Council to agree that committee would make available to us all the papers circulated to committee members and to permit us to attend and to speak at meetings dealing with any question in which we feel there is a special Canadian concern, including meetings dealing with general policies.

5. Should it turn out that the committee is to be kept down to seven or nine members and that support for a Canadian request for observership would not be widespread and warm, I would think that we would be better advised to request the latter treatment. We are canvassing three of four major delegations to get reaction to possible request for a seat, but answers so far are reticent, though not discouraging. Your observations would be appreciated.

Paris, April 21, 1952

OEEC STEERING BOARD FOR TRADE

Reference: Our telegram No. 54 of March 22nd and your telegram No. 28 of March 25th.

The Steering Board for Trade with terms of reference as laid down in C(52)100 was formally established by a decision of the OEEC Council made at the meeting of Friday, 18 April 1952, subject to a reservation by Turkey. The Steering Board for Trade will consist of seven members, together with the Vice-President of the Trade Committee (who is a Greek) and an observer from the United States. The last two members may participate but may not vote.

2. You will observe that no provision has been made for direct Canadian association with the new Board. Our attempts to attain a seat on the Board as an observer, or to have direct access to all the papers of the Board, had to be abandoned because of the desire on the part of all countries to keep the composition of the Board down to seven members. Up to the very last moment such countries as Turkey, Denmark, Ireland and Switzerland were insistent on a nine-man Board — the larger number being necessary to permit a wider representation — and any strong pressure brought by ourselves to be represented on the Board would have made it difficult to resist their demands. As it was, these countries, with the exception of Turkey, reluctantly agreed at the last minute, under pressure, to the establishment of a seven-man Board. There was some thought at one time that the United States might choose a Canadian as their alternate member of the Board but this was deemed impracticable since there will be many occasions when the alternates will operate in place of the full Board.

3. To enable Canada to follow the proceedings of the Steering Board for Trade we have, however, made an informal agreement with the American delegation to obtain the papers. The American member of the Board at its first meeting will announce that, because of Canada's great concern with the problems of European trade, the American delegation will keep the Canadian delegation informed of all developments. In effect, the American delegation will pass on to us an extra copy of all papers. Should we desire to make representations before the Steering Board on any occasion, there is a provision in the new Article 35 of the Code of Liberalization permitting the Board to allow other persons to attend its meetings. We think that this arrangement should meet our needs satisfactorily and hope that you will agree with this conclusion.

4. As mentioned in our telegram No. 54 of March 22nd, the Steering Board for Trade will be composed, for the most part, of senior trade officials who will come from their respective capitals for an intensive series of meetings and negotiations for some ten days or so every month. The members elected by the Council at its meeting last week are as follows:

Snoy (Belgium)
Bartels (Denmark)
Clappier (France)
Von Maltzan (Germany)
Dall'oglio (Italy)
Hotz (Switzerland)
Cohen (United Kingdom)

I should add that these seven have been appointed to serve until July 1st when it is expected that they will be re-elected (with possibly one exception), for a further twelve-month period. The reason for these temporary appointments is that Switzerland has been advised informally that she cannot have representation both on the Managing Board for EPU and on the Steering Board for Trade. Since Switzerland is unable to decide for the time being which position she will relinquish, she has been given, in effect, two months in which to make up her mind.

LETTER No. 127

Paris, April 3, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

OEEC MINISTERIAL MEETING ON MARCH 27-29TH AND FUTURE ACTIVITIES OF OEEC

This was a particularly significant meeting of the Ministerial Council of the OEEC in that it was intended, by those who participated in the stage management, to dissipate some of the forebodings which existed with respect to the OEEC and to convey the impression that the Organization is about to take on a new lease of life. The plan worked well. It is now apparent that the outcome was in large measure a result of conscious thought by the United States delegation, supported (probably) by France and some of the north European countries. The U.K. delegation (among others) was taken by surprise by the two concrete American proposals for future OEEC work. However, they did not attempt to swim against the current and gave verbal support, with only minor reservations, to the aforesaid proposals. We know that they kept most of their doubts to themselves and will seek to exert an opposing influence when the time comes to adopt plans and procedures for implementing them. It should be added that the American proposal for the annual review of economic prospects in Member countries may involve some conflict of responsibility with NATO and that the British, like ourselves, seem to be more worried about this than anyone else. Owing to the precipitate manner in which the Americans introduced their proposals, and the ready support given to them by almost all other delegations, there was no opportunity for a frank discussion of these doubts.

2. The decisions taken at this three-day meeting of the Ministerial Council will be the subject of several succeeding despatches. It may help to understand the inner meaning of some of these decisions if I relate some of the circumstances in which the meeting was held and the motives (often mixed) which seem to have governed the attitude of the various delegations. Many of the actual decisions, as usual, involve the establishment of new committees and the laying of plans for new enquiries. For the sake of convenience, I shall begin by listing in summary form the specific accomplishments of the meeting.

(a) The Council approved and agreed to act upon a report designed to implement the Ministerial Declaration of August 1951 in favour of an expansion of production in Europe of 25% over the next five years. This report includes among other things specific recommendations to Member countries as a group with respect to the targets they should aim for in key sectors of the economy (steel, power, housing, agriculture, etc.) and the devices by which such increased production can be achieved.

(b) The Council approved a report of a special Ministerial Committee on coal production in Europe which indicated that, as a result of their enquiries, producing countries had succeeded for the most part in setting higher targets for actual production, with the probability that Western Europe could be independent of American imports by 1954, always provided that certain promised measures were taken and certain priorities established.

(c) The Council decided to continue the European Payments Union in operation and reached certain broad conclusions with respect to the manner in which the Union should operate in the future. In particular, the Council admitted the need for an increase in capital, recognized sadly that no future aid in this respect was likely to come from the United States, and moved a step towards the recognition of the fact that the Members, and in particular the debtors, must pay more gold and dollars into the Union.

(d) The Council approved a proposal for the settlement of the surplus which the Belgian-Luxembourg Economic Union is likely to develop with respect to the EPU for the period April to June 1952.

(e) The Council approved a document setting forth the future activities of the OEEC which involves, inter alia, a cut of roughly 30% in both expenditures and personnel.

(f) The Council adopted an American proposal to inaugurate an annual review of the economic position and prospects of Member countries and invited the United States and Canada to participate in this review (i.e. to permit themselves "to be reviewed"). This decision is discussed in more detail below.

(g) Council approved another American proposal for a high level study by the Organization of the measures needed to solve the problems of internal financial instability in Member countries, giving priority to the more serious cases. It is expected that this review will result in recommendations being made to governments, after the proposals have first been vetted by the small Ministerial Committee.

(h) The Council decided to set up a new and senior Steering Board for Trade somewhat after the model of the Managing Board of EPU. This group would possess the same responsibilities in respect to questions concerning the liberalization of intra-European trade as the Managing Board has in respect to payments problems in Europe and would be charged at the outset with the job of finding ways of bringing to an end the present retreat from liberalization, and reversing the movement.

3. For the most part these are still paper programmes or, what is even worse, no more than plans to make paper programmes. Nevertheless the decisions of the Council reflect a spirit of determination and enthusiasm which has been lacking in the OEEC for some twelve months, and perhaps ever since it became apparent that rearmament had top priority in Europe and that the NATO might well become the key planning agency in the economic and financial sphere, perhaps even superseding the OEEC completely. Certainly in the months prior to this meeting, the atmosphere in OEEC circles both in the Secretariat and in many of the delegations had been gloomy. It was felt by some delegations that the Organization was being, or was likely to be, deserted by some of its key Members and associates, notably the British and Americans. The original proposals of the British to streamline the Organization and to cut OEEC staff and expenditures by 50% was regarded as evidence of this lack of interest. More important still, the OEEC has been facing critical conditions in Europe over the last year and was seemingly unable to do anything about it. Its original bold plans for trade liberalization had long since begun to falter and in recent months had received a severe setback as a result of the new trade restrictions imposed against their European partners by France and the U.K. At the same time the European Payments Union had had to face up to a critical condition almost every month as a result of the continuous deficits run by the U.K. and France and of the outward flow of gold required to settle the corresponding Belgian surplus. The problem of dwindling reserves had therefore been hanging over the heads of the Managing Board of EPU for many months and no sign of a solution was in sight.

4. Notwithstanding all their shortcomings, the trade liberalization programme of the OEEC and the European Payments Union could be regarded as the principal monuments to the validity of the basic OEEC approach to European integration. Consequently, the threat to these policies, together with the fear that the basic policies were being abandoned by many countries as being of less importance than rearmament had created a good deal of unhappiness both in the Secretariat and among some of the delegations. These fears were particularly evident in the case of the French government which, wedded as it is to the idea of European integration, to which it would like to give leadership, regards the OEEC as the proper vehicle for the conduct of a European economic programme. These fears were shared in some measure by all the Scandinavian countries, by all the non-NATO members and probably by Belgium and Holland. The U.K., of course, was regarded as the villain of the piece, the country which had always given only grudging support to the OEEC idea and the country which could expect to exert greater influence and perhaps receive greater support in and from an Organization to which the United States and Canada were completely committed. To some of the European delegations even the U.S. was now suspect because of what was believed to be its overriding concern with the question of rearming Europe. It should be added that an assessment of the attitudes and motives of Member countries in the Organization cannot be considered separately from the attitude of the personalities in the various delegations, including the American delegation, some of whom are bound to seek, consciously or otherwise, the maintenance of the importance of the institution to which they are accredited. This latter factor is not completely irrelevant in determining the attitude of some delegations towards the future of the OEEC. Finally, a more legitimate and defensible feeling existed on the part of some delegations and governments that the OEEC is a more inclusive organization than any other organization concerned with the problems of the European economy, that it has enjoyed a considerable experience in promoting intra-European economic cooperation and that for these reasons it is the most appropriate organization to undertake the responsibility for and supervision of the necessary programmes for increasing production and trade within Europe.

5. The United States government had seemingly become convinced of the need to resuscitate the OEEC and took advantage of this meeting of the Council of Ministers to make their position clear. This they did by frequent declarations to the effect that they attached the utmost importance to the work of the OEEC in the future and by taking the initiative in proposing resolutions intended to provide the OEEC with new activities, resolutions which seemed to demonstrate that the OEEC would continue to be the major organization charged with responsibility for intra-European economic problems. We were told privately in advance of the meeting that the U.S. intended to play a more active part in the OEEC than formerly. Mr. Draper's presence and intervention during the Ministerial meeting was an intimation of this attitude. My own impression is that the Americans did not realize the confusion and doubt that would arise later from the proposals referred to in paragraphs 6 and 7 below. As implied above, there was an element of stage management at this OEEC meeting. The importance of the agenda items alone would have warranted the attendance of a number of senior Ministers but this meeting was marked by the attendance of more than the usual quota of Cabinet Ministers. Messrs. Stikker, Butler, Pella, Draper, Van Zeeland, Liefinck and Brofus [Brofoss] were present throughout the entire period and Mr. Schuman stayed longer than usual. The formal meeting of the Council was preceded by an informal and smaller off-the-record session called by the Chairman to discuss the "crisis" in OEEC affairs. Dr. Stikker spoke of the setbacks which the Organization had had to face, pointed to the uncertainties which beset the future of the OEEC and indirectly called for assertions of renewed support for the OEEC and for a concerted attack on the problem of financial instability which, in his opinion, was at the root of most of the difficulties of Europe. His request for assertions of renewed support was markedly successful. Pella, Schuman, Van Zeeland and Draper quickly followed one another with arguments for the continuance of OEEC on a very active basis and with some indication of the problems which need bold action by the OEEC. While one or two countries may have done no more than take their cue from the U.S., most countries, and especially the smaller ones and the neutrals, were quite convincing in their sincerity. The general theme was the fear of a return to bilateralism in trade arrangements if the liberalization programme could not be saved and if the related EPU system should collapse. A number of countries (including France, ironically enough) took up a proposal of the United States that the first problem to be tackled was that of financial instability and expressed their willingness to be exposed, albeit with all the necessary precautions, to recommendations from the OEEC in this field. It should be added that, whatever his private views, the public expressions of the Chancellor of the Exchequer at this private meeting and at the formal meetings, all gave support to the view that the OEEC had an important part to play in the future. The efforts of the U.K. were devoted to watering down the proposals for study and action put forward by the United States and other delegations. I should add that I thought it expedient to give assurances of Canada's keen interest in the continuation of the activities of the OEEC, mentioning in particular the programme for the 25% expansion in European production and the related trade liberalization measures. I pointed out that we saw no incompatibility or conflict in our association with OEEC and NATO and that in the economic field the objectives of both organizations were much the same. Moreover, OEEC had already done good work and acquired valuable experience in this field which none of us could afford to abandon. I think that our statement was particularly welcome to those delegations who may have felt that, in view of Canada's interest in Article II of NATO, we might have become negative in our attitude towards the OEEC. As a result of this off-the-record meeting, the proposals put forward at the more formal session for new OEEC activities in the near future were accepted, in principle at least, with less debate than would otherwise have been the case. In the minds of most delegations there was a feeling that the new undertakings were necessary to give effect to their desire to see OEEC grapple with the more urgent problems facing Europe today.

6. We shall be reporting in detail on most of the agenda items mentioned in paragraph 2 above. Something should be said, however, about the proposal to inaugurate an annual examination of the economic position and prospects of Member countries, together with the United States and Canada. This proposal, like the proposal to undertake an urgent high-level enquiry into the problems of financial instability, was put forward by the Americans. Both were supported with enthusiasm by other delegations. For some reason unknown to us and never made clear in the discussions, these proposals somehow came to be regarded as a symbol of the revival of the OEEC and if delegates were skeptical as to the usefulness of additional all-embracing enquiries they never expressed them publicly. As to the intentions of the United States in this connection, the position is a little obscure (the experience is not a new one). The American delegation spoke with different voices when I talked to different members privately, and appeared to give rather different versions of their intentions when speaking to different countries. The American delegation genuinely feels (and who will deny it?) that the most urgent economic problem in Europe, the one which has contributed most to the abandonment of trade liberalization and the crisis in EPU, is the failure to grapple with overspending and inflation in France, the United Kingdom and some other countries. It believes, therefore, that there should be a concerted European attack on this problem and that the way to begin is to make an appropriate diagnosis for the more ailing Members of the community, to determine the correct prescription and to try to bring concerted pressure on those Members to take the proper medicine. They wanted, at first, a Ministerial Committee after the fashion of Dr. Stikker's coal committee to look into the problem. In the end the Council preferred a top-level expert committee whose prescriptions would be vetted by a Ministerial group before being handed over to governments.

7. The more important of the two American proposals for additional work by the OEEC was its suggestion — one that was adopted without much discussion in the atmosphere of elation that followed the private meeting referred to above — to embark upon an annual review of the economic situation of Member countries. Coming from the American delegation and in order, therefore, to make it more palatable to others, there was tacked on to this scheme a proposal that the United States and Canada should participate. All that Draper said, or implied, was that it would be a good thing for the OEEC countries to expose their economic expectations and plans and to have them confronted by those of their partners. In this way the Organization might ensure greater cooperation and might be able to take steps for a joint attack on any difficulties which emerged as a result of the process of mutual "confrontation" of programmes.

8. The U.K. delegation realized very quickly, as did we ourselves, that such an annual economic review could have undesirable features from the point of view of those who were more concerned with the effective NATO operation in this field. It should be added, however, that none of these doubts came into the open since the American proposal was made without notice and at a time when the conference was exhausted from the preliminaries and because the Europeans embraced it enthusiastically and uncritically. In the short time we had to confer with them, the American delegation gave us a strong private assurance that they saw no reason why their proposal need worry NATO in the slightest degree. They gave the same reassurances to the British and in the formal meeting Butler requested and received from Draper a statement that this annual review was being suggested in the interests of the OEEC itself. The Americans told us that an annual review of this kind would lay bare the problems that needed to be tackled if European production was to be increased and financial stability assured, and that the raw material of the analysis could be turned over to NATO (thereby saving NATO a good deal of staff work) for the bigger and more political job of the kind practised by the TCC last Fall. Notwithstanding these reassurances, I do know that at least once delegation, e.g. Norway, understands (and is not displeased with the idea) that as a result of this decision the OEEC is now responsible for most of the economic analysis that would otherwise have been done by NATO. One is also aware of the fact that those countries who feel that the military influence in NATO is likely to be excessive, consider that non-military interests are more likely to be given proper expression if the analysis is done by the OEEC. One or two delegations also have the feeling that the American proposal for an annual economic review implies that the distribution of American economic aid will somehow be related to the results of this enquiry in the future in much the same way as was Marshall Plan Aid. It is only fair to add that the Americans have given no encouragement to these views when speaking to ourselves or to the British. I mention them merely to indicate the uncertainty, not to say confusion, which may exist for some time as a result of this situation.

9. You will no doubt wish to consult with Washington and some other NATO capitals to determine in what way future NATO work in the economic field is likely to be affected by these decisions, and what steps should be taken by ourselves on the Executive Committee of OEEC when the time comes to make plans to implement them. We shall endeavour to obtain the views of the appropriate delegations in Paris and will report to you thereon later.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Annex 1 to Letter No. 128 of April 7thMeeting of OEEC Ministerial Council, March 27-29, 1952

FUTURE OF EUROPEAN PAYMENTS UNION

The Ministers agreed in principle that the EPU should be extended beyond June 30th but no decisions were taken at this meeting concerning modifications in the EPU Agreement. The Ministers had the report of the Managing Board (C(52)64) which posed the principal problems and they heard comprehensive statements from nearly every delegation about the future of the Union. As the Managing Board's report had only discussed the issues involved and had not offered specific solutions, the Ministers' discussion therefore served to give the Managing Board guidance for drawing up detailed proposals which will be submitted to the Ministers for approval at another meeting before June 30th.

2. The Managing Board stated in its report that three conditions would have to be met if the Union was to function efficiently. First, the convertible assets of the Union had to be increased; secondly, provision must be made for settling the surpluses of extreme creditors; and thirdly, the internal financial policies of member countries should be brought more closely into line with one another. From a technical point of view, the Managing Board presents a good case for an increase in the Union's reserves. The convertible assets are required for four main reasons. They must be adequate to cover cumulative out-payments; they stand as security to creditors who have granted credit to the Union; they provide confidence among traders and bankers as to the solvency of the Union and they may be required to meet the needs of member countries whose debtor positions may temporarily be extreme. The Managing Board estimated that an additional $178 million was required in the convertible assets.

3. While most Ministers declared they agreed that the convertible assets should be increased, a number of them suggested that the Managing Board had erred on the liberal side in its estimate of the amount required. The United States maintained its position that while EPU member countries themselves might contribute to an increase in the convertible assets no direct contribution could come from the United States. Mr. Draper pointed out that through the U.S. taking up the balances of certain member countries (i.e. direct aid to Austria, Greece, Iceland and Turkey) some $100 million had accrued to the Union since July 1, 1951 and that an additional $60 to $80 million would likely be similarly paid before June 30th. He did not think it unreasonable for the member countries of EPU to put up the balance, that is $100 million, if that was the amount required. Legislation now before Congress again provided for the balances of certain countries and he felt that no additional contribution was required from the United States. Several Ministers indicated that they were prepared to consider how member countries could provide a solution to the problem. Although Mr. Butler declared that he could not consider the possibility of the U.K. making a direct contribution, he suggested that the gold/credit ratio for debtors might be modified in order to increase pressure on debtors to take remedial action and to provide a current flow of gold into the Union in such circumstances. Liefstinck for the Netherlands declared that they were prepared to pay their share of any contributions by member countries to the convertible assets. Norway also suggested that the gold/credit ratios might be altered in order to put more pressure on the debtors. The result of the discussion therefore was that the Ministers instructed the Managing Board to prepare precise proposals concerning an increase in the convertible assets and to re-examine the estimate of the amount of the increase required, bearing in mind the views expressed at this meeting.

4. With reference to the problem of persistent extreme creditor countries, the Managing Board report states "There appear to be countries in the Union which will incur surpluses more or less continuously. These are the countries which have the strongest currencies. Thus the Union can expect that it may have to settle the surpluses of some creditors who have exceeded their quotas, even though there are no debtors who are in the same position and though this situation may continue almost indefinitely." It is evident therefore that the Managing Board sees no early reversal to the BLEU creditor position. With regard to the means of settling such creditor positions the report of the Board further states "The Union must try to find sufficient funds to enable it to settle the surpluses of the creditors by payment of gold on a scale which enables them to avoid grants of credit to the Union to an extent which causes them internal monetary difficulties so that these countries can avoid imposing severe restrictions on their exports to other member countries." The problem of the increase in the present reserves therefore is intimately related to the solution of the problem of persistent extreme creditors.

5. In this connection, Mr. Janssen, the Belgian Finance Minister, made a lengthy statement in which he declared that as far as his country was concerned the Union now was a burden for them which was disproportionate to the advantages which it provided. The Belgian Government was convinced that a multilateral payments system should continue but the machinery of the EPU had to be put on a sounder basis. For one thing, creditors who had reached the limit of their quota must be paid entirely in gold. However the inability of debtors to settle their deficits entirely in gold was recognized. He said that the inability of debtors to make such settlement is merely one aspect of the general disequilibrium of the dollar balance of the EPU as a whole. This line of reasoning is, you will recognize, the same line which we reported to you in our despatch No. 70 of February 19th. The problems of EPU and of intra-European trade are linked to the dollar problem so that some element of responsibility can be placed on the dollar area towards finding a solution to the current difficulties of EPU. Mr. Janssen even stated that any solution for the problem of the structural disequilibrium of the dollar balance of payments of member countries would require the United States to help European countries to buy less in the dollar area and to increase their own purchases in Europe. Off-shore purchases were suggested as the most appropriate and useful means for implementing the latter policy. With regard to the structure of EPU, Mr. Janssen asked for a strengthening of the working capital, some "mechanisms" to ensure greater stability in the internal finances of all member countries, arrangements to repay before June 30th the credits already granted in excess of quotas, and arrangements whereby any future credits extended within the Union would be subject to precise terms of repayment. With regard to the problem of internal financial stability, he suggested that the powers of the Managing Board should be increased and that rules should be laid down under which countries which do not maintain a healthy and stable currency would no longer have the right of automatic recourse to the reserves of the Union.

6. There was little discussion on the other aspects of EPU which are discussed in the Managing Board's report. The Managing Board rejected a general increase in the quotas as it would "tend to reduce the incentives to debtors to take sufficiently early and sufficiently rigorous action to control their balances of payments." The Irish suggested there might be a general increase but not one other delegation supported this proposal. Several representatives directed attention to the beneficial effect of long-term capital investments although there was no discussion on the Managing Board's references to the contributions which the IBRD and the IMF might make in easing the problems of intra-European payments. The Managing Board's suggestions concerning coordination in commercial policy and the internal financial policies of member countries are more or less incorporated in the Ministers' decisions concerning two other items on the agenda, the Steering Board for Trade and the work on internal financial stability.

7. Some of the proposals which the Managing Board originally considered (and which were reported in my letter No. 70) did not appear in the final report. These omissions relate for the most part to the more objectionable features which we found in the Managing Board's draft report, i.e. the suggestion for some degree of uniformity in member countries' policies towards dollar imports, the implication in the plea for member countries' currencies to be of equal value and that the hard currencies should be less hard in order to permit EPU to function more easily, and the proposal for "convertible accounts" which would deny to creditors the receipt of gold they would otherwise have obtained. Nevertheless some of the thinking reflected in these proposals tended to find expression in the Board's final report, particularly in the final sentence of paragraph 16, "It seems clear that the Union must always be in difficulty from this cause (inequality in the value of member countries' currencies) unless member countries follow internal and external policies which will result in a reasonable parity between the 'nominal' and the 'real' values of their currencies."

8. Referring to these questions, I stressed in a short statement that from our point of view it was very essential that the long-term objectives of EPU (full convertibility and multilateralism etc.) should always be kept in mind, especially when consideration was being given to means for strengthening the Union. I stressed the disadvantages of the easy credit which countries had obtained through the Union and took advantage of the occasion to remind OEEC that one effect of the EPU difficulties about which the Canadian Government was deeply concerned was the imposition by a strong creditor country of additional dollar restrictions. With regard to the convertible assets, I said that I recognized there were strong arguments on technical grounds for an increase but I thought that if this were done the member countries themselves should make appropriate contributions. An element of vaudeville was introduced into the proceedings when the Irish representative suggested that it would be of great assistance if the U.S. and Canada joined the Union with appropriate quotas. In reply I suggested that our maintenance of reasonable raw material prices, a low tariff policy and a high level of demand for European and other imports were very important and effective contributions to EPU.

9. On the whole the debate on EPU was of a very high standard. Member countries, faced as they are with acute problems of financial instability at home or among their trading partners, gave recognition time and time again to the fact that it was essentially the internal policies of member countries, and the debtors especially, which needed adjustment if existing stresses in intra-European payments were to be solved. I was impressed by the number of countries which seemed prepared to consider adjustments in the gold/credit ratios in order to strengthen the incentive of both debtors and creditors to take appropriate action. The next step in the preparations for EPU to be extended after June 30th is further elaboration in the Managing Board of details for specific revisions in the EPU Agreement incorporating the views of the ministers on an increase in the convertible assets and adjustments in the gold/credit ratios. Consideration may also be given to increasing the powers of the Managing Board with respect to its investigations of internal policies though this suggestion is covered in the Ministers' decision to have a senior group look into the more pressing cases of internal financial instability. The seeming inability of member countries to earn dollars or other third currencies and to use them in settling their intra-European balances was also a recurring theme during the discussions. Further attention will therefore likely be given by the Managing Board to the possibility of collaboration with the IBRD and the IMF and perhaps also the more general dollar problem.

UNITED STATES PROPOSAL FOR ANNUAL ECONOMIC REVIEW OF OEEC COUNTRIES

Reference: Your letter No. 127 of April 3.

I attach for your information a copy of Despatch No. 887 of April 16 from the Canadian Embassy in Washington.† You will note that, inter alia, this despatch explains in some detail the reasons which prompted the United States to propose, at the last Ministerial meeting of the OEEC Council, that the OEEC undertake an annual review of the economic positions and prospects of member countries.

2. I would draw your particular attention to paragraph 10 of the despatch which suggests that informal consultations in regard to the scope of the OEEC review have already taken place, and that there would appear to be little danger that NATO interests will not be adequately taken into consideration when the plans and timetable for the OEEC review are being elaborated. It was, as you will recall, about this aspect of the United States proposal that we were mainly concerned.

3. In the meantime you will also have received a copy of telegram No. 981 of April 16 from our High Commissioner in London† which analyses the reservations of United Kingdom officials in regard to the OEEC review. These reservations, as you will have noted, relate less to the possible lack of proper coordination between the functions of OEEC and NATO in the economic field than they do to the prejudicial effect which a review undertaken initially in the OEEC might have on the substance of the next TTC<sup>2</sup> exercise. In fact, it would appear that, if the United Kingdom had its way, the two reviews would be undertaken independently without much more than a bare modicum of mutual borrowing of the basic economic raw material.

4. I should be inclined to suggest that, if the degree of NATO-OEEC cooperation envisaged in paragraph 10 of the attached despatch materializes, our position will have been adequately met. I should be grateful if you could watch developments in the OEEC as the Executive Committee assumes responsibility for the formulation of the framework and the first OEEC annual review.

Paris, December 13, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

Addressed Ottawa No. 738, repeated Dominion London No. 74.

1. At the Saturday morning meeting of OEEC, Mr. Eden made an extended statement on the Commonwealth Economic Conference touching on most of the points mentioned in the final communique. He then called on us, as agreed beforehand, for a statement which was made by Mr. Wilgress. The greater part of our statement was an appropriate paraphrase of paragraphs 4 to 9 of the statement made by the Prime Minister at the beginning of the Commonwealth Conference and reported to you in telegram No. 2 of November 30th from the Canadian delegation.<sup>3</sup> We added the following concluding paragraphs:

"The Commonwealth meetings, which lasted for several weeks, were able to move forward towards important and constructive proposals. We have no doubt that, today and in the weeks that lie ahead, discussions in OEEC will move forward in the same way. In this connection, we were glad to find that our fellow members of the Commonwealth recognized fully the importance of the position of the European countries, 'whose cooperation', in the words of the final communique 'is essential'. The communique went on to emphasize that the aims of the Commonwealth proposals are entirely consistent with the close ties existing between the members of the Commonwealth and the members of the OEEC.

"It will not be easy to work our way out of the economic difficulties which surround us and divisions which threaten to separate us. The task will involve us all in serious problems — domestic problems as well as international problems. All concerned, will have to share in the responsibilities. Canada, a North American nation, which has participated fully in the Commonwealth meetings, recognizes, as the OEEC Fourth Report points out, that these responsibilities extend to both sides of the Atlantic.

"The Commonwealth proposals have only just been made known and nothing can be decided here today. Our discussion can only be of a preliminary character; nevertheless, it can be very useful in preparing our future work in

Paris, December 17, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

O.E.E.C. MINISTERIAL MEETING, DECEMBER 12-13

Reference: Telegram No. 738 of December 13th.

The Ministerial meeting of the OEEC Council which took place last Friday and Saturday was called primarily to approve the Organization's Fourth Annual Report on which the Secretariat and country delegations have been working for the past six months. The Council also gave some time to a discussion of the Organization's programme of work for 1953 and in this connection Mr. Eden and Mr. Wilgress made statements on the results of the Commonwealth Economic Conference. (Texts sent in our telegrams Nos. 753 and 754.)†

2. We shall be sending the final text of the Annual Report to you and to our missions in OEEC countries as soon as they are printed and I do not intend to comment in detail on it now. It may, however, be useful to point up one or two passages which set the tone for the Report as a whole. In a section entitled: "Essential Elements for a Lasting Solution" (of the economic difficulties of Western Europe) the Report states that: "Europe must be made independent of American economic aid by means of sustained expansion which will restore its competitive capacity, increase its dollar earnings and allow it to move towards a stable equilibrium in a world wide system of liberalized trade and payments. This calls for simultaneous and co-ordinated action on a broad scale by Western Europe and its associated monetary areas and by the United States and Canada."

3. "The individual elements of a plan of action to meet these conditions," the Report continues, "cannot be startlingly new." And indeed there is little that is new in it. It does, however, provide a good statistical and policy statement of the European problem which will be invaluable to the new American administration and which will provide a useful point of departure for a co-ordinated Commonwealth OEEC approach to the United States in 1953.

4. The Ministerial discussion of the Report was what might be expected of a discussion on a document which had been carefully negotiated at the official level. Some Ministers felt that the proposals should have been more precise, others felt that the payments and liberalization problems should have been given better treatment, but the speeches contained little that was new. Mr. Hammarskjöld of Sweden felt that the text was in part too "uncontroversial"; that in order to be acceptable to all countries it had avoided coming to grips with specific issues.

5. Although it is true that the Report does not give precise recommendations, this is not necessarily a weakness at this stage. The OEEC programme for 1953 hangs on a new approach to the United States Administration which in turn must be coordinated with a Commonwealth approach. Precise recommendations must await a study of the Commonwealth proposals in the OEEC and a reconciliation of Commonwealth and OEEC points of view — points of view which do not appear to be far apart. At Mr. Eden's suggestion a committee in OEEC is to be set up immediately to study the Commonwealth proposals.

6. Mr. Marjolin admitted that the payments and liberalization problems were not treated adequately in the Report. It had been decided that the payments problem should be studied in detail in connection with the Managing Board's report on the future of the European Payments Union after June 30, 1953, which is due in March.

The OEEC Programme of Work for 1953

7. Following Mr. Eden's statement and statements by the Chairman of the Managing Board and the Steering Board for Trade which summed up the work of those two bodies during the past six months, the Council instructed the Secretary General to prepare a programme of work for 1953. At the same time, in order to fill the gaps in the Fourth Report, it "invited the Managing Board and the Steering Board to pursue without delay the study of the monetary and commercial problems with which they are concerned and which must be resolved urgently."

8. The statements of Mr. Eden and Mr. Wilgress were very well received by the Council. They provoked a number of further statements among which was one by Mr. Beyen of the Netherlands. Referring to the prospective approach to the U.S. Administration, he said that he hoped the approach would be made through organizations which already exist, such as the OEEC, the IMF and "whatever organization exists within the Commonwealth," and not through the medium of a World Economic Conference. He felt that the creation of a new forum of discussion would not be helpful in coming to grips with the real problems and that any world conference would have to include South American and other countries which would merely augment the problems facing Western Europe and would blur the real issues. In addition Mr. Beyen gave the impression that he wished the IMF to be "brought to life", a wish which may be attributed partly to the fact that for the past three years he has been a Director of the Fund.

9. On the question of the timing of an approach to the United States, Mr. Beyen was in full agreement with Mr. Eden "that it would be a mistake to rush events" — that the essence of a successful approach lies in careful coordination of OEEC and Commonwealth proposals submitted after the new U.S. Administration has had ample time to find its bearings.

LETTER No. 70

Paris, February 19, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

EUROPEAN PAYMENTS UNION

Reference: My letter No. 40 of January 28th.+

The above referenced letter described the strains being experienced in the operations of EPU and reviewed some of the difficulties confronting efforts to find ways and means of meeting these problems. It was pointed out that the EPU Managing Board had been considering what policies it might be desirable for countries to implement in the circumstances and what revisions might be made in the structure of EPU after June 30, 1952, so that the Union would be in a better position to cope with the swings being experienced in intra-European trade. This letter reports on some of the proposals the Board has been considering.

2. As the Managing Board has not yet completed its study, the proposals are still under examination and cannot be considered as final. However, we have discussed the principal problems with a number of people associated with this work and we have been shown an early draft of the Board's report. Some of the Managing Board's final opinions we therefore know. Paragraphs 3-24 of this letter are a summary of the draft report. After dealing with the problem of settling temporary surpluses and deficits (paras. 4-11), the difficulties of settling persistent extreme positions (paras. 12-24) are discussed. In this summary the present position of the Managing Board, as far as we know it, is generally indicated concerning each point. In a few cases our comments will be found, in brackets, at the end of the paragraph. Some general comments on the problem of the persistent BLEU surplus are made in the concluding paragraphs (25-29) of this letter.

A. Review of EPU Operations

3. In spite of the increasing difficulties which have been confronting EPU the Managing Board considers, as it recorded in its first annual report (our letter No. 407 of September 7, 1951), that the Union has proved to be a satisfactory mechanism for intra-European payments during a period when convertibility was not yet possible. The principal role of the Union to serve as a clearing house has been fulfilled. With very few exceptions, country positions which followed a particular trend for some time were subsequently reversed. In the light of this experience the Managing Board has concluded that the conditions for gold and credit payments need not be radically revised. Nevertheless the Board considers that unless ways are found to cope with the difficulties arising from violent, though temporary, fluctuations, and more especially from the problem of persistent debtors and creditors, the continued functioning of the Union will become precarious. (The over-riding importance of appropriate national monetary and commercial policies in meeting these difficulties was underlined in my letter No. 40. In this connection we have been informed by Cahan that the final report of the Managing Board will state in no uncertain terms that the EPU debtors must carry the onus of responsibility for many of the current difficulties of the Union and for remedying the present unsatisfactory conditions pertaining to intra-European payments.)

B. The Problem of Settling Temporary Surpluses and Deficits

Monetary Measures

4. Having accepted that the EPU mechanism for covering temporary positions has worked satisfactorily the Board has concluded that there need be no major changes in the mechanism of the Union. In order to reduce the violence of the recent fluctuations in payments and to enable the Union to withstand them better should they reoccur, the Board has considered whether it might in future, when examining a country's position, also look into the monetary and financial policies of other countries whose positions, without causing concern, nevertheless may have a marked effect on the position of the country in question. (When the problem of German deficit was before OEEC her economic policies were examined in detail; but whether all member countries would agree to submit to the Board and to discuss with it full information about their monetary policies is by no means certain.)

Commercial Measures

5. With regard to commercial policy, the Managing Board has noted that rapid and frequent changes in liberalization measures may tend to aggravate disequilibria and to disorganize the structure of intra-European trade. It therefore has considered suggesting that countries should resort to commercial measures only in so far as adjustments in the field of monetary and financial policies prove to be inadequate in scope or too slow in taking effect. The Board has also noted that the functioning of the Union would be facilitated if countries which have suspended liberalization measures, instead of waiting until the improvement in their position has been considerable and has been maintained for some time, would introduce some flexibility in their import controls during the period when their position in the Union has started to improve but did not yet warrant a complete return to liberalization. (At the recent special session of the OEEC Trade Committee identical views were expressed.)

Working and Modification of the Agreement

6. Recent disturbances in trade have frequently been accompanied by abnormal movements in payments, principally through concealed capital transfers, which tend to aggravate the situation. The Managing Board has therefore considered whether, in an effort to limit these movements, it might be given certain information which would enable it to foresee the possible extent of the financial movements between member countries and their incidence on the accounting positions in the Union. The Managing Board has in mind that it might obtain information about the level of working capital funds in European currencies held by commercial banks and other institutions.

7. With regard to the quotas, the Managing Board does not think they need any radical revision. Arguments in favour of a general increase of quotas might be based on the growth in the volume of trade and the rise in prices but it appears to the Board that such an extension of quotas would reduce the initiative for member countries to take in good time the necessary measures to reduce their position in the Union. As far as the Board is concerned there has never been any intention of adjusting the amount of quotas to the amount of trade at any given time. Nevertheless the Board considered that the revision of some individual quotas may be necessary (presumably BLEU, Italy and Portugal are countries whose quotas might be increased).

8. The Managing Board rejects the possibility of modifying the method of settling accounting positions by making changes in the proportions between payments in gold and grants of credit as a means to restrict the rapid accumulation of surpluses or deficits. The Board does not recommend any such changes at this time for two reasons. Firstly, owing to the pressure which is already being exercised on the monetary reserves of member countries, debtors could scarcely undertake to pay the Union higher amounts in gold. Secondly, creditor countries would find it difficult to increase the credit granted owing to general inflationary trends.

9. The Managing Board has considered two possible provisions which might make it easier for the Union to settle surpluses which, without being persistent, are yet of such an extent that the country's quota is exhausted. The first provision concerns a proposal that the whole or part of the amount due to a country in respect of payments in gold should be deposited in a "convertible account" which would be opened in this country's name in the books of the Union's agent (The B.I.S.). The assets in this account would be useable only by the holder to settle a subsequent deficit in its balance of payments.

10. The second provision concerns a strengthening of the convertible assets. The Board has agreed that for several reasons the convertible assets should be increased. We understand that it considers that a minimum of 150 to 200 million additional dollars is required. In the Board's opinion the initial endowment of $350 million was barely sufficient to ensure the working of the Union within the limits of the quotas. Having regard to the gold payments already made through the Union to persistent creditors, the Board thinks that an increase in the convertible assets is especially necessary. The question of from where the resources for an increase in the assets might come was discussed in my letter No. 40. The U.S. representatives here are not only not prepared, at least at the present time, to consider the possibility of the U.S. contributing any dollars for an increase in the assets, but from our most recent conversations with them it appears that they are still not convinced that the reserves need be increased. The Managing Board argues that in the eyes of the creditor countries, the reserves constitute a partial cover for the credits they have granted; and for the public, the reserves are a sign of stability and confidence. To the latter point the U.S. representatives declare it is merely a case of understanding the EPU mechanism. To the former point they suggest that loans which creditors may make on behalf of the sterling and French franc areas should not have to be guaranteed by the U.S. putting up additional dollars.

11. A member of the Managing Board declared that it is unrealistic to expect member countries to make contributions to the convertible assets as long as they are in receipt of U.S. aid. Some dollars may accrue to the Union through U.S. assistance to structural debtors (Austria, Greece, Iceland and Turkey) but this source is too limited to bring the convertible assets up to the limit desired. Attention has also been given to the possibility of dollars from off-shore purchases being channeled into the Union. (There are various ways in which this might be done but they presuppose that the countries concerned will give up the free dollars they would otherwise gain. While a very substantial volume of dollars might be obtained in this way the U.S. has cautioned the Managing Board not to plan on this assumption. The U.S. is giving serious consideration to this idea but owing to many administrative difficulties being experienced in implementing the off-shore purchase programme the U.S. is uncertain how successful this programme may be.)

C. The Settlement of Persistent Surpluses and Deficits

Analysis

12. The most fruitful development for solving the problem of persistent surpluses and deficits would be if persistent debtors accumulated surpluses outside the EPU area enabling them to pay the Union in convertible currencies. But at the present time the dollar deficit is a major problem for almost all member countries and there is no sign of the emergence of a pattern of trade making it possible to effect triangular settlements. As the Managing Board is of the opinion that the Union's liquid assets are not adequate to ensure certain settlement of the temporary surpluses and deficits (see para. 10 above) it therefore considers that the convertible currencies required to settle persistent surpluses can only come from outside sources.

13. If this analysis is accepted it follows that the only action which member countries can at present take to solve the problem of persistent positions is to reduce them to a level compatible with the convertible assets obtained from outside sources. The action principally required therefore mainly falls within the scope of monetary and commercial policy.

Monetary Measures

14. The recognition given by the Managing Board to the importance of debtor countries with inflationary situations taking appropriate measures to reduce purchasing power was referred to in paragraph 3 above. Conversely the Managing Board would like to see creditor countries without inflationary situations avoid restricting purchasing power.

Commercial Policy

15. Monetary measures by themselves can only provide a partial solution to the problems of countries which tend to be structural debtors or creditors in Europe. If a sharp reduction in the persistent positions of these countries becomes necessary, commercial measures also will be required. In the case of persistent creditors, in present circumstances when the convertible assets of the Union are inadequate, it has been suggested in the Managing Board that they should aim at simultaneously reducing surpluses in Europe and deficits outside Europe, i.e. a redirection of foreign trade. A programme of this nature would require careful study over a long period. It might require quota restrictions not only on imports but also on exports. In this connection the Managing Board has considered the usefulness of codifying the principles which should govern the application and removal of quota restrictions on exports, as has been done in the case of imports.

16. With regard to exchange control, the Managing Board has found that if a member country refrains from exercising strict control over exports of capital to the dollar area, that country attracts capital from other member countries and therefore tends to accumulate surpluses in Europe. Strict exchange control is therefore required.

D. Methods of Settlement

Debtors

17. With regard to the persistent debtors, Austria, Greece, Iceland and Turkey, the various measures described in paragraph 14 and 15 would still leave these countries with deficits to be settled by outside resources. The only source of funds is U.S. aid but in this connection the Managing Board does not yet know the size or rate of the grants which the U.S. may make. The Board is anxious, of course, to see this question settled as soon as possible as any prolonged uncertainty will tend to handicap planning for the future.

18. In the case of some countries the persistent character of their deficits in Europe would be removed if there were an inward flow of investment funds. It has been suggested that the possibility of a regular flow of long-term capital into Europe should be discussed with the I.B.R.D.

Creditors

19. The Managing Board rejects as a real solution the withdrawal or suspension of persistent creditors from the Union. While the difficulties with regard to the technical operation of the Union would be disposed of, they would continue to exist for all countries on a bilateral basis. Indeed, the solution of these difficulties might be more difficult to obtain outside the Union than inside it.

20. One proposal which has been made as a means of facilitating the settlement of the surpluses of a persistent creditor is to restore all or part of its quota by consolidating a fraction of its cumulative accounting surplus into long-term loans. The Managing Board would also like to explore the possibility of persistent debtors paying currencies of non-member countries to persistent creditors. While transfers of this nature have not been possible up to the present, the Managing Board might explore them.

21. A similar possibility is that offered by certain transactions between member countries of the Union and the International Monetary Fund. Persistent debtors might purchase from the Fund the currencies of a persistent creditor. However such transactions could only really help the efficient working of the Union if it were possible for the Monetary Fund to relax its rules of procedure. If this possibility were explored the Managing Board would of course have to enter into discussions with the I.M.F.

22. Finally, the settlement of the surpluses accumulated by persistent creditors might be facilitated by the use of any convertible currencies held by the Union over and above the amount required by it for the settlement of temporary surpluses and deficits. Additional assets of this kind might come from various sources. The Union might acquire such funds from the use of "special resources" by the structural debtors (see para. 17), or by payment through EPU of off-shore purchases. The only other possible source of funds would seem to be an additional contribution of dollars to the Union.

E. Some General Considerations Affecting the Settlement of the Surpluses of the Persistent Creditors

23. As a result of the experience with BLEU certain general principles concerning the settlement of surpluses of persistent creditors have developed, the most important of which the Managing Board has thought might be put into precise form. This is the principle of making allowance for a country's position vis-à-vis the dollar area when deciding on the amount of gold payments to be made to a persistent creditor. If the country has surpluses outside the EPU area, its surplus within the Union, in so far as it exceeds its quota, would be wholly settled by the granting of credit. The principle, in other words, is that the Union's assets in convertible currencies should not be used to strengthen a member country's monetary reserves. The Board recognizes that the equitable application of this principle would require it to examine all aspects of the dollar position of a persistent creditor, including the nature of its economy and trade, the character of its dollar deficit, and whether the country was receiving any dollars in the form of U.S. aid. (It is not certain whether all countries would be prepared to accept such an examination.)

24. One of the basic principles of EPU is that the currencies of all member countries are equally valuable. However, this has never really been the situation that existed and the problems of the Union have been aggravated for this reason. It has been suggested in the Managing Board that if the transferability of European currencies is not to be invalidated, each currency as nearly as possible should be of equal "hardness" vis-à-vis the others; and that this result could be achieved by the harmonisation of internal monetary policies and by the adoption of some degree of uniformity in member countries' policies relating to imports from the dollar area.

COMMENTARY

25. Leaving aside the problem of BLEU, it would seem that as a result of some of the adjustments in the EPU mechanism described above, and assuming that the countries concerned carry out appropriate internal policies, the operations of the Union should continue to provide a reasonably satisfactory mechanism for the settlement of intra-European balances. The two most difficult debtors, France and the U.K., have implemented programmes which in time should lead to a reversal of their recent positions. The persistent BLEU surplus is the dominating problem in planning the future of EPU. Unless a satisfactory solution is found, which must involve a substantial change in the present pattern of intra-European surpluses and deficits, EPU might well collapse. The Managing Board and M.S.A. are deeply concerned about the BLEU surplus but, from our conversations with the people concerned, it seems that they have neither unanimous views nor final opinions on the most practicable action to be taken.

26. The Belgian trade surplus in Europe can be analysed on a long-run and on a short-run basis. From the long-term point of view Belgium has tended to be a structural creditor in Europe. Before the war Belgium had a surplus in European trade and a deficit with the dollar area. In fact, much of Belgian industry is concerned with processing dollar imports and selling the products in Europe. Under this trade pattern payments settlements used to be made by obtaining dollars from some of the European countries, notably the U.K. However it is not realistic at present to expect to obtain dollars from intra-European trade. It has been suggested in the Managing Board that Belgium must therefore reorient her trade and perhaps alter the structure of her industry. This is a long-term proposition and, if accepted, it follows that in the meantime special arrangements have to be made to settle the Belgian surplus.

27. From the short-run point of view there seem to be, at least in M.S.A.'s opinion, some grounds for considering the recent Belgian surplus as abnormal. Belgium ran a deficit in EPU during the months of July to November 1950 and, it is asked, might this not happen again in the near future. The growing surplus since November 1950 had its origin in the Netherlands' deficit — since corrected — and found its stature in the French and U.K. heavy buying, based in part on internal inflationary situations. Assuming that the French and the U.K. positions are corrected, and Belgium pursues a more expansionist internal policy, the Belgian surplus might disappear, at least for a few years. Uncertainty about the economic developments that can reasonably be expected in the short-run seems to be preventing agreement among the Managing Board and the U.S. representatives on the arrangements that need to be made for the future of EPU in so far as they relate to the settlement of the balances of creditors who have exceeded their quota.

28. The Managing Board tends to the opinion that BLEU is permanently above the line. MSA seems to hope that the Belgian situation will solve itself along the lines mentioned in the preceding paragraph. Discussions about the BLEU problem invariably lead to references to the policy of the Managing Board and M.S.A. concerning member countries' deficits with the dollar area. Here we find that the opinions of the Managing Board and M.S.A. are about the same. As long as BLEU cannot expect to earn dollars from her EPU partners, it is argued, it is unreasonable for Belgium to run a dollar deficit. An M.S.A. representative has even declared to us that the BLEU problem in EPU is essentially a dollar problem. As long as gold and dollars continually flow to BLEU from the Union, BLEU is as much a member of the dollar area as she is of the EPU area. What the Managing Board especially fears now is that France and the U.K. will start to regain the gold they have paid to EPU while BLEU still runs a surplus with other countries. In these circumstances the convertible assets would again start to diminish and perhaps much more seriously than heretofore. Hence the suggestion, in paragraph 24 above, that member countries might have some degree of uniformity in their policies relating to imports from the dollar area. We said that the EPU should not be permitted to become an end in itself and that any common policy towards the dollar area of the kind suggested might well move Europe even further from the goal of convertibility with European countries not "equally hard" but rather "equally soft". EPU then ceases to be a temporary mechanism but a vested interest.

29. I should be grateful to have any comments and observations you may care to make on this question and on any of the other matters raised in this letter. I expect the final report of the Managing Board will be examined by the OEEC committees with responsibilities in this field. It will also be considered at a meeting of the ministerial Council tentatively scheduled for March 24th. Should you wish us to make any comments on the questions raised we could of course do so at any of the stages of the examination of the final report of the Managing Board within the Organization.

TELEGRAM 24

Ottawa, March 18, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

E.P.U.

Reference: Your letter No. 70 of February 19, 1952.

We have given careful thought to the proposals under consideration by Managing Board. It appears from your last two sentences in paragraph 28 that you are taking the right attitudes and we now wish you to make our point of view clear in the OEEC Council and other bodies. Your case should be built around the following paragraphs. Detailed material in the form of letters from Finance and Bank of Canada has been mailed to you.

2. One of the stated objectives of the EPU is to lead towards multilateral trade and currency convertibility. While these objectives cannot be achieved easily or quickly, and while compromises may be necessary from time to time, steps which clearly lead away from them appear to us to be economically and politically undesirable not merely from Canadian viewpoint but from viewpoint of EPU members.

3. Canada has welcomed the recent growth of European strength and solidarity as evidenced by OEEC, Council of Europe, Schuman Plan, and EDC proposals. These developments are contributing to the economic and political solidarity not only of Europe but also of the free world and of the North Atlantic Community.

4. Looking back, it is clear that OEEC liberalization programmes and payments arrangements have promoted removal of post-war trade restrictions during the reconstruction period. It is not so clear that they have promoted the long term maintenance of liberal policies in trade. Recent actions by U.K. and France to intensify restrictions show how insecure a foundation credit provides for liberalization unless accompanied by appropriate internal policies, and it may open the door to postponement of adoption of such policies.

5. EPU was set up just before Korean war. Subsequent economic and financial storms have naturally led countries scarcely able to keep their heads above water to grasp at any means of apparent support. The trouble with a regional association like EPU is that, especially in time of general emergency, the members are more likely to pull each other down than to keep each other up and their struggles lead them into deeper not shallower water. Countries suffering from inflation, instead of fighting it at its source, are tempted to meet their external deficits in part by use of regional credits, thereby simply passing their inflation along to their neighbours, and in part by discriminatory restrictions against dollar imports. Inflation goes unchecked and, combined with the restrictions on imports, raises internal costs and further undermines exports and the balance of payments. This leads to further discriminatory import restrictions with their divisive effects, politically as well as economically.

6. We would not want you to introduce critical comments on the sterling area situation unless a proposal was made to enlarge EPU quotas, and it seemed desirable to use sterling area problems as an illustration of the undesirability of attempting to tackle EPU problems via the route of quota enlargements. However, we do believe that the fundamental remedies, which some sterling countries are now belatedly taking or considering, have been delayed and postponed because credit facilities have been too readily provided within the area. Sterling area financial crises have thus been aggravated. Further easing of EPU credit facilities, general or particular, are likely under present circumstances to lead in the same direction.

7. We are disturbed by the following suggestions particularly affecting EPU creditors which seem to lead directly away from multilateralism and convertibility:

(a) that no EPU country should expect to earn hard currency or gold from another;

(b) that any gold so earned should be used in EPU settlements only and thus cease to form part of freely convertible reserves;

(c) that the policies of each EPU country in the fields of domestic finance and external controls should approximate to the average of all (the average is clearly unsatisfactory in both fields); and

(d) that a creditor in the position of Belgium should correct its position by relaxing domestic monetary policies, and by discriminating unnecessarily against imports from Canada and other outside countries.

8. We assume that the United States is not willing to make further contributions to EPU. Our comments relating to credits and quotas are in no sense directed against the EPU as an agency for channelling essential U.S. aid to Europe.

9. We have from the outset, as you know, been worried by certain aspects and implications of EPU. Nevertheless we would not now wish to see it break down. We would like to see it carry on without much change, along the general lines indicated in your paragraphs 3 to 8. If the EPU continues to face persistent surpluses and deficits during the re-armament period it would seem to us best that these situations should be met in the future, as in the past, on an ad hoc basis. The very uncertainty as to how surpluses and especially deficits will be dealt with may make countries the less willing to see them accumulate.

Note de la Direction économique pour le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Economic Division to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, April 17, 1952

You may remember that one morning, early last week, we were talking with Bob Bryce<sup>4</sup> about the possibility — admittedly rather remote — that Canada might make a subscription this year to the EPU<sup>5</sup> in order to “buy” a place on its Managing Board. I pointed out that our present membership in OEEC gave us the right to attend the whole hierarchy of committees up to and including the Ministerial Council, but did not include us in two important bodies, i.e. the Managing Board of the EPU and the Steering Committee for Trade. I added that we were never likely to exercise much influence unless we put up some money to back our opinions. Moreover, if the Government was worried by criticism in Parliament because of its failure to provide economic aid for Europe, such aid could be provided by a subscription to EPU which would be a once-for-all operation and would not involve us in an obligation to make annual subscriptions.

2. The arguments against the proposal were, of course, fairly obvious. Canada is not deeply involved in EPU and neither Canada nor the United States can hope to get the European countries to “liberalize” dollar imports unless we are willing to extend dollar aid on a scale that would certainly be considered politically inconceivable. Finally, it is questionable whether a small contribution to the EPU would really increase our influence very much in OEEC circles. The Americans contribute so much more to the piper that they will almost always call the tune and unfortunately the American voice in this instance is chiefly the voice of MSA rather than State Department or Treasury which take (what we would call) a rather more balanced view of “European integration”.

3. I had not intended to open up any discussion of this subject. However, shortly after our talk I had separate opportunities to raise it with both Clark and Towers. Clark, as you may guess, was not favourable towards the idea but I did not get much of a chance to explore his views. Towers was much more vigorous and outspoken. He said that he would “rather be seen dead” than make a contribution to EPU. He felt pretty sure that European trade restrictions were going to be raised against us whatever we did and that the Canadian Government would be open to grave criticism if, in an open-handed moment, it provided for assistance to the EPU and then EPU turned round and bit the hand that fed it.

4. I think that the proposal is "a dead duck"; certainly the arguments against it are sufficiently strong that I would not want to see this Department go on a crusade in its favour. Nevertheless it is something that we may want to keep in mind, and in any case I thought you would like to know of the initial reaction of Clark and Towers.<sup>6</sup>

FUTURE OF EPU

1. OEEC Document C(52)130 now in your hands contains proposals of Managing Board of EPU for settling the position of certain creditors, notably Belgium, both with respect to their surpluses above the quotas in the period ending June 1952, and for the period 1952-53. Other proposals relate to an increase in the ratio of gold to credit payable by debtors, and to joint guarantees to advance money to the Union should the convertible assets fall below $100 millions.

2. The Trade and Payments Committee has been wrestling with these proposals and has failed to reach any kind of agreement. The debtor countries are reluctant to agree to make larger gold payments in future, or to guarantee the level of the convertible assets. Some of them, notably Norway and Denmark, feel that the proposed treatment of Belgian surpluses is too generous. However, we understand that, in the main, the reservations of this group might be lifted if Belgium would accept, as a minimum, the proposals made in respect to Belgium by the Managing Board. Belgium, however, has refused so far to agree to these proposals. Not surprisingly, Belgium wants the Union to pay to it $119 millions of gold (instead of $46 millions, as proposed by Managing Board) in July 1952; it wants the debtors to become liable in future for bigger gold ratios and it wants the remainder of credit given to the Union beyond its quota to be consolidated and repaid over two years by some

Mr. Plumptre Apr[jil] 18/52. You might wish to raise this proposal again after you have been in Paris for a while. method which would allow Belgium to mobilize its remaining claim of 104 million dollars in the Union.

3. We understand that Stikker and a representative of the United States are going to Brussels on Tuesday to try and persuade the Belgians to agree with the majority proposals of the Managing Board, or at least to move towards a compromise. In any case EPU will constitute the main item on the agenda of the Ministerial Council meeting on Thursday, June 6th.

4. We feel that having already made our own views known on the EPU at the last Ministerial meeting it will not be necessary or appropriate for us to intervene in this present issue, although the Managing Board proposals do seem to provide a reasonable approach to a difficult problem. If you have any strong view on the proposals we should be glad to have them.

FUTURE OF EPU

Reference: Your Telegram No. 108 of May 29.

General views set out in our telegram No. 24 of March 14<sup>7</sup> and embodied in your statement at March meeting of Ministerial Council are held strongly here and should be put forward in appropriate ways on appropriate occasions. However, in view of nature of discussions this week, we consider it neither necessary nor appropriate for you to make another full statement at this time.

While we would agree with you that "Managing Board proposals do seem to provide a reasonable approach to a difficult problem," you should know that there is general disposition in departments concerned here to be sympathetic with Belgian position. This is based on our feeling that danger of proposed arrangements lies in their softness.

After two days of negotiations between members of a small ministerial committee, an agreement was reached on the above subjects on Saturday evening and later ratified by the entire Council, subject to certain minor reservations. The main lines of the agreement, summarized in succeeding paragraphs, will be more easily followed if you will refer to document C-52-130, containing original managing board proposals, which is already in Ottawa.

2. The Belgian surplus of 223 millions was settled in part by Belgian agreement to a quota increase of 86 millions (i.e. from 330 to 417). 43 millions of the quota increase are added to the normal Belgian loans to EPU with a consequent reduction of 43 millions from the 223 million Belgian surplus — leaving 180 millions. The remaining 43 million has already been settled to Belgian in gold outside the union. The EPU in turn will waive the rule requiring the repayment of gold received under post-quota settlements, should surpluses change to deficits, up to the total of special resources which EPU expects to receive by June 30.

Mr. Plumptre: This is fascinatingly complicated. I do not think we should object if U.S. can take it & if IMF rules permit such exceptional drawings. We might use the situation to prod the Belgians again on this dollar import restriction but I doubt that we should make relaxation a condition of our acquiescence. A.E. R[itchie] June 11.

3. For the remaining 180 millions,<sup>9</sup> EPU will pay Belgium 80 millions in gold on July 1, 1952, leaving 100 millions still to be covered. Fifty millions of this will be consolidated and repaid by EPU in five equal annual instalments beginning June 1953. However, Belgium wished this obligation to be "mobilized" by using the OEEC promise to pay as collateral.

4. It is hoped that this 50 million may be mobilized by members for benefit of Belgium as follows: member governments including United States and Canada are asked to support a Belgian application at IMF to draw 50 million dollars before end of June and to ensure that this transaction will not endanger Belgium's remaining drawing rights in the fund.<sup>10</sup> The Belgian repayments of this drawing are to coincide as to amounts and dates with the repayments by EPU mentioned in previous paragraph. If monetary fund aspect of this agreement is unworkable, or not agreeable to majority IMF, entire plan must be reviewed once more.

5. The remaining 50 million units of credit due to Belgium will be settled by the assumption of indebtedness by the U.K. (30 millions approximately) and France (20 millions) to Belgium, which debts are to be wiped out in two years as a result of Belgian orders for offshore procurement in U.K. and France, or by cash payments. This aspect of the deal will eliminate the present Belgian surplus with EPU. The United States undertakes to do everything possible to ensure that it, in turn, will spend a similar amount on<sup>11</sup> offshore purchases and infrastructure in Belgium during the two-year period.

6. Belgium agrees that future (June 1952-June 1953) post quota surpluses of Belgium will be settled on a 50 percent gold 50 percent credit basis up to total surplus of 250 millions.

7. Debtors will pay gold ratios on scale "B" referred to in managing board report despite groans from Norway and others, with probability of a special reprieve to Denmark alone. All members agree to subscribe if called upon to guarantee fund described in document 130.

8. Stikker said that this deal had to be accepted as a complete package or start negotiations all over again. If accepted, the Council would instruct the managing board to prepare formal agreements and papers for final ratification of official Council before the end of June. The Council accepted the total plan subject to a reservation by Portugal which, as a minor creditor, wanted the same treatment in some respects as Belgium, and subject to remarks of United States and Canada who were without authority at the moment to agree to

9. You will note that this agreement is much more favourable to Belgium than the terms proposed by the managing board in document 130, and supported by majority up to the moment the ministerial committee began to negotiate. We are reporting in a despatch sent to you in Tuesday's bag on the position of contending parties before final negotiations began yesterday. Completion of agreement proceeded faster than was expected.

1. The Secretary-General of OEEC informed a meeting of heads of delegations today of the terms under which, according to his understanding, Belgium will be enabled to draw 50 millions dollars from the IMF as part of the package programme for the repayment of its surplus with the EPU. The Canadian Director on the IMF will doubtless have advised you on this in more detail but, for what it is worth, here is the understanding of the OEEC.

2. The United States Director has finally agreed to support a proposal that Belgium should be permitted to draw up to 50 millions dollars within its existing gold subscription. This agreement will remain firm for six months at a time unless conditions change materially and specifically unless Belgium becomes "ineligible" to draw. The drawing will be repaid at the rate of 10 millions dollars per annum coinciding with the payments to Belgium by EPU itself. Should Belgium in the future wish to draw beyond the 50 millions dollars, the Fund will be prepared to consider such a request in so far as it may be consistent with the purposes of the Fund. We were told that the European members of the Fund were solid in support of this approach which is to be formally agreed upon by the Fund on Friday next. We were also told that the United States willingness to compromise had been greatly influenced by the persuasiveness of Mr. Draper.

3. Concerning the formal ratification by EPU of the plan for dealing with the Belgian surplus, it is understood that Portugal is the only OEEC member not yet willing to agree. However, this country is submitting proposals to the Managing Board and it is hoped there will be agreement within the next few days. Therefore, the member countries will be required to sign the necessary documents providing for the settlement with Belgium and for the continuance of EPU beyond June 30th under the arrangements referred to in our despatch No. 216 of June 7th.<sup>13</sup> It is believed that this may involve new legislation in some member countries.

BELGIAN ARRANGEMENTS WITH THE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

At a meeting on July 11th, the OEEC Council adopted the following resolution without opposition and without discussion:

“THE COUNCIL

TAKES NOTE of the statement made by the Belgian Delegation regarding the arrangements made by Belgium for drawings on the International Monetary Fund;

DESIRES to record its satisfaction at the speedy and favourable response which the Fund has made to the Belgian request in this connection, which permitted the Belgian Government to give its agreement to the arrangements proposed for the settlement of the surplus of the BLEU in the European

These arrangements are described in the immediately preceding document.

Payments Union, and aided the Council in adopting the decisions required for the continuance of the Union;

HOPES that it may also be possible to have fruitful collaboration in the future between the Fund and the Organization in connection with problems of mutual concern."

2. At a meeting the previous week, a similar resolution had been put forward but it was held over. Mr. Cahan of the OEEC Secretariat, who had been present at the International Monetary Fund during the discussions there, said that he was not quite sure that the Fund would welcome such a resolution because there was some feeling that the Fund had been presented with a "fait accompli". He undertook to find out informally whether the resolution would be acceptable to the Fund. Apparently his approaches have met with a favourable response.

3. It would have been useful if this Delegation could have been supplied in advance with some report on the discussions in the Fund and any part that the Canadian representative took in those discussions. Could it be possible to arrange for us to get such reports in the future?

LETTER No. E-93

Ottawa, July 22, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

BELGIAN ARRANGEMENTS WITH THE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

Reference: Your Letter No. 451 of July 15.

I regret that your mission was not kept fully informed of the discussions which were held in Ottawa and subsequently in Washington regarding the Belgian application to the Fund which arose out of the proposals made by the Managing Board of the E.P.U. for the settlement of the Belgian surplus. I am asking the Canadian representative in the Fund to bear in mind the continuing interest your mission has in any discussions involving the future of the E.P.U. or, for that matter, in any issues relevant to intra-European trade and payments. The current Fund consultations with Belgium, which have a direct bearing on Belgium's ability or inability to dispense with dollar import restrictions, would appear to be a case in point.

2. In the meantime, you may wish to have on record an account of the first phase of the discussions on the settlement of the Belgian E.P.U. surplus which were held in Ottawa between officials of the Department of Finance, the Bank of Canada and this Department on June 17. In principle, the Canadian officials concerned were not inclined to support Belgium's application to draw $30,000,000 from the Fund without prejudice to her existing drawing rights. Apart from the evident unwillingness of the Belgians to relax their discriminatory dollar import restrictions, the following considerations seemed to militate against Canadian support for the special treatment the Belgians were asking the Fund to extend to them:

(a) This represented the first occasion on which a group of members of the Fund had formally agreed in an outside body to instruct their representatives to take a concerted position in the Fund.

(b) There was no apparent inclination to undertake a critical examination of the extent to which the policies of Belgium or those of the E.P.U. were consistent with the objectives of the Fund before action was taken on the Belgian application.

(c) The review of exchange restrictions applied by Belgium and other countries, which was scheduled for the near future, could hardly be effective if the Belgian application were approved without any serious questioning of Belgium's current import policies and present trends in the E.P.U.

(d) In these circumstances, it appeared that favourable action on the Belgium request might well open the door for similar applications from other countries, or other currency groups, for special treatment.

3. Although the United States Treasury Department was understood to be thinking along similar lines, it appeared likely that the United States Administration would ultimately accept Mr. Draper's recommendation that the Belgian application be supported. In the light of these prospects it was generally considered by the Canadian officials concerned that it would be inadvisable for us to "lead a crusade" against the Belgian application in the Fund. Given the fact that the European countries were already committed to support it and that any United States opposition was likely to crumble, we were inclined to adopt the following position:

(a) We would not go out of our way, in advance of the discussions in the Fund, to influence the other member countries nor would we attempt to inject our views into any interdepartmental controversy within the United States Administration. If, on the other hand, our views were sought by United States officials, we would indicate our position on the Belgian application.

(b) When the Belgian application was being discussed in the Fund we would state the reasons why we thought it should not be granted.

(c) If it appeared that the Belgian application was nevertheless likely to be approved (with the necessary United States support), we would not press our objections although we would have them recorded (possibly accompanied by a token negative vote if voting were called for).

(d) If, as seemed unlikely, the United States formally opposed the Belgian request we would probably join with them in rejecting it. In that case the Belgians and the OEEC Council would have to make another attempt to reach a mutually satisfactory settlement.

4. It subsequently transpired that the Belgian application had been submitted in a revised form. In the view of the Canadian officials concerned the revised Belgian application, which followed along the lines reported in paragraph 2 of your telegram No. 192 of June 18, appeared to be in closer harmony with the purposes and objectives of the Fund. Accordingly, the Canadian representative to the Fund was advised that it would be appropriate for him to go along with the Belgian request.

5. At the same time it was suggested, for his guidance, that he might, if it appeared desirable for him to make a statement at all, remind the Fund of the worries which Canadian representatives had expressed on various occasions concerning the possible tendency of regional arrangements to produce an unfortunate softening of the harder currencies covered by the arrangement. He might add, in this context, that Belgium appeared to have been managing its financial affairs efficiently with the result that the Belgian franc had emerged as one of the hardest currencies in Europe. It was, therefore, regrettable that Belgium was now behaving in some respects like a soft currency country and imposing restrictions not ostensibly required by her own balance of payments position. It was suggested that the Canadian representative might conclude his statement by expressing the hope that, as a result of the Fund's approval of the Belgian application, Belgium would make every effort to reverse this tendency.

6. I shall endeavour to obtain from the Canadian representative a brief report on the proceedings in the Fund and the conclusions which were reached in the discussion of the Belgian application.

BELGIAN ARRANGEMENTS WITH THE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND
Reference: My letter No. E.93 of July 22.

1. In my letter under reference I indicated that the Canadian representative on the International Monetary Fund who participated in the discussions relating to the Belgian application was being asked to supplement our report by providing a brief account of the proceedings in the Fund and the conclusions reached.

2. As you are aware, the revised Belgian application to the Fund differed substantially from the application as submitted in its original form. The essential points of difference were the following:

(a) The original proposal provided for a standby of $100 million whereas the final application was for $50 million;

(b) The period of standby in the final proposal was shortened from one year to six months;

(c) In the original proposal the Fund would have undertaken not to challenge the representation to be made by Belgium at the time of drawing that the drawing was in accordance with the provisions of the Fund Articles of Agreement, whereas under the final proposal such an undertaking was not given. In addition, the final decision provided for a standby charge of  $\frac{1}{4}$  of 1%.

3. When the Belgian proposal finally reached the Board, it was approved rapidly and without opposition. The United States Executive Director made it clear that he could agree the more readily as the drawing fell within the Belgian gold tranche. The Canadian representative made a statement along the lines indicated in paragraph 5 of my previous letter.

4. In the meantime you will have received copies of telegrams WA-1937,† WA-2011† and WA-2074† from Washington regarding the Fund consultations with Belgium on the subject of exchange restrictions. A summary of the consultations will shortly be prepared by the Canadian representative on the Fund for the information of your Mission.

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION ON COCOM

Following for Heeny, repeat to Macdonnell from Plumptre.

You told me before leaving that Bull<sup>14</sup> had spoken to you about the possibility that our NATO Mission might pick up the responsibility for Canadian representation on COCOM. Bull had explained his staff problems. The feeling was expressed that Guy Smith<sup>15</sup> (and perhaps myself) might take some responsibility in this matter. The question again came up as a result of recent visit to Ottawa of United States officials concerned with export controls who urged strengthening of our COCOM representation (on the assumption we would support U.S. policies).

2. I doubt that we need to have very strong representation on COCOM. Indeed it might be embarrassing. I sense a growing feeling here that the United States has been pressing too strongly the restriction of east-west trade. Further divisions between Canadian and American export policy might emerge in relation to Japanese exports to China. If we are going to differ from United States on these matters the place to make our views known would seem to be Washington rather than Paris. As far as administration on export controls goes we must, as you know, follow American practices pretty closely if we are to avoid controls at the Canada-US border.

3. My own feeling is that our representation and coverage in COCOM has been reasonably adequate for Canadian purposes. I do not find in Ottawa any strong desire for more detailed coverage.

4. Bull agrees that the question of Canadian representation on COCOM can best be settled by the Canadian Missions concerned in Paris and we would appreciate a recommendation. You may wish to keep in mind the fact that representation at COCOM apparently involves attendance at quite a large number of routine meetings concerned with highly detailed commodity questions. I would have thought that these meetings could best be covered by a Trade officer, but I doubt that a person as senior and as busy as Guy Smith is likely to be should give the necessary time, and I doubt that there is anyone else on our NATO Mission who would be competent or available to do the work. Gill<sup>16</sup> agrees with me that it would scarcely be appropriate to send an officer from this Department specially for the purpose.

Ottawa, August 27, 1952

During the week of July 26, meetings were held in Washington between representatives of Canada, France, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States to consider the most effective way of associating Japan with existing export control policies and procedures.

The United States favoured a separate Far Eastern Organization, but, in the face of the strongly held views of France and the United Kingdom, finally agreed that the most effective way would be for Japan to join the Paris Consultative Group on Export Controls.

In the report of these meetings which will be submitted to the Consultative Group, it will be recommended that Japan be invited to become a member of the Group and its Coordinating Committee. There will also be the additional recommendation that a separate working group be established to be called the "China Committee" that will be responsible for the development of the detailed aspects of export control policy in respect to China, as laid down by the Consultative Group.

These recommendations are in line with the instructions given to our representatives at the meetings, and are concurred in by Mr. Howe.

If you agree, I would propose that we advise our delegate to the Consultative Group that he may accept the report and its recommendations.

Ottawa, September 9, 1952

Dear Ed [Ritchie]:

It seems timely to make note of changes which have developed since May in our attitude towards COCOM. Since Wynne will be our representative at the meeting welcoming Japan into the Co-ordinating Group, he may need to be told of our present thinking. The situation is not now quite as described in despatch No. 789 of May 23rd<sup>17</sup> which he sent to the Permanent Representative to NATO.

All along the Americans have pressed strongly for other governments to contribute more towards finding a common policy in COCOM. Some officials in Washington hold the view that the U.S. alone is attempting to get effective controls established on Iron Curtain country trade. In the recent Five Power talks the Americans only accepted the compromise solution after other countries agreed to strengthen the working group in Paris.<sup>18</sup>

It is becoming a more urgent matter for us to solve various problems with the Americans. We are working out of a period of critical shortages in many materials. Canadian industry is, of course, more dependent on export trade than is American. Adopting U.S. policy holus bolus we find ourselves refusing licences for such items as antibiotics, plastics, and petro-chemicals, for instance, while traders in European countries take the business. Our export control is more far reaching than that of most European countries in its scrutiny of ultimate destination. It seems to be true also in comparison with the U.S. since American antibiotics are freely offered in bulk in markets with which we and the Americans are only licensing a limited volume of business. Both in commodity lists and in commercial practices the only logical solution is a common front for all COCOM countries.

There is not any wider divergence between Canadian and American export control policy than previously but resolving differences is becoming more important.

We are not seeking to air our differences in Paris. That is not the object. We still strive to arrive at a common understanding with the U.S. here. We are finding, however, the argument which carries the greatest weight with them is insistence on a common policy in the wider group. They very much want a common purpose with Canada in COCOM and we have it on the authority of Karl Anderson<sup>19</sup> that they might well modify their policies on some points to get it. What we want, therefore, may be obtained most easily by pressing for a universal front within the COCOM group and it changes our attitude towards our activities in COCOM.

The volume of papers coming out of COCOM committees is now sometimes as high as 200 pages a day. Many of these are working documents only and yet at present they are our main source of information on how thinking is developing. We are not giving adequate coverage to the committee work in Paris nor do we feel we can even concentrate on issues of considerable importance to us without additional staff for liaison work with these committees in Paris.

Bull has talked to Under-Secretary.

Dr. Karl Anderson, Deputy Director, International Trade Office, Department of Commerce of United States.

I personally agree with your viewpoint that COCOM should not be the concern of the NATO Mission. As you pointed out, fringe countries who will not join NATO co-operate with COCOM. With Japan added to the Group and with the formation of the China Trade Committee, there is an added reason along the same lines. The bulk of the business in the Co-ordinating Group as well as in the working parties concerns detail of commodities and trade practices and is primarily commercial work. The whole of it is very far removed from what I imagine to be the general pattern of activities of the Mission. This introduces a serious staff problem which we are studying.

Yours sincerely,

1. The consultative group met yesterday and today, the principal subjects under discussion being the formation of the China Committee and the question of secrecy.

2. After a formal welcome to the Japanese delegates, in which we participated as members of the Washington group, the meeting quickly got down to the problem of Far East trade and the formation of a China Committee. The matter was badly presented at the outset and many countries got the impression that there was an attempt to restrict membership at the expense of other nations which had valid interests.

3. Partly as a result of an intervention on our part, by which we proposed that the nucleus of the Committee should consist of member countries which undertook the responsibility of continual attendance (and not the privilege of membership) but that it would be open to all countries as a forum for their opinions with respect to their own special interests, it was decided — subject to a reservation by Germany — that the five proposing Powers which participated in the Washington talks should form the nucleus of the Committee. The Chairmanship, which had originally been proposed to Canada, will be left to the decision of the Committee.

4. The China Committee will in many ways, though not in words, be considered as a sub-committee of the Coordinating Committee (COCOM) its terms of reference being the following:

The China Committee will circulate its recommendations to all members of the Paris group. Decisions will be reached in one of the following ways:

(i) If no objection is received within a time limit (normally of 30 days) the recommendations will be regarded as decisions accepted by the whole group.

(ii) The governments which have participated in the discussion in the China Committee may agree that they themselves will, either at once or within a specified time, put into force the recommendations subject to their being put into force by certain other governments.

(iii) The governments which have participated in the discussion in the China Committee may agree that, either at once or within a specified time, they will themselves in any case put into force the recommendations.

5. Meetings of the China Committee are likely to start within the next fortnight.

6. On the question of secrecy, the matter was shelved by referring it back to COCOM for a preliminary assembly of press excerpts indicating the extent of previous official and unofficial revelations. COCOM will then present its views for later decision by the consultative group but may in the meantime take such measures as may be unanimously agreed upon. It is perhaps interesting to note that most countries insist upon the principle of secrecy, subject to reservations for the purpose of internal security, politics or propaganda.

EXPORT CONTROLS: CHINA COMMITTEE

Reference: Our telegram No. 1064 of December 3.†

A report on the meetings of the China Committee held this week is being sent to you in a separate despatch, together with a copy of an important United States policy statement.† The committee have also suggested that member countries should give their reply to the budget proposals, contained in our telegram No. 1064 by December 10 at the latest. In this telegram are discussed a number of special problems that have arisen as a result of the decision of the China Committee to begin its meetings immediately.

(a) Representation

2. During the past week the China Committee held four meetings, with a total duration of about eighteen hours. This appears roughly to be the anticipated weekly schedule of work. The committee will frequently meet at the same time as COCOM. At the present time COCOM is meeting every day from about 9:30 to 7.

3. As we have explained in previous despatches, our interest in the subject now under discussion by COCOM is limited and Stone,<sup>21</sup> our Assistant Commercial Secretary, our usual representative, has of course not attended on a full time basis. Stone for one month now has been alone in the Commercial Secretary's Office, and it would have been clearly impossible for him to devote his full time to COCOM. After the New Year, however, subjects will again be discussed by COCOM that are of essential interest to Canada.

4. The meetings of the China Committee have to date been attended by an officer from the Chancery. The heavy schedule of meetings has left Stone little time for his normal Embassy duties.

5. At the time of the five power meeting in Washington, when it was decided to create the China Committee, Canada participated with four other nations in a joint declaration in which we undertook to strengthen our representation at Paris. Every other delegation, including some of those who are not permanent members, have strengthened their delegations. At the present time the United States has fourteen officers on export control matters alone. The United Kingdom and Japan have four full time officers. Every other delegation has at least one full time representative for each of COCOM and the China Committee.

6. The problem of Canadian representation on COCOM has been the subject of a considerable exchange of correspondence between this Embassy and the Department over the past year. Our failure to produce continuous full time representation on this body has exposed us to severe criticism from other delegations here in Paris, and has led to the rumour that Canadian export control policy is dictated entirely by the United States.

7. The earlier decision to send Mundy to Paris to serve full time on export control matters seemed to answer our problem. However, the subsequent decision to send Mundy to NATO leaves us once more with the problem of finding representation for COCOM and the China Committee from existing Embassy resources including the Commercial Office which is for the moment under strength.

8. We have discussed this question with Smith, who will assume the direction of the Commercial Office at the beginning of the year, and with Stone. They feel, and we agree, that a representative from the Department of Trade and Commerce is best fitted to attend the meetings of both the committees concerned with export control. It is also our agreed view that as a minimum this work requires the full time services of a capable officer of at least intermediate rank (preferably with some experience in Canada in export control work), with the understanding that he would be able to draw when required for assistance on the Commercial Secretary's Office, provided the latter was at its full strength of three officers.

9. We understand from your letter No. B-1321 of November 27,† that the Department of Trade and Commerce have promised to send additional staff to the Commercial Office for this purpose. Stone has already written direct to Heasman emphasizing the urgency of the problem. The purpose of this telegram is to reinforce his observations and to emphasize to you that our interests and reputation may suffer unless an adequate solution can be found quickly.

(b) Security

10. As you are aware, our Commercial Office is not equipped with security safeguards in keeping with the high degree of secrecy which should surround the work on export controls. In these circumstances, if the Canadian Government decides to post a new officer for full time export control work, we recommend that he make his headquarters at the Chancery. In this way he would have immediate access to Embassy records and communications. On the other hand, if he were to work at the Commercial Office on Rue Scribe, the present arrangement, which is both inconvenient and incompatible with security regulations, would have to continue.

EXPORT CONTROLS: CHINA COMMITTEE

Reference: Our telegram No. 1064 of December 3, 1952.

While most of this week's meetings have been devoted to organizational and procedural questions, policy statements were delivered by the United States Delegation and by the Japanese Delegation.

...

4. At a meeting on December 15 other governments will be requested to make policy statements. I would be pleased to have your instructions as to whether you wish the Canadian Delegation to make such a statement. As a permanent member, I believe we should. If we choose to speak, our address might take the form either of a separate policy statement or it might comment on the approach and procedures suggested in the United States paper. Since we do not possess detailed information on Canadian policy towards Communist China, it would be helpful if you could cable us, before December 15, your suggestions and comments for such a statement.

EXPORT CONTROLS: CHINA COMMITTEE

Reference: Your telegram No. 1110 of December 19.

<sup>22</sup>Le ministre-conseiller à l'ambassade en France.
Minister-Counsellor, Embassy in France.

We believe that a statement along the following lines would accurately reflect Canadian views on trade with China and the functions of the China Committee:

2. The Canadian authorities welcome the establishment of the China Committee as an expression of the desire of the member governments to arrive at a common understanding through mutual agreement and multilateral consultation on the type of trade security controls that should be applicable to Communist China.

3. At the present time Canada prohibits the export to Communist China of all goods on the Munitions List, the International Lists and the China Supplementary List in accordance with the commitments accepted in COCOM. Canada also observes the embargo on the shipment of arms and strategic materials to China and North Korea approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations.

4. The Canadian authorities have supported the general attitude in COCOM that controls on trade with Communist China should be more stringent than those applied to Soviet bloc countries in Europe, but they are doubtful that more restrictive controls would serve a useful purpose and be effective.

5. They are prepared to cooperate with other members of COCOM in assisting them in maintaining their policy on commodity trade, and to that end would not allow a movement through Canada of exports to China which would not be permitted a direct export by the country of origin.

6. In Canada restrictions applied on direct trade with China are enforced equally on trade in transit through third countries. This applies to Canadian trade with Hong Kong and Macao and similar possible transit points. While an IC/DV<sup>23</sup> system would be valuable as a reassurance against the diversion of commodities in trade with Southeast Asia, unless such a system were relatively complete, it could only be of marginal benefit. The political difficulties of making it complete should be fully realized.

7. In considering controls for the Far East due regard must be given to all the implications of the imposition of too stringent controls in certain areas, particularly Macao and Hong Kong. These areas may well warrant special consideration and control action should be based on a full review of factual data.

8. In respect to the work of the China Committee, it is recognized that the Committee may consider it necessary to add items to the Supplementary List for embargo or quantitative control. The Canadian viewpoint is that these additions should be considered on their individual merits while taking into account that China would not be permitting the importation of most of these items as a foreign exchange conservation measure.

A system in which an importer must ensure final destination of goods before such goods will be exported.

9. That all members should agree on a common embargo list is to be desired, and the Committee should concern itself principally with those items which would lead to a curtailment of the war potential of the Communist countries in the Far East. This would appear to be the primary task of the Committee. Controls which are really practical and efficient, affecting commodities of genuine strategic significance, might be agreed upon at an early stage and from these common measures, the multilateral approach could be extended to consider common control for a wider range of items as the requirement becomes apparent.

BELGIAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

Reference: My telegram No. 193 of December 20th.

We have today received a note dated January 19th signed by Meurice, Minister of Foreign Commerce, in reply to our note of December 19th. Note states that Belgian delegate at "contracting parties" on October 22nd outlined the considerations which obliged the Belgians to take the step in question. "Belgian Government maintains the point of view expressed by its representative on that occasion." Note then continues that in view of settling Canadian Government's representations Meurice (group corrupt) asked his colleagues to re-examine the whole question of maintaining restrictions on imports from the dollar zone "in the light of the facts of the present situation and of the experience gained during recent months while the restrictive measures have been in force." Note concludes that they will inform us as soon as possible of the results of this re-examination. Text of note is being forwarded by next bag.

2. We are giving a copy of this Belgian note to the United States Embassy who have not yet had a reply but will give us a copy of their reply when received.

3. Belgian promise to re-examine the whole issue seems fairly promising. On the other hand Baron Snoy, former Secretary General, Foreign Ministry and one of Belgium's most influential Civil Servants on economic side mentioned to Arnold Smith last week that there was some possibility that Belgium might have to tighten up dollar restrictions as they were becoming concerned about dollar reserve prospect. This remark was made during the course of a dinner and unfortunately not, repeat not, elucidated.

DESPATCH E-151

Ottawa, March 29, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

BELGIAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

You will recall that the Belgian Government, in their reply to our diplomatic note of December 19, indicated that the existing restrictions on the import of goods from the dollar area would be fully reviewed in the light of the experience gained during the period in which these restrictions had been in force. Their reply also suggested that the results of this review would be communicated to us in due course.

2. We have been somewhat disturbed in the past few weeks by developments in the European Payments Union which would tend to confirm our earlier fears that the Union might be progressively compelled to abandon its objective of promoting multilateral trade and payments. In this connection you will have noted the recent communications from our Mission to the O.E.E.C., copies of which were referred to you, in regard to the proposals which the Managing Board is now putting before the members of the Union. As part of these proposals it is recommended that members harmonize their internal monetary policies and adopt some degree of uniformity in the control of imports from the dollar countries so as to make their currencies as nearly as possible equally hard and transferable. Our views on these proposals were embodied in telegram No. 24 of March 18<sup>24</sup> which instructed our O.E.E.C. Mission to submit them formally to the Council of the O.E.E.C. when the proposals of the E.P.U. Managing Board came up for consideration. A copy of this telegram was referred to you for information.

3. In the meantime, also, the Belgians have submitted to the O.E.E.C. an outline of the measures which they have been taking in an effort to reduce their chronic surplus position in the E.P.U. From the Belgian memorandum, which is embodied in document C(52)53 of March 6,† it would appear that the decline in the level of imports from the dollar area during the last four months of 1951 has been considerable, amounting in certain instances to over 50% of the monthly average volume of dollar imports in the first six months of the same year. The Belgian memorandum, moreover, goes on to state that still more rigid restrictions are under consideration with a view to diverting imports of an annual value of $50,000,000 from the dollar area to E.P.U. countries. These are developments which would tend to contradict the more optimistic note struck by M. Gérard, the Belgian Director General of Foreign Trade, in the conversation you reported in your despatch No. 64 of February 1.†

4. In the light of these trends we should like you to make a further approach to the Belgian authorities on this question. There would seem to be relatively little advantage in our presenting another note at this time, since we could do little more than reiterate the point of view put forward in our previous note and, orally, to the Contracting Parties to the G.A.T.T. However, you should recall to the Belgian authorities that they had promised to let us have, in due course, a substantive reply to the views we had put before them in our note and that we should be interested to learn what conclusions had been reached as a result of the full-scale review of the dollar import controls which had been undertaken. You should add that the Canadian Government had been disturbed to learn that an intensification of these controls was apparently now under consideration and that, in our view, such a move would seriously jeopardize the maintenance of the traditional commercial links between our two countries. If, in the course of your discussion, the Belgians relate their intensification of the existing dollar restrictions to their general position in the European Payments Union, you should be guided by the instructions contained in telegram No. 24 to our O.E.E.C. Mission.<sup>25</sup>

I agree. J.B.C. W[atkins] Eur[opean] Div[ision].

Addressed External No. 69, repeated (information) London No. 22 and OEEC Mission, Paris, No. 7 (London please pass to Paris).

1. Today spoke to Meurice, Minister of External Commerce (who is also temporarily Acting Minister of Foreign Affairs) in the sense of your instructions.

2. In reply, the Minister said the views I had just expressed were precisely those he himself held. But several conflicting pressures were being exerted which he could only confront as best he could. Belgium's traditional policy was, of course, free trade and freedom from controls. This was still the policy supported by the Ministry of External Commerce.

3. But, he added, it had to be borne in mind that the development of a huge EPU surplus and the internal difficulty of financing (necessary?) advances had transferred primary responsibility in the matter to Finance Ministry.

4. Again at OEEC, Belgium was being enjoined in no, repeat no, uncertain manner to increase her imports from member countries and to restrict her imports from dollar zones. Such an injunction had greatly strengthened the hand of the Finance Ministry in demanding controls.

5. Another factor was the National Bank which was pretty nearly an autonomous body. In his view the bank was excessive (group corrupt) but its power was such that, if it should issue a communique to the effect that the government's trade policy threatened the strength of the currency, no, repeat no, government could remain in power.

6. The influence of these two powerful agencies, i.e., the bank and the Finance Ministry, was being directed towards the maintenance of a solid currency to the exclusion of almost everything else and the Minister gave Smith and myself clearly enough to understand they, and not, repeat not, he, had gained the decision.

7. Nevertheless, he continued, the serious view taken by the Canadian Government would give him opportunity to raise the question once more before the Ministerial Committee for Economic Coordination both from legal or contractual aspects and as well as from substantive economic and financial points of view.

8. He promised to inform me as to what the result might be. He also asked if his technicians might consult with us while preparing their briefs, to which course I readily agreed.

DOLLAR IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

As you are aware, International Monetary Fund has now concluded consultations on exchange restrictions with Belgium. Fund reached conclusion that relaxation of exchange restrictions was feasible in existing circumstances and requested Belgium to review necessity for present level of restrictions affecting dollar imports.

Fund conclusion is likely to have important bearing on consideration of Belgian dollar import restrictions in GATT during forthcoming session of Contracting Parties. It will, in any case, be difficult for Belgians to continue to maintain that import restrictions are to be regarded as necessary solely to give effect to exchange restrictions applied in conformity with Fund Articles of Agreement.

We are at present engaged in preparation of material for guidance of our GATT Delegation. In this connection it would be most helpful if you could ascertain, on purely personal and informal basis, what action Belgian authorities are likely to take in light of Fund conclusions.

1. Today informally spoke to Gerard, Director General, Department of External Commerce, who said that as OEEC had both counselled and recommended Belgium to impose dollar import restrictions, which counsel had subsequently been confirmed by William Draper (and, while this may or may not be strictly accurate, Homer Fox, United States Economic Counsel here, believes them to be absolutely sincere in this contention), their next step was officially to invite this body's attention to adverse United States (Southard) conclusion recently approved by Board of International Monetary Fund and to seek OEEC's further advice in view of this apparent conflict of opinion between responsible and important United States authorities.<sup>26</sup> In Gerard's view, this conflict of opinion was as yet by no means resolved.

2. In view of forthcoming session of GATT Contracting Parties they judged this reference to OEEC to be a matter of urgency and his understanding was that it would be made in course of next few days.

3. He also understood generally question of discrimination, as opposed in particular to Belgian question, was likely to be discussed at International Monetary Fund meetings soon to be convened in Mexico and it was of course possible that whatever conclusion would there be reached, if any, might influence OEEC in contribution they were expected to give Belgium.

4. As a consequence of all this, the attitude of Belgian delegation to GATT could not, repeat not, be foretold, for everything obviously depended on OEEC reaction in Paris and action to be taken in Mexico.

5. It may possibly be of interest to report that Gerard also said Belgium had drawn up a dollar export bonus scheme but that its implementation had been held up pending results of Paris and Mexico meetings.

P.S. Reference Washington telegram WA-2133 of August 27th.† Gerard made no, repeat no, mention of possible relaxation of restrictions.

BELGIAN DOLLAR IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

We understand that our OEEC Delegation suggested that you might wish, at an appropriate opportunity, to give support to view that closer "co-operation" between Fund and EPU would be useful. This view is evidently strongly held by Marjolin and, as you are aware, was also put forward by EPU Managing Board in its recently published Second Annual Report.

2. While we do not know precisely what type of "co-operation" between the two organizations Marjolin has in mind, we are not particularly happy about context in which EPU Managing Board proposal appears. Moreover, in view of ambiguity of terms "co-operation" and "collaboration" and possible tendency to misinterpret any statement we might make on this issue, we feel that, if statement is to be made at all, it should be in specific language and avoid use of these ambiguous terms.

3. We assume our OEEC Delegation was thinking primarily in terms of a statement which would give expression to our hope that Fund objectives are kept in mind in formulation of EPU policy and that, in specific case like that of Belgian restrictions, conclusions reached and recommendations put forward in Fund are given careful consideration by EPU with a view to appropriate remedial action. If carefully circumscribed statement along lines suggested in preceding sentence would strengthen the position of our OEEC Delegation, in the event that the Belgians are unwilling to undertake relaxation of current restrictions without prior reference to OEEC, there would probably be no objection to your making it in a suitable context.

Following comments by Perry<sup>29</sup> are designed to supplement views previously communicated to GATT Delegation by Deutsch and Rasminsky, Begins:

2. The explanatory remarks submitted by the Fund's managing director to the contracting parties were intended to clarify the decision taken by the executive directors in the Belgian case.

3. In concluding the 1952 consultation under Article XIV with Belgium, the Executive Board declared in effect that, in its considered judgement, a relaxation of restrictions is feasible for Belgium. The Belgian executive director sought and secured from the Executive Board the further explanation, however, that in stating this judgement the Fund was not, repeat not, invoking the exceptional circumstances clause of Article XIV, Section 4.

4. The exceptional circumstances procedure has never been invoked by the Fund and presumably would only be employed in those extreme situations where all other reasonable efforts had failed. Once started, the exceptional circumstances procedure might conceivably terminate in a fund action either:

- (i) Making the affected country ineligible to use the resources of the Fund; or
- (ii) Bringing about the eventual withdrawal of that country from Fund membership.

5. The Board decision, however, made it clear that in the view of the Fund the Belgian Government could relax some of the transitional restrictive measures presently being maintained under Article XIV of the Fund agreement. The explanatory remarks submitted by the managing director should not be interpreted as a qualification of the substantive decision taken by the Executive Board. Ends.

DESPATCH E-489

Ottawa, December 3, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

BELGIAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

Reference: Telegram No. 130 of November 3, from GATT Delegation.

You will recall that the Belgian delegation to the Seventh Session of GATT gave to the Contracting Parties an undertaking that the Belgian government would shortly take preliminary measures towards relaxing its dollar import restrictions. Our delegation expressed satisfaction with this proposal and stated that we welcomed the Belgian initiative as a first step towards the elimination of their restrictions.

2. Specifically, the Belgian government proposed to introduce the following relaxations within two or three months:

“First, to increase significantly the list of goods on its free list; second, to unify the two lists which provide respectively for prior approval and complete prohibition in principle, so that licences for all products not on the free list will be examined on their merits; third, to pursue a more liberal policy with respect to the imports of these products.”

3. We have been considering the list of commodities affected by the dollar restrictions to determine which commodities of interest to us would be most likely to benefit by the removal of the restrictions. In doing so, we have confined ourselves for tactical reasons to a small number of goods and we have decided on the following four commodities:

Belgian Tariff Item No.

71	barley
72	oats
ex 121	canned lobster
835 a 2	harvesting machines

4. The restrictions on barley and oats apply to imports from all countries. However, as they were instituted only in January, 1952, and as Canada is by far the leading supplier of these products to Belgium, we feel that we have a strong case for asking for their removal. As regards canned lobster and harvesting machines, Belgian statistics credit Canada with being the largest dollar supplier.

5. I should be grateful therefore if you would now make representations to the Belgian authorities requesting the removal of import restrictions on the above four commodities under the import policy announced at Geneva. In doing so you should take note of the fact that the relaxations which the Belgian representative promised to institute were described by him as a first step in a return to a regime of freedom from quantitative import restrictions. It should be understood therefore that we are merely suggesting four items for inclusion in the forthcoming list which the Belgium government has promised will be a significant addition to the goods on the free list. You should indicate that the Canadian government will also continue to look forward to the removal of additional items as quickly as possible until all of Belgium's discriminatory measures against dollar goods have been abolished.

6. Finally, you should express our understanding that, as a result of the declared Belgian policy of freedom from import restrictions, Belgium will not introduce any new discriminatory import restrictions which would have a harmful effect on dollar trade. In this connection we have in mind the Belgian intention to place an embargo on the import of assembled automobiles at the beginning of 1954. However, you should not make any reference to this specific case. We feel that, as the United Kingdom and the United States have a much larger stake in the Belgian automobile market, we should let them make the representations on this problem and reserve our own bargaining power for commodities in which the United States does not have so great an interest. Moreover, it would probably be unwise as a matter of tactics to associate the automobile matter, which lies in the future, with the question of the relaxation of existing restrictions.

Addressed Ottawa No. 198, repeated Canac Paris No. 9 (London please pass).

1. This morning I saw Meurice, Minister for External Trade, and made representations as instructed in your letter under reference, also leaving note, copy of which I am transmitting by bag.†

2. Meurice said that he welcomed our representations which he described as particularly timely since his department are at present engaged in efforts to enlarge a very limited proposal for additions to the free list which has been delivered to Interdepartmental Committee by Ministry of Economic Affairs. The Minister, Meurice indicated, is trying to keep to a minimum practicable concessions in implementation of policy promised at Geneva, whereas he and his Department favour "maximum practicable liberalization." Meurice said he was determined to carry to Cabinet Committee his Department's differences of opinion with Economic Affairs Ministry; but he suggested it would strengthen his hand if we also made representation direct with latter Ministry. I am therefore arranging to have my counsellor call on Baron Snoy, Secretary General of Ministry of Economic Affairs, for this purpose.

3. Meurice again referred to embarrassment caused him by the fact that the United States representative at OEEC encouraged dollar import restrictions and suggested Belgian Finance and Economic Affairs Ministries tended not, repeat not, to distinguish adequately between Canadian and United States positions and had impression "(both?) associate members of OEEC" at least "went along" with dollar restriction policy. We assured Meurice that Canadian delegation in Paris had never supported such a policy and had consistently indicated Canadian Government's opposition to it.

4. Meurice seems to suggest his Government might be prepared to adopt proportionately more liberal attitude to imports from Canada than from the United States. He promised to study very carefully and sympathetically the particular items whose inclusion on free list we requested and to do all he could with his colleagues.

5. Meurice was most cordial as always. Unfortunately he is not, repeat not, one of the strongest members of the Cabinet. In view of his portfolio, official representation must be addressed to him, but I hope also to have a word informally with one or two other relevant ministers during the next week or so.

BELGIAN IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

Reference: My telegram No. 198 of 23rd December, 1952.

You will recall that when I saw M. Meurice, Minister of External Commerce, on 23rd December, he suggested that representations might also usefully be made informally to officials of the Ministry of Economic Affairs. Baron Snoy, Secretary-General of that Ministry, had been out of town for the past week, but Mr. Arnold Smith of my staff called on him this morning. After outlining briefly the Canadian attitude to Belgium's quantitative dollar restrictions, and referring to the undertaking given by the Belgian Delegation at Geneva, Mr. Smith told Baron Snoy of the representations which I had made last week to M. Meurice and left with him a copy of the note which I had given him on that occasion.

2. Mr. Smith naturally stressed the Canadian Government's hope that barley, oats, canned lobster and harvesting machines would be included in the new additions to the free list which are expected to be announced shortly, pointing out Canada's particular interest in the trade in these items. Following the suggestion of M. Meurice, reported in my telegram under reference, he expressed the hope that in the promised significant relaxation of dollar restrictions there would be evidence that the dollar zone was not merely considered globally, and that Canada's particular position and interests would be taken into careful consideration. We were of course conscious that our trade balance with Belgium was very much in our favour, but the expansive method of working towards a more balanced trade was infinitely preferable to the restrictive method, and in this regard we did all we could to assist Belgian imports into Canada. In this connection the recent Order-in-Council exempting Belgian sheet glass from the dumping duty, that would otherwise have had to be applied under Canadian law (your dispatch E.502 of 11th December, 1952 refers),† was mentioned, as was the Trade Fair next spring and our hope that Belgian participation in it this year would be an active and successful one.

3. The psychological and political importance of having an early and really significant extension of the free list was also mentioned. Maintenance of the goal of multilateralism, and real progress toward achieving it, was in the Canadian view of importance to the long-term political as well as economic well-being of the Atlantic Community. Restrictions tended to encourage uneconomic industries and to rigidify the division of the western world into distinct blocs.

4. Baron Snoy promised to study the four items concerned "very sympathetically". He said that he hoped it would not be too difficult to deal liberally with these items, since all of them, except canned lobster, were essential to the Belgian economy. Snoy remarked, however, that the fact that an item was not on the free list did not necessarily mean that it would be restricted, as permits might well be issued quite freely. Some items were included in List B merely because the Belgian authorities felt that they had to keep an eye on the trade in question, perhaps to control re-exports, e.g. of strategic materials. Mr. Smith admitted that for some commodities permits have been issued fairly freely, but nevertheless stressed the importance we attached to including these four items on the free list itself, thus avoiding the uncertainty which inevitably affected trade in items included in List B.

5. On the more general question of multilateralism Baron Snoy said that he had always shared our view, but that during the past couple of years he had begun to grow very sceptical about the feasibility of any real and permanent solution to the dollar problem. Belgium was inevitably part of the European community and could not dissociate herself too much from the general Western European pattern. Only action by the United States, to increase imports or to provide financial assistance in one way or another, could enable Europe and the Sterling area to progress toward real multilateralism and eventual convertibility.

6. In this connection Snoy said that he was not too clear how successful the recent Prime Ministers' Economic Conference in London would prove to be — it all depended, according to what he had heard from his friend in London, on the policies to be adopted by the new American administration. Snoy felt that the first statements which he had seen by the Secretary of Commerce-designate were not such as to make him very optimistic. Mr. Smith said that our understanding was that the Canadian Delegation to the Economic Conference in London were reasonably satisfied that significant progress had at last been made, though admittedly concrete results remained to be seen. Meanwhile, with a sounder approach being undertaken in London, it would be very unfortunate if the Belgian authorities should seem to be losing faith in the possibility of achieving the multilateral goals to which we had all subscribed.

7. While he naturally made no firm commitments, Snoy undertook to do what he could to meet our request. He was I think sincere in this. But it seems clear that despite the Belgian Government attitude expressed at the GATT Session in Geneva (which M. Meurice had told us was the product of very energetic discussions between his Department and Economic Affairs, and of a furious interchange of telegrams between the Delegation and Brussels), Baron Snoy himself is by no means convinced of the desirability (or practicability as he put it) of a full Belgian return to non-discrimination.

8. Regarding timing, Snoy said that it was hoped that the inter-departmental committee concerned would have a tentative program for addition to the free list prepared by mid-January or shortly thereafter. This would then have to be discussed with the Dutch under Benelux arrangements, and Suetens would then announce it in Geneva, sometime in February. We shall of course endeavour to get advance information on the Belgian decisions. Maurice Pope.

DESPATCH 279

Paris, February 25, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

EMIGRATION TO CANADA FROM FRANCE

Reference: Our Despatch No. 1565 of October 30, 1951.

In our despatch under reference we said that the French authorities would reflect further on their feelings of dissatisfaction with Canadian immigration policy and would in due course approach the Embassy. This approach has now been made. On February 13 Mr. Fournier,<sup>32</sup> First Secretary, was asked to call at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and was handed a Note Verbale. Copies of this are enclosed together with a memorandum by Mr. Fournier recording his conversation with M. Serres, Directeur des Affaires Administratives et Sociales.†

2. The note, which is rather petulant and contains a number of inaccuracies, calls for a considered reply. On the whole I think we have managed fairly successfully over the last year and a half, since Canadian immigration regulations were broadened, to conduct an immigration policy in France with the at least tacit approval of the French authorities when that policy is distinctly unpopular in a number of French circles and is capable of giving rise to political repercussions. The drain on a particular automobile factory or aircraft plant or mining area can cause dislocations which are of serious concern to the management and to government departments. This reflects itself in political pressures on the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (sometimes on the Embassy directly) and in addition there are explosive political issues in the whole question of "desertion" from France to a safer, wealthier and happier country.

3. You are well aware of these considerations as is the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. There has been a realistic understanding of the delicacy of the situation in France and all concerned on the Canadian side have worked together to keep our immigration policy sufficiently under wraps to avoid antagonizing the French too much, while at the same time bringing a very creditable number of French emigrants to Canada. Obviously if we were to antagonize the French authorities they would find ways of making life difficult for the Paris immigration office.

4. We now have to concoct a reply to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs which will endeavour to set things on the rails again and allow us to continue our immigration operations as in the past. I have discussed the question fully with Mr. Cormier,<sup>33</sup> head of the Immigration Office in Paris, and it seemed to us that you might find it helpful in considering this question with the Department of Citizenship and Immigration if we were to prepare a draft reply to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. I accordingly enclose copies of a rather rough draft embodying the points which might be made.†

5. The draft reply may be summarized by saying that it refutes misstatements, renews our promises not to carry on a recruiting campaign and indicates more clearly than ever before our willingness to avoid embarrassing particular plants or industries. Mr. Cormier has done this on a number of occasions by deferring or postponing action on visa applications. Sometimes it is a temporary affair when new workers will be trained in a matter of six or nine months. Sometimes it is a more long-range question as with Italian workers brought to France, whom the French Government are anxious to keep here and whose applications Mr. Cormier is leaving aside more or less indefinitely. In our final sentence we say that it is always open to the French authorities to apply their own controls to emigration. After all we cannot undertake to do the French Government's policing for them. If they wish to deny an individual the right to emigrate they can do it easily enough in one way or another (e.g. by refusal of the passport). You may have other thoughts about this, but it seems to us desirable just to remind the French gently that they cannot shift their responsibility in this matter to our shoulders. If they ever reach the point of deciding that certain categories of persons should not move to Canada, it is for them and not for us to make the regulations. If a time were to come when, to pick a random example, radar or aircraft technicians could not emigrate to Canada, we ought to be in a position to say publicly that this resulted from a decision of the French Government which we would obviously respect.

6. Your comments on this question in due course will be appreciated. In view of the importance of the question you might prefer to prepare in Ottawa a French version of whatever reply is to be sent in order to be certain that the shadings and nuances are what you have in mind.

7. There is also the point that while in our draft we have used the term "Canadian authorities" throughout, you may feel the matter sufficiently important to justify the use of the stronger term "Canadian Government." Our suggestion is that when a reply is ready it should be taken to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and discussed with them by an External Affairs representative and Mr. Cormier. This will give an opportunity to elaborate verbally on the contents of our note and explain orally any points which you might wish us to make but are better omitted from a written communication.

EMIGRATION TO CANADA FROM FRANCE

Reference: Your despatch No. 279 of February 25, 1952.

I attach a Note Verbale (in English and French<sup>34</sup>) which has been prepared in consultation with the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and which attempts to reply to the points raised by the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs in their Note Verbale of February 13, 1952, on the subject of French emigration to Canada.<sup>34</sup>

2. As you will notice, I have used a substantial part of your draft Note Verbale, adding a few considerations however to make it perhaps more acceptable to the French authorities. I have avoided, for instance, any reference (as suggested in the last sentence of your draft Note) to the possibility of the French authorities applying "their own controls to emigration." This would appear to me to force the issue and to invite precisely the action which we are at pains to avoid.

3. I realize the difficult conditions under which the Visa Office has been operating in France, but, as you state, our immigration programme in France has been quite successful in the last year and a half and has resulted in the admission of considerably more immigrants than was expected. We should therefore avoid giving the impression that we are losing patience at a time when the French authorities are apparently giving signs of impatience over the much-publicized emigration movement out of the country to Canada or, as you suggest, are under severe pressure to put an end to the movement of "desertion" from France.

4. It is by no means certain that the present Note will bring a change of heart on the part of the French authorities who may already have made up their minds on some drastic measures to stop or at least cut down the flow of emigration to Canada. In this event, any representation we make might well encounter deaf ears and evoke no response. I think, however that it is worthwhile to make a further attempt to clear the atmosphere.

5. I agree with your suggestion that our Note Verbale should be discussed on presentation with officials of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. I leave it to you to decide who should attend the meeting, but at least a senior officer of the Embassy and the Officer-in-Charge of the Visa Office should, I think, be present. I believe that the enclosed version of the Note Verbale should cover all the points we want to make and could serve as an adequate basis for further verbal explanations, if necessary.

EMIGRATION TO CANADA FROM FRANCE

Reference: Your despatch No. C.493 of April 25, 1952.

A meeting was arranged at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on May 16 at which the note verbale which accompanied your despatch was presented. On the French side the chief participant was M. Serres, Head of the Division of "Affaires Administratives et Sociales" (which deals with immigration questions and which drafted the French note verbale) who had with him several officials from his division and an official from the American Division who has just taken over the Canadian and United States desk. On the Canadian side I accompanied Mr. Cormier, the officer in charge of the Visa Office. I was still Chargé d'Affaires a.i. at the time so that the note was presented by the most senior person available.

2. I asked Mr. Cormier to read the "Note Verbale" to the assembled French officials and after that to give an informal account of the procedure actually being followed by his office in dealing with applications for visas from French citizens and aliens.

3. M. Serres then rehearsed, without undue emphasis, all the familiar French reservations about emigration from France to Canada. However he said that he had been very interested in Mr. Cormier's account of the policy followed by the Visa Office, which met most of the French difficulties. He drew attention, however, to one point which Mr. Cormier had not covered and that was the suggestion which the French have put forward on a number of occasions that it would be preferable to ensure that no Frenchman sets out for Canada without a firm "contrat de travail" in his pocket. Mr. Cormier and I repeated what has been said to the French on previous occasions, that there was no likelihood of the Canadian authorities being willing to accept this suggestion. M. Serres gave the impression that he did not intend to pursue the matter, though of course it may be raised again at some time in the future. The remaining point which he felt should be explored further was the position of skilled labour in key industries. As you know the French have been worried about drains on their skilled manpower, particularly in those industries which can be regarded as essential to national defence. Here M. Serres said that he believed we could find a solution if we approached the problem "empiriquement et pratiquement," which is another way of stating our own offer to cooperate with the French authorities by way of appropriate administrative action.

4. It was agreed at the end of the meeting that the following steps would be taken:

(a) Mr. Cormier will write to M. Serres outlining the present practice of his office in dealing with visa applications. This is simply to confirm the oral statement which he made at the meeting and has now been done;

(b) The Ministry of Foreign Affairs will circulate this statement to interested Government Departments;

(c) In due course there will be a meeting of technical experts with Mr. Cormier to consider what measures of administrative cooperation might be feasible.

5. I think that the meeting was helpful in that it showed the French authorities once again our willingness to meet their views as far as possible without losing sight of our primary objective of attracting immigrants from France. M. Serres remarked at one point, with reference to the language of the two notes verbales, that we could now put aside polemics and get down to the business of seeing what practical problems remained and how they could be solved. This is certainly acceptable to us, since we have no desire to become engaged in controversy and it was the French who introduced into the correspondence any overtones that might be termed polemical. I do not anticipate that the steps outlined in the preceding paragraph will be completed with any great rapidity.

THE UNIFICATION OF GERMANY

Reference: Para. 8(a) of your despatch No. 162 of January 21.†

It is often said that the unification of Germany is the one desire common to all Germans. In a sense this is true but the bare statement raises a number of questions. For example, what sort of reunified Germany do the Germans want — a communist, a socialist, a capitalist or a neo-Nazi one? Does unification include the return of the Saar and the territories east of the Oder-Neisse Line now in Polish hands? Do the Germans want unification if it means the withdrawal of all occupation forces leaving a neutral Germany unarmed and vulnerable?

2. These questions are intended not to suggest that Canada is either for or against the unification of Germany but merely to show that the phrase needs definition. The possible results of unifying Germany in present circumstances must be clearly seen before we declare ourselves for such action.

3. Having said this, we can go on to state that in principle Canada favours eventual German unification on a right basis but believes that it is not practical politics to urge it now. The Minister for External Affairs, speaking in the House of Commons on October 22, 1951, gave clear expression to the Canadian Government's point of view when he said:

"Unity, based on free self-government, must one day come to Germany, and, if it is on the right basis the sooner the better; but it must not come in such a way that a united Germany will be forced to go the way of a united Poland and Czechoslovakia and become a united Russian satellite..."

4. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the integration of Germany, even if it is only of a truncated country, in the family of free nations, should precede unification. Although a more limited objective than unification, integration with the West is a more realistic and more easily attainable one. To achieve it

Canada is supporting, at least by implication since we are not immediately concerned, the following Allied policies:

(a) The satisfactory conclusion of the contractual agreements between the United States, the United Kingdom and France on the one hand and the West German Federal Republic on the other;

(b) The participation of Germany in the European Defence Community, which will involve the association of Germany with the purposes of NATO;

(c) The resumption of full normal relations between Germany and the other western countries.

5. We also agree with the view held by the Allies that their position in Berlin must be retained. We have indeed kept a Military Mission there to show our support and to hearten the West Berliners. When the unification of Germany becomes possible, Berlin may once again be a capital of a united Germany and it is important that the West remain there against that day.

6. While we are moving towards the integration of the Federal Republic with the West, we must make it clear in all our dealings with Germany that we have no intention of sacrificing German interests in order to come to terms with the Soviet Union. In this connection it would be well to keep in mind the efforts made at the recent General Assembly of the United Nations by various nations, including Canada, to facilitate all-German elections. The point to emphasize here is that the Government of the East Zone, acting almost certainly on Soviet orders, has refused to allow the United Nations Commission to conduct its investigation in their part of Germany.

7. Care should always be taken not to lose sight of the eventual peace treaty with Germany. It should be emphasized that Soviet intransigence is the real stumbling-block to the conclusion of such a treaty. It is the hope of Germany's former enemies in the West that a peace treaty would settle such outstanding matters as Germany's frontiers, the problem of Berlin, and, of course, the unification of the country. Some idea of the difficulties to be overcome can be gathered from a review of the difficulties encountered by the Allies in their efforts to achieve a peace settlement in Austria which has but one government whereas Germany has two.

8. Canada has not been one of the powers occupying Germany and has, therefore, not been a direct participant in the negotiations concerning the replacement of the Occupation Statute by a series of contractual agreements. We are, nevertheless, concerned in such matters as the stationing, payment and legal status of Allied troops in Germany, and the treatment of war criminals. As a member of NATO Canada has an interest in the negotiations for the establishment of a European Defence Community which will include Germany, and particularly in the relationship between the projected defence community and NATO. As one of the Allies in the last war it would of course expect to take part in the eventual peace settlement. Until that time Canada shares the desires and supports the efforts of the Occupying Powers to restore as much sovereignty to West Germany as is compatible with the realities of the international situation. Canada believes that a united Europe is only possible through Franco-German rapprochement and that the inclusion of Western Germany in the Schuman Plan, the European Defence Community and any other projects which may further the integration of Europe can succeed only if they are firmly founded on this rapprochement.

TRADING RELATIONS BETWEEN CANADA AND GERMANY<sup>35</sup>

Mr. Goldschlag of this Division attended a meeting convened by the Department of Trade and Commerce yesterday afternoon for the purpose of giving an opportunity to Prof. Ludwig Erhard, the West German Minister of Economic Affairs, to discuss specific aspects of Canadian-German economic relations with the officials primarily concerned. As you are aware, Prof. Erhard had previously conferred with Mr. Howe on some of the broader economic issues affecting the Federal Republic's commercial relations with Canada.

2. Prof. Erhard opened the discussion by saying that his Government was impressed by the great economic future which lay in store for Canada and would wish to collaborate in the development of Canadian resources. He had come primarily to explore the possibilities of expanding the volume of trade between the two countries. Inasmuch as his Government followed a liberal trading policy similar to that of the Canadian Government, his visit was not, he stressed, intended to lead to the negotiation of any bilateral arrangement but to assess Canadian export availabilities and to discuss ways and means in which German exporters could capture a larger share of the Canadian market. Although Germany was now a net creditor in the European Payments Union, she was still confronted and would for some foreseeable time continue to be confronted by a dollar shortage which made it necessary for her to increase her sales to the dollar area. Germany's particular interest in Canada has been reflected in the degree of German participation in the International Trade Fair which, the Minister added, had been a pronounced success insofar as his country was concerned.

Noted with great interest. W[ilgress]

3. In reply Mr. Sharp of the Department of Trade and Commerce assured Prof. Erhard that the Canadian Government would be pleased to see an increase in our trade with Germany. No obstacle was being placed in the way of German exports to this country and, while the Government could not direct Canadian importers in their purchases, it would do its best to encourage the efforts of German exporters to enter the Canadian market. Mr. Sharp then asked the Minister to raise any specific issues he had in mind. The ensuing discussion is summarized in the following paragraphs.

Pork

4. Domestic prices for pork were increasing in Germany and the German Government would be interested in importing substantial quantities, in forms other than canned, during the next three to four months. Although he was not in a position to enter into definite commitments, Prof. Erhard thought that German purchases would amount to something in the neighbourhood of $5,000,000, if the price were satisfactory. There was a strong possibility that Germany could become a permanent market for Canadian pork.

5. Prof. Erhard was told that the current Canadian surplus amounted to some 40 to 50 million pounds. The price for frozen carcasses would be roughly 30 to 32 cents per pound f.o.b. Montreal. On this basis, Germany might purchase approximately 15 million pounds. The Department of Agriculture would look into the price question in more detail and it was agreed that a memorandum outlining the Canadian position would be provided to Prof. Erhard by the Canadian Commercial Secretary as soon as possible after his return to Bonn.

Metals

6. Germany is interested in increasing her purchases of nickel, iron ore, copper and, to a lesser extent, aluminum in respect of which the supply situation was softening. Any increase in German purchases would, of course, have to depend on Canadian export availabilities.

7. Officials of the Departments of Trade and Commerce and Defence Production suggested that, while there were certainly export surpluses of these commodities, there were also export commitments. As Prof. Erhard was aware, the Canadian Government did not direct sales of raw materials. On the other hand, the impact of defence production on the availability of the raw materials the Germans had in mind was lessening and we could hold out definite hope for easier availability in the future.

8. Prof. Erhard added that the amounts of these raw materials which Germany could purchase were difficult to forecast at this stage and depended, to some extent, on German sales of machinery, machine tools and precision instruments to Canada. He thought, and the Canadian officials concerned agreed, that it might be desirable for a group of German industrialists to come to Canada and assess the potentialities of the Canadian market, with particular reference to the type of products normally imported by Canada from the United States.

Lumber

9. There was a definite and permanent interest in Canadian lumber in Germany. While Prof. Erhard was not in a position to give any figures of approximate import requirements, it was agreed that this question would be pursued by the Department of Trade and Commerce through their Commercial Secretary in Bonn.

Trade Fair

10. Germany had been pleased by the results of German participation in the 1952 Fair, and the Government had already decided that Germany would be represented again in 1953, probably on a more extensive scale.

Export Bonuses

11. In reply to a question, Prof. Erhard said that German exporters were permitted to retain part of their earnings from sales to the hard-currency countries. On the other hand, the German Government had conceded the "right of retention" to exporters only reluctantly and in self-defence against countries where this system had been introduced. The German Government shared the feeling of the International Monetary Fund that the export bonus system should be eliminated and would be prepared to do so as soon as other countries agreed to do likewise.

East-West Trade

12. Prof. Erhard suggested that the potentialities of German trade with Eastern Europe had been somewhat over-estimated. Even in normal pre-war times this trade had never accounted for more than 15% of Germany's total trade. Accordingly, while it could not be denied that the resumption of trade with the East would help, the present Western orientation of German trade was bound to be a permanent feature.

German Assets in Canada

13. A prolonged discussion developed on the question as to whether or not Germany could enter into bilateral discussions with Canada on this subject. Subject to clarification of the legal implications of the provisions of the Paris Agreements and the contractual arrangements which are shortly to be ratified, the Germans would like to discuss this matter with the Canadian Government. This would not necessarily mean "negotiation", and it would cover not only German assets but also the question of German trade marks and patents.

GERMAN INDUSTRIES TRADE FAIR,
BERLIN, SEPTEMBER 19-OCTOBER 5, 1952

On May 21, 1952, the Ambassador of the Federal Republic of Germany addressed an invitation to Canada to participate in the above-mentioned Fair. The invitation stated that "in view of the fact that Berlin may be considered as the show-window of the free world behind the Iron Curtain, the German Government would highly appreciate it if the Government of Canada would consider favourably such a participation."

In transmitting it to the Department of Trade and Commerce for consideration, we directed their attention to this statement, adding

"... You will recall in this connection that the Tripartite Declaration of May 27 on Germany and the European Defence Community refers to Berlin in the words: 'The security and welfare of Berlin and the maintenance of the position of the three Powers there are regarded by the three Powers as essential elements of the position of the free world in the present international situation.' Canada's maintenance of a military mission in Berlin is evidence of Canadian willingness to help maintain the Allied position there. Participation in the German Industries' Fair would therefore, in our opinion, be a logical consequence of this policy."

Confidential despatch No. 477, of June 7,+ from Bonn (flagged for your information) confirms this opinion.

Although the Canadian Government Exhibition Commission were at first doubtful whether they could arrange anything worth while for the Fair, both because of their limited financial resources and of their previous commitments in overseas exhibitions, they have since agreed, in the light of Mr. Davis'<sup>36</sup> despatch, to reconsider the matter, as will be seen from the attached telegram+ which they have now requested us to send to our Ambassador in Bonn.<sup>37</sup> Would you please initial it if you approve?

I think that Canada should have an exhibit at this Fair to help make the Western shop-window as attractive as possible. Both European and Economic Divisions concur in this. By showing our interest in the welfare of a strategically located city whose communications, commercial and other, are continuously threatened by Soviet interference tactics, we would certainly help strengthen the morale of the citizens in their struggle to remain free and independent. Moreover, we would at the same time be reciprocating the Western German contribution to the Canadian International Trade Fair. You may, therefore, think it advisable to approach the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce in order that a definite and favourable decision may be taken as soon as possible. Would you prefer to do this verbally or in writing?<sup>38</sup>

Dear Mr. Bull,

I refer to the recent exchange of correspondence between our respective Departments concerning Canadian participation in the forthcoming German Industries Fair.

You will by now have seen copy of our telegram of June 20,† to Mr. T.C. Davis, our Ambassador in Bonn, requesting information concerning the type of exhibit expected of us, the space available and the cost of same. At the suggestion of your Exhibition Commission we have requested Mr. Davis that he consult with the newly-appointed Commercial Secretary, Mr. B.A. Macdonald, regarding the possibility of adapting for this purpose the exhibit erected in Brussels earlier this year.

It is this Department's considered view that Canada should have a trade and commodity exhibit at this Fair not because we would wish to boost our present sales figures with the Federal Republic of Germany or with West Berlin in particular, but rather in order to make the western shop-window as attractive as possible and to strengthen the morale of a strategically located city under the continued threat of Soviet interference tactics. I should therefore be most

The latest communication (July 4th) from the Canadian Ambassador in Germany has been passed to the Exhibition Commission and the officials there will carry on negotiations directly with our Commercial Counsellor at Bonn.

I would be grateful if you would make a suitable reply to the invitations extended through the Embassy of the Federal Republic of Germany in Ottawa and the Canadian Ambassador in Bonn.

Dear Mr. Bull:

You will remember that during the summer months of this year we exchanged letters concerning Canada's participation in the German Industrial Fair held in Berlin. The Fair has just concluded and we have received a telegram from our Embassy in Bonn stating that it was remarkably successful. The Ambassador reports further that Canadian Immigration authorities received a number of inquiries as a result of the Fair and he believes that it will have a beneficial effect on our trade through the stimulation of interest in Canada, not only among Germans, but also among the eight other exhibiting countries and six thousand visitors from other Western nations.

It appears that the Fair has also served the intended purpose of being "the shop window of the West." For, of the 855,000 visitors to the Fair, 366,000 came from the Soviet Zone of Germany and the Soviet Sector in Berlin.

You will remember that Canada's display in the recent Fair was not as comprehensive as we should have liked, because there was not sufficient time to make the necessary preparations. In order to have plenty of time to prepare for next year's Fair, the Director of the Exhibition Commission raised the question of Canada's participation at a recent meeting of the Inter-departmental Committee on Information Abroad. Taking into account this telegram from Bonn to which I have referred, the Committee strongly recommended that the Canadian Government should take part in the next German Industrial Fair to be held in Berlin. The Department of External Affairs fully endorses the Committee's recommendation.

I should be grateful if you would consider this recommendation and if you approve, pass it on to the Exhibition Commission.

Yours sincerely,

GREEK RELIEF; GIFT OF NO. 5 WHEAT

14. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to the discussion at the meeting of November 16th, 1951, reported that, as the population of the villages of northern Greece was on the verge of starvation, various organizations in Canada had made appeals for a gift of No. 5 wheat similar to that made in November by the Greek War Relief Fund. At that time the U.S. Economic Assistance Administration had given an undertaking to the Fund to provide ocean transportation at its expense. The Canadian Red Cross Society had now indicated that, if the government would contribute 503,000 bushels of No. 5 wheat, at a cost of some $825,000, it would, subject to the above-mentioned undertaking regarding ocean transportation, arrange for the milling of the wheat in Canada and its transportation to seaboard. It would also guarantee that the flour would be properly distributed by representatives of the Greek Red Cross Society.

On humanitarian grounds, he recommended, with the concurrence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, approval of these proposals subject to certain conditions.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

15. The Cabinet, after discussion, approved the recommendation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, concurred in by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and agreed that:

(a) a gift of 500,000 bushels of No. 5 wheat, at a cost of approximately $825,000, be donated immediately to the Canadian Red Cross Society for milling into flour as a contribution to famine relief for Greece, on the understanding that it be ground in the Western Division mills as defined in the Canada Grain Act, 1930, and that the Society be requested to call for tenders in letting the flour contract; and,

(b) provision for the necessary funds be made in the final supplementary estimates of the Department of External Affairs for the fiscal year 1951-52; the Wheat Board to be requested to supply the wheat on this understanding.<sup>39</sup>

Dear Sir,

Since union with Newfoundland this Department has been concerned with conservation measures which might be adopted regarding the stocks of harp seals in the waters off the Province of Newfoundland.

The seal fishery has been prosecuted for many years by Newfoundland, Canadian mainland and Norwegian interests and there appears to be some evidence that at the rate of kill of the baby seals and adults each spring there is danger of depletion. For the past two seasons the Department through the Fisheries Research Board has been carrying out a survey of the situation. Aerial photography of the seal herds on the ice has been done as well as considerable tagging of the animals. The aerial photography was done for the purpose of trying to arrive at an estimated count of the population; the tagging to ascertain the migratory habits and range of the seals.

Norwegian sealers also participate to a very large extent in the fishery each year, and because of this international aspect, it will be necessary before any conservation regulations can be applied with respect to Canadian nationals to see if agreement can be reached with the Norwegian Government on a mutually satisfactory basis for the conservation and protection of the seal herds.

As a result of our scientific investigations, observations and discussions with the Canadian sealing industry, it is our view that as a first step towards some type of regulation, opening and closing dates for the taking of seals should be determined. For many years the Newfoundland sealers, by regulation and custom, commenced operations not earlier than March 13 of each year. Norwegian sealers, on the other hand, usually commence killing a few days before this date. During the past two years particularly the difference in the starting dates has caused some difficulties on the sealing grounds, aside from the fact that we believe there should be a common starting date for all sealers in the interest of conservation of the stocks.

We accordingly have had discussions with the Canadian sealing industry and agreement has been reached that the opening date each year should be not earlier than March 10 for what is termed the "front" and March 5 for the Gulf of St. Lawrence area. The "front" might<sup>40</sup> be described as the area off northeast Newfoundland and north and south west to a line probably drawn from Armour Point on the Labrador Coast to Flower's Cove, Newfoundland, in the Strait of Belle Isle. South of this line on the west side of Newfoundland would be defined as the Gulf of St. Lawrence area.

With regard to a closing date it has been suggested to the Canadian industry that April 30 should be the final date for killing. There is, however, some difference of opinion on this point and it may be necessary to leave this aspect in abeyance pending further investigation, taking into account the practicalities of the sealing operations. Other forms of conservation measures have been suggested but these would require additional study and discussion with industry representatives before any conclusions could be reached.

What we have in mind at this time is that an approach should be made immediately to the Norwegian authorities on an informal basis to see if mutual agreement can be arrived at for the 1952 season on common opening dates as described above; that they should be sounded out on the tentative proposal for an April 30 closing date. I might say that last April, during the meeting of the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries at Washington, the Norwegian delegates were informally and unofficially approached on this sealing matter. At the time it was indicated that Norway would be in favour of an international agreement for the regulation of sealing and it was expressed that perhaps an informal arrangement could be worked out for the 1952 season and later a conference could be arranged to work out details for concluding a formal treaty. At such a formal conference invitations should perhaps be sent to the United Kingdom, the United States and other interested countries to participate. In the meantime, however, so far as we are aware the only countries actively interested in sealing operations in the northwest Atlantic and Gulf of St. Lawrence areas are Canada and Norway. If a formal conference on sealing is to be called there might be opportunity to hold it some time in June of next year. Representatives of countries who might be interested in sealing will all likely be present at the meeting of the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries which is scheduled to be held at St. Andrews, N.B., towards the end of June. I should think that we could take advantage of interested people being present then to have either formal or informal talks on the sealing question.

For the present, however, it would be appreciated if steps could be taken by your Department for an immediate approach to the Norwegian authorities for an informal agreement covering the opening and closing dates for the 1952 sealing season along the lines outlined above. It is regretted that it has not been possible to present this matter to you before now, but we have only recently concluded our discussions with the Canadian industry representatives. It is likely that the Norwegian sealing fleet will very shortly be making its preparations for fitting out to leave for the sealing grounds, probably some time in February. The matter is therefore of some urgency as we should like, if possible, to have the informal arrangement for the 1952 season concluded as early as possible.

If there is any further information I can supply on this matter please let me know.

Ottawa, December 22, 1951<sup>41</sup>

The Secretary of State for External Affairs presents his compliments to the Minister of Norway and has the honour to refer to the harp seal fishery in the waters off the Province of Newfoundland.

2. Due to the extensive exploitation of the harp seal fishery in recent years by Canadian and Norwegian fishermen, there is a serious danger of depletion of this species. For the past two seasons the Canadian Department of Fisheries and the Fisheries Research Board of Canada have been carrying out a survey of the fishery. As a result of scientific investigation and discussions with those engaged in the fishery, it is considered that, in the interests of perpetuating the fishery, some regulation of the killing of the seals should be immediately introduced. Moreover, because of the highly competitive nature of the industry, some regulation of it is desirable in order to avoid serious misunderstandings between those engaged in it. Some measure of regulation would also be of assistance to officials engaged in tagging the seals and conducting the scientific investigation of the species.

<sup>41</sup>Notre copie du document porte la mention manuscrite suivante :

The following was written on this copy of the document:

This note was given to the Norwegian Minister on Jan. 4, 1952.

3. As a first step toward regulation, the cooperation of the Norwegian Government is requested in the establishment of opening and closing dates for the taking of seals. For this purpose it is proposed that the relevant waters be considered to be in two areas — the one comprising the waters of the Strait of Belle Isle and the Atlantic Ocean off the coast of the Province of Newfoundland (including Labrador); and the other comprising the waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. It has been suggested that the starting date for killing in the first described area should be March 10, while the starting date for the other area should be March 5. The dividing line between the two areas would be, roughly, one between Armour Point on the Labrador coast and Flowers Cove, Newfoundland.

4. The closing date of April 30 has been suggested for both areas, but this date might be adjusted later, after further investigation. Meanwhile, as the Norwegian sealing vessels will soon be making preparations to leave for the sealing grounds, it is requested that the Norwegian Government consider whether it would be possible to make appropriate arrangements, in co-operation with the Canadian Government, to regulate the seal fishery, as suggested above, for the 1952 season.

Dear Mr. Burbridge:

You will be pleased to hear of the successful arrangements for the settlement of commercial debts with Spain. Mr. Bull went to Madrid for these negotiations which were initiated by Mr. Maguire, our Trade Commissioner in Spain. Signature of the agreement by Mr. Bull and Sr. Martin Artajo, the Spanish Foreign Minister, took place on January 29th in Madrid.

The negotiations were conducted in a most friendly and cooperative atmosphere, and Mr. Bull seems to be quite pleased with his visit. He made it clear before he went that he would not deal with diplomatic or political questions, nor with the vexed question of Barcelona Traction. The only reference made to diplomatic representation or Barcelona Traction was after the conclusion of the agreement, when Sr. Martin Artajo, the Spanish Foreign Minister, remarked on the appointment of a Canadian Minister to Portugal and said he thought the time was propitious for Canada to normalize her relations with Spain. He said that if Canada had had an Ambassador in Madrid, the Barcelona case might have had a more favourable outcome.

I am enclosing a copy of our press announcement† on this subject, together with the text of the agreement† and the English translation. As you will note, the terms of the agreement are very satisfactory from our point of view, and conform broadly with what we were asking. The rate of exchange to be applied in the settlement of most of these debts is more favourable than any of the rates at present in use in current trade.

We are ourselves quite glad to see this matter settled so satisfactorily, especially since this has been a continuing problem for the past several years.

Yours faithfully,

LETTER FROM THE SPANISH FOREIGN MINISTER
TO MR. WM. FREDERICK BULL, DEPUTY MINISTER,
MADRID, SPAIN, 29 JANUARY 1952

In connection with the conversations held the last few days, I have the honour to express to you the agreement of the Spanish Government to the settlement of the commercial debts pending with Canada, for a total sum not exceeding $650,000 and in accordance with the following conditions:

1. "Commercial Arrears" for the purpose of this repayment arrangement will be those debts contracted by natural and juridical Spanish persons with Canadian firms as the result of imports into Spain, prior to July 18th, 1936, [1938?] of Canadian goods.

2. The Spanish debtors must justify with documents and in the usual way before the Spanish Institute of Foreign Exchange, before June 30th, 1952, the amount of their debts.

3. Settlement will be made in the following manner:

a) By release on the part of the Foreign Exchange Institute of the type of currency in which the debt is stipulated.

b) The rate of exchange to be applied by the Spanish Foreign Exchange Institute in those cases in which the debtors have made deposits in pesetas as guarantee, shall be that which served as a basis to make the deposit provided that it is not lower than the official rate at present in force. In most cases in which the rate of exchange of the guarantee deposit was lower than the present official rate, the latter will apply.

c) On such debts in which no deposits have been made, the rate of exchange to be applied will be fixed by the Spanish Foreign Exchange Institute according to the circumstances prevailing in each case. Although it is not possible to indicate at this time the actual rate at which these debts will be converted into dollars, efforts will be made so that the rate of exchange be such as to facilitate the payment of the debts, consideration being given to the fact that the debtors have had the use of the money in the intervening years.

d) Those debts guaranteed by deposits in pesetas will be refunded immediately, and the liquidation of the remaining debts will be made at the rate of $25,000 per month as from the moment that the former have been paid up, but not later than June 30th, 1952.

4. Such applications as may be filed at the Spanish Foreign Institute exceeding $650,000 will have to be taken in consideration independently from this agreement.

I shall appreciate it if you will kindly express to me the conformity of the Canadian Government on the above.

Ottawa, April 15, 1952

BARCELONA TRACTION

...

14. Mr. Burbridge. On January 3, 1952, the Spanish Government replied to the representations which we had made in respect of Barcelona Traction, refusing to admit that there had been a breach of treaty provisions in the treatment of this Company as we had alleged.<sup>44</sup> The Note set out certain legal arguments in support of the Spanish view which we do not regard as sound. It made no reference to the suggestion which had been put forward that the Spanish Government might propose some method whereby the dispute might be resolved, whether by arbitration or otherwise. On January 4 the assets of the companies in Spain were sold at public auction for a nominal sum but subject to the obligation of payment off of the bondholders. The purchaser was a newly established Spanish company, set up by the Marc interests. This company is proceeding with arrangements for payment off of the bondholders which in accordance with the conditions of sale is to be completed by May 28, 1952. The Receiver for the Company has been in Spain and has attempted unsuccessfully to bring the parties together to negotiate a settlement. These efforts are being continued. We are informed that the Belgian Government has also made an approach to the Spanish Government in the hope that some settlement might be achieved. The Belgian Government has taken no further action to press the Spanish Government to submit the matter to arbitration, but has stated that if negotiations for a settlement are unsuccessful it may again press its claim to have the matter settled under the treaty for arbitration between Belgium and

This case involved bankruptcy proceedings in Spain against a Canadian firm, Barcelona Traction Company.

Spain. A further short Note has now been sent by us to the Spanish Government which restates briefly our view that the treatment accorded to Barcelona Traction in Spain is contrary to treaty provisions and refers once again to our previous suggestion that the Government of Spain might propose some method whereby the difference of opinion in this aspect of the matter might be resolved and that we would agree to take the matter to arbitration if necessary. Before sending this Note careful consideration was given to our present position in this matter and it was discussed with the Department of Trade and Commerce. The Department of Trade and Commerce expressed some concern that our representations in the Barcelona dispute might have harmful effect upon our relations with Spain in respect to other negotiations in which they were concerned. It was our own view that we have now done nearly all that is possible in this matter and that we would not be justified in pressing it further. It was felt, nevertheless, that the latest Spanish Note could not be allowed to go by default. It is not considered that the Spanish Government will give favourable consideration to our suggestion that a settlement might be discussed and the Note now sent will likely be our last effort in this matter. The Receiver of the Company has been informed that it is most unlikely that the Department can be of any further assistance in this matter and that he should continue his efforts to impress upon the Company the necessity to endeavour to negotiate a settlement with the bondholders.

29. Mr. Burbridge. We have been informed by Canada House that the last Canadian Note was presented to the Spanish Government on April 21. In the absence of the Minister for Foreign Affairs, who was in the Middle East, the Note was presented to the recently appointed Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, Don Emilio de Navasques. The Canadian Note was supplemented by an Aide Memoire on behalf of the U.K. Government.

It has also been brought to our attention that a report in the Financial Times of April 21 announced that the Spanish court has issued an order suspending for the time being the sale of the assets of the Barcelona Traction Company, pending the hearing of an action by the Company against the judicial ruling of last September authorizing the sale of the Company's assets. This report has not had official confirmation. If it is true it is probable that the Spanish authorities are paying some heed to the repeated representations by Canada and the U.K. regarding the impropriety of the legal proceedings arising out of the bankruptcy of this Canadian company.

LEGAL MATTERS

Barcelona Traction

16. Mr. Burbridge. On October 22 a delegation, consisting of representatives of the Barcelona Traction Company, the National Trust Company, and the Canadian Receiver, met with Mr. Wilgress to discuss recent developments in connection with the Company's case. The purpose of the delegation was to press the Canadian Government to send a further note to the Spanish Government which, among other things, would seek a clarification of the Minute signed by the three Governments in Madrid.<sup>45</sup> The Barcelona interests contended that Minute was used by the Spanish Government and the bondholder interests to misrepresent the position of the Company in Spain and abroad. The Company was told in March of this year that it was unlikely that the Canadian Government could be of any further assistance to it. Since then the Company interests have been endeavouring to persuade the United Kingdom Government to press for further diplomatic intervention with the Spanish Government. They obviously also hoped to obtain further diplomatic support from the Canadian Government. The delegation was informed that the Canadian Government did not intend to enter into another exchange with the Spanish Government because we felt that there would be no useful purpose in so doing. This would continue to be our position until there was some drastic change in the conditions or developments relating to this Company which would warrant us to reconsider the matter. The Department considers that, as long as the equity interests can manoeuvre governments into exercising diplomatic pressure on the Spanish Government, they will make no genuine effort to negotiate a private settlement which, in our view, is the only possible and practical solution. Canada House has been asked to make our position known to the United Kingdom authorities.

1. Mr. Heeney. Members of this Department will have learned with concern of the tragic death in the rioting in Cairo on January 26th of Mr. J.M. Boyer, M.C., the Canadian Trade Commissioner. The British Ambassador to Egypt has made a protest on our behalf to the Egyptian Government informing them that the Egyptian Government will be held fully responsible for all loss of life and property and that the rights of the Government of Canada in the matter are fully reserved. We have informed the Government of the United Kingdom of our approval today of this course. The Egyptian Consul General called today to express his government's and his own condolences and sympathy on Mr. Boyer's death; I reiterated our position to him.

during the Cairo riots. Legal Division in consultation with Consular Division and the Department of Trade and Commerce, have worked out a formula, taking into account Mr. Boyer's active life expectancy and his salary to arrive at a sum to compensate Mrs. Boyer. . . . The Assistant Canadian Trade Commissioner in Cairo, Mr. C.E. Butterworth, lost most of his personal effects when his room in the Turf Club was razed by fire. He has sent us an itemized statement of his losses. As far as we have been able to ascertain, there are no other Canadian claims for loss of property because of the riot. Details of the claims have been forwarded to the High Commissioner's Office in London for transmission to the British Foreign Office, which will coordinate all claims and present them, as circumstances permit, to the Egyptian Government. The procedure contemplated by the Foreign Office with regards to the presentation of the claims is as follows. The first step will be to obtain, if possible, an admission of international responsibility from the Egyptian Government. The United Kingdom Government through its Ambassador in Cairo is now attempting to obtain this admission. When or if it is obtained, the Egyptian Government will be presented with a global figure based on all claims. The Foreign Office think this method is preferable to discussions in advance with the Egyptians concerning the merits and details of each particular case. The United Kingdom Ambassador in Cairo has, however, been asked for his opinion on the best method and timing for presentation of claims, and we will be kept informed.

Ottawa, March 28, 1952

Dear Mr. Heeney,

We are informed by cable of March 25 from the Acting Trade Commissioner at Cairo that the Government of Egypt had doubled all customs duties applicable to Canadian goods.

Egypt having a single-column tariff, Egyptian law has for some time contained a punitive provision by which customs duties may be increased in this fashion against any country with which Egypt has no trade agreement. This law has now been implemented for the first time in relation to Canada. Although we lack detailed information, we believe that similar action has also been taken in relation to other countries in the same position.

While Canadian exports to Egypt are not large, amounting to $2.5 million last year, a number of our exporters will be affected immediately. If manufactured goods, such as Canadian automobiles, are eliminated from Egypt by reason of the tariff being doubled against us, it will be more difficult to get back into the market later, in competition with other countries which are able to maintain their business. I am attaching a memorandum on this subject containing additional information.†

We have consulted informally with the Department of Finance on this question. On grounds of commercial relations and trade alone, we see no reason why we should not enter into a most favoured nation treaty with Egypt. From the point of view of your Department, we would give rise to any objection to proceeding in this way at the present time.

This matter is urgent because of the pending departure of the Acting Trade Commissioner from Cairo and we shall look forward to your early reply.

Yours sincerely,

WM. FREDERICK BULL

Dear Mr. Bull,

I refer to your letter of March 28 in which you informed me that the Egyptian Government has just imposed a surtax of 100% on all imports of Canadian goods. I understand that this particular provision of the Egyptian tariff law may be invoked against any country which has not concluded a commercial agreement with Egypt.

This Department would have no objection to our entering into a most-favoured-nation agreement with Egypt. At the same time it has occurred to us, as it has no doubt occurred to you, that the manner in which the Egyptians have acted in applying the punitive provisions of their tariff law to Canadian goods without prior indication or consultation is somewhat brusque and inept. I assume that you would not wish this kind of unilateral procedure to become a precedent for extorting commercial concessions from us. However, this is primarily a matter for your Department and the Department of Finance to take into consideration.

If you decide to proceed with the conclusion of a most-favoured-nation agreement with Egypt, I think that you might find it opportune to tell the Egyptian Government of the adverse impression their action has caused in Canada.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Plumptre:

We have received a further communication from the Canadian Trade Commissioner's Office in Cairo respecting the proposed exchange of notes with Egypt for most-favoured-nation treatment.

We are now informed that a decree has been published in the Official Journal of Egypt stating that double duties will definitely be imposed on imports from Canada on October 28, 1952, unless some agreement has been reached by that date.

While I do not think that we should be unduly alarmed by this decree, it might be useful for your department to approach the Egyptian Consul General in Ottawa to ascertain whether he has received instructions in this matter.<sup>48</sup>

Dear Dr. Isbister,

At my request Mr. El-Hakeem, the Consul General of Egypt called on me today to discuss the question of a most-favoured-nation agreement.

After recalling the circumstances in which the Egyptians had evidently decided to impose a 100% surtax on Canadian imports as of October 28 of this year, I told Mr. El-Hakeem that from our point of view the extension of most-favoured-nation treatment to Egypt offered no problem of principle. It was largely a matter of providing his Government with a draft of the type of agreement we had found it practicable to conclude in the past, and I expected that we should be in a position to move forward quickly so as to clear up this matter well before October.

I added that, in view of the changes in our personnel in Cairo, it would probably be most convenient to proceed with the necessary discussions here in Ottawa. It was my understanding that the Egyptian authorities had also proposed Ottawa as the venue for the talks.

Mr. El-Hakeem appeared to be gratified by the Canadian position in regard to most-favoured-nation treatment for Egypt as I had outlined it to him. He had received no definite instructions from his Government in this matter, but promised to communicate with Cairo immediately and get in touch with me again some time next week.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Isbister,

With reference to Mr. Neal's conversation with Mr. Kilgour on September 3rd, I enclose a copy of a draft agreement for an exchange of most-favoured-nation treatment which Mr. El-Hakeem, the Egyptian Consul General, left with me on September 2nd.† Mr. El-Hakeem explained that his Government considers this text only a draft to be used as a basis for discussion.

A glance at the draft agreement indicates that a number of changes probably will be necessary, e.g., deletion of the reference to Newfoundland; the term "British Commonwealth of Nations" in paragraph 2 expanded into "the British Commonwealth of Nations including their dependent overseas territories and the Republic of Ireland"; and revision of the concluding paragraph so that it is more along the lines of the text in the draft note which we had prepared but had not submitted. You will also note that the Egyptian draft agreement proposes a three-month notice of termination whereas we had a six-month notice in mind.

I should be glad to have your comments on this text together with any revisions which you deem advisable. I have examined the draft agreement with a view to determining if the Egyptians also had in mind a "balanced trade" between the two countries, (reference my letter of July 3rd).† There does not appear to be any phrase in the draft which explicitly covers this aspect of Canadian-Egyptian trade. The point in your July 8th letter, that there must be a clear understanding that any agreement will guarantee unqualified most-favoured-nation treatment for Canadian goods, will no doubt have to be raised with the Egyptians. As soon as we have an agreed text, I shall ask the Egyptian Consul General to call. There is some urgency in this matter as the Egyptian six-month waiver of double duties will expire on October 28th.

Dear Mr. [A.E.] Ritchie:

I have your letter of September 4 with which you enclosed a copy of the draft text of the proposed agreement with Egypt, left with you by the Egyptian Consul General. In your letter you suggest certain changes, and with these we agree.

In view of the urgency of concluding the agreement before the expiration of the six months' period during which the Egyptian government has suspended the imposition of higher duties, we believe that it is advisable to accept the Egyptian draft with a minimum of revisions.<sup>49</sup> We have accordingly gone over it and have made only such additional changes as we consider essential. I am enclosing a copy of the text showing all these proposed changes. Proposed deletions are enclosed in square brackets and additions are underlined.

In the introductory paragraph we consider it advisable to change the phrase, which indicates only the willingness of the Egyptian government to conclude the agreement, to one which puts forth a positive proposal.

We have refrained from changing the word "goods" to "articles", although the latter appears in most of our trade agreements.

As a commentary on your own proposals, the word "overseas" does not seem necessary as a qualification of dependent territories.

In Clause 3 we suggest six months' notice instead of three. We believe this advisable in view of the length of time which it has already taken to reach the discussion stage in the present negotiations. Should this prove to be a sticking point for the Egyptians, we would accept three months to conclude the agreement.

Yours faithfully,

CLAUDE [ISBISTER]

Attention: Dr. C.M. Isbister

The Egyptian Consul General called on us this morning in connection with the most-favoured-nation agreement which we are hoping to conclude with Egypt shortly. The alternative draft prepared by your Department appeared to offer no substantial difficulties. We raised, but did not press, the question of a six-month termination clause which, we suggested, was probably preferable to a three-month clause, if only on grounds of administrative convenience. At the same time we made it clear that, if the Egyptian Consul General could not meet our preference in this matter on his own initiative and without further reference to Cairo, we should be prepared to accept the proposal originally formulated by his Government.

2. Mr. El Hakeem told us that the draft agreement had been drawn up by an Interdepartmental Committee on Foreign Trade and followed a standard form used by the Egyptian Government. Since the Committee meets only periodically and might wish to consider our counter-proposal in regard to the notice of termination, we agreed that it would be preferable to initiate the relevant exchange of notes without referring the text of the agreement back to the Committee. We gathered that the Consul General will, in any case, have to secure final clearance from his authorities before proceeding with the Exchange of Notes.

3. As soon as we receive the Egyptian note proposing the conclusion of a most-favoured-nation agreement, we shall ask the Department of Finance to prepare a submission to Council in accordance with the provisions of Section 11 of the Customs Tariff Act. We shall also inform the Department of National Revenue which will have to advise its collectors as soon as the relevant Order-in-Council has been passed. In our conversation with the Egyptian Consul General we told him that our reply to his note would probably be deferred for about a week so as to enable us to complete the necessary administrative arrangements.

Ottawa, October 24, 1952

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. RITCHIE

MOST-FAVoured-NATION AGREEMENT WITH EGYPT

Mr. Barrow of the Department of Trade and Commerce telephoned me this afternoon to find out if there has been any further word from the Egyptian Consul General regarding the exchange of notes which he was going to initiate, subject to final clearance by his government.

As you know the decree recently published in the Journal Officiel of Egypt provides that a surtax of 100% on goods originating in countries with which Egypt has not concluded a commercial agreement will be imposed with effect from October 28, 1952. By next Tuesday, therefore, the 6-month respite afforded to us, presumably for the purpose of the conclusion of a bilateral agreement, will expire.

Since there is little likelihood of completing our exchange of notes with Egypt within the next four days, two courses of action would seem to be open to us. First, we might telephone the Egyptian Consul General to ask whether final instructions to conclude a most-favoured-nation agreement had now reached him. If, as I assume, his reply is in the negative, we might ask him to approach his authorities by telegram to seek a further delay in the imposition of a punitive surtax on Canadian goods in the light of the very favourable prospects of reaching an early agreement on reciprocal most-favoured-nation treatment.

The alternative would be to channel such an approach through the Trade and Commerce representative in Cairo. In view of the fact, however, that all the negotiations have taken place at this end and that it might be confusing to the Egyptian authorities if they were now approached through a different channel, I would suggest that we ask the Egyptian Consul General in Ottawa to place our case before his Government.

Since the time available is now exceedingly short, I wonder if you would consider telephoning Mr. El-Hakeem some time tomorrow morning. I should be glad to do so myself but an approach at your level is likely to be a good deal more effective.<sup>50</sup>

Moscow, April 25, 1952

SECRET

SOVIET FOREIGN POLICY

Reference: My despatch No. 761 of November 28, 1951.

In my despatch under reference I said that I thought Soviet foreign policy had temporarily reverted to a tough line vis-à-vis the West but that it would return to a policy of appeasement when the Soviet leaders felt the psychological moment had come, possibly in the Spring.

2. I think it safe to say that this tactical change in Soviet policy has now commenced. The evidence can be summed up as follows:

(a) The International Economic Conference in Moscow. This was clearly designed to give the impression that in the economic field the Soviet bloc was prepared to do business with the West. There are other aspects to the conference, such as the Soviet aim of exerting pressure on Western governments to relax export controls, and so on, but in the field of economic propaganda the theme is co-operation;

(b) Stalin's answers to a group of United States newspaper editors. While not very startling, they did assure the world that war was not necessarily imminent, that a meeting of the heads of the four great states might be useful, and that peaceful co-existence was possible;

(c) Stalin's interview with the Indian Ambassador. Though probably directed primarily towards India, the gesture may have also had some connection with the general lines of Soviet policy;

(d) The new Soviet approach to the German question, and the request for four-power talks;

(e) The diminishing of the bacteriological warfare propaganda in the USSR.

3. This is not very conclusive evidence but I think it sufficient to indicate that the Soviet authorities may be cautiously feeling their way towards new tactics. Their aim remains the same — to split the western alliance, to confuse the peoples of the West, and to slow down western re-armament before it becomes a danger to the USSR. But they may feel that they have greater chances of accomplishing this aim by giving the appearance of greater reasonableness and greater willingness to co-exist peacefully, without at the same time really giving way on any vital sector. As usual the strength of the Soviet position lies in the fact that having followed consistently a violently uncompromising line, the slightest retreat from it at once has the effect of convincing the more gullible that considerable concessions have been made.

4. So far the few signs of a modification of Soviet policy visible to us in Moscow have pointed only to "appeasement" in Europe; and it is quite possible that a tough line will continue in the Far East. This will depend to a large extent on developments in Korea.

5. At the same time it must be stressed that the cautious experiment with appeasement can very easily be abandoned if the Soviet leaders think it is not going to achieve the results expected, as happened last summer. At that time their attempt at a new line inevitably had to be abandoned because of the position into which they were forced by the San Francisco Conference to conclude a Japanese Peace Treaty. This time some similar event, possibly in Germany, might equally convince the Russians that "appeasement" does not pay. It will depend very much, in my opinion, on Soviet reaction to the western decision to press ahead with the alliance of Western Germany and Western Europe. We are therefore only in the preliminary and tentative stages of this Soviet policy.

6. I think it hardly necessary to add that such a policy, if it were developed, would in no way represent a change of heart on the part of the Russians. It would be simply an indication that new tactics were needed. It would be the best proof possible that the determination of the West to build up its strength to oppose Soviet imperialism had proved correct.

7. At first glance it seems paradoxical that the Soviet Union should be experimenting with a "peace offensive" while at the same time carrying on most violent germ warfare propaganda against the United States; but I do not believe that there is necessarily a conflict there. As it seems inconceivable that the two should not be connected in the minds of Soviet planners, I have been trying to guess what the connection could be.

8. I would like to suggest that one of the purposes of the internal germ war propaganda in the USSR, about which I have reported in my despatch No. 322 of April 8,† may have been to prepare the people against the eventuality of a lessening of international tension. As I mentioned last summer, one of the difficulties confronting the Soviet authorities is: How to keep their people working at fever-pitch without the imminent threat of foreign war and invasion; and at the same time take measures to lessen the danger of war? The bacteriological warfare charges may have offered a good chance to convince the Soviet people that the Americans are such barbarians that the Russians must always be on their guard against them, even though for the moment relations should improve slightly.

9. This may sound a little fanciful but I have talked it over with a number of old hands here and they all think it sounds reasonable, and that it is the kind of logic the Russians are capable of. In any case the internal bacteriological warfare propaganda has now been reduced to a trickle, though it could easily be revived if necessary.

10. The germ warfare propaganda as taken up by the World Peace Council is another question. For the moment it is good anti-American propaganda and gives the Partisans of Peace some useful new material. It could, no doubt, be dropped easily, if necessary, as I understand that up to now there is no sign that a new campaign for the collection of signatures for an appeal to ban the bacteriological bomb is contemplated. In any case the Soviet attempt to appeal over the heads of the Western governments to their peoples will continue, as it is an essential tenet of Soviet political philosophy.

11. If the Russians should develop a new policy of appeasement, I don't think they would let it go very far. A real settlement of outstanding international questions is not, in my opinion, their aim. They might like a relative easing of international tension for the reasons I have already mentioned and because their own economy could not at the present easily stand the increase in Soviet armaments required to offset Western re-armament. But continuing international tension is practically a requisite for the Soviet system.

12. In the first place this provides one of the main justifications to their own people for the maintenance of huge armies and police forces, the necessity to work long hours for little pay and few incentives, and the failure to provide the material conditions of life promised to the Soviet people for the last 30 years. (If the USSR wished to concentrate on consumers' goods I am sure they could provide this basis, but a people materially satisfied would constitute a serious menace to the Soviet system.)

13. In the second place a tense international situation is more likely to create the conditions for the advance of Communism than a peaceful world. I think it quite possible that the Russians may think in terms of alternating periods of "appeasement" with periods of "toughness" just to confuse and bewilder western governments and public opinion. Then so long as western re-armament does not become so great as to constitute an immediate danger to the USSR, the Russians are not averse to seeing it pile up difficulties for the economies of the capitalist world. This is evident not only from Marxist-Stalinist theory but also from recent articles in the Soviet press.

14. To conclude, it seems to me that:

(a) Soviet foreign policy is at the beginning of a new and tentative experiment in "appeasement";

(b) This will probably be confined to Europe for the present;

(c) Its course will depend very largely on developments in Germany; a serious rebuff there might lead the Russians to abandon appeasement, as they did last summer after the defeat in San Francisco;

(d) The domestic bacteriological warfare campaign was intended, at least in part, to prevent the Soviet people from slackening their effort as a result of a possible lessening in international tension;

(e) The aim of Soviet foreign policy will remain the same — disruption of the Western alliance, the slowing down of re-armament and the sowing of confusion in the minds of the western public; the new tactic would be an admission that western policies vis-à-vis the USSR have been basically correct;

(f) No real attempt to solve outstanding international questions nor to reduce tension beyond a certain point can be expected since this would be contrary to basic Soviet internal and external aims.

DESPATCH 862

Moscow, October 8, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

PROCEEDINGS OF THE 19TH CONGRESS OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY

Reference: Our despatch No. 855 of October 1, 1952.†

Following weeks of intensive preparation, the 19th Congress of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, the first since 1939, finally opened in Moscow on October 5. I have no doubt that the foreign press will have devoted a great deal of space to this important event and that the analyses of the proceedings will go on for a long time to come. Nevertheless you may find it useful to have a general picture of the proceedings to date, together with the composition of the organs which have been appointed to direct the Congress. The keynote report delivered by Mr. Malenkov on the opening night is clearly so important that I am reporting on it separately.

2. While the many representatives from foreign Communist parties, about which I am writing separately, have apparently been participating in the sessions of the Congress, no other foreigners have, of course, had access to the proceedings. The information contained in the following paragraphs is, therefore, based on the reports published in the Soviet press.

3. At 7:00 p.m. on October 5, before the delegates assembled in the Great Hall of the Kremlin Palace, estimated at approximately 1200, Stalin appeared followed by Molotov, Malenkov, Voroshilov, Bulganin, Beria, Kaganovich, Khrushchev, Andreev, Mikoyan and Kosygin.

4. Molotov then delivered the introductory speech. In it he paid tribute to the war dead and to the departed Comrades Shcherbakov, Kalinin and Zhdanov, and he then proceeded to summarize in very broad terms the developments which took place during and since the war. He reminded his audience that the Soviet Union lived "in a system of states" and that the world was divided into two camps, the weakening camp of the war-mongering countries and the growing camp of the peace-loving countries. In his peroration he declared the Congress open and proposed the election of its executive organs. These consist of a Praesidium (this is only a Congress Praesidium, not to be confused with the Party Praesidium which under the new by-laws is to replace the Politburo), a Secretariat, an Editorial Commission and a Credentials Commission.

5. The Praesidium of the Congress comprises 9 members taken from the Politburo and 8 republican or regional representatives. The Politburo representatives are Stalin, Malenkov, Molotov, Beria, Bulganin, Voroshilov, Kaganovich and Khrushchev.

9. You will note that the list of party leaders who appeared with Stalin at the Tribune at the opening of the Congress (see paragraph 3 above) does not include Suslov, Shkiryatov and Ponomarenko, who generally accompany the Politburo at all official functions. While Suslov was elected to the Editorial Commission and Shkiryatov to the Credentials Commission, Ponomarenko has no official duties at the Congress and he has so far been mentioned only once in Pravda, on Thursday, October 9, when a speech he had made the day before was briefly reported. I am only noting this in passing, without commenting, since any speculation as to the future of this or that party personality would be premature at this stage of the Congress.

10. The agenda was then formally adopted and Malenkov made his review report.

11. The report of the second day of the Congress was published in Pravda on Tuesday, October 7. On the agenda for that day was the review report of the Central Inspection Commission of the CPSU, presented by Comrade P.G. Moskatov, Chairman of the Commission in question. This speech was more or less a review of the business, or financial aspects of Party life since 1939. Moskatov pointed out that the Party budget revenues had increased by 2.6 times between 1939 and 1951. The two main sources of revenues are the membership fees and the profits from the Party publishing houses. Moskatov reported that the latter, which had increased by six times between 1940 and 1952, now contributed 12% of all Party revenues. He pointed out, on the expenditure side, that the local Party organizations accounted for 91% of all budgetary outlays of the Party, leaving 9% for the central organs. He added that of the total party budget funds, 20% were this year being devoted to the political training of Communists and to the propagandizing of Marxism-Leninism. He then drew a brief picture of the Party apparatus of schools for the training of Communists and he stressed the need for financial discipline in the accounting of the Party organizations.

12. On the second and third days of the Congress a number of speeches by lesser lights were made under the title of "Debate on the Review Reports of Comrades Malenkov and Moskatov." This is a misleading appellation since the majority of the speeches contained hardly more than a review of the economic picture prevailing in this or that republic or region, giving a few meaningless figures and percentages, welcoming the new party by-laws and the directives of the new Five-Year Plan, pledging the achievement of the required tasks and ending with a warm approval of Stalin's works on "economic problems of socialism in the USSR," "Marxism and questions of linguistics," or other important pronouncements of the Party leaders in the last few years.

13. "Economic problems of Socialism in the USSR" is an important article by Stalin which appeared in the September issue of Bolshevik and was reproduced in Pravda on Friday, October 3. As I am reporting on this in a detailed manner in a separate despatch, suffice it to say here that it consists of a firm doctrinal pronouncement dictating what the Party should believe concerning the present international situation, particularly its economic aspects, and the position of the USSR in this context. The significance of this document is confirmed by the fact that Malenkov's keynote speech echoes it most faithfully and that all the participants in the "debate" made stereotyped, pious references to it in concluding their speeches.

14. I am enclosing all the documents pertaining to the proceedings which have become available so far in their JPRS translation.† The rest will follow by next week's bag.†

THE INTERNATIONAL ASPECTS OF STALIN'S NEW ARTICLE AND MALENKOV'S
SPEECH AT THE 19TH PARTY CONGRESS

Reference: Our despatch No. 862 of October 8, 1952.

The latest addition to Marxist-Leninist-Stalinist dogma, "Economic Problems of Socialism in the USSR," appeared under Stalin's signature in the magazine Bolshevik on October 3 and was reprinted in Pravda on October 4 and 5. This document is Stalin's most important contribution to the Communist creed since his review of the post-war world in 1946, for not only is it the ideological basis on which the present 19th Party Congress is being conducted but the views expressed shed some light on the path we can expect Soviet internal and external policies to follow in the next few years.

2. The Stalin article contains important sections dealing with internal and external matters which arose during discussions last November between various Soviet economists and the Central Committee of the Communist Party concerning a proposed new textbook on political economy. In this despatch I intend to deal with the international aspects of Stalin's pronouncements and the elaboration upon them by Mr. Malenkov, Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, in his opening report to the Congress. I am dealing with the internal aspects of Mr. Malenkov's speech and the debate upon it in a separate despatch, No. 861 of today's date,<sup>1</sup> and I shall send a detailed analysis of the whole of Stalin's article by a subsequent bag.

3. Stalin lays down two new theories involving the international aspects of Communist dogma. In the first he puts forward a new thesis concerning the disintegration of the single world market, and in the second he emphasizes and interprets the current Marxist belief of the inevitability of war between capitalist countries. In propounding his theory on the disintegration of the single world market into two parallel world markets opposed to one another, Stalin reasons as follows: the second World War was engendered by the general crisis of capitalism and each of the two capitalist coalitions which fought each other expected to win and achieve world domination. While the Anglo-American-French coalition was successful, at the same time China and the countries of peoples's democracy in Europe seceded from the capitalist system and formed, together with the Soviet Union, the socialist camp opposing the camp of capitalism. The economic result of the existence of these two camps was the disintegration of the world market into two parallel world markets. Stalin also claims that the capitalist camp furthered the formation of the new socialist world market by means of Marshall Aid and the imposing of an economic blockade on the Soviet Union, China and the satellites.

4. The result of this new development, says the Soviet leader, is that "the sphere of exertion of the forces of the chief capitalist countries towards world resources will not expand but diminish and sub-capacity operation of enterprises in these countries will increase." The capitalist countries, according to Stalin, are feeling this decrease in their world market, and are trying to overcome their difficulties by such policies as Marshall Aid, war in Korea, the arms race, and militarization of industry.

5. This new addition to Communist theory contradicts what has up to now been some of the more sacrosanct of Marxist-Leninist-Stalinist doctrine. Stalin faces this problem by baldly stating that due to new conditions his theory concerning the "relative stability of markets in the period of the general crisis of capitalism" and Lenin's theory "that despite the decay of capitalism on the whole capitalism is growing immeasurably more rapidly than before," no longer apply.

6. To summarize, there are now two economic blocs in the world, the socialist and the capitalist; the former becoming stronger because of steady industrial progress and the impossibility of economic crises, the latter growing weaker because of recurrent economic crises and because reduced markets intensify the struggle for markets amongst the capitalist powers.

7. It has always been one of the basic tenets of the Marxist faith that because of the cyclical nature of capitalist economies, the armed struggle for markets between rival capitalist powers is inevitable under certain conditions. As elsewhere in the world, there have been Soviet economists who, in surveying the post-war capitalist world, have come to the conclusion that the United States is so strong she has subordinated to herself the other capitalist states sufficiently to stop them fighting each other, and that bitter experience has taught the leaders of capitalism that war does serious injury to their system. For these reasons these men claim that war is no longer inevitable between capitalist countries, and as a result the antagonisms between capitalism and socialism are stronger than between the capitalist countries. Comrade Stalin states in his article that these economists are mistaken and that while on the surface the present state of the capitalist world might be considered to be satisfactory, "it would be wrong to think that this satisfactoriness can be preserved forever and that these countries (the United Kingdom, France, Japan, etc.) will suffer endlessly the domination and oppression of the United States of America and will not try to extricate themselves from American bondage and embark on the path of independent development."

8. The Soviet leader thinks that the United States policy of intruding itself on the economies of the United Kingdom and France via Marshall Aid and the Mutual Security Programme, while at the same time seizing raw materials from Anglo-French markets and thereby reducing the profits of the Anglo-French capitalists, will force these two countries "to wrench themselves away from the embraces of the United States of America and engage in a conflict with it so as to ensure for themselves an independent status and, of course, high profits." As to Germany and Japan, Stalin feels that these two former great imperialist powers that were strong enough to shake the foundations of the capitalist world in the last war are also bound to throw off the fetters of the United States occupation regime and break free on the path of independent development.

9. According to Stalin, the leaders of the capitalist countries realize that the antagonisms between capitalism and socialism are stronger than between rival capitalist states, but he says that these men have always preferred war amongst themselves, because war between capitalist countries is for the purpose of the predominance of one capitalist power over another while war between capitalism and the USSR involves a danger to the very existence of capitalism. From the above reasoning the capitalist leaders will not wage war against the USSR and the only purpose of their constant warnings about the "aggressive intentions of the USSR" is for propaganda purposes, as capitalist leaders do not believe in this aggressiveness themselves "for they take into account the peaceful policy of the Soviet Union and know that the Soviet Union itself will not attack the capitalist countries." To back up his thesis that capitalist countries are more likely to wage war amongst themselves Stalin quotes the example of the last war which began between rival capitalist powers but when the USSR was attacked by one of these, the other, instead of joining its former enemy to destroy the Communist citadel joined the USSR in order to defeat its capitalist rival.

10. Stalin also scotches the theory that because of the present powerful popular forces advocating the defence of peace and opposing a new world war, Lenin's thesis that imperialism inevitably engenders war no longer applies. Stalin says that the present Peace Movement has as its aim the arousing of the people in a fight for peace but not the overthrow of capitalism and establishment of socialism. While it might be successful in averting a given war or helping maintain a given peace this is but temporary and the Peace Movement cannot of itself destroy the inevitability of war between capitalist countries.

11. To summarize, war is still inevitable between capitalist states which for various reasons prefer war amongst themselves to endangering their whole system by war against the socialist bloc.

12. Mr. Malenkov<sup>1</sup> elaborated on Mr. Stalin's article in his report to the 19th Party Congress, in which he first described the economic situation in the world today with its division into socialist and capitalist camps, then gave a resume of the international situation since the last Party Congress with the United States cast in the role of chief villain, and finally discussed the aims of Soviet foreign policy.

13. The post-war period, according to the Communist Party Secretary, has been one of new economic difficulties in capitalist countries due to the developing expansion of United States imperialism which is aggravating the inherent antagonisms amongst capitalist powers and at present forcing these powers to militarize their economies. The United States is blamed for this situation for she is the "main force disorganizing the economies of other capitalist countries by destroying historical multilateral economic relations between capitalist countries and replacing them with unilateral relations with the United States, by dumping her own exports and imposing high tariffs on imports, by stopping Western Europe from receiving food formerly obtained from Eastern Europe and by imposing an economic blockade on the socialist bloc."

14. This policy, says Malenkov, is bound to confirm Stalin's thesis that wars between capitalist countries are inevitable, for it is impossible that the United Kingdom, France, Western Germany or Japan "will not attempt somehow to extricate themselves from the United States yoke so as to live a free and independent life." At this moment the United States is trying to avoid the inherent capitalist contradictions by advocating remilitarization, and "United Georgi Malenkov, Deputy Premier of Soviet Union.

States imperialism has finally cast aside the mask of resuscitator of the economy of capitalist countries via Marshall Aid, and United States aid is now only given for armaments for the preparation of a new war." This sentence is particularly interesting as it seems to confirm the suggestion put forward by Mr. Kennan<sup>2</sup> in his recent paper on NATO (my despatch No. 824 of September 19)† that the Soviet Union really became seriously alarmed at United States intentions when that country without, to the Soviet mind, sufficient reason, abandoned the highly successful Marshall Plan in favour of the Mutual Security Programme which is now putting such a heavy strain on so many of the economies of Western countries.

15. In contradistinction to this picture of economic conditions in the capitalist world, Malenkov portrays the Soviet Union and its allies as a united, friendly group of nations who, through planning, are advancing steadily, Five-Year Plan by Five-Year Plan, to the goal of communism. To make his point Malenkov claims that industrial production has increased 13-fold in the USSR since 1929 as opposed to the United States and other capitalist countries where production has at the most only doubled. He quotes a table to indicate this trend which is a fair example of specious communist reasoning for he takes as his starting point from which to compare production trends in the socialist and capitalist world the year 1929, which was the year of the highest industrial development in the Western world between the two Great Wars, while in the Soviet Union it was only the beginning of the first Five-Year Plan.

16. Malenkov's political review of the post-war world is a fairly routine description of how the United States in 1945 abandoned its ally the Soviet Union and denounced the agreements made at Yalta, Teheran and Potsdam; of how the United States tried to obtain economic control of Western Europe via Marshall Aid; of how she is gaining military control over Western Europe via NATO; and how she is remilitarizing Western Germany and Japan; of how finally, in order to solve her economic problems, she started the war in Korea. The situation at present, therefore, is one of the United States spurring the other capitalist states to war and these countries abandoning their national policies in deference to the United States. Malenkov then jibes at France for taking part in the revival of its life-long enemy, Germany, and twits the once powerful Britain for being a junior partner of the United States. The only reference to Canada comes in this context, in the form of a rhetorical question: "Is it the Communists rather than the American billionaires who have seized Canada and are seizing Australia and New Zealand. . . ." The result of this United States policy, says Malenkov, will be the same in the political field as in the economic field for the other capitalist countries will throw off United States influence "as presumably peace-loving democratic forces will emerge in Europe who will find a way out of the impasse into which they have been driven by the United States."

George F. Kennan, Ambassador of United States in Soviet Union.

17. Malenkov makes several references in passing to peaceful co-existence. He declares that it is quite possible, "given a mutual desire to co-operate, readiness to carry out commitments undertaken, and observance of the principle of equality and non-interference in the internal affairs of other states." Specifically with regard to the United States, the United Kingdom, France and other bourgeois countries, he repeats that "the USSR is, now too, prepared for co-operation with these states, bearing in mind the observance of peaceful international norms and the ensuring of a firm and lasting peace." He asserts that they are confident that in peaceful competition with capitalism, the socialist system will prove its superiority but that they have no intention whatever of forcing their ideology or their economic system upon any one.

18. The concluding part of the speech gives a short resume of Soviet foreign policy since the war and an indication in general terms of the policy to be followed in the next few years. Malenkov states that after the war the Soviet Union considerably reduced its armed forces "which at present do not exceed the forces on hand before the war," that the Soviet Union immediately withdrew its forces from many countries such as China, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Norway, etc., and that to show its peaceful intentions, passed in 1951 the Law on Defence of Peace, declaring war propaganda a heinous crime against humanity. Not only has the Soviet Union followed a peaceful policy, says the Party Secretary, but she has made constructive proposals to solve the various international difficulties of the post-war world, such as the Malik proposal on the Korean peace negotiations. Malenkov also says that while the United Nations is now being used by the United States as an instrument of its foreign policy, the Soviet Union "is standing up in the United Nations for positions of peace". This last statement is interesting in that it is a fair indication that the Soviet Union does not intend to leave the United Nations.

19. The Party Secretary closes his speech by repeating the same theme employed by Beria<sup>3</sup> in his November 7 speech of last year — "at present the camp of socialism is becoming stronger and stronger, and while we will not force our system on anyone, we are aware of the menace of new aggressiveness and will go on strengthening our defence capacity, for the third world war when it comes will cause the final collapse of capitalism." Malenkov finishes by laying down the following "tasks of the Party in the sphere of foreign policy:"

- 1) The struggle against preparations for a new war;
- 2) The advocacy of international co-operation and business relations with all countries;
- 3) The strengthening of relations with the friendly countries of the socialist bloc;
- 4) The strengthening of the defence might of the Soviet state so as to give aggressors a crushing rebuff.

20. From the foregoing resume of Stalin's article and Malenkov's speech I think it possible to draw certain conclusions as to future Soviet policy. Stalin's new theory on the disintegration of the world market into two parallel markets merely formalizes in the economic sphere what has already been the Communist view in the political sphere. The policy that will stem from it will probably involve an effort to strengthen the socialist bloc by further integration of the various economies in that bloc. The recent Sino-Soviet negotiations and the fact that all the satellite leaders are attending the Party Congress tend to confirm this view. While Malenkov states that one of the goals of Soviet foreign policy is "promotion of business relations of all countries", this should be compared with the following extract from Stalin's article: "The tempo of industrial development in the socialist camp will soon reach a point where these countries not only will not need to import goods from the capitalist countries but will themselves feel the necessity of releasing surplus goods of their own production." I think we can, therefore, assume that the main effort of the Soviet Union in the economic field will be towards further integration of the various communist economies and a moratorium on foreign trade except for propaganda purposes and where urgent strategic needs require it.

21. The picture of a declining economy in the capitalist world and of rapidly growing strength in the communist bloc has now been given the stamp of orthodoxy by Stalin and Malenkov. You will recall that Mr. Kennan told me he thought there was reason to think the Soviet leaders really believed that the capitalist economies were undergoing serious difficulties and that the weight of re-armament might prove too much for them. Stalin's pronouncement on the subject would seem to confirm this. While we may well be uneasy at the inaccurate idea of the Western world held in the Kremlin, it has its advantages in that it would tend to convince the Soviet leaders that time was on their side and that it is simply a question of avoiding war, keeping up the pressure on the capitalist system and waiting for its final collapse.

22. By his re-statement of the Communist belief that the next war is inevitable and will be fought between rival capitalist powers, Stalin really seems to be saying that he does not foresee war in the near future for, as he admits, the United States is at present all-powerful in the capitalist world and therefore conditions for Stalin's "inevitable war" do not as yet exist. By stating that the next war will only be between capitalist powers, and by the omission of any reference to the possibility of war between the United States and the USSR, he certainly implies war between the United States and the USSR can be avoided and that the Soviet Union is not at the moment planning any aggressive move. I think we can assume from this that the Soviet Union will continue to arm itself but that there will probably not be a world war precipitated by the Russians at least for the next few years. I also think we can assume that the cold war will be continued in its present form. No doubt there will be a difference of tactics in carrying on the cold war but the strategic objectives will be the same, i.e. the weakening of the capitalist economic bloc and the encouragement of a renewal of former capitalist rivalries.

23. If we can assume that the Soviet leaders are not planning a war at the present time but are planning a continuation of the cold war, what immediately interests the West is what new tactics the Communists will use to obtain their objectives. I realize that a number of observers think that the new tactics will include a return to the classical Communist policy of a united front with the various socialist parties of the West and to back up this view these observers point to the new policy now being followed by the French Communist Party. Mr. Malenkov's words that "presumably peace-loving democratic forces will emerge in Europe" also lends credence to this view. It is very possible that these observers are right but if so it is rather difficult to explain the vicious attack made by Malenkov against the socialist parties of Europe, which I think is worth quoting in full:

"Direct responsibility for this anti-national policy (membership in NATO) of the ruling circles is borne by the right-wing Social Democrats, first and foremost by the hierarchy of the British Labour Party, the French Socialist Party and the right-wing Social Democratic Party of Western Germany. The right-wing Socialists of Sweden, Denmark, Norway, Finland, Austria and other countries are marching in the footsteps of their brethren and during the whole period since the second World War have been fighting furiously against the peace-loving and democratic forces of the peoples. Contemporary right-wing social democracy, in addition to its old role of flunkies of the national bourgeoisie, has turned into a spy-ring for foreign American imperialism and is carrying out its dirtiest assignments in the preparation for war and in the struggle against its own peoples."

24. While the socialist movement has been traditionally Communism's most dangerous enemy, one would think that if a united front policy were now to be followed, this historic antagonism would have to be played down for tactical purposes. An alternative policy that might be followed by the foreign Communist parties would be the encouragement in such countries as Western Germany or Japan, of those people of known nationalist, chauvinist views with the eventual hope of enabling these forces to come to power, setting the stage for eventual capitalist rivalry with the United States.

25. This again is mere speculation as it is too early to foresee the form of the new Communist tactics. They well might be a combination of a united front policy in certain countries such as France and Italy, the encouragement of nationalist movements in such countries as Germany and Japan, and the maintenance of the "hate America" campaign in a continued attempt to isolate that country from its allies.

26. One final aspect of the two documents under discussion is, I think, worth bringing to your attention, and that is the supreme confidence of the Stalin article and the almost overweening arrogance of the Malenkov speech. There is no doubt that the Soviet Communists, on reviewing the world picture since the last party congress, have good reason to feel pleased with their enhanced political position in the world, and this, together with their improving industrial production, is probably the cause of such evident confidence. It is important, I think, to be aware of this attitude for, while it leads the Soviet leaders completely astray in any attempt to assess the strength of the free world, at the same time it will, I think, make it almost impossible for the West to carry on any serious negotiations on outstanding problems for a good time to come.

27. To summarize I think the following conclusions might be drawn:

a) According to the Soviet view, the world is de facto divided into two diametrically opposed systems. The capitalist economic system is declining and the Communist increasing. In spite of much written in the past on the subject, a clash between the two is not probable in the near future, though internecine struggles in the capitalist world are a possibility.

b) As a result of the division of the world in the economic as well as the political field, Soviet economic policy will move towards an ever increasing integration of the various economies of the Soviet bloc so as to complete economic autarchy and at the same time build up a strong centralized economic weapon with which to accomplish communist international objectives.

c) The Soviet Union does not plan an aggressive war at this time but will continue the cold war using new tactics made necessary by Western counter measures such as NATO and the increasing integration of the West. These new tactics might possibly involve a continuation of the "hate America" campaign to isolate the United States, encouragement of nationalist chauvinism in such strong industrial nations as Germany and Japan, and a return to a united left-wing front with the socialists in such countries as the United Kingdom, France and Italy.

d) Internally the Stalin article and the Malenkov speech will have the effect of increasing the confidence of the Soviet people in the strength of their country and ideology, at the same time reassuring them about the danger of war. It should also go far towards increasing the prestige of the Communist Party and its leaders.

28. I am enclosing the JPRS translations of the complete article by Mr. Stalin and that portion of Mr. Malenkov's speech dealing with international affairs. I apologize for the length of this despatch, but the very great importance of the two documents I have analyzed made it difficult to be more brief.

DESPATCH 947

Moscow, October 27, 1952

SECRET

SOVIET FOREIGN POLICY

Reference: My Despatch No. 863 of October 9, 1952.

I have attempted over the past few weeks to send reports on the various important new developments in Soviet internal and external affairs. Now that the delegates, both Soviet and foreign, to the 19th Party Congress have departed and we have had a chance to sift through the torrents of oratory, it is time to try to estimate what the general effect has been. In this despatch I shall confine myself to foreign policy. In a later one I shall try to analyze the internal significance of the Congress.

2. It is, of course, impossible completely to separate the two and one or two facts from internal affairs are clearly important for a report on Soviet foreign policy. The first is that Stalin is without a shadow of a doubt still fully in control of the Party and the country and his authority has been even further enhanced by the Congress. The second is the decision to announce the second post-war five-year plan. The third is the apparent lack of any serious dissension within the Party.

3. The significance of these three facts is that we must concede that internally things are probably going well and that the control of the country, of the Soviet bloc, and of the other Communist Parties throughout the world is complete and unchallenged. I doubt, in fact, if the Congress could have been held if this situation had not existed.

4. You will recall that Mr. Kennan suggested to me early in September that there had been a period of indecision and hesitancy in Soviet policy dating from late 1950 to this summer, and that during the summer whatever caused these hesitations had been eliminated. Certainly within the last two months the Soviet leaders have shown a surer grasp of affairs and a new note of confidence could be detected. This note of confidence, almost of over-confidence, has been struck again and again, both in Stalin's article and speech and in the speeches of Molotov, Malenkov, Bulganin, Beria and others. And unlike the blustering report of Beria at last year's celebrations of the 7th November, it seems to be based on a new and more optimistic estimate of the world situation.

5. According to this estimate, the Western Powers, while still very strong, are running into economic difficulties which are likely to increase because the world market no longer exists and is divided between the communist and capitalist systems, the latter of which is continually shrinking. This is more likely to lead to dissensions and wars between the competing capitalist powers than a war between them and the USSR. This danger nevertheless exists because the Anglo-American imperialists need to prepare for war for their own purposes. If it should come, the Soviet Union, though bent on peaceful purposes, can nevertheless beat off any new aggressor.

6. Improbable though some aspects of this assessment may appear to us I think we must accept the fact that it is probably believed by the majority of the Soviet leaders. The extent to which they think capitalist dissension will lead to internecine strife is a matter of doubt. Nevertheless the Soviet press since the Congress has been making great play of "contradictions in the camp of the imperialists", in particular of the recent contretemps in Franco-American relations, the complicated relationships and disputes between the Western European countries over the EDC and Schuman Plan, Anglo-American contradictions, especially with regard to non-participation by the United Kingdom in Anzus, dissatisfaction among the vanquished, Western Germany, Japan and Italy, with the United States "diktat" and so on.

7. There is, of course, a considerable difference in degree in what is published for public consumption and what is considered by the Soviet leaders as facts on which to base action. Even dismissing the idea that early war between the capitalist powers is probable, the Kremlin nevertheless would not be unjustified, on the basis of the biased reports that likely reach it, in deciding that the unity of the West was not so sound as originally believed. Added to the political squabbles would be the Marxist interpretation of the inevitability of increasingly bitter competition for a shrinking capitalist market, and the reports of growing anti-American sentiment in Western Europe, Japan and Germany. I think then that the Soviet leaders have probably seriously come to the conclusion that while the Western alliance certainly represents a very serious threat not only to the further expansion of their power, and even of an eventual attack on the USSR, in the long run the internal contradictions in the Western camp will emasculate it and lessen the danger to them.

8. In my despatch No. 654 of October 15, 1951, you will recall that I examined the new theoretical interpretation by the Russians of "capitalist encirclement" which was proclaimed to be no longer just a geographical concept, but rather a political concept. It is interesting to note that neither Stalin nor Malenkov mention this old bug-bear at all. It is possible that they decided it was no longer dignified to describe a great power, and its bloc, as capable of being encircled, or it may be that it just no longer fits into their present picture of a world more or less evenly divided between the Soviet and capitalist systems. In any case it is further proof of the developing picture of Soviet confidence in themselves.

9. The nature of the Fifth Five-Year Plan, insofar as one can accept Soviet statistics, and the decision to make public its existence, point also to Soviet confidence in their ability to avoid war in the near future. The decision to announce the plan after it had been secretly in operation for over a year and a half probably means that it was only last summer that they made up their minds that war would not come soon and that the objectives of the plan could be announced and carried through without the necessity of abandonment suddenly for an all-out re-armament drive.

10. The effect on the Soviet public of the new Soviet estimate of the international situation and the relative positions of the two blocs is difficult to determine. While the average Russian has been repeatedly warned that the danger of war still exists and that the West is still very strong, nevertheless the important point for him would, it seems to me, be Stalin's reassurances that war between the capitalist powers is a more likely event, that Western strength is declining relatively and its unity is a fiction, and that capitalist encirclement is no longer important. While the Soviet leaders seem to feel the necessity of painting the blackest possible picture of the international situation in order to justify continued hard work and the absence of consumer's goods, this is usually alternated with occasional reassurances, often from the mouth of Stalin himself, that war can be avoided. This time, however, they seem to have overdone it in the other direction. If there is any tendency on the part of the Soviet population to relax as a result, I am sure we will shortly have a new tack intended to correct the picture for internal consumption.

11. Insofar as the Soviet public is concerned I think the Stalin article must have been directed towards three specific types of doubters or latent critics: first, the purists who wondered if Soviet internal and external policy was not pulling the country away from the goal of communism; second, the sceptics who doubted that communism could ever be achieved either in the USSR or in the world; and third, those who must have had doubts about the efficiency of Soviet foreign policy which had only succeeded in creating a solid anti-Soviet alliance and brought close the danger of war. To the latter, Stalin re-affirms the doctrine of the inevitability of the capitalist alliance breaking up, and reassures them that the USSR can take care of itself.

12. To return to the question of the Soviet belief in increasing contradictions among the capitalist powers, it would seem logical for the Soviet leaders to attempt to hasten the process of disintegration of the North Atlantic Alliance. Both the Italian Ambassador and the French Chargé d'Affaires think that a new tactic may in time be evolved to try to weaken the strength of NATO in France and Italy. Their reasoning is based on the strength and importance of the Communist Party in these two countries, the potential amount of uneasiness with German policy and the scale of re-armament, and in the case of Italy, the special reference to it both by Stalin and Malenkov. Certainly Stalin's new directive to the foreign communists could have little chance of success except in France and Italy.

13. As regards the United Kingdom, there is nothing so far to indicate any new Soviet policy, and the official speeches at the Congress continued to refer to Anglo-American imperialists. However, the differences in the Labour Party have been fully reported by the Soviet press, and disputes, or potential disputes, between the United Kingdom, France, Germany and the United States are clearly being very carefully followed. It may be that Mr. Gromyko's task will be to assay the moment when he thinks a new Soviet line towards the United Kingdom would have the greatest effect.

14. The presence of practically all the important communist leaders from the outside world at the Party Congress, their actual participation in its sessions, and the fact that Stalin's one intervention was addressed to them, is further proof, I think, that the Russians still attach more importance to working with them and other groups not favourable to the governments of their countries, rather than by direct diplomacy. In other words, even if the Russians decided it was worthwhile trying to detach the United Kingdom, France, Italy and other Western European countries from the United States, the method used, inefficient though it might seem to us, would still be that of appealing directly to the people over the heads of their governments. It is interesting to note, however, that Stalin seems well aware of the limitations of the "Peace" movement in this connection.

15. The first United States reaction to developments (Mr. Acheson's and Mr. Stevenson's speeches) predicting a major shift in Soviet foreign policy may well be right, but I personally do not see on what it is based. Certainly, insofar as relations with the United States are concerned there is no sign of betterment. They have, in fact, declined rather spectacularly in the last six weeks and I think are likely to continue to be strained. But this of course, might fit in very well with some attempt to woo the European allies, as I suggested in my despatch No. 866 of October 8,† concerning the Soviet expulsion of Mr. Kennan. The anti-American press campaign continues but has lost the intensity it reached last spring.

16. It seems to me that what has happened may be something along the following lines. Over the previous year and a half there was considerable doubt among the Soviet leaders as to the degree of seriousness of the international situation, with some of them advocating the necessity of a modification of Soviet policies to lessen the danger of war and split the anti-Soviet alliance; and with others insisting on holding firm and perhaps even advocating a preventive war. By July both the extremists had probably been over-ridden and a firm estimate of the situation had been worked out based on a kind of middle-of-the-road policy. In other words the period of post-war military or revolutionary expansion of Soviet power is ruled out; but at the same time so is the defeatist policy. I think the United States estimate of what the Party Congress decided, as indicated by Mr. Acheson's speech, might have been applicable a year ago, but is wrong now. The whole point of the new Soviet position seems to be that no change of policy is necessary. I have checked my impression on this with the United Kingdom Embassy and they agree with this interpretation.

17. If then, the present Soviet assessment of the situation is sufficiently optimistic to warrant their continuing their present policies without major modifications, this has, nevertheless, certain advantages from our point of view. It means, first, that the Russians are not so worried about a Western military build-up aimed at an eventual attack on the USSR that they need launch a preventive war. It also means in effect that they recognize the division of the world into two systems and, in spite of Stalin's encouraging message to foreign communists, the temporary acceptance of a stalemate insofar as the spread of communism is concerned.

18. The danger in the situation arises, however, precisely from the optimistic assessment of the situation by the Russians, based as it must be on a number of serious miscalculations. In the first place, it means that while recognizing that the danger of war exists, the Russians are not prepared in theory to compromise to eliminate or minimize this danger. In practice, however, I think they would go slow in areas where they think their interests were not of first-class importance in order to avoid a general conflagration. Nevertheless, I think the present Soviet attitude has increased the possibility of incidents in the cold war setting off a dangerous chain reaction.

19. The second danger lies in the fact that if the Russians are capable of making serious miscalculations in such fields as the relative strength of the capitalist economies, the position of the bourgeoisie and communists abroad, and the possibility of war between capitalist countries, then they are equally capable of making miscalculations in other sectors which might have most serious consequences. I have a feeling, however, that these miscalculations are based more on theoretical, Marxist interpretations of the long-term situation than on practical incidents in Soviet-Western relations. Provided we can make our position perfectly clear on every possible point of conflict, then I think such miscalculations as the Russians made over Korea and the Berlin blockade need not arise again.

20. Apart from the immediate future, however, the prospect seems to me singularly bleak. Barring some unforeseen event, the Soviet Union appears to be relatively free from serious internal political or economic difficulties, completely in control of the foreign communist parties, unquestionably the master of the Eastern European satellites, and so far as we can tell, still working closely with its Chinese ally. It means that, full of self-confidence about their own actual and potential position in the world, the Soviet leaders feel no need at present to change the policy of cold war.

21. Even more important, I think, is the effect this will have on Soviet relations with the Western world when our re-armament has progressed far enough to permit the "negotiations from strength" so often proclaimed as the Western goal. In my despatch No. 840 of September 30+ concerning United States policy towards the Soviet satellites I said I did not believe the Soviet authorities would retire voluntarily from their positions in Central and Eastern Europe. I am now more convinced than ever that the USSR is not prepared to give way on any major issue in order to improve relations with the West, or lessen the danger of war. Whether a further increase in our strength would be able to change the Soviet attitude is a moot point. It would depend to a certain extent on the Soviet estimate of our strength and determination, which up to now does not seem to have been particularly accurate.

22. We have passed safely through two dangerous periods, the first between 1946 and 1950 when the countries neighbouring on the USSR lay unarmed and defenceless before Soviet might, and the second from 1950 to the present when the Soviet authorities were undoubtedly alarmed and uncertain about Western intentions and might easily have resorted to the expedient of a preventive war. The danger of the coming period, before Western rearmament is complete, lies in the false Soviet estimate of the relative strength of the two blocs, and the apparent determination of the Soviet leaders to continue the policy of the cold war unchanged, though possibly concentrating even more on portraying the United States as the enemy and trying to isolate it from its allies. Given growing United States exasperation with the situation of neither peace nor war, and Soviet self-confidence, I think there will be a real danger of minor clashes turning into something more serious.

23. But the really great peril lies in the period when our rearmament is completed and the two great giant blocs face each other fully armed. Our reasoning up to now has been based on the feeling that the Soviet authorities would recognize that their policies had not only not produced results but had led to the brink of war with a united West. Up to now Western policy has stopped Soviet expansion, but it does not seem to have brought about any fundamental change of heart on the part of the Russians. Perhaps, if we can increase our defences according to schedule and without impairing our basic economies or the unity of the Atlantic world, the Soviet leaders will re-examine their premises and come up with a revised and more realistic estimate of the situation. But there is a good chance that they will not, and I submit that we should keep this in mind in determining our future policies.

Moscow, November 25, 1952

SECRET

19TH CONGRESS OF COMMUNIST PARTY — INTERNAL DEVELOPMENTS

Reference: My despatch No. 947 of October 27, 1952.

In my despatch under reference I attempted to estimate what the general effect of the Congress had been on Soviet foreign policy. In the present despatch I shall submit a few reflections on the internal aspects of its work. Unfortunately, in spite of the vast number of speeches and reports, the number of facts we have from which to proceed is still very small and conclusions therefore have to be pretty speculative. I shall try to avoid repeating information sent in my more detailed despatches covering the work of the Congress, but simply try to give an overall picture.

Position of Stalin

2. I think the first important fact which can be adduced from the Congress is that Stalin is still firmly in control of the Party and the country and that no one stands near him in prestige or importance. So far as I can observe from Stalin's two recent public appearances, he is in good health and spirits (see my despatch No. 975 of November 11, reporting on the 7th November celebrations).† This is the first time in many years that he has appeared at either the Bolshoi Theatre meeting on November 6 or the parade in Red Square on November 7, and he would hardly risk the latter particularly if he were not in good shape. Furthermore the thunder of the Congress was stolen by the publication of Stalin's Bolshevik article a few days before the meeting of the delegates, so that even though the main report was given by Malenkov, the important working document was, in fact, Stalin's article. The foreign speculation which has gone on intermittently for the last three or four years, that Stalin was either dying or a "prisoner of the Politburo", we can now confidently dismiss as the nonsense it clearly was.

The Succession

3. The question of the succession, insofar as we can tell, has been left unsolved. Molotov opened the Congress with a brief speech but took no other reported part in the proceedings. When I saw him side by side with Stalin at the 6th November celebration, I thought he looked like a very tired old man, older in fact than Stalin, who is 10 years his senior. I wonder, therefore, if Molotov can be a serious contender for Stalin's role since, if the latter should hold on for another few years, I would think Molotov could hardly be in a position to take over.

4. Malenkov certainly had the next leading role in the Congress by the choice of him to give the long keynote speech. It was, however, a singularly uninspired and unoriginal effort and throughout the entire report went the theme of adulation of Stalin. It was presumably not given by Stalin because he did not feel up to the 5 hours required for reading it, but it is in every sense a mere reflection of Stalin's thinking. Apart from the report nothing was done publicly at the Congress to encourage the idea that Malenkov would be pushed forward further into the limelight in order to prepare him, and the Soviet public, for taking over eventually from Stalin. He now holds more positions than any other important Soviet leader except Stalin, and I think we can assume from this that he is the favourite in the race. But it is also clear that Stalin is determined for the time being to carry on himself and has yet to decide finally on his successor. And certainly from my observations of Malenkov, and the little I have picked up in conversations with Russians, a very great public relations effort will be needed to "put Malenkov across" to the Soviet public. He is most unattractive physically with a cold and supercilious air, lacking completely the warmth and strength that Stalin's personality commands.

The Location of the Centre of Power

5. The abolition of the Politburo and Orgburo, and the creation of a Praesidium of 25 members plus 11 candidate members, and the enlargement of the Secretariat and the Central Committee, make it more difficult than ever to determine where the centre of power is located. Attached to this despatch is a chart I have worked out listing all the members of the Praesidium and a few candidate members, and showing other important party jobs held by them.† I have also listed them according to their appearance at the celebrations of the 6th and 7th November. While some of the members of the Praesidium were certainly taking parades in other parts of the country, such as Andrianov in Leningrad, others were not mentioned at all and I think in general it is safe to assume that attendance at these functions is practically concomitant with being close to the centre of power.

6. These calculations show that only Stalin and Malenkov are to be found in all five columns. Of the remaining members of the old Politburo, except of course Andreev and Kosygin, who have been demoted, Beria, Molotov and Kaganovich fall in four columns, but they are not members of the Secretariat; Ponomarenko and Krushchev in four, including the important Secretariat; while Mikoyan, Bulganin and Shvernik are only in three. Voroshilov, incidentally, was not mentioned in the celebrations and it is rumoured that he is ill. The three most important new men are clearly Suslov and Aristov, who occupy four columns, including the Secretariat, and Saburov who is in the Revision Commission. I would also add Pervukhin who, though he is not on either the Secretariat or the Revision Commission, was chosen to deliver the annual report to the Party on November 6. I have also listed the remaining members of the Praesidium and candidate members from which one can get an idea of those likely to be heard of most in the future — Pegov, Brezhnev and Ignatov. Mikhailov, while a member of the Secretariat, is too old to be called a coming man. Kuznetsov, however, though on neither the Secretariat nor Revision Commission, seems likely to play a more important role in the future.

7. In the past it was fairly easy to calculate who was in the group which clearly ran the USSR because they were always carefully listed in order of precedence on each May 1 and November 7. This year, however, Pravda simply referred to those who appeared in the place of honour as a group of Stalin's closest friends and advisers. It is likely therefore that the inner circle will become more difficult to discern and little information will be forthcoming about the parts played by individual members of the Praesidium. All I can venture to say now is that Malenkov seems to be the first lieutenant of Stalin; that Molotov, Beria and Kaganovich of the old Politburo continue to hold their own; that Voroshilov, Shvernik, Mikoyan and Bulganin occupy a secondary role; that Krushchev seems to be the person who has made the greatest advance; and that of the newer members the most important are Ponomarenko, Suslov, Aristov and Saburov; while Shkiryatov is still Chairman of the Party Control Commission, a position he has held for many years, and therefore a power in the Party. It should be noted, incidentally, that all the members of the Secretariat were in Moscow for the 7th November celebrations, probably a further indication of the importance of this group.

Reasons for Holding the Congress

8. It is still not entirely clear why the Congress was held at this time. It has not decided on the succession nor formulated any new programme, though it has set up a Revision Commission to draw up a new set of Party directives, the first since 1917. The Congress has approved the 2nd Post-War Five Year Plan in accordance with previous practice, but this was obviously not necessary, particularly as the Plan had actually been in operation for a year and a half. According to the Constitution of the Party it was obligatory for the Congress to approve the new by-laws and especially to approve the abolition of the Politburo and Orgburo and the creation of the Praesidium.

9. I think it probable that the Politburo had decided that they had mastered the worst of their post-war problems, that things were going relatively well internally and that the external situation was not so serious as first imagined. Therefore the time was ripe for a display of strength, for the despatch of certain business which could best be done by the Congress, and for the closer association of the rank and file with the party hierarchy.

10. I mentioned in an earlier despatch last spring that I thought the intensive party meetings throughout the country, including some pretty thorough shakeups, as in Georgia, might be the prelude to the All-Union Congress. Looking back on it it seems probable that preparations had in fact been going on for a great deal longer than that. The Russian Secretariat of the United Kingdom Embassy claims they may have started in 1948 and ideological foundations can be found in the linguistics dispute of June 1950. In any event one of the main tasks of the Congress, to shake up the party machine, was largely done before the Congress met. There were very few surprises at the Congress itself except in the anticipated infusion of new blood into the upper brackets and the attempt to broaden the basis of the governing organs by bringing in regional party bosses, technicians, intellectuals and responsible ministers.

11. The Congress certainly accomplished one of its purposes in permitting the Party to broadcast to the Soviet people and to the world its estimate of its accomplishments since March 1939, when the 18th Congress was held, and the list of achievements is truly great. Furthermore it permitted the summoning together of a most impressive array of foreign Communists and heads of governments from half a dozen countries of the Soviet bloc. Such a gathering could not and would not have been held if the Soviet leaders had not resolved among themselves any doubts or dissensions which may have existed over the past year and a half.

12. Certain "contradictions" in the Soviet society had undoubtedly been of concern to the Soviet leaders for some time, and the Congress may have had as one of its aims to outline these problems and to advance solutions in the form of tightened discipline and centralization of power and control. Whether this policy will be successful in the long run is a question I shall discuss further below. The main "contradictions" which, it seems to me, were revealed by the Congress were:

- a) Between the Party hierarchy and the rank and file;
- b) Between the Party politicians and the experts or technocrats;
- c) Between town and country, or between industry and agriculture;
- d) Between intellectual and manual labour, or between theory (i.e. bureaucratic planning) and practice.

The Hierarchy and the Party Rank and File

13. With regard to the question of lessening the gap between the party hierarchy and the great mass of the party and people, the confrontation of the hierarchy and the apparat, which Mr. Kennan mentioned to me as one of the significant things likely to arise from the Congress, hardly had a chance to take place. The delegates were apparently selected with the greatest of care and the whole proceedings streamlined in a most masterful way. As is not very surprising, the whole Congress was organized so that there could in fact be no participation by the delegates. The speeches and interventions were all planned in advance and took place right on schedule with the applause equally being limited in accordance with a time-table. I got this information from the Finnish Minister who had it from Ralph Parker, the correspondent of the London Daily Worker, hardly an unsympathetic observer.

14. Of the 235 members and candidate members of the Central Committee not one is what could really be called a "working-man." I doubt even if the remaining delegates could accurately be described as a cross section of the inhabitants of the country, or at least of the three classes on which the Party is supposed to rest — the workers, the peasants and the intelligentsia. Many of them possibly were originally but by the time they reached sufficient eminence to be chosen as delegates to the Party Congress they had long since attained the upper brackets of either the Party or State bureaucracy. It must be admitted, however, that a Russian Communist's idea of active participation undoubtedly differs widely from ours, and just the fact of sitting in the Great Hall of the Kremlin together with the leaders of the country and being permitted to raise his hand when required may constitute participation for him.

The Politicians and the Experts

15. I will not go again into the question of the apparent attempt of the Party to assimilate the state bureaucracy and technicians into the Party hierarchy, as I have covered it in detail in my despatch No. 900 of October 23.<sup>1</sup> Suffice it to add here that this process, which is a logical one in any case, seems well under way. The Party bureaucrats and the state managers and technicians are becoming more closely identified in the one thing which they have in common — the protection of their class interests. As for the remaining 190 or more millions who are neither party members nor top bureaucrats, the class division is great and growing deeper. The interest of the average Russian in the Party Congress, was, so far as one could make out, practically non-existent.

Town versus Country

16. Stalin's article revealed that there were a number of people who were anxious to bring about the removal of the contradiction between town and country (i.e. between industry and agriculture), which is the main one that stands in the way of communism, as it entails the retention of such remnants of capitalism as commodity production and exchange, the law of value, and the monetary system. As a means of removing this contradiction, many communists advocated the true Marxist proposal of giving to the kolkhozes their means of production. But this went against the policy of state control of agriculture undertaken with the amalgamation of the kolkhozes and Stalin, in line with this policy, decreed that the real way to remove the contradiction would be to take away from the kolkhozes the products which they have as their property and sell on the market, and to gather them in gradually into a system of straight product exchange under the control of the state.

Intellectual versus Manual Labour

17. This could also be called a contradiction between theory and practice or between bureaucratic planning and the material possibilities. The contents of the three expressions are not strictly equivalent but they overlap in the realm of facts. Indeed the intellectuals, the theories they devise and the bureaucrats who would apply them, all have a natural tendency in this type of regime to lose sight of the material possibilities, the actual practice and the concrete conditions in which "manual labour" is plodding along. It is these people who were the most severely rebuked in Stalin's article and it is in opposition to their views that Stalin laid down the very practical conditions which have to be met before the USSR can enter the glorious era of Communism.

The Question of Elan

18. If the Congress had as one of its aims to produce new slogans, new revolutionary fervour, a collective appeal, it singularly failed. So long as a new class is for all interests and purposes consolidating itself here, and so long as the split between top and bottom even in the Party itself remains so great, the problem of restoring in some way the great feeling of collective drive that existed before, during and even immediately after the war is a great one. Mrs. Sohlman, the Russian-born wife of the Swedish Ambassador, told me that she visited some of her relatives in Leningrad in 1930 when she came with her husband on an official trip to the USSR. Her people had nothing to be thankful to the Revolution for, but nevertheless, she says, they were incredulous that she could be "wasting" her life as a housewife while so much had to be done, and would and could be done. They were filled with enthusiasm for an idea which seemed to them to supersede personal and even party interests. Even Mrs. Sohlman, who has been rather pro-Soviet, admits that this spirit no longer exists though the Government tries to keep it going by tremendous propaganda about the Volga-Don Canal, the reforestation projects and other of the accomplishments of the regime. But they are poor substitutes for the vision of a New Jerusalem.

19. And the strange thing is that Stalin seems to have gone out of his way to dampen the ardour of those who thought it was within sight. In another despatch I am examining exactly what Stalin says are the prerequisites for Communism in the USSR. His remarks are on the whole a practical, and from the realistic Soviet point of view, sensible estimate which may possibly appeal to the rank and file because it refers to things it can understand as prerequisites for Communism. But it is not one calculated to inspire the young and spur on the middle-aged who have had their hopes and dreams of a better life continually postponed from Five-Year Plan to Five-Year Plan.

20. The whole Congress in fact was a paean to the materialistic and practical. Indeed the only speech which carried some echoes of the old revolutionary fire was Stalin's epistle to the foreign Communists and even it was an appeal to modify their revolutionary methods while assuring them that in the end victory would be theirs. I think the recent award of the Red Banner of Labour to the Patriarch of the Orthodox Church is typical of the cynical but practical approach to problems of the present Soviet leaders.

Inefficiency and Corruption

21. You will remember that Mr. Kennan told me his impression on coming back to Russia was that people were now more interested in their own private lives, in cultivating their own tiny plot of land, or building a dacha, than in the collective ideal. He called it "miniature Communism". The Congress, it seems to me, showed that the Soviet leaders are also very well aware of this danger and there were many exhortations to tighten discipline in the Party and the state apparatus and to eliminate inefficiency and corruption.

22. Mr. Malenkov, in his report to the Congress, devoted one section to the necessity of economising in industry as a vital factor in the further advance of the economy. It is clear that the greater utilization of production reserve will have to be reached if the increases contemplated in the Five-Year Plan are to be achieved. Malenkov then went in some detail into wastefulness and uneconomical operation of industries, including rejects, unsatisfactory utilization of production capacities and raw materials. This situation exists not only in heavy industry and light manufacturing but also in agriculture, transportation, trading establishments, and in the administrative bureaucracy. He ended by an appeal to end this state of affairs.

23. In the section devoted to the Party, Malenkov also accused the rank and file of a number of serious defects, errors, negative and unhealthy phenomena in their party-political work. He said that self-criticism and particularly criticism from below, which should be the principal method by which to bring to light errors and weaknesses, has not been fully utilized. Another section was devoted to exposing violations of Party and state discipline, particularly by failing to expose officials who were corrupt or incompetent. The poor selection of candidates for the Party, and their personnel within the Party, came in for severe condemnation, as well as poor ideological work in many local Party organizations.

24. This is not, of course, a particularly new theme and the admonitions of Malenkov vary little from those launched at the various Republican Party Congresses before the summer and in the press during the past year. They have been taken up with a vengeance since the Congress and at the numerous Party meetings now being held at various levels throughout the country they are being repeated over and over again. I do not think they represent any serious malaise in the Party. In a completely one-party, bureaucratic state such as this there must be an inevitable trend towards sloth and carelessness. And since the Party itself must tend to become on the lower levels something like a mutual protection society, it becomes difficult to overcome complacency, weed out the incompetent, keep up the enthusiasm and ideological level, and finally fulfill the task of acting as spur for the rest of the population. The present drive in my opinion is simply one of the periodic attempts to overcome these endemic diseases.

25. This situation is certainly not confined to the members of the Communist Party. For over a year now the press has been publishing an increasing number of exposes of incompetence or corruption in industrial, educational and other enterprises, usually naming names and places. It would be an exaggeration to attach too great significance to them since they have for long been one of the methods by which a monopolistic society has been able to exercise a certain amount of control over those in positions of power. They do tend, however, to reinforce the view that personal interests are re-asserting themselves more and more insistently and that the temptation to hold on to one's position at all costs and line one's pockets is irresistible. In a later despatch I shall send you a cross-section of case histories, as they give a very good picture of the present state of Soviet society strongly reminiscent of Gogol.

Conclusions

26. Conclusions must remain pretty tentative, but on the basis of the above deductions I think one can sum up the results of recent developments as follows:

a) The internal economic situation is probably reasonably sound and has been able so far to meet the demands of increased armament without affecting the standard of living;

b) The internal political situation, while showing some weak points, is on the whole stable;

c) There are no very serious difficulties in the Communist Party itself except those endemic in the system;

d) Stalin is still firmly in power with Malenkov probably his second-in-command; the question of the succession is still unsettled;

e) Some new blood has been let in to the hierarchy, but it still remains very much isolated from the mass of the Party and the Soviet people;

f) The Communist Party bureaucracy is being even more closely identified with the state system; discipline is being tightened and control centralized even more firmly;

g) Marxism in the USSR is going to continue to be adjusted and administered according to a policy of centralization and common sense practicalities, if necessary at the expense of theory; ideology remains, nevertheless, one of the most important factors for the Soviet leaders in determining courses of action;

h) The practical prerequisites for Communism in one country have been laid down, but its achievement again postponed and the ardour of the idealists dampened;

i) The Congress produced nothing which could restore a great collective impetus to the people, and this vacuum still exists;

j) The trend towards the creation of a new upper class continues, and with it the consolidation of new class divisions and interests.

DESPATCH 610

Moscow, July 9, 1952

SECRET

REVIEW OF SOVIET FOREIGN POLICY, JANUARY 1951, TO JUNE, 1952

VI. Canada

25. I doubt if the Soviet authorities had any policy toward Canada except in the context of our membership in N.A.T.O. and our relationship to the United States. We received a good deal of attention, all derogatory, from the Soviet press. The theme was usually the increasing dependence of Canada on the United States and American encroachment on Canadian sovereignty. We were accused regularly of turning the Canadian north into a springboard of United States aggression against the U.S.S.R., and of simply acting as a faithful satellite of Washington. United States economic interest in Canadian industrial development was frequently pointed out, as well as the decline of United Kingdom political and economic "control". In general the Soviet authorities probably consider that Canada is too closely linked with the United States and the Western powers to permit its detachment from this bloc or even the exercise of an independent policy.

26. Relations between Canada and the U.S.S.R. continued to be correct but cool. The dispute about the payment of compensation for the Petsamo Nickel Mines dragged on with a series of notes. The Soviet authorities clung tenaciously to their original theory that payment of instalments of a debt does not have to be in the same currency as stipulated for the final liquidation of the debt. The last instalment was due on December 31, 1951, and the U.S.S.R. was in default to the amount of U.S. $2,916,625. Several approaches have been made since then to the Soviet authorities, so far without success. In spite of repeated requests for talks concerning the reimbursement of the Canadian Government for the industrial equipment shipped to the U.S.S.R. in 1945 after the end of Mutual Aid, the Foreign Ministry had not even acknowledged receipt of our notes.

27. The Soviet Union has still not taken any step to appoint an Ambassador to Canada. Personal relations with Russians in Moscow are non-existent though two members of the Foreign Ministry took the unusual step of dining at the Canadian Embassy. Further travel restrictions were imposed in January on all foreigners in Moscow and the Canadian Government along with a number of other western governments retaliated. So far there have been no incidents though the Military Attaché was stopped in a zone near Moscow supposed to be open.

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

Ottawa, February 1, 1952

The new travel restrictions communicated to our Embassy in Moscow by a note of January 15 from the Soviet Foreign Ministry represent a substantial addition to the list of prohibited areas. In effect, the present situation is that our Embassy staff members are limited to five cities: Moscow, Leningrad, Stalingrad, Tbilisi and Odessa, and to a zone 40 kilometres in radius from Moscow. Even in this small zone around Moscow there are about twenty additional prohibited areas at least one of which begins right at the city limits. Any trip to one of the permitted places beyond the 40 kilometres radius from Moscow must be notified to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, in writing, by the Embassy before the trip is taken. This notification must include such details as date of departure and return and full details of proposed itinerary while absent from Moscow. Normally, the Ministry does not answer these communications but, if the journey is approved, the traveller finds that he is able to buy the necessary train tickets or other tickets from Intourist.

2. We have now been informed that both the United Kingdom and United States Embassies in Moscow have recommended retaliation and Mr. Ford has made a similar recommendation. The State Department has intimated to us that some retaliatory action will probably be taken. While a decision has not yet been reached, it seems likely that the Russians in Washington and New York (other than press representatives and Soviet officials associated with the United Nations) will be required to ask the approval of the State Department in advance of all trips away from Washington and New York, but that there will not be any prohibition of travel. Trips to any part of the United States will normally be approved but if a member of the staff of the U.S. Embassy in Moscow finds that "no tickets are available" for a journey to a permitted area, the next Soviet application may be refused. It is also possible that the U.S. member of the NATO Council Deputies will, in due course, ask whether other NATO governments contemplate any similar action.

3. I agree with our Embassy that the time has come for some form of retaliation, although it is most unlikely that this will help in any way to induce the Russians to relax their restrictions. The argument must be simply the desirability of a reasonable degree of reciprocity in the treatment of diplomatic missions.

4. A form of retaliation similar to that contemplated by the State Department could be adopted without any administrative difficulty. In order to avoid the need to answer every Soviet note on this subject we might instruct the Soviet Embassy only that it must notify this Department, in writing, of any proposed trip farther than perhaps 25 miles beyond the city limits of Ottawa by any member of the Embassy staff. We could require this notification at least one week before the start of the trip. The Embassy would be informed in our original note that provided proper notification was received by the Department it could assume that there was no objection to the journey unless it received notification to the contrary from the Department. This would mean that we would be able to forbid a journey if we should ever wish to do so, perhaps on the grounds that a Canadian in Moscow had not been able to make arrangements to visit one of the permitted areas. The Embassy notification should contain full details of times and places of the itinerary to be followed.

5. It would be essential to take severe action if we learned that these instructions had been violated. Presumably the Embassy would be given notice that the offender must leave Canada within a specified short period. I do not think, however, that any mention of this need be made in our original note to the Soviet Embassy. Although we might answer in advance, in our note, the probable Soviet claim of discrimination, it would perhaps be better simply to send the order to the Embassy without explanation or justification. This is how it has been done in Moscow. It will not be difficult to dispose of the claim of discrimination if one is made.

6. I attach a draft note† to the Soviet Embassy for your consideration if you approve the recommendation in this memorandum. This note was prepared in consultation with representatives of the Department of National Defence.<sup>4</sup>

The following note was delivered to the Soviet Embassy on March 10th:

"The Department of External Affairs presents its compliments to the Embassy of the U.S.S.R. and has the honour to communicate to the Embassy the following regulations with which the Embassy is henceforth required to comply. On every occasion when any member of the staff of the Embassy or any Soviet member of the household of an Embassy staff member wishes to travel beyond a distance of 25 miles from the city limits of Ottawa, the Embassy must communicate, in writing, full details of the proposed trip to the Department of External Affairs or, in the case of a journey by a service attaché or a member of the staff of a service attaché, to the appropriate Foreign Liaison Officer of the Department of National Defence. This notification must be received by the Department of External Affairs, or by the Foreign Liaison Officer concerned, at least 48 hours before the time of departure from Ottawa. In its notification the Embassy must include the following information:

(1) The names of the members of the staff of the Embassy who wish to make the journey.

(2) The means of transportation to be employed at each stage of the journey.

(3) The final destination of the trip, together with full details of the route to be followed at every stage of the journey away from Ottawa and returning to Ottawa.

(4) The proposed date of departure from Ottawa and the proposed dates of arrival and departure for each point of the journey at which it is desired to make a stop-over.

"If the Embassy's notification of a proposed journey is properly submitted to the Department of External Affairs, or to the Department of National Defence, the Embassy may assume, unless it is informed to the contrary, that there is no objection to the trip."

2. We do not expect the rules to be broken, but if there are infractions we will use our discretion in dealing with them.

3. In dealing with the press we will avoid comment on the method of checking the observation of the rules (which is not this Department's responsibility), while trying discreetly to prevent either of the two extreme conclusions from being drawn, namely, that Soviet personnel will be regularly followed, or that no attempt will be made to check their movements.

4. We will try to avoid the suggestion of retaliation and emphasize that our action represents the introduction of a certain degree of reciprocity into the question of travel restrictions.

5. We are as yet not applying the restrictions to the Tass correspondent since we have recently insisted that he is not a member of the Embassy staff or entitled to diplomatic privileges.

TRAVEL RESTRICTIONS ON SOVIET PERSONNEL IN OTTAWA

Reference: Your telegram No. 42 of March 13.

I should be grateful if you would let me know what attitude you intend to take towards applications for travel by members of the Soviet Embassy. Is it the intention to approve all applications, except to those areas already declared restricted; or to refuse a certain proportion of the requests regardless of the destination?

2. We are also interested in knowing why the Tass correspondent in Ottawa is not included in the new regulations since the Soviet regulations in Moscow are applicable to all foreigners, including journalists.

3. It would have been helpful if you could have let us know earlier, or at least on Monday, that you intended to introduce these regulations. We were the only NATO Embassy in Moscow not informed of its government's intentions and it was embarrassing for us to have to reply to inquiries that we did not know what you intended to do, and in fact did not know that you had introduced restrictions on Soviet diplomats in Ottawa until four days later. Our only official news previous to that had been the item in one of the daily press bulletins last January to the effect that the government was not contemplating retaliatory measures.

DESPATCH S-143

Ottawa, April 1, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

TRAVEL RESTRICTIONS ON SOVIET PERSONNEL IN OTTAWA

Reference: Your despatch No. 237 of March 19, 1952.

In the normal course of events we shall probably not take objection to most Soviet travel restrictions. However, if a member of our Embassy staff in Moscow is unable to get tickets and reservations for a trip to a supposedly permitted destination in the U.S.S.R., we should perhaps turn down the next Soviet request. There may well be other occasions, depending on the proposed destination and other circumstances, when a Soviet trip will be disallowed. The decision to require advance notification of trips, but not to impose any absolute prohibition of travel to certain areas, was based largely on the view, shared by the Department of National Defence, that there was little real security advantage to be gained by prohibiting Soviet travel. On the other hand, the advance notification will be of practical assistance in the task of keeping track of Soviet personnel in Canada.

2. The Tass correspondent was not included in our note to the Soviet Embassy because we have recently insisted that he is not a member of the staff of the Embassy. Although we might have made our note applicable to all Soviet citizens in Canada, this would also have produced complications since there are a good many people living in Canada, other than staff members of the Soviet Embassy and the Tass correspondent, who are technically Soviet citizens. It would, of course, be a simple matter to tell the Tass representative personally that he is subject to these travel regulations, if we wished to include him. However, since there is only one Tass correspondent here, it is not too difficult to keep informed of his moves, and as there is no Canadian newspaper representative in Moscow the question of reciprocity is not directly involved. I shall let you know if it is decided to apply the new regulations to the Tass representative.

3. I regret that you were not notified more promptly of the action taken here to restrict Soviet travel. A telegram was prepared for despatch to you several weeks before our note was presented, but our plans were changed as a result of discussion of the matter at the Lisbon NATO meeting, and by an oversight the telegram giving you the text of our note was not sent immediately after a final decision was reached. There was in fact almost no gap between the time when our note was finally approved and the time of its despatch to the Soviet Embassy.

DESPATCH E-217<sup>5</sup>

Ottawa, May 13, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

VERIFICATION OF VALUES FOR DUTY PURPOSES

There has been cumulative evidence that the invoice values on certain goods imported from Czechoslovakia and Poland, particularly on textiles and window glass, have appeared too low to meet the requirements of Section 35 of the Canadian Customs Act. In some cases, in fact, the duty paid value of these goods has been less than Canadian costs of production for comparable goods. Consideration is now being given to special invoice treatment for imports of this nature. It has been agreed, however, that before this is done the Governments of Czechoslovakia and Poland should be approached on the question of verification of prices on shipments to Canada.

2. As you know, the Canadian customs law provides in respect of imported goods from all sources, that the value for duty shall be the fair market value of such or like goods when sold for home consumption in the ordinary course of trade under fully competitive conditions, in like quantities, and under comparable conditions of sale. Where the goods exported to Canada are not sold for home consumption in the country of export, the value for duty shall be the actual cost of production plus a reasonable addition for administration, selling cost and profit. The law also provides that the fair market value shall be taken to include the amount of any subsidy or drawback of customs duty which has been allowed by the government of any country.

Similar sent to: Cdn. Legation in Warsaw as No. E-122.

3. These requirements are contained in the invoice certificate to which the exporter is required to subscribe. While the determination of the value in accordance with the provisions of the law is primarily the responsibility of the exporter, the law requires that everyone who acts as an appraiser shall, by all reasonable means in his power, ascertain, estimate and appraise the true and fair market value, any invoice or affidavit to the contrary notwithstanding.

4. Exporters or others, unfamiliar with the Canadian customs law, are susceptible to a considerable margin of error, thus necessitating verification. To be in conformity with the law and fair to exporters, values can only be satisfactorily verified by a customs officer, trained in the requirements of the Canadian law, from a personal and full examination of the exporter's domestic sales records and cost records where necessary. The information furnished is, of course, held in strict confidence and used for customs administrative purposes only.

5. The verification of values for duty of information obtained from the exporters' records by a governmental investigating officer is a common practice in many countries, and little or no difficulty has been encountered by Canadian investigators in respect of the personal examination of sales and cost records, when the purpose of requiring first-hand information and its confidential treatment are understood.

6. In the light of these considerations, I should be grateful if you could approach the Czech Government to request their assurance that a Canadian customs officer would be permitted, if necessary, to verify values in respect of exports to Canada. You should also request the Czech Government to facilitate, as far as their own exporters are concerned, the full disclosure of information from their sales and cost records as required under the Canadian customs law. You might wish to point out that the values to be determined are in accordance with the recognized valuation principles embodied in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

7. You will recall that a similar request was made to the two representatives of the Czech Ministry of Foreign Trade who visited Ottawa on December 12 and 13 of last year. No reply to this request has been received to date.

8. The "Confidential" security classification of this despatch applies, of course, principally to the opening paragraph.

VERIFICATION OF VALUES FOR DUTY PURPOSES

Reference: Your despatch No. E-217 of May 13, 1952.

Before acting on your instructions I wish to be perfectly certain that I understand them and to set before you certain considerations which may possibly cause you to amend the instructions.

2. When you ask me to request the Czechoslovak Government to give their assurance that a Canadian Customs Officer would be permitted, if necessary, to verify values in respect of exports to Canada, do you mean that he should conduct an investigation in Czechoslovakia? This seems to be implicit in your despatch under reference, and I should like to have it explicitly stated.

3. I trust that consideration has been given to the action to be taken in the event of Czechoslovakia refusing our request. We should not bluff. If Czechoslovakia refuses to let us verify records, can we under our law and under GATT fix an arbitrary valuation for customs purposes of the goods in question and are we prepared to impose an anti-dumping duty?

4. There is of course the possibility that our man will be permitted to come here and will be shown invoices covering goods sold by a production enterprise to the appropriate export-import monopoly. Such invoices might appear to justify the export prices. The prices charged to the export monopoly might, however, have no logical relationship to the cost of production. In the Czechoslovak planned economy prices frequently exceed the cost of production by several hundred percent, and there is no reason why in some cases they should not be less than the cost of production if the national interest so requires.

5. I am informed by the Commercial Secretary of the British Embassy that the United Kingdom is also having trouble with the suspected dumping of Czechoslovak goods. My British colleague has been good enough to let me have a copy of a letter which he wrote on May 21st to the Board of Trade. I enclose a copy of the letter† and a copy of the memorandum† referred to therein. I think that you will find the memorandum most useful.

6. There is one other consideration that I think we should bear in mind. Although I am sure that you have not overlooked it I think I should mention it here. I refer, of course, to Czechoslovakia's obligation to pay us approximately $3,300,000 in each of the years 1952, 1953 and 1954, in repayment of the credits that we granted after the war. Having to pay us about $3,300,000 a year must give the Czechoslovak government a good deal of pain. If we make it impossible or too difficult for Czechoslovak goods to compete in the Canadian market Czechoslovakia might seize the opportunity to say it could not continue the payments in full. I know of no case in which Czechoslovakia has not honoured its financial commitments but there may always be a first time. The Vice-Minister of Foreign Trade, who failed to persuade us last November to accept less than the amount prescribed in the loan agreement, was purged a few weeks later. His fall from grace may have been — indeed, probably was — due to other causes. I think it is significant however that the Ministry of Foreign Trade rather than the Ministry of Finance appears to be responsible for servicing the loan.

7. I shall not take any action on your instructions until I have heard further from you. If you still think that we should ask that a Customs Officer be permitted to come here, then we should indicate very specifically the commodities in which we are interested and the names of the export corporations concerned.

DESPATCH E-272

Ottawa, June 20, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

VERIFICATION OF VALUES FOR DUTY PURPOSES

Reference: Your despatch No. 418 of May 26.

We are sorry that our original instructions to you in this matter did not entirely make clear the basis on which we were asking you to make formal representations to the Government of Czechoslovakia. The present despatch is, therefore, intended to provide you with a somewhat more detailed statement of the provisions of the customs law which gave rise to our instructions and of the procedures we propose to adopt in the event that our representations to Czechoslovakia and Poland prove to be unavailing. Before dealing with some of the points raised in your despatch under reference, however, I should like to emphasize that the instructions we transmitted to you on May 13 were based on a directive agreed upon by Ministers on May 22,<sup>6</sup> and that it would therefore seem desirable for you to proceed with your formal approach to the Government of Czechoslovakia without further delay, subject to the considerations set out in paragraph 12 below.

2. As you know, the Canadian customs law provides a liberal and generally recognized basis of valuation of imported goods for duty purposes. Its relevant provisions are in conformity with those set out in Article VII of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The customs law does not, however, provide authority for the waiving of appraisal by reason of default on the part of the exporter to supply adequate values information.

3. Under the law every officer acting as an appraiser is required to ascertain, estimate and appraise, by all reasonable means at his disposal, the true and fair market value of imported goods, any invoice or affidavit to the contrary notwithstanding. Where invoice values appear low, customs officers must verify these values to ensure that they are in accordance with the law or, alternatively, to establish proper values for duty purposes.

4. The Canadian customs authorities prefer, and normally secure, the co-operation of exporters in furnishing the information required to establish accurate values. When, however, this co-operation is not forthcoming, appraisers have no choice but to appraise the imported goods on the basis of the best information available and in such a way as adequately to protect the revenue.

5. Verification of values, as you know, is provided for under Article XX, Section I (d), of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. It is understood of course that, in enforcing compliance with their customs law, countries signatories to the General Agreement and those with which Canada has exchanged most-favoured-nation treatment will apply a uniform and non-discriminatory basis of appraisal to importations.

6. It was with these requirements of the law in mind that Ministers issued their directive that the Governments of Czechoslovakia and Poland be asked to authorize and facilitate investigation by a Canadian customs officer of domestic market prices and production costs where necessary. In the event that our previous despatch did not make this point explicit, I should add that investigation in Czechoslovakia and Poland, respectively, is intended.

7. Needless to say, in issuing their directive, Ministers were aware of the difficulties which are likely to be encountered by our customs officers in attempting to establish domestic market values and production costs in these countries on a comparable basis with those prevailing in other countries, and in computing a realistic exchange rate for the currency. Nevertheless Ministers felt that the two governments should be approached formally in this matter before action is taken to apply special invoice treatment to Czech and Polish imports.

8. It is, of course, more than likely that permission for our customs officers to undertake on-the-spot investigations in Czechoslovakia and Poland will be refused. Even if permission were granted, it might well become apparent that domestic market conditions in these countries are not such as to establish values in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Canadian customs law. In either event, the way would be clear for appraisal action on the part of the Canadian customs authorities.

9. With specific reference to the points raised in paragraph 3 of your despatch, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade does not permit arbitrary valuation for duty purposes (Article VII, 2(a)) except as an emergency action subject to the criteria set forth in Article XIX. On the other hand, Article XX, 1(d) expressly provides that, subject to certain requirements, nothing in the Agreement "shall be construed to prevent the adoption or enforcement by any contracting party of measures . . . necessary to secure compliance with laws or regulations which are not inconsistent with the provisions of (the) Agreement, including those relating to customs enforcement . . . ." As for our domestic law, Section 6 of the Customs Tariff provides for the imposition of an anti-dumping duty in the case of articles of a class or kind produced in Canada where the export or actual selling price to an importer in Canada is less than the value for duty as determined under the customs law. This duty is mandatory and not discretionary.

10. Regarding the suggestion made in paragraph 7 of your despatch, I do not think that it would be advisable or feasible to provide the Czechs with a list of the specific commodities which might be subject to investigation by our customs officers or of the export corporations concerned in each instance. It would be impossible for us to say at this stage what commodities are likely to be involved by the time our officers are permitted to undertake direct investigations in Czechoslovakia. Moreover, what we want from the Czechs is an agreement in principle to the procedure provided for under our customs law and not permission for an investigation in the case of certain specified commodities.

11. You will recall that last autumn, prior to the arrival in Ottawa of two officials of the Czech Ministry of Foreign Trade, the Czech authorities intimated that the reduction in the volume of Czech imports into Canada might well have the effect of jeopardizing the due fulfilment of the financial commitment Czechoslovakia had undertaken in connection with the servicing of the post-war Canadian loan. In our reply we made it quite clear that we should have to insist on keeping the servicing of the loan separate from general trade questions. While we do not see any need to raise the question of the loan in the present context at all, you should, if the Czechs should inject the loan issue into the discussions, reiterate our previous position that commercial relations cannot in any way alter the Czech obligations in respect to the loan.

12. Subject to these considerations, of which Ministers were aware when they formulated their directive to proceed with representations to the governments of Czechoslovakia and Poland in the matter of value for duty purposes, it has been agreed that your approach to the Czech Government should be delayed until immediately after July 1. As you know, the semi-annual interest payment of $125,000 on the loan to Czechoslovakia is due on that date.

2. The Czechoslovak Government has in effect rejected our request that Canadian customs officers be permitted to visit the plants in Czechoslovakia where goods are manufactured for export to Canada. Their suggestion that precise questions concerning domestic prices and production costs be submitted to them in writing will no doubt be considered in the light of the considerations mentioned by Mr. Rogers in his despatch No. 418 of May 26. On the basis of the reply of the Czech Government to your representations, it would seem to be clear that Canadian customs officers will not be permitted to enter Czechoslovakia for the purpose of verifying values for duty in respect of exports to Canada.

In the circumstances, we are proposing to proceed with the implementation of the Cabinet directive of April 22, 1952. Accordingly, we would ask you to notify the Czech Government that, in the case of goods imported from Czechoslovakia whose invoice values appear to be too low to meet the requirements of Section 35 of the Customs Act, Collectors of Customs and Excise are being instructed that the goods in question are to be appraised under Section 38 of the Customs Act at an advance over invoice values to be determined by the Collectors.

We should like you to let us know by telegram the date on which you notify the Czech Government along the lines set out in the preceding paragraph. It is our intention here to issue the relevant instructions to Collectors of Customs as soon as the Czech Government has been formally advised of the steps we intend to take in respect of Czech exports to Canada.

Ottawa, November 20, 1952

Dear Sir,

Yesterday afternoon I was interviewed by Mr. Zdenek Roskot, Chargé d'Affaires of the Czechoslovakian Legation, and Mr. Josef Velek, their Commercial Attaché from Montreal. They were concerned about the recent action that has been taken to appraise importations from their country at advances up to 50% over the invoice value.

I confirmed to them the information which they had already secured from the bulletin of the Canadian Importers Association as to the commodities affected and, in addition, they were advised that increased appraisal would not be applied to goods in transit on or before November 6th.

It was also emphasized to them that our action was non-discriminatory because during recent months we have increased invoice values against companies in the U.S.A., Great Britain, Italy and West Germany. They raised the question of the propriety of taking such action, having regard to GATT but their attention was drawn to Article 20, Paragraph 1(d), which provides for Customs enforcement.

Velek expressed surprise that this action had been taken because, in his view, his country had not really refused to permit our officers to carry on their investigations. He felt that he personally had been meeting any reasonable requests for information and that this should be sufficient. He also felt that the action was precipitant. In reply we reminded him that as far back as last December, when a Czech trade mission visited Ottawa, we raised this question about the admission of our investigating officers into Czechoslovakia. I also drew his attention to the remarks of my Minister in the House of Commons in May of this year, and the fact that through your Department we have been in communication with his Government about the subject since June.

It seemed clear to us from the Czech Government acknowledgment of our first note that they understood the precise nature of our request and the alternative which they suggested of written answers to written requests could only be regarded as a virtual refusal.

Roskot endeavoured to suggest that there were political implications in our actions but I strongly denied this. It is quite true that some of the newspaper reports have a distinctly political tinge but I stressed to him that in a country like ours, where we have a free press, newspaper men were able to write in any vein they liked about such matters and that their views or statements did not, of course, always coincide either with the facts or with the policy of the Government.

Roskot also made a somewhat cryptic reference to the Canadian loan to Czechoslovakia. The essence of his remark was that they would have difficulty in keeping up the payments if they were unable to trade with us. It obviously was intended to be a sort of veiled threat but I of course told him that as far as we were concerned there could be no connection between the two matters.

In closing, they asked me as to the future and I felt obliged to tell them that we might have to add other commodities to the list; that as far as I was concerned I could see no prospect of any change in our position as long as we were not able to ascertain at first hand in Czechoslovakia the information which we required to carry out the provisions of the Customs Act.

They left me to call upon the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Yours faithfully,

DAVID SIM

VERIFICATION OF VALUE FOR DUTY PURPOSES

1. Czechoslovak Government, in note handed me this morning, describes decision to impose arbitrary valuations as violation of GATT. In verbal comment measures were described as unjustified and our "pretexts" ridiculous. No mention of financial agreement of 1947 was made directly or indirectly. I replied briefly along the line of your previous instructions.

2. Note begins by saying that Czechoslovak Government met the Canadian Government with understanding in this question. Offer to reply to individual questions was fully in accordance with GATT. Canadian Government not only took no note of this offer but adopted one sided discriminatory measures differing from restrictions. Article 20 of GATT gives no right to send customs experts. Moreover it declares inadmissibility of any measures applied in the manner constituting means of disguising restrictions of trade or arbitrary or unjustifiable discrimination. Canadians in measures introduced in unusual hurry and without affording adequate opportunity for consultation in accordance with Article could not constitute disguising restriction on trade between two countries and on international trade with general insight. Canadian Government is held fully responsible for all consequences on further developments of Czechoslovak-Canadian economic relations and is requested to revoke measures immediately.

POLISH ART TREASURES

The treasures remain divided in three lots and held as they have been for some time past. One lot is in the vaults of the Bank of Montreal in Ottawa, a second lot is held in church buildings in Killaloe, Ontario, and a third lot is in the care of Mr. Duplessis.

National Revenue wish to see this before preparing reply.

2. There have been no new developments in the problem and the deadlock goes on. The Poles show no inclination to take the matter to our courts and I believe we are still reluctant to risk unpleasantness with Mr. Duplessis, or to urge the Bank to obtain a court order confirming the title of the present Polish State to the treasures, or to ask the R.C.M.P. to break into the church premises in Killaloe, although the situation continues to be an embarrassment to the Government and to provide Poland with a useful weapon for anti-Canadian propaganda. (It must also be recognized that if Poland retrieved the treasures now the result would probably be a great, and fairly successful, internal propaganda effort to link the present regime with Poland's heroic past and put Bierut in the direct line of descent from Casimir the Great, à la Stalin and Peter the Great.)

3. I am bringing this matter to your attention now for the first time since last April in case you feel that some action should now be taken.<sup>10</sup> I was myself reminded of the problem on December 29th when the Polish Chargé d'Affaires, Mr. Markowski, came to see Mr. Campbell<sup>11</sup> and me in connection with the Polish archives from Tokyo. In the course of our conversation, he mentioned that he had had no reply to a Note submitted a year ago on the subject of the art treasures. This Note, dated December 19th, 1950, revealed that the Poles had found out about the cache at Killaloe, referred to previous Notes on the subject and asked that the objects at Killaloe be turned over to the Polish Legation. As we have nothing new to say to the Poles on this subject, there would seem to be no point in replying to their Note now, especially as they have sent no reminders.

POLISH ART TREASURES

If I raise the thorny subject of the art treasures again it is not for sheer love of a complicated and involved question. I think, however, that this subject should not lie dormant without any action being taken. I would take issue with your memorandum to the Under-Secretary of January 8, 1952, recommending that nothing more be done at present.

Mr. [C.S.A.] Ritchie — I don't think there is any course that we can usefully advise.
A.D.P. H[eeney]

<sup>11</sup>Ross Campbell de la Direction européenne.
Ross Campbell, European Division.

2. You may remember that in September 1949, the question of assisting the Polish Government in regaining the treasures was referred to the Prime Minister. The Minister recommended that a letter be sent to Mr. Duplessis suggesting discussions between officials on the subject. In reply, the Prime Minister raised two questions:

1) Is there any unfulfilled legal or moral obligation upon the Canadian Government with respect to the treasures?

2) What political advantage would there be to Canada in doing anything to give the treasures back to the Poles?

3. The legal point was answered in a memorandum of November 22 entitled "Canada's position in international law with respect to the Polish Art Collection." This legal opinion found that there is an unfulfilled obligation in international law resting upon Canada with respect to the part of the collection in the Quebec Provincial Museum. This obligation arises because this part of the collection was impounded by an organ of the Canadian state, namely, Mr. Duplessis. The Canadian Government is responsible internationally for acts of provincial governments. The legal opinion said that there is no unfulfilled obligation in international law with respect to the two other parts of the collection, that is to say — the trunks held by the Bank of Montreal and those allegedly held by the Church at Wilno.

4. The fact that we are legally in the wrong has, of course, a lot to do with the political aspect. The Poles have criticized us at United Nations meetings and by circulating well illustrated pamphlets on the subject. These attacks, because they have good basis in international law, are quite embarrassing. If our legal position were sound we should not be too thin-skinned about a controversy of this nature with an Iron Curtain country. As our legal position is bad I don't think we should let the matter rest.

5. There is a further possible advantage in taking steps to restore the treasures to the Poles. We have a considerable amount of claims outstanding against the Polish Government. It is possible that the question of the treasures and the question of our claims might be brought together in some sort of negotiation with the Poles. This admittedly involves a risk. It is possible that if we were to link the two subjects that the Poles might indignantly refuse that type of negotiation and renew their propaganda — this time accusing us of obvious bad faith because we had indicated our willingness to negotiate about the treasures. However, if there is any prospect of making headway with our claims it is worth considering linking the two questions.

6. I submit, therefore, that we should take further steps to restore the treasures to the Poles. Incidentally, this is the opinion of nearly all the persons who have commented on the subject on the file. It is studded with references about the desirability of pressing on with this or that course. These references chiefly occur around U.N. Assembly time when consciences are being irritated by the prospect of a further public discussion.

7. The treasures are deposited in part at the Quebec Provincial Museum, and in part at the Bank of Montreal, Ottawa office, and in part (allegedly) in the Church premises at Wilno. We must, therefore, start either with the Bank, with Mr. Duplessis, or with the Church. In early 1951, when this subject was being passed around, the consensus was that it was easiest to start with the Bank. The Bank (as is the way with banks) was not emotionally involved and, in fact, was quite anxious to get rid of the two trunks if it could do so in a decent manner. Accordingly, after an initial approach by Mr. Heeney, Mr. Erichsen-Brown<sup>12</sup> had a long discussion with the Bank's lawyers in March 1951. The upshot of this discussion was that there were two ways for the Bank to give the treasures back to the Poles. The first way was without any court procedure — simply to find that the Polish Government is the proper owner and hand over the two trunks. The Bank would probably be willing to do this with an appropriate letter from us, if we would agree to indemnify them in case of an adverse judgment in an action brought by the anti-Government Polish Custodian in Canada. The Government could not undertake to indemnify the bank. Short, therefore, of a special intervention with the authorities of the Bank by some senior officials, this road seems closed.

8. The second possibility is a court action. If the Polish government will not be represented in the action, there is a chance that the court might award the custody of the trunks to the anti-Government Polish Custodian, who would probably be the only claimant to appear, or the court might declare itself unable to make a ruling as to the ownership of the treasures. The first result would be very unfortunate because, of course, if the court awarded the treasures to the anti-Government Custodian, this would give a better propaganda stick to the Poles to beat us with than they have had up to now. If the Polish Government refuses to be represented in court, therefore, there is a considerable risk that a court action might make things worse and no guarantee that it would result in the return of the treasures. The Polish Government has, up to now, refused to take part in any legal action so that this way also seems closed.

9. If, therefore, we cannot get anywhere with the Bank, there remains the Church and Mr. Duplessis. It seems reasonable that of these we should approach Mr. Duplessis. It is his action after all that has put us in the wrong internationally. He has the bulk of the treasures. If any arrangement can be made whereby he will surrender his treasures to the Polish authorities, it is likely that the other holders would follow suit without too much difficulty.

10. I, therefore, suggest that another approach to Mr. Duplessis be considered.<sup>13</sup> I suggest that, in the first place, we should give some indication of our view as to the Canadian obligation under international law. We might then refer to the Canadian claims against Poland and the possibility of linking these claims with the restoration of the treasures. No doubt, the first approach to Mr. Duplessis should be in general terms and a meeting of officials should be suggested. It is possible that this approach to Mr. Duplessis would be fruitless.

J.P. Erichsen-Brown, Legal Division.

This would not move Duplessis in the least.

On the other hand, he may no longer feel so keenly about the treasures as he did when he first accepted them for custody in the Provincial Museum. He may find that the responsibility of caring for them seems worrisome and there might even be other factors such as the use of the space where the treasures are stored. In any event, we cannot tell what his reaction would be unless we put the question to him.<sup>14</sup>

11. When the matter was last raised with the Prime Minister in 1949, he suggested that any correspondence with Mr. Duplessis be conducted by our Minister rather than by him. He would, of course, want to be informed before any approach was made to Mr. Duplessis.

12. One remaining difficult aspect of the problem is the question of claims for certain of the treasures by Roman Catholic orders or institutions in Poland and by individual Polish persons. The legal position on these claims seems clear. The treasures were brought here by the Polish state and, therefore, should be restored to the Polish state. The question of claims by persons and institutions within Poland for certain of the treasures are really matters to be decided between them and the Polish state. The amount of the treasures about which there are disputes is apparently quite small. It might be possible to arrange that the bulk of the treasures should be restored to the Polish state whereas those articles under dispute might be the subject of some form of arbitration.<sup>15</sup> This might make a settlement with Mr. Duplessis easier.

13. If you agree with the general lines of the argument, I would suggest that you should take up with Legal Division the question of a further approach to Mr. Duplessis.

I still agree with the legal opinion given in my memorandum of November 22, 1949, that there is an unfulfilled obligation in international law resting upon Canada with respect to the part of the collection which is held in custody by the Quebec Government.

2. From the point of international law, therefore, it would be desirable if this obligation could be fulfilled. Still, there are domestic political considerations to be taken into account. POLISH ART COLLECTION

The Minister said to me this morning that he had spoken to Mr. Heeney some weeks ago asking Mr. Heeney to take steps to find out whether the Polish art collection was being properly looked after by those in whose custody it is, i.e., the Province of Quebec and the Bank of Montreal. The Minister wishes to make certain that the record makes it clear that the Canadian Government has brought to the attention of the custodians their responsibility to ensure that the collection does not deteriorate and that this responsibility exists regardless of the ultimate destination of the collection or its ownership.

2. I said that my recollection was that we had made informal enquiries through Mr. Paul Beaulieu<sup>17</sup> some time ago but that we were not satisfied with what we had learned as a result of these enquiries.

3. I also took advantage of the opportunity to remind the Minister that the Legal Division had now given us an opinion that the Canadian Government was responsible under international law for the Polish art collection in the hands of the Provincial Government of Quebec. My understanding of the opinion was that it was based on the fact that once the collection had been seized by the Crown in the right of Quebec, the Crown in the right of Canada was vested with the responsibility in international law. The Minister did not appear to have had this matter brought to his attention before.

4. Could you look into this matter and prepare for the Minister's consideration a communication to the Premier of Quebec in which it is made clear to the Premier that he is responsible for ensuring that the Polish art collection is properly looked after. A similar letter should be written to the Bank of Montreal.

POLISH ART COLLECTION

I have delayed sending the attached memorandum to the European Division as we were re-considering the most effective way of approaching Mr. Duplessis over the question of the prevention of deterioration of the objects in this collection.

2. M. Léger and M. Beaulieu, with whom I have talked about this question, are both strongly of the view that a letter from the Minister to Mr. Duplessis would not achieve the object intended and would act on M. Duplessis as an irritant. If our only aim is to keep the record straight, there might be something to be said for sending such a letter, but if we hope to achieve anything, this is probably not the best way to go about it. It may indeed be questionable whether it would be appropriate for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to write to a Provincial Prime Minister on a question of this kind or whether the approach should not come either from M. St-Laurent or from the Minister of Justice. I understand that M. St-Laurent is in fairly frequent personal contact with M. Duplessis<sup>19</sup> and he might feel inclined to take some convenient opportunity to bring this matter up with the Premier of Quebec. Alternatively, Mr. Garson, who is I believe on fairly close personal terms with M. Duplessis, might raise the matter informally.

3. As you know, M. Beaulieu had an interview with M. Duplessis some time ago on the general subject of the Polish art collection. At that time, he also had a word with the officials of the Quebec Museum charged with responsibility for the collection and he derived the impression that they were taking their responsibilities for the preservation of the Polish treasures seriously. M. Duplessis himself has, I think, made a public statement to the effect that good care is being taken of the collection.<sup>20</sup>

4. A further question arises over the respective responsibilities in international law of the Canadian Government and the Quebec Government. It seems desirable that the Legal Division should consult with the Department of Justice to ensure that they share their view of these responsibilities. I understand that M. Duplessis has been advised by his legal advisers that his Government is vested with the responsibility. I think also that he had made a recent public statement to the effect that he would not return the Polish treasures unless there was a court judgement directing him to do so (I am not sure of the exact wording of his statement). Also I do not think that the position is quite so simple as that "the collection had been seized by the Crown in the right of Quebec." I believe that M. Duplessis may have acquired the collection on some legal grounds and not by out and out "seizure". My suggestions, therefore, would be:

(a) that either the Prime Minister or Mr. Garson rather than our own Minister should approach M. Duplessis to remind him of the obligation to preserve the collection in good condition;<sup>21</sup> and

(b) that the Legal Division should look carefully into the various legal aspects of this matter before any further approach is made to M. Duplessis.<sup>22</sup>

It is now four months since the Polish authorities sent us their most recent note on the art treasures. I should be glad to know if you have taken any action about the treasures or are planning any action.

2. I set out some views on this question before leaving Ottawa in a memorandum of February 27, and I have nothing much to add now. The Legal Division in a memorandum of November 1949 gave the opinion that the

May 10/52 — The Legal Division, some years ago, gave a comprehensive and definite legal opinion. There is nothing in the attached memo which is not covered by that opinion except that I think a very strong legal argument can be made to show that title to the collection [is] vested in the Can[adian] Gov[ernmen]t by virtue of the Custodian's legislation. I gave my views to Mr. Heeney (on file) in this connection. It is now probably too late to pursue this angle. It might also prove politically embarrassing. K.J. B[urbridge]

Canadian Government is responsible internationally for the action of the Quebec Government in depositing the bulk of the treasures in the Quebec Provincial Museum. This action supersedes, with respect to this part of the treasures, the exchange of letters between Messrs. Lanctot and Podoski under which the treasures first entered Canada. It appears that we have an obligation to return to Poland this portion of the treasures. In my memorandum of February 27<sup>24</sup> I accordingly suggested some fresh approach to the Government of Quebec. I have no brilliant ideas about how to make this approach. There is one suggestion, which I believe is on the file in Ottawa, that might be revived. You might suggest to the Quebec authorities that they return to the Polish Government those items about the ownership of which there is no dispute (such as the Wawel tapestries). There could then be further discussions about the remaining items whose ownership is contested.

3. Before leaving Ottawa I suggested that the question of the tapestries might be linked up in negotiations with the question of Canadian claims against Poland for nationalized property. On further reflection I don't think this is a very useful suggestion.

Dear Tom [Carter]:

In the matter of the Polish art collection there is not, I regret to say, any progress to report. This, for the moment, is about all that can be said in reply to para. 1 of your despatch No. 386 of August 4.

The problem has not been shelved — this would be impossible — but in the absence of agreement on whether and how the Quebec Government should be approached, and in the absence of pressure from above to take any steps just now, it looks as though we cannot expect any action for the present.

Ralph Reynolds will be handling the subject until he leaves for Prague at the beginning of next year. I shall also maintain an interest in it until I leave in the later half of November for a trip on the Continent before going to the Imperial Defence College in January.

VERIFICATION OF VALUES FOR DUTY PURPOSES

Reference: Your Despatch No. E-122 of May 13, 1952.<sup>25</sup>

I should like to discuss some points arising from your despatch. In the first place, I think it unlikely that the Poles would permit a Canadian Customs official to come here and examine the domestic sales records and cost records of one or more Polish manufacturers. They might give the authority if they are sufficiently short of dollars. They might even prepare a false set of books for our benefit. The Customs official would, in any case, have considerable difficulty in understanding the costing and pricing system of a Communist State, and the difference between the official and real value of the zloty. Our understanding that the information obtained would be "confidential" would be cold comfort to the Poles. I presume that you do not mean that it should be withheld from interested agencies of the Canadian Government, because this form of scruple in dealing with a Communist State would be somewhat out of place. For these reasons I suggest that the procedures set out in your despatch may not be suitable for Poland, however much they apply to other countries.

2. If we send a note along the lines of your despatch to the Poles I imagine that they would think it an opening move in a programme of restriction of Polish exports to Canada. They might think that this action is linked to other aspects of Canadian-Polish relations and perhaps may consider it a rebuttal to the recent renewal of the art treasures campaign. I doubt if they would regard our action as an administrative step by the Customs authorities.

3. It may be that the information required could be obtained from western countries which conduct considerable trade with Poland such as the United Kingdom and Sweden. The authorities of these countries might have better data than that which a Canadian Customs officer could obtain by investigation here.

4. I have considerable doubts, therefore, whether the presentation of a note to the Poles along the lines of your despatch would have the results you wish and I think that it might be misinterpreted. I am therefore taking no action until you have a chance to consider the points raised in this despatch.

VERIFICATION OF VALUES FOR DUTY PURPOSES

Reference: Your Despatch No. 240 of May 27.

We are sorry that our original instructions to you in this matter did not entirely make clear the basis on which we were asking you to make formal representations to the Government of Poland. The present despatch is, therefore, intended to provide you with a somewhat more detailed statement of the provisions of the customs law which gave rise to our instructions and of the procedures we propose to adopt in the event that our representations to Czechoslovakia and Poland prove to be unavailing. Before dealing with some of the points raised in your despatch under reference, however, I should like to emphasize that the instructions we transmitted to you on May 13 were based on a directive agreed upon by Ministers on May 22,<sup>26</sup> and that it would therefore seem desirable for you to proceed with your formal approach to the Government of Poland without further delay.

9. As you suggest, information secured from Western countries carrying on a considerable volume of trade with Poland might well be useful to our customs authorities for purposes of appraisal. However, this information could not be used before the exporting country has refused permission for the collection of first-hand value and cost data.

10. With specific reference to the considerations raised in paragraph 2 of your despatch, it may well be true that the Polish Government will misinterpret our representations and regard them as a circuitous retort to their latest note on the art collection controversy rather than as an administrative step taken in behalf of our customs authorities. Nevertheless, you will agree that this possibility can scarcely be taken, especially in the context of the nature of our relations with Poland, as an adequate reason for precluding us from taking any action which may be required to bring the invoice values of imports from Poland into conformity with the criteria set up in our customs law.<sup>27</sup>

VERIFICATION OF VALUES FOR DUTY PURPOSES

Reference: Your despatch No. E.225 of August 13, 1952,† and previous correspondence.

On August 28 we sent a further note to the Ministry on the question of verification of values for duty purposes. This afternoon on the invitation of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs I discussed this matter with Mr. Lewandowski, a Senior Counsellor in the North American Section.

2. Mr. Lewandowski mentioned the recent exchange of notes between the Department and the Polish Legation in Ottawa on a specific case dealing with the importation of a quantity of window glass into Canada. He said that the Legation had furnished the Department with the information it had required. The Polish authorities, he went on to say, would be willing at any time to provide in this way complete information on the values of specific shipments of goods imported into Canada from Poland.

3. Mr. Lewandowski observed that the amount of annual Polish exports to Canada was not very large. Mainly such exports consisted of small quantities of articles which were specially produced to meet the individual requirements of Canadian importers. In the Polish view, therefore, it was thought that the provision of information on values in any specific cases might most satisfactorily meet the requirements of the Canadian authorities and make it unnecessary for a Canadian Customs Officer to come to Poland for this purpose.

4. I pointed out that, regardless of the amounts involved, it was a matter for the Canadian Customs authorities of adhering to administrative principle and practice in implementing Canadian law. I think that the Canadian position in this respect, judging from Mr. Lewandowski's comments, is clearly understood by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. It was made equally plain, however, that the solution outlined above indicates the maximum amount of cooperation which the Polish authorities are prepared to extend to us in this matter.

On the basis of the reply of the Polish Government to your representations, it would seem to be clear that Canadian customs officers will not be permitted to enter Poland for the purpose of verifying values for duty in respect of exports to Canada.

In the circumstances, we are proposing to proceed with the implementation of the Cabinet directive of April 22, 1952. Accordingly, we would ask you to notify the Polish Government that, in the case of goods imported from Poland whose invoice values appear to be too low to meet the requirements of Section 35 of the Customs Act, Collectors of Customs and Excise are being instructed that the goods in question are to be appraised under Section 38 of the Customs Act at an advance over invoice values to be determined by the Collectors.

We should like you to let us know by telegram the date on which you notify the Polish Government along the lines set out in the preceding paragraph. It is our intention here to issue the relevant instructions to Collectors of Customs as soon as the Polish Government has been formally advised of the steps we intend to take in respect of Polish exports to Canada.

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

The Foreign Minister Mr. Kardelj asked me to come to his office this morning and told me that it was now evident that drought this past summer was as severe as that of two years ago and that grain crop will be far below requirement. It will be necessary to import considerable quantity of wheat in addition to quantities already under procurement from Canada and Turkey. In these circumstances he desired to make an urgent request to the Canadian Government for a credit of approximately twelve million dollars sufficient to purchase one hundred and fifty thousand tons of Canadian wheat type Manitoba Five, the credit to be repaid at the end of one year though Yugoslavia would prefer a somewhat longer accommodation if that were practicable and would like again if it were practicable to repay part of the loan in pounds sterling. Alternatively he suggested a banking credit guaranteed by Canadian and Yugoslav Governments or by national bank.

2. I told Mr. Kardelj that while our crop report indicated a good harvest, our government operates in all matters under authority of Parliament and I did not know whether any authority at present exists to grant a credit of the kind he had mentioned. I promised, however, to transmit his request at once and assured him, that in view of emergency, we would endeavour to give his government an early reply.

3. Some general observations. In order to avoid possibility of an approach to Canada for help such as this I have been careful not to make any enquiries from the Government as to the extent of the drought but I am satisfied that it has been exceedingly severe. The United States Agricultural expert considers the country requires not one hundred and fifty thousand tons but at least two hundred thousand tons in addition to the amount already under procurement to avert real distress. The loan if made could doubtless be repaid by arrangements from 78, repeat 78, million dollars being granted to Yugoslavia this fiscal year by the United States under agreement to be signed shortly and should be good business. The consent of the Tripartite Powers would, of course, be necessary before any formal agreement is signed whether the loan would be repaid from the United States slice of the tripartite aid or not. Such consent would, however, be readily forthcoming. I should add if wheat were bought from the United States at support prices under the Whiddon MSA amendment it would cost Yugoslavia about four million dollars more and in any case the money that will be immediately available from the first slice of the United States aid is earmarked for the purchase of coke, cotton and other industrial raw materials essential to keep the factories running. Undoubtedly the value of Yugoslavia to the West, both because of its strategic position and because of its example to other satellites, is immense. They have received and are receiving very much less aid than Turkey, Greece, Italy etc., whose contribution to Western security is less and in my opinion their situation merits sympathetic consideration.

It is extremely doubtful that Yugoslav request will be met but before discussing it with Ministers I should be grateful for your advice on the degree of urgency of the delivery of the wheat. This would have a bearing on possible financing procedures.

2. I should also be glad to have further information on your suggestion that a loan if made could doubtless be repaid from $78 million grant being made by USA to Yugoslavia. According to Craig, Director of Supply, MSA, Washington, this grant will be made under MSA and constitutes part of the funds that will be turned over to Yugoslavia by tripartite agreement to which France and United Kingdom are parties. Under rules and regulations of MSA the use of these funds for the purchase off-shore of agricultural products surplus in the United States is impossible. Craig's views seem to be in direct conflict to your belief that consent of the Tripartite Powers would be readily forthcoming. It may be that there is some provision for flexibility in the use of the tripartite aid which is unknown to Craig but it is important that this point be cleared up urgently as it is, of course, closely related to the possibility of a Canadian credit. ## APPLICATION FOR WHEAT CREDIT

Reference: Your telegram No. 112 of October 4.

1. Yugoslav Government has asked for delivery of wheat at Canadian ports by the middle of November. Seeking further information this morning at Ministry it was stressed that wheat stocks on hand or on contract for delivery were not sufficient to last beyond December first. As possible target date for loading at Canadian ports period October 25th to December 1st was mentioned. I explained even if credit were approved by Canadian Government almost at once it would be difficult to commence delivery so soon. In their anxiety to avoid extreme price fluctuations and to arrange distribution to remote famine areas before winter, Yugoslavia may be over-stating the absolute urgency of immediate delivery although it would doubtless be advantageous to them.

2. I got the suggestion of possibility of repayment by arrangements from MSA funds from United States official now absent from Belgrade on inspection trip but checking further with his staff this afternoon feel that this suggestion should be dropped. They point out it would be completely unacceptable politically in the United States even if not specifically prohibited by Act. In any case, repayment from these funds would be a last resort measure, even if technically possible, as Yugoslavia badly needed these funds for other purposes. They are asking for this credit from Canada.

3. Consent of tripartite powers would be necessary as new agreement shortly to be signed will, I am informed, provide that no new financial obligation will be undertaken by Yugoslavia without prior discussion with these powers. Their consent would, I think, be readily forthcoming because if we do not make credit they themselves will have to pay for any wheat imported, diverting funds from other urgent uses for which they are now (group corrupt).

4. With regard Yugoslav proposal that repayment be wholly or partly in sterling, I have now learned from official British sources that United Kingdom Government could not, repeat not, afford to let Yugoslavia transfer sterling to Canada for this purpose. I have not raised this point with Yugoslavs but understand British Embassy intend making it clear to them at first opportunity.

5. In view of foregoing this application by Yugoslavs will have to stand or fall on economic and political merit of seeing them through present crisis. The opportunity to buy our wheat on credit at a very favourable price in comparison with United States support price or price being asked by European producers considerably brightens their forecast of balance of payments position for current year. Details of this position are contained in my immediately following telegram.+ Yugoslav need is great and our harvest is known to be bountiful. In these circumstances, a decision to withhold credit would be keenly felt here.

6. Decyphering of your telegram has proved difficult and in several places we shall have to ask for repetition but in view of the urgency feel I should reply as above at once.

Ottawa, October 7, 1952

WHEAT FOR YUGOSLAVIA

It may be that the Yugoslav Ambassador is coming to see you this afternoon with a request for assistance in financing shipments of wheat. We have had a telegram from our Ambassador in Belgrade conveying an urgent appeal from the Yugoslav Foreign Minister for help in meeting the emergency caused by a serious drought this summer. The specific request is for a credit of $12 million for the purchase of about 150,000 tons of Canadian wheat, Manitoba No. 5. According to Mr. Macdonald's report, the Yugoslav Government would be prepared to repay the credit in full in Canadian dollars at the end of one year, although they would prefer a somewhat longer period and would like if possible to repay part of the loan in pounds sterling.

2. The information which we have received from United Kingdom and United States sources, as well as from our Ambassador, confirms the severity of the drought and the genuine need for substantial additional quantities of wheat over and above the amounts now under procurement from Canada and Turkey. A further evidence of the seriousness of the situation is to be found in the recent press report that the Yugoslav Government is prohibiting the import of less essential goods, as a measure to conserve foreign exchange for the purchase of necessary foodstuffs.

3. You will recall that on previous occasions when the question of giving economic assistance to Yugoslavia has been considered in the Cabinet, domestic considerations have weighed against such aid. A small gift of $45,000 worth of salt codfish (which was at the time in surplus supply) was approved by Cabinet in May 1951 but this is the only direct assistance which has been given. A further gift of salt codfish was made indirectly through UNICEF, when 500 tons out of a total of 800 tons contributed to the Children's Fund was allocated by that Agency to Yugoslavia. The past history of this problem, the recent decision of the Cabinet against military mutual aid to Yugoslavia and the recent unfavourable decision on the Pakistan request for a credit to finance wheat,<sup>29</sup> all appear to militate against extending economic aid to Yugoslavia. On the other hand, there are strong political arguments, as emphasized by two relevant NATO resolutions (to which Canada subscribed) for maintaining a strong and independent Yugoslavia, well-disposed towards the West. Apart from the United States, the United Kingdom and France, which are already extending substantial financial assistance to Yugoslavia, no other NATO power is so obviously able to help in supplying the particular commodity needed in the present emergency, as is Canada.

4. Mr. Pearson intends to raise this question in the Cabinet on Thursday. Meanwhile officials are exploring various possible alternative procedures for financing the wheat, in the event that the Government agrees in principle to meet the Yugoslav request.<sup>30</sup>

WHEAT FOR YUGOSLAVIA

24. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported an urgent request from the government of Yugoslavia for assistance in financing shipments of wheat to help meet the serious food shortage resulting from a severe drought during the past summer. Yugoslavia wished to secure a credit of $12 million to finance the purchase of about 150,000 tons of Canadian wheat, Manitoba No. 5. They were prepared to undertake repayment of the loan in full in Canadian dollars at the end of one year although they would prefer less strict terms.

It was important to keep Yugoslavia as strong as possible. It had probably the most effective army on the European continent outside the "iron curtain" at the present time. Relations with Greece and Turkey were steadily improving and Yugoslavia was an important factor in maintaining the stability of the Eastern European balance. The short term of the credit distinguished the case from that of Pakistan. The kind of wheat involved was one that Canada could well spare.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, Oct. 8, 1952, Cab. Doc. 318-52)†

25. The Minister of Finance understood that, on the basis suggested, the credit could probably be handled under the Export Credits Insurance Act. In the circumstances it might be desirable to meet the request.

26. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said it would be necessary under the Act to have part payment by Yugoslavia or a guarantee. A possibility might be to have Yugoslavia pay 20 percent down with the remainder over one year, if possible, or two years if necessary.

27. The Prime Minister felt it essential that any assistance should be under the provisions of existing legislation and not involve special arrangements.

28. The Cabinet noted the report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning the request from the government of Yugoslavia for assistance in financing shipments of Canadian wheat and agreed that:

(a) he be authorized to inform the Yugoslav authorities that the government would be prepared to arrange for the purchase of wheat on a short term credit basis if it could be fitted into the provisions of the Export Credits Insurance Act; and,

(b) in discussing arrangements for the credit, it be suggested to the Yugoslav authorities that a down payment of 20 percent be made with the remainder payable at the end of one year; and if that were not possible consideration be given to a down payment of 20 percent with 40 percent payable at the end of one year and the remaining 40 percent at the end of two years.

Following Cabinet consideration of the Yugoslav request an aide memoire was today handed to the Yugoslav Ambassador, reading in part as follows:

"The Canadian Government is agreeable to the proposed quantity of wheat being supplied on a basis which would require from the Yugoslav Government a down payment equivalent to twenty percent of the total amount and payment of the remaining eighty percent at the end of a year, if such terms can be arranged under the Export Credits Insurance Act."

2. The Ambassador raised two questions:

(a) whether any part of the credit could be repaid in sterling, and

(b) whether the terms set forth in the aide memoire represented the final word.

He was informed on (a) that for the reasons mentioned in your telegram under reference repayment in sterling would not be feasible and that the credit would have to be repaid in full in dollars. In answer to (b) he was told that the twenty percent down payment should be considered as mandatory and that while arrangements for the repayment of the credit could be the subject of further discussion it was not possible to say whether the terms could be improved. In any discussions you have with the Yugoslav authorities you should be careful not to encourage them to hope for easier terms of repayment.

3. If this credit can be arranged under the Export Credits Insurance Act it will be the first time that the Government has authorized the use of the Act to finance purchase of staple exports such as wheat.

4. It does not seem necessary for you to take any further action at this stage since the Yugoslav Ambassador will be discussing possible arrangements with the Departments concerned. You may wish, however, to let your United Kingdom, United States and French colleagues know, informally, what we propose to do. We assume the Yugoslav Government will, in due course, formally advise the representatives of the Tripartite Powers.

Following from McKinney,<sup>31</sup> Begins:

1. In ambassador's absence I called on Crnobrnja, Assistant Foreign Minister, at his request this morning. He expressed his thanks for favourable decision and said he hoped that details could be settled quickly and that deliveries would commence as soon as possible. He admitted that original Yugoslav proposal to pay in sterling was impractical and said while terms of your decision could be regarded as having been accepted in their entirety, his government would have to use utmost caution before incurring a dollar debt for the total amount. Djermanovic has been instructed to place immediate order for 50,000 tons, but meanwhile Yugoslavs are investigating other supply sources, presumably in soft currency countries. He indicated that it was likely that an order for a further 50,000 tons would be placed in Canada in a few days.

2. As I had already received one enquiry from foreign press I asked whether it was intended to make an announcement in Belgrade. He said he thought that Yugoslav public should be informed at appropriate stage and that simultaneous release in both capitals or any other arrangements you propose would be satisfactory from Yugoslav side. Please instruct me as soon as possible as to what publicity, if any, you intend to release. As Yugoslavs will probably release news at some stage, anyway, my own view is that it would be consonant with our general objectives to take whatever steps may be necessary to obtain maximum publicity benefit within Yugoslavia. A firm order has now been placed by the Yugoslav Ambassador for a total of 150,000 tons of No. 5 wheat.

2. The Canadian Wheat Board this morning issued a notice to the trade announcing that this wheat was to be made available to Yugoslavia at the regular price outside the International Wheat Agreement.

3. The Wheat Board notice to the grain houses contained the following shipping schedule ex St. Lawrence ports:

"For loading last half October, 1952, 70,000 long tons No. 5 wheat. For loading November 1 to 10, 1952, 20,000 long tons No. 5 wheat. For loading November 11 to 20, 1952, 20,000 long tons No. 5 wheat. For loading November 21 to 27, 1952, 20,000 long tons No. 5 wheat. For loading November 28 to close 1952, 20,000 long tons No. 5 wheat."

Financing arrangements were also included in the Wheat Board notice as follows:

"It is our understanding that the Yugoslav Government will make a down payment of 20 percent with the remaining 80 percent to be paid within one year from that date. Export Credits Insurance will be made available to cover the balance of 80 percent at a premium of one percent on the amount outstanding. The Export Credits Insurance Corporation, Ottawa, would cover 100 percent of the amount outstanding, the insurance not to take effect until after payment of the 20 percent, and in the event of non-payment of the 80 percent balance, the exporter would be paid by the Corporation one month after the original due date of the debt. For the convenience of exporters, a specimen copy of the policy that would be issued is attached."

4. The issuance of the Wheat Board notice to the trade makes the information available to the public and we have no present intention of issuing any official press release. Ends.

FAR EASTERN REGIONAL SECURITY PACT

At the present time there is in the Pacific no regional security arrangement comparable to the North Atlantic Treaty. There are, however, three separate security agreements — one between the United States, Australia and New Zealand, another between the United States and the Philippines, and a third between the United States and Japan. The ratification of these three treaties was recommended by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on February 5, 1952, and together with the Japanese peace treaty they were brought to the floor of the Senate on March 14. It is likely that their ratification will be achieved within the next few weeks without much opposition. There is, in addition, an understanding on security between the United States and the Philippines which is effective.

2. The possibility of an over-all Pacific security treaty analogous to the North Atlantic Treaty has been discussed from time to time since the middle of 1948, but no substantial progress has been made because of difficulties such as: (a) the basic problem of which states should be members; (b) the difficulty of getting the various countries which might participate in a Pacific security arrangement to agree to team up with other potential members; and (c) the lack of a community of interest among potential members.

3. The United States Government is not actively seeking to arrange an over-all Pacific security treaty at the present time. In November of last year Mr. Wrong reported: "I would not wish to suggest that thinking here on the matter of a broad Pacific pact has reached a blue-print stage or has even progressed much further than towards the desirability of such a pact." He emphasized however that there was no opposition to a Pacific pact among United States officials but merely a desire not to rush the matter. In the first week of March Mr. Raynor, the Director of the Office of British Commonwealth and Northern European Affairs in the State Department, informed our Embassy in confidence that an approach had been made recently to the State Department on the possibility of bringing about an interlocking of the present security pacts in the Pacific, including Indonesia and Thailand. Mr. Raynor indicated that the State Department had given a cool reception to this proposal which, we assume, was made by the Philippines Government.

4. Australia has hitherto been the chief exponent of a comprehensive security treaty, but has shown signs of caution recently. We were informed in December in the strictest confidence that Mr. Casey received instructions from Mr. Menzies not to take the initiative in this matter with the United States Government. Apparently it was the view of the Australian Government that the main objective should be ratification of the tri-partite United States-Australia-New Zealand security agreement, and that it should be left to others to take the initiative towards any broadening of that agreement.

5. At various times in the past the governments of the Republic of Korea, the Philippines, and Nationalist China have also expressed interest in a broad Pacific security treaty.

6. A comprehensive security treaty might have the advantage of clarifying United States commitments in the Far East. It might also provide machinery for co-ordinating and fitting together the various defensive efforts of the potential signatories of the treaty and, by uniting their efforts, achieve greater effect at less cost. It is possible, but not probable, also that such a treaty and the machinery set up under it might have a salutary influence on several of the reactionary regimes in the area.

7. While the advantages of a Pacific security arrangement are prospective, the difficulties are present. The greatest difficulty of all concerns membership. If the treaty were looked upon as a purely anti-communist instrument, the following might be considered for participation: Japan, Formosa, the Philippines, Republic of Korea, Laos, Cambodia, Vietnam, Thailand, Burma, Malaya, Indonesia, India, Pakistan, Australia, New Zealand, the United States, the United Kingdom, France, the Netherlands, and possibly Canada. Several countries on the list, notably Australia, New Zealand and the Philippines, would probably object to entering into partnership with Japan. A number of the Asiatic states, and especially Burma, could not be expected to enter into an alliance including the Nationalist Government of China. Neither India nor Pakistan would wish to be involved at the present time in view of their stated desire to remain neutral in the East-West struggle. The inclusion of the United Kingdom, France and the Netherlands would raise the complicated question of the role of the metropolitan powers. One of the most immediate problems in this respect would be that of Dutch-Indonesian relations. Mr. Dulles himself has pointed out to the Senate Committee that the problem faced by the United States in the negotiation of a Pacific pact centers on the reluctance of some nations in the area to associate themselves with the United States.

8. Another possible arrangement would be to confine membership in the pact to off-shore states. This still involves the difficulty of getting Japan, Australia, New Zealand and the Philippines to work together. It seems likely that the United States would find it difficult to accept a security arrangement of this sort without Japan. The other argument which has been advanced against such an off-shore arrangement is that it would suggest that the free world was prepared to envisage communist expansion on the mainland.

9. A further principal difficulty would arise from the tremendous differences in resources and internal security of the potential members. Burma, Malaya, Vietnam and the Philippines are in a state of civil war or serious disorder. The situation in Korea needs no description. The Thais are notorious opportunists and it is questionable whether any Thai government could be trusted implicitly to stand by its allies if convenience appeared to indicate the value of defection.

10. If a Pacific security treaty is ever negotiated, it will be the result of difficult negotiations or of some tremendous crisis. With the latter eventuality we are not concerned at present, as it is an unpredictable factor. If a serious attempt is made to negotiate a treaty, however, the question arises whether Canada should be a party. In the past you have taken the line that Canada could undertake in the Pacific no commitment in addition to the already heavy commitments it has in Europe and in Korea. This is still a valid approach. A Pacific security organization would involve not only military commitments but, inevitably, economic commitments to bolster the shaky economies of several of the potential members and to meet their argument that they cannot be expected to fight so long as their standard of living is not worth fighting for.

11. I recommend, therefore, on the grounds of Canada's commitments elsewhere, that you continue to deprecate the idea of negotiating a comprehensive Pacific security treaty at the present time. The network of treaties centered on the United States meets the needs of the situation as well as they can be met in present circumstances. In a comprehensive treaty the United States would still have the controlling voice, but this reality would be obscured by elaborate and expensive machinery. I suggest, however, that Canadian policy towards a Pacific security treaty be re-examined periodically in order that no practical opportunity for contributing to the stability of the Pacific area be missed.

12. Your most recent statements in the House on Pacific security arrangements were made on October 22 and 23 last. You made reference to the three security pacts mentioned above and stated: "None of these arrangements . . . constitutes anything like a Pacific pact." You suggested that "any attempt to negotiate that kind of general Pacific agreement at this stage would not strengthen but weaken security in the Pacific." You assured the House that the Canadian Government was vitally interested in security in the Pacific and that it desired to play a proper part in political, economic and diplomatic matters affecting the area. You pointed out that Canada had not been invited to become a member of the Tripartite Security Treaty. You stated further: "The addition of one country may lead to requests from other countries to join that arrangement [Tripartite Security Treaty] and I believe that it is not desired at this time by the three countries concerned. . . . In the course of time as the situation in the Pacific develops and becomes more stabilized, we hope, it may be possible to use this tripartite agreement, as indeed was indicated by the President of the United States, as a basis on which a general Pacific security arrangement might be worked out.”<sup>1</sup>

RECOGNITION OF VIETNAM, LAOS AND CAMBODIA

When it previously considered this question on February 23, 1950, the Cabinet agreed with the recommendation that “recognition be not extended at this time to the Indochinese states,” although some encouragement to the French and to the new states was given in a sympathetic reference to their establishment in a statement to the House. Since then, the French have continued to urge Canada to extend recognition to the three states and the question has been frequently under review in the Department. Indochina continues to be one of the most critical soft spots in Asia which the Communists are probing. The struggle being waged by the French and Indochinese to hold them in check is relentless and costly. In the context of the cold war, particularly of its intensification in Asia, there is now some political urgency for Canada to reconsider its stand on Indochina.

2. The remarks in this memorandum, while primarily applicable to Vietnam, would have similar application to Laos and Cambodia. The territory of Vietnam, except the delta of the Mekong and Red Rivers and a few garrison posts along the lines of communication, is largely under the control of the Vietminh which has the support of a strong anticolonial nationalist movement. Many of the moderate nationalists are still adopting a “wait and see” attitude toward the struggle for control of the country. There is no apparent alternative to the Bao Dai regime at the present time except that of Communist Ho Chi Minh. Moreover, although the French have not given Bao Dai enough power to satisfy the nationalist aspirations of even some of his supporters, they have given him as much as, or perhaps more than, his weak administration can manage.

3. The United Kingdom, in extending recognition early in 1950, employed the following formula:

“His Majesty’s Government in the United Kingdom recognizes the status of Vietnam as an Associate State within the French Union in accordance with the terms of the Agreement dated March 8, 1949, between President Auriol and His Majesty Bao Dai and recognizes the Government of His Majesty Bao Dai as the Government of that state.”

This formula was adopted by a number of other states including Australia, New Zealand and the Union of South Africa, and falls considerably short of full recognition of a sovereign state and government. The United States extended “diplomatic recognition” without qualification or explanation.

4. Factors for recognition

The military forecast for 1953 points to a continued stalemate in Indochina. There is reliable evidence that France is facing grave difficulties in supporting major military efforts in both Europe and Indochina and in maintaining its position in North Africa. If present trends continue, they may in the long run weaken the French Union’s ability and determination to continue resistance in Indochina. Accordingly, any encouragement which can be given to the Franco-Vietnamese forces to hold on would be desirable.

5. The opinion is widely held in France that it is getting the short end of the stick in its NATO association; while the French alone must bear the responsibility of safeguarding western strategic interests in Indochina, they are being asked to make increased efforts to meet NATO commitments, to approve German rearmament and to work harder toward European unity — under the shadow of severe criticism of their colonial policy on Tunisia and Morocco. Anything Canada could do at this time to improve French morale would no doubt be of assistance in helping them to bear these burdens.

6. Thirty-three governments have thus far recognized the Government of Bao Dai. The list includes the majority of Canada’s NATO colleagues, who would no doubt welcome Canadian recognition as moral support for France, and ultimately for NATO. Such a move would contribute towards a manifestation of the political solidarity of the democracies on cold war problems in Asia.

7. In the Council for Technical Co-operation of the Colombo Plan, Canada has in effect had direct dealings with representatives of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, now full members of the Council. Canada has also voted in favour of the admission of these three states to a number of the United Nations Specialized Agencies. Whereas neither of these actions necessarily constitutes recognition by Canada, they have likely been interpreted by the states concerned as indicating a possible trend in that direction. Moreover, at the present session of the General Assembly, Canada will, if the issue is raised, support the admission to the United Nations of these three states. This might be interpreted as constituting implied recognition by Canada.

8. Factors against recognition

Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia do not fulfil the customary legal requirements for the recognition of states. Nor do their governments fulfil the customary legal requirements for the recognition of governments. Since the signing of the 1949 agreements, whereby France granted considerable independence in domestic matters but retained a large measure of control over foreign affairs, defence and finance, there has been little change in the basis of this relationship; and in practice the three states cannot be considered as independent. The present indications are that this situation is likely to continue for some time to come.

9. The strongest argument against recognition is the negative attitude of the other non-Communist states of Asia (excluding South Korea and Thailand) and of the Middle East (excluding Jordan). Their refusal to recognize the Indochinese states seems to be based primarily on distrust of French intentions. Canadian action at this time to recognize the states of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia and their governments might attract unfavourable attention in a number of other Asian and Middle East States, particularly in India and Pakistan, and might weaken our advantageous position as a "neutral" on colonial questions. The undesirable "white versus Asian" alignment, already too prevalent in the Commonwealth, might recur on this issue.

10. Recognition would probably mean little to the governments concerned, unless it were accompanied with more concrete assistance.

11. Recommendations

In essence the question of recognizing the states of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia and their governments is one in which our reluctance to recognize governments, which do not fulfil the customary legal requirements and which are frowned upon by most of the neighbouring countries in Asia, must be weighed against our desire to assist a NATO colleague, sorely tried by foreign and domestic problems, and to bolster such limited independence as the governments themselves now possess. My opinion is that the political factors, in particular the NATO considerations, override the legal and other objections. I am therefore recommending that Canada extend recognition to Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia.

12. My recommendation is qualified by the suggestion that we grant recognition in accordance with the formula adopted by the United Kingdom and other states, that is, that Canada recognize each of the Indochinese states as "an Associate State within the French Union in accordance with the terms of the Agreement dated March 8, 1949, between President Auriol and His Majesty Bao Dai and recognizes the Government of His Majesty Bao Dai as the government of that state." Recognition would then not constitute recognition, in the usual sense of the word, of three new, fully sovereign states in the international community and of fully independent governments, but would only constitute a recognition of treaty arrangements.

13. Moreover, careful consideration should be given to the timing of a notification of Canadian recognition. In order to minimize the undesirable effect of such recognition in friendly Asian countries, the announcement might be timed so as not to coincide with the results of voting in the General Assembly on issues, on which Canada might be obliged to take a stand opposite to that of friendly Asian countries, especially India and Pakistan.

RECOGNITION OF VIETNAM, LAOS AND CAMBODIA

20. The Minister of National Defence, as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of February 23, 1950, reported that, in the light of developments since that time, it was now suggested that favourable consideration be given to early recognition by Canada of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia.

The United Kingdom had, early in 1950, extended a qualified form of recognition. The actual terms of the formula used by the United Kingdom were as follows:

"His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom recognizes the status of Vietnam as an Associate State within the French Union in accordance with the terms of the Agreement dated March 8, 1949, between President Auriol and His Majesty Bao Dai and recognizes the Government of His Majesty Bao Dai as the Government of that state."

This formula had been adopted by a number of other countries including Australia, New Zealand and the Union of South Africa, and fell considerably short of full recognition of a sovereign state and government. The United States had extended diplomatic recognition without qualification or explanation.

Although recognition by Canada at this time might possibly be misinterpreted by certain Asian members of the Commonwealth it was nonetheless recommended not only because it would be extremely helpful to France, which country was experiencing difficulties in carrying out its obligations in Indo China and North Africa and at the same time in fulfilling its N.A.T.O. requirements, but because such recognition by Canada would be further evidence of the solidarity which existed amongst N.A.T.O. countries.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Acting Minister's memorandum, Nov. 1, 1952 — Cab. Doc. 352-52)

21. The Prime Minister thought Canada might well extend qualified recognition at this time as this would merely constitute acceptance of the facts as they now existed. In any event recognition would not likely alter Canada's relationship with those three countries in any way.

22. The Cabinet, after discussion, approved the recommendation of the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs and agreed that steps be taken to extend qualified recognition by Canada of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia in accordance with the formula adopted by the United Kingdom.

Ottawa, December 24, 1952

RECOGNITION OF VIET NAM, LAOS AND CAMBODIA

Implementation of the Cabinet decision of November 5 to extend qualified recognition to these states in accordance with the formula adopted by the United Kingdom, has so far been postponed to minimize, with reference to developments in the United Nations General Assembly, the undesirable effects of such recognition on friendly Asian countries. I recommend that the appropriate action to accord recognition be taken on December 30, Ottawa time. The Assembly is now in recess, and the period from that date until it again convenes will afford an opportunity for any unfavourable reaction in these countries to subside.

2. I have written our High Commissioners in New Delhi and Karachi concerning the decision to recognize and warned them that when the date has been set for its announcement, they will be notified and asked to inform the Governments to which they are accredited, in advance.

3. To complete the matter of recognition, I suggest this procedure might be followed:

(1) Before December 29, our Ambassador to France should be instructed to approach the French Government formally on December 29, refer to the French Notes of February 3, 1950 expressing the wish that the Canadian Government recognize the Governments of the Associated States, which reached us through the local Embassy, and state that qualified recognition will be accorded to the Associated States on December 30.

(2) Before December 29, our High Commissioners in New Delhi and Karachi should be instructed to take the action outlined in paragraph 2 above on that date.

(3) On December 29, the United Kingdom and French Representatives here should be informed orally of the decision to recognize.

(4) On December 30, telegrams should go forward to the Foreign Ministers of Viet Nam, Laos and Cambodia, from you, stating the form of our recognition of their respective states.

(5) On December 30, Notes should be sent to the French Ambassador here in reply to his Notes of February 3, 1950, in which he requested the Canadian Government to recognize each of the Associated States.

(6) On December 30, a statement for the press should be released stating only that recognition had been accorded to the three states and that the Governments concerned had been notified.

4. Do you agree with the above procedure?<sup>2</sup>

Washington, January 2, 1953

CANADIAN RECOGNITION OF VIET-NAM

1. The Ambassador of Viet-Nam, Mr. Tran Van Kha, called on me this afternoon to extend the thanks of his government and of the Emperor, Bao-Dai, as well as his personal thanks for the recognition of Viet-Nam by the Canadian Government. He said that he had received a telegram from his Foreign Minister requesting him to deliver through me an expression of appreciation.

2. He went on to say that he desired before long to visit Ottawa, and he asked me to find out when this would be convenient. So far as I could gather, the chief purpose of his visit would be to thank the Canadian Government in person for the action which has been taken and possibly to have a general discussion on matters of trade. He added that there was no intention of asking the Canadian Government for military aid in any form; his government was most appreciative of the moral support given to it by Canada through the act of recognition, and there might be some questions of commercial relations which it would be profitable to discuss. On this question I think that he had nothing at all definite in mind.

3. He asked me if I could find out what would be a convenient time for such a visit. I told him that I doubted if it would be convenient for him to go to Ottawa before sometime next month, but that I would enquire of you and communicate with him on the receipt of your reply. He would like, I think, to meet the Prime Minister briefly and also Mr. Howe, as well as yourself. I explained that Mr. Howe would be absent in Latin America for several weeks and that the Prime Minister and yourself would be fully occupied with parliamentary affairs. Such a visit would, I think, be productive of nothing but politenesses; it is difficult, however, for me to do more than seek to delay it until a fairly convenient time arises.

4. According to information received from the State Department, Mr. Tran Van Kha is 62 years old and a member of a wealthy land-owning family. He has served for a long time as an official under the French; from 1915 to 1935 he lived in Paris as an official dealing with Indo-China in the French Defence Department. After his return to Indo-China he served in the colonial regime there as a member, and at one time as President, of the Executive Council of Cochin-China. He holds a degree in law from the University of Paris.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH JAPAN;
AGREEMENT FOR THE SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES

16. The Secretary of State for External Affairs pointed out that Article 15(a) of the Japanese Peace Treaty provided for the return, upon application within a limited time, of the property, rights and interests in Japan of the allied signatory powers and their nationals. It also provided for compensation for property which could not be returned or which had suffered injury or damage. A draft agreement had been prepared to provide for the settlement of disputes that might arise concerning the interpretation or execution of Article 15(a). The agreement provided for the establishment of joint property commissions to hear appeals and render decisions in certain circumstances. It did not call for ratification and would come into force between the government of an allied power and the Japanese government upon the date of its signature by the two governments or upon the date of the entry into force of the Treaty of Peace, whichever was later. It was recommended that the Canadian Ambassador in Washington be authorized to sign the agreement on behalf of Canada.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

17. The Cabinet approved the recommendation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and agreed that the Canadian Ambassador in Washington be authorized to sign the Agreement for the Settlement of Disputes arising under Article 15(a) of the Treaty of Peace with Japan; an Order in Council to be passed accordingly.

FOR RELEASE AT 9:30 A.M. EDT., MONDAY, APRIL 28, 1952

The Department of External Affairs released today the text of a message from the Prime Minister to the Prime Minister of Japan, Mr. Yoshida, on the occasion of the coming into force of the peace treaty with Japan. The text follows:

"I wish to express through you to the people of Japan the cordial good wishes of the Canadian people on this day which inaugurates a new period of friendly relations between our two countries.

"I wish to assure you that at this historic moment when Japan resumes her place as a free and sovereign member of the community of Nations, we in Canada, putting behind us all thoughts of rancour which the tragic war may have engendered, look to the new Japan to be an effective bastion of peace and freedom in an area afflicted by Communist aggression and oppression. It is the deeply felt hope of the Canadian people that Japan will play an honourable and constructive part in helping to re-establish peace, security and friendly relations among the peoples of East Asia. As a prosperous and peaceful Far East is in the best interests of Canada, we expect to find ourselves co-operating with Japan in meeting a great number of common problems in the Pacific area.

"In the years before the war, Canada had set up in Japan one of its first diplomatic missions. Numbers of Canadians worked for many years in Japan in business, education and social welfare. Through these friendly associations many Canadians had come to feel a keen interest, not only in Japanese affairs, but in Japanese culture and history.

"For my part, I sincerely welcome the opportunity that now opens up for restoring friendly and mutually profitable relations between our two countries and for strengthening sympathetic understanding between them."

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Folowing is the text of a message received today by the Prime Minister from the Prime Minister of Japan, Mr. Yoshida, on the occasion of the coming into force of the peace treaty with Japan:

"Please accept my sincere thanks for your kind message delivered to me by Mr. Arthur R. Menzies Head of the Canadian Mission in Tokyo on this day the San Francisco Peace Treaty comes into force.

"For the people of Japan who have long toiled and moiled patiently and indefatigably under the allied occupation aspiring to a place of honour and equality in the family of free nations this is the day of fulfilment and of great rejoicing.

"I deeply appreciate the generous and cordial sentiments toward Japan which your letter conveys on behalf of yourself and the people of Canada. In return I desire to assure you that our nation chastened and free and committed firmly to the ways of peace is resolved to follow the path of international conciliation, concord and cooperation.

"Canada is one of the biggest countries of the world and the richest with vast natural resources still to be tapped. Japan is a small country meagrely endowed with the bounties of nature. The Canadians are a young growing people, the Japanese an old race whose origin is lost in the mist of antiquity. But we are neighbours facing the same ocean. We are inescapably bound by common interests and a community of ideals and aspirations as free nations. We are confronted as you say by a common menace in the rising tide of communism. We share the common destiny of the Pacific.

"May this day mark the beginning of a new era of friendly intercourse, commercial and cultural between Japan and Canada which like the warm current that washes the shores of both lands will ameliorate and enrich the lives of our two nations."

Ottawa, June 6, 1952

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report dated May 31, 1952, from the Right Honourable Louis S. St. Laurent, the Prime Minister, representing:

That, by a Proclamation dated December 8, 1941, it was declared that a state of war with Japan had existed in Canada on and from the seventh day of December 1941;

That a treaty of peace between the Allied Powers and Japan was concluded in San Francisco on the eighth day of September, 1951, which recites the fact of the conclusion of the state of war between the Allied Powers and Japan;

That the Instrument of Ratification of the said treaty of peace was deposited on behalf of Canada on the seventeenth day of April, 1952, and that the said treaty came into force in respect to Canada on the twenty-eighth day of April, 1952;

That it is expedient that a Proclamation issue and declare the date on which the state of war between Canada and Japan has ceased to exist.

The Committee, therefore, on the recommendation of the Right Honourable Louis S. St. Laurent, the Prime Minister, advise that a Proclamation do issue declaring that the treaty of peace which was concluded in San Francisco between the Allied Powers and Japan on the eighth day of September, 1951, came into force with respect to Canada on the twenty-eighth day of April, 1952, and that on the said twenty-eighth day of April, 1952, the state of war between Canada and Japan ceased to exist.

MOST-FAVoured-NATION TREATMENT FOR JAPAN

Reference: Your despatch No. 522 of May 7, 1952.

Preliminary consideration was given to this problem in the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy at its meeting on May 19.

2. It was generally agreed that the timing of the Japanese Note Verbale of April 24 could scarcely have been more difficult for us in the light of the problems currently being experienced by the Canadian textile industry and other branches of the economy which are already beginning to feel the impact of competition from low-cost Japanese imports. Nevertheless, it was only to be expected that the Japanese would approach us once the Treaty of Peace came into force.

3. The Committee explored, in general terms, the comparative advantages of approaching this question on a bilateral, Japanese-Canadian basis as over against a multilateral arrangement within the framework of the GATT. It also discussed some of the safeguards which Canada would probably wish to have written into either type of most-favoured-nation agreement and the extent to which the Japanese might be prepared to accept a qualified agreement of this nature. The suggestion was also put forward that a small group of officials might be sent to Japan to undertake an investigation of the Japanese cost structure, the potential market for Canadian exports and any other aspects of the Japanese economy which might be regarded as pertinent to the problem.

4. The Interdepartmental Committee decided, after discussion, to ask a smaller working group, comprising officials from our own Department, Trade & Commerce, Finance and National Revenue, to give further consideration to the implications of a most-favoured-nation agreement with Japan and the position it might be appropriate for us to adopt in replying to the Japanese approach reported in your letter under reference.

5. The question of most-favoured-nation treatment for Japan was also briefly discussed by Ministers on May 20. Although the discussion was largely of an exploratory nature, the suggestion that a group of officials, possibly even including representatives of industry be sent to Japan, appeared to recommend itself to Ministers. They felt in particular that, in present circumstances, there would be some advantage in the additional time this would provide before decisions had to be taken.

6. We shall keep you informed of any further developments on this question when the working group has submitted its recommendations to the Interdepartmental Committee. You will also receive, as soon as they are available, copies of the minutes of the meeting which was held on May 19.

TRADING RELATIONS WITH JAPAN;
MOST-FAVoured-NATION TREATMENT

21. The Prime Minister said a report had been received from the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy on the course to be taken about the enquiry from the Japanese government of April 24th. The Japanese had asked whether Canada intended to revive the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation to which we had acceded in 1913 and which extended reciprocal most-favoured-nation treatment. If Canada did not revive the treaty Japan was obliged, under Article 12 of the Peace Treaty, to give most-favoured-nation treatment only to the extent that we did the same.

The report of the Committee outlined the history of trading relations between Canada and Japan since 1913. With most-favoured-nation treatment trade had developed to a point in 1929 where Canadian exports to Japan were worth $42 million while imports from Japan were $18 million. In the 1930's trade relations had deteriorated and a tariff war had developed. The report also analyzed the principal imports from Japan, the extent of their competition with Canadian industry, and the major exports to Japan. Japan was Canada's fourth largest market in 1951. Our exports totalled $73 million as compared with imports of less than $13 million. Wheat was the largest single export item, amounting to $30 million in 1951.

The Committee had agreed that merely to send an economic mission to Japan might be regarded as stalling, might alienate the Japanese government and possibly endanger the Canadian export market. They were also of the view that revival of the Treaty of 1911 would not be an appropriate or satisfactory course. The Committee recommended that the safest course would be to start talks with the Japanese with a view to arriving at a bilateral arrangement according most-favoured-nation treatment with respect to rates of duty but retaining the right for Canadian authorities to fix valuations for customs purposes over a certain range of products. After the talks had begun, or at the same time as they began, there would be advantage in having a Canadian economic mission visit Japan.

Copies of the report had been circulated.

(Memorandum, Chairman, Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy, June 25, 1952 — Cab. Doc. 197-52)†

22. The Minister of Trade and Commerce thought the recommendations of the Committee were on the right line. It would be necessary to have some restrictions on most-favoured-nation treatment, particularly to protect the Canadian textile industry. It was, however, very important to get a new agreement. The agreement should go beyond tariffs to ensure equal treatment in all matters that could influence the flow of trade.

23. The Minister of Agriculture agreed that it was most important not to endanger the Canadian export market in Japan.

24. The Secretary of State for External Affairs considered it probable that the Japanese would raise the question of immigration during the discussions. It would be very hard to stand on the present policy of total exclusion and it might be necessary to return to something like the pre-war position.

25. The Cabinet, after discussion, approved the recommendations of the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy concerning trading relations with Japan and agreed that:

(a) a reply to the Japanese note of April 24th be despatched<sup>7</sup> in the near future indicating that

(i) the Canadian government was not disposed to revive the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation of April 3rd, 1911, between the United Kingdom and Japan so far as Canada was concerned; and,

(ii) the Canadian government was prepared to start talks in Ottawa with the Japanese authorities with a view to arriving at mutually satisfactory arrangements to govern trading relations between the two countries;

(b) at the same time the note was handed over, the Japanese representative be advised orally that

(i) successful conclusion of the talks would depend upon the creation in Canada of a favourable atmosphere for Japanese trade and that, for this purpose, the Canadian government considered it might be desirable at an early stage in the talks, or at the same time as they began, to arrange for a semi-official or unofficial economic mission to visit Japan;

(ii) the Canadian government was contemplating giving most-favoured-nation treatment with respect to rates of duty, accompanied by fixed valuations on certain commodities included in a list which was in the course of preparation;

(c) the Department of Finance, in consultation with the Department of National Revenue, prepare an initial list of the products on which it might be desirable to retain the right to fix values for duty purposes;

<sup>7</sup>Cette note porte la date du 16 juillet 1952.

Note dated July 16, 1952.

(d) the Department of Trade and Commerce prepare an initial list of Canadian products on which it might be desirable to secure unconditional most-favoured-nation treatment from Japan; and,

(e) the Interdepartmental Committee review the material prepared under (c) and (d) above and present in the near future recommendations on those matters and on the detailed arrangements for the proposed discussions and mission.

LETTER NO. E-504

Ottawa, July 28, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

MOST-FAVOURED-NATION TREATMENT FOR JAPAN

The Japanese Ambassador called on us on July 26 to request further clarification in regard to the scope of the negotiations we had proposed in our reply to the Japanese Note Verbale of April 24. He wondered specifically if we were contemplating an agreement covering the broad field of commercial policy along the lines of the United Kingdom-Japanese Treaty of 1911 and the commercial treaty which his Government was at present negotiating with the United States. If this were our intention, it might be difficult to begin bilateral discussions at an early date inasmuch as the Japanese officials who would be involved in negotiations of this nature are unlikely to be available for as long as the United States-Japanese talks are in progress.

2. In reply, we told the Japanese Ambassador that it was not the policy of the Canadian Government to conclude this comprehensive type of agreement, and that what we had in mind was an agreement which would be confined to customs matters, including most-favoured-nation tariff rates and valuation provisions. We would not, of course, embark upon a negotiation of tariff concessions but were thinking of according to Japanese products our existing most-favoured-nation rates subject to the retention of the right to apply fixed values on certain specific commodities.

3. The Japanese Ambassador intimated that, in the circumstances, there would seem to be no obstacle to an early commencement of the discussions. He expressed his agreement that the negotiation of a comparatively simple type of contractual arrangement covering only one aspect of the general commercial field was the preferable procedure. In the light of his remarks on this point it occurred to us that the Japanese might well have been afraid that we were intending to protract our bilateral discussions indefinitely.

4. We understand that the question broached to us by the Japanese Ambassador was simultaneously raised with you by the Japanese Ministry of Foreign Affairs in a note dated July 25.† As you suggested earlier, the note evidently refers also to the question of interim arrangements pending the conclusion of an agreement between Canada and Japan. However, we are inclined to suspect that this question was raised on the assumption that we were proposing to initiate negotiations leading to a more comprehensive bilateral agreement. In view of the clarification we have now provided to the Japanese Ambassador, the Japanese may possibly be prepared to drop any reference to interim arrangements.

5. Incidentally, the Japanese Ambassador conveyed to us the agreement of his Government to the despatch to Japan of an unofficial economic mission from this country. He suggested that, from the point of view of climate, it would probably be desirable for the mission to defer its visit until late September or early October.

6. We made it clear to the Ambassador that no consideration had so far been given either to the composition of the mission or to the approximate time when it might be expected to leave for Japan. However, we undertook to let the Ambassador know if and when more definite information regarding the possible despatch of an economic mission was available.

RELATIONS BETWEEN CANADA AND JAPAN

Reference: Your Letter No. 799 of July 24.†

The Japanese Ambassador in Ottawa called on us yesterday and handed us a copy of the Note Verbale which was presented to you by the Japanese Ministry of Foreign Affairs on July 25. In this note the Japanese are asking us, inter alia, to outline to what extent national treatment is being accorded to Japanese natural and juridical persons and their interests in Canada. As the Ambassador suggested, the Japanese authorities are anxious to have this information so as to be able to implement the provisions of Article 12(c) of the Treaty of Peace which envisages reciprocal treatment on the part of Japan.

The Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy will shortly be discussing the broad complex of questions relating to our trade with Japan. In the course of its discussion of these questions it will no doubt be giving consideration to the type of reply which it might be appropriate for you to make to the latest Japanese Note Verbale. Our preliminary view in this Department is that we might merely inform the Japanese of the current juridical position of Japanese nationals and companies in Canada and suggest that, if there were any problems which it might subsequently seem desirable to discuss, we should be prepared to consider what mutually satisfactory arrangements it might be possible to make.

The Interdepartmental discussions on matters affecting our commercial relations with Japan are likely to be held some time toward the middle of this month and we shall keep you fully informed of the conclusions which have been reached.

DESPATCH E-614

Ottawa, October 1, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

TRADING, MARITIME AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS BETWEEN CANADA AND JAPAN

Reference: Your despatch No. 8[?]01 of July 28.†

Interdepartmental agreement has now been reached on the following reply to the Japanese Note Verbale of July 25:

"The Canadian Embassy presents its compliments to the Japanese Ministry of Foreign Affairs and has the honour to acknowledge the Ministry's Note Verbale No. 25/E3 of July 25, 1952,† asking for an indication of the extent to which the Canadian Government is prepared to accord to Japan national or most-favoured-nation treatment in connection with the matters covered by Article 12(b)(1) of the Treaty of Peace with Japan. It is understood that this information is required by the Japanese authorities in order to enable them to implement the obligations of reciprocity envisaged in Article 12 (c) of the Treaty.

"The Canadian Government accords, in general, national treatment to Japanese persons and their interests in all matters pertaining to the levying and collection of taxes, access to the courts, depository and fiduciary banking. National treatment is likewise accorded to Japanese goods after importation into Canada. Insofar as the ownership of property is concerned, this matter is substantially governed by the provisions of Section 24 of the Canadian Citizenship Act which stipulates that, with the exception of Canadian ships,

'Real and personal property of every description may be taken, acquired, held and disposed of by an alien in the same manner in all respects as by a natural-born Canadian citizen; and a title to real and personal property of every description may be derived through, from or in succession to an alien in the same manner in all respects as through, from or in succession to a natural born Canadian citizen.'

"The extent of national treatment accorded to Japanese natural and juridical persons and their interests in Canada in respect of the other activities referred to Article 12(b)(1)(ii) of the Treaty of Peace depends, in varying degrees, on the existence of provincial statutes and municipal by-laws and would have to be determined in individual cases as they arose. This Embassy is not, however, aware of any particular limitations that would affect the status or activities of Japanese nationals as such.

"In matters of shipping and navigation the Canadian Government has already indicated, in this Embassy's note of August 4, 1952,† that it would continue to accord to the flag vessels of Japan freedom of entry into, as well as treatment and facilities in open ports, open places and waters of Canada in a manner no less favourable than those which were accorded by the Canadian Government to vessels operated under the control of the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers.

"The question of a bilateral air agreement between Canada and Japan was raised by this Embassy in its note of May 17, 1952,† under cover of which the text of a draft agreement was submitted which is at present under study by the Japanese authorities in preparation for the initiation of detailed discussions.

"In his note of July 16, 1952,† the Secretary of State for External Affairs conveyed to the Ambassador of Japan the readiness of the Canadian Government to commence discussions with a view to arriving at mutually satisfactory arrangements which might serve as a basis for trading relations between the two countries. While the exact scope of the proposed discussions has not yet been defined, it is expected that the question of most-favoured-nation treatment with respect to customs duties, charges, restrictions and other regulations is likely to be covered by any bilateral arrangement upon which agreement may in due course be reached."

2. I should be grateful if you could present this note to the Japanese Ministry of Foreign Affairs at your earliest convenience. The Japanese Embassy here has approached us several times during the past two months to ascertain when our reply might be expected. Although they do not say so explicitly, we are inclined to think that the Japanese are waiting for this reply before they will let us know what date would be acceptable to them for the opening of the bilateral trade discussions proposed in our note of July 16. It may well be that, in their view, the scope of these discussions could be defined only on the basis of the information we supply concerning the extent to which Canada is now according most-favoured-nation or national treatment to Japanese persons and their interests.

3. In as much as we have undertaken to provide a copy of our reply to the Japanese Embassy in Ottawa, I should appreciate it if you could let me know by telegram the day on which the reply has been sent to the Japanese Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

AGREEMENT ON COMMERCIAL RELATIONS BETWEEN CANADA AND JAPAN

I attach for your information a copy of a draft agreement on commercial relations between Japan and Canada which the Japanese Ambassador left with me on November 13.† In presenting this draft the Ambassador explained that it was intended to be used as a basis of negotiation between the Japanese and Canadian representatives and that it was based substantially on the provisions included in some of our post-World War II commercial agreements with Latin American countries. In reply to my question whether the draft covered valuations for duty purposes the Japanese Ambassador suggested that this aspect of the question might appropriately form the subject of a separate exchange of notes.

2. Mr. Inagaki of the Japanese Embassy subsequently called on the Department on November 14 to shed some further light on the source material on which the Japanese authorities had drawn in the preparation of the draft agreement. It would appear that the present draft includes not only extracts from our agreements with Venezuela, Mexico and Argentina, but also from the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and a model draft agreement drawn up in 1929 by the Economic Committee of the League of Nations.

3. Mr. Inagaki agreed that it was premature, at this stage, to enter into a substantive discussion of the Japanese draft. He was fully aware of the need on our part for careful consideration of the proposals his Government had presented. At the same time, he suggested that his Government was most anxious to proceed with the conclusion of commercial agreements on a most-favoured-nation basis and added, in confidence, that the Japanese attached particular importance to the negotiations with Canada and those which they expected to initiate with France. It was for this reason that the Japanese authorities had taken so long in drawing up a draft agreement to govern Japanese-Canadian commercial relations; this draft, if generally acceptable, was intended to serve as a model for agreements with countries in a position similar to that of Canada.

4. We undertook to expedite our preliminary consideration of the Japanese proposals as much as possible. In the meantime Mr. Inagaki will be submitting to us in writing certain questions of interpretation which his authorities in Tokyo had raised and which we agreed to answer without delay. It is our understanding that Mr. Inagaki will himself be in charge of the conduct of the negotiations on the Japanese side.

5. We shall endeavour to keep you as fully informed as possible of any significant developments as our discussions with the Japanese move forward. You will already have received a copy of my letter to Mr. Pickersgill setting out the general line which our own negotiating team would expect to follow. This line of policy is likely to be submitted to Ministers for approval some time during the coming week.

TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH JAPAN;
LINE TO BE FOLLOWED BY CANADIAN NEGOTIATORS

24. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, referring to discussion at the meeting of June 26th, said the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy now recommended that, rather than attempt to secure a list of products on which Canada would have the right to fix values for duty in the trade agreement with Japan, it would be desirable to try to reserve the right to apply fixed values on any imports which were either causing or threatening to cause serious injury to Canadian industry. There could be a commitment to consult with the Japanese in advance wherever possible. It was proposed that the negotiators seek from the Japanese non-discriminatory treatment for Canadian exports to Japan. This would apply to the 100 percent surtax which the Japanese could impose on goods from any country discriminating against Japan. It would also apply to quantitative import restrictions and the allocation of foreign exchange. The starting position would probably be to insist on complete non-discrimination between hard and soft currency countries. As a minimum Canada should secure non-discriminatory allocation of exchange among the hard currency countries. The question whether to retreat that far would have to be decided, if necessary, in the light of the progress achieved in the negotiations as a whole.

The question was raised whether further consideration should be given at present to the question of sending a semi-official or unofficial economic mission to Japan.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Secretary's memorandum, Nov. 14, 1952 — Cab. Doc. 362-52)†

25. The Cabinet, after discussion:

(a) approved the proposals of the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy concerning the lines to be followed by the Canadian negotiators in discussions on the trade agreement with Japan in relation to the reservation of the right to apply fixed values on imports causing or threatening to cause serious injury to Canadian industry and the type of assurances that should be received from Japan about Canadian exports; and,

(b) agreed that decision concerning the dispatch of a semi-official or unofficial economic mission to Japan be deferred pending further developments in the negotiations.

CANADIAN-JAPANESE TRADE RELATIONS

Inagaki of the Japanese Embassy called on the Department on December 5 and, under instructions from his Government, left with us an Aide Memoire and to Washington No. EX-2330 with priority.

<sup>8</sup>Le télégramme porte la mention manuscrite :/Noted on telegram:

requesting that we give favourable consideration to commencing bilateral tariff negotiations prior to Japanese accession to GATT. He explained that such negotiations would be quite separate in scope and purpose from the discussions now taking place for reciprocal most-favoured-nation treatment and that if we should so desire the results of any such bilateral tariff negotiations could be held in abeyance until Japan was admitted into the GATT. (In the proposed negotiations, the procedures and methods adopted for the Torquay negotiations would apply.)

2. Inagaki declared that his Government was making this proposal to us and to other GATT countries for three reasons: First, if a favourable reaction could be obtained from the countries thus approached, this fact might tend to create a favourable climate at the Intersessional Committee meeting next February; secondly, if successful tariff negotiations could be completed, these, in their turn, might facilitate the entry of Japan into GATT; third, the Japanese Government was having great difficulty in satisfying the Diet with its explanations of why the Japanese application to negotiate with a view to accession to GATT was making slow progress. Accordingly his Government would like to have some tangible evidence that Japan was regaining her place in the commercial world.

3. In discussion Inagaki further elucidated that his Government, being aware of the problems of negotiating bilateral tariff agreements with GATT countries, was considering negotiating with several countries simultaneously and in one place. He mentioned two possible groups: on the one hand, Ceylon, India, Pakistan, Burma and Indonesia (or Indo-China) and on the other hand, Sweden, Germany and Italy. We asked Inagaki whether a similar approach was being made to the United States but he appeared to be uncertain.

4. We explained to Inagaki that, as we had already explained to Hagiwara at Geneva, our first reaction to such a proposal was that we were very doubtful whether any useful results could be obtained in bilateral tariff negotiations between Canada and Japan, because for many of the tariff items in which Japan would have an interest the United States or some other country was probably our principal supplier. It would therefore be difficult for us to negotiate any concessions beneficial to Japan unless we were negotiating with such other countries at the same time. We did not wish to appear unhelpful but we doubted whether bilateral negotiations now would prove to be of any great use or would save any time.

5. It was also suggested to Inagaki that to await multilateral negotiations might not necessarily mean that Japanese tariff negotiations would be postponed for very long. There is no provision at present for the GATT schedules to extend beyond the end of 1953<sup>9</sup> and consideration would have to be given before many months — the point would likely come up at the Intersessional Committee meeting in early February — to the arrangements that would have to be made for those schedules and possibly for further tariff negotiations under GATT.

GATT schedules are only "bound firmly" until end 53.

6. Inagaki seemed more or less impressed with our explanations and said he would transmit them to Tokyo and suggest that his Government might advise him what practical value, from a tariff viewpoint, they foresaw in bilateral negotiations with Canada at this time. For our part, we undertook to give careful consideration to the Japanese proposal and in due course to communicate a reply.

7. It may be that Japan could successfully work out significant tariff concessions with the groups of countries described in paragraph 3. This possibility, of course, could carry several implications, some possibly tending in the direction of regional arrangements.

8. As Japanese trade may be discussed at least on the side during the Commonwealth Economic Conference, we are sending this message to you so that you will be fully informed on the latest developments here. We should, of course, be interested in any indications that other Commonwealth Governments have received similar approaches.

For Washington only: I should be grateful if you would enquire informally of the State Department whether a similar approach has been made to the United States.

JAPANESE TRADE RELATIONS

Reference: EX-2330 of December 6th.

1. The State Department have informed us that the Japanese have not made a formal request that the United States consider bilateral tariff negotiations prior to Japanese accession to GATT. There have however been informal discussions on this matter between officials of the Japanese Embassy and the State Department.

2. As a result of these informal discussions the Japanese Embassy has been made aware of the United States preference for multilateral negotiations. The United States apparently does not favour the suggestion of bilateral United States-Japanese negotiations before the outcome of the Japanese application to join GATT is known. It is hoped here that there is not too great a delay in dealing with the Japanese application, since it is recognized that Japan is suffering from a severe case of economic claustrophobia. State Department officials expressed the opinion that if the Japanese application to GATT were rejected, the United States would probably then be willing to hold bilateral discussions with the Japanese.

3. The other major factor contributing to the United States unwillingness to hold bilateral talks now is the status of the Trade Agreements Act. This act expires on June 12th next and it remains to be seen whether and in what form it is renewed. The State Department officials whom we consulted on this matter made a personal guess that the next Congress will approve a Trade Agreement Act at least as liberal as the current act, if not more so.

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, December 31, 1952

Attention: Dr. C.M. Isbister

Mr. Inagaki, Counsellor of the Japanese Embassy, called on this Department on December 30th to discuss further the proposal of his Government that we enter into bilateral tariff negotiations in advance of Japanese accession to the GATT.

2. Mr. Inagaki said that he had reported to Tokyo his previous talk with us and that his authorities recognized the important practical difficulties in holding such negotiations on a purely bilateral basis. However, it was assumed that we were not opposed in principle to tariff negotiations with Japan in advance of Japanese accession to GATT. His Government, therefore, hoped that, in replying to the Japanese proposal, we would not do so in an entirely negative manner. Mr. Inagaki said that, for political reasons at home, it was hoped that our reply would indicate our willingness to enter into negotiations provided that certain (possibly unattainable) conditions were met. For instance, we might indicate our readiness to negotiate provided that it would be possible for us to negotiate at the same time with other major trading countries. (The impracticability of such simultaneous negotiations between Canada and such an important supplier as United States in the near future appeared to be recognised by Mr. Inagaki when he said that Japan had not proposed bilateral negotiations between the United States and Japan for the reason that the new Administration was not yet in office and its views concerning the future of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act were not yet known.)

3. Mr. Inagaki realized that, in the absence of general tariff negotiations, Canadian concessions of benefit to Japan would have to be confined to commodities of which Japan was the "principal supplier". He thought that there were a few such commodities and that there were also some goods (e.g. wheat and certain non-ferrous metals) of which Canada was Japan's principal supplier. He wondered whether it might not be worth while to negotiate at this stage on even these few miscellaneous commodities. Any concessions emerging from such limited negotiations might represent little more than a gesture, but even a mere gesture was important to Japan.

4. We told Mr. Inagaki that our reply to the proposal for bilateral negotiations in advance of Japanese accession to GATT was still being studied interdepartmentally but that we expected it would be more or less along the lines of what had been said to him during his previous visit.

5. With regard to his request that our reply should be framed in a positive manner accompanied by any necessary provisos, we said that we would consider this request but there might be some difficulty in meeting it precisely in the way in which he had suggested.

6. Regarding the possible utility of limited bilateral negotiations on the few commodities of which each country was the other's principal supplier, we were skeptical but we undertook to look into the question further.

7. Finally, Mr. Inagaki said that, although he was now again visiting this Department concerning the proposal for tariff negotiations, nevertheless the most-favoured-nation trade agreement was considered by his Government to be of much higher priority and, therefore, he did not wish us to obtain the impression that the attention of the Japanese Government now was focused on tariff negotiations. We said that we appreciated that this was the Japanese attitude and we hoped our reply to the Japanese draft Agreement would be transmitted to his Embassy during the first two or three weeks in January.

PROJECTED VISIT OF A CANADIAN TRADE MISSION TO LATIN AMERICA HEADED BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE C.D. HOWE

Attached, if you concur, is a memorandum for the Minister's information concerning the proposed visit to Latin America this autumn of the Minister of Trade and Commerce accompanied by several of his officers and a group of Canadian businessmen.

In this Department we have been endeavouring to formulate a Latin American policy paper, and last fall discussions were held under the chairmanship of Mr. Heeney with various officers from Trade and Commerce. The draft paper included the suggestion of a visit of a Canadian Goodwill Mission to Latin America to be headed by a Cabinet Minister. Since it was decided that the emphasis in this area was to be placed on trade, the Minister of Trade and Commerce logically was the most suitable person to head the delegation.

Mr. W.F. Bull, the Deputy Minister, took this matter up with Mr. Howe recently and the latter has agreed to the trip. Preliminary plans for the group are now being formulated, based on the same type of mission as went to South Africa headed by Senator MacKinnon, when the latter was Minister of Trade and Commerce, and travelled there accompanied by a representative group of Canadian businessmen.

PROJECTED VISIT OF A CANADIAN TRADE MISSION TO LATIN AMERICA, HEADED BY THE RT. HON. C.D. HOWE

You might already be aware that Mr. Howe has agreed to lead a Canadian trade delegation to Latin America and the Caribbean area in October and November of this year.

2. The Department is satisfied that this is a very happy development, not only in the field of trade but also more generally in a strengthening of our relations with Latin America. At the official level, we have been considering the idea for some time.

3. Present plans call for the type of Mission which Senator MacKinnon headed to South Africa, Mission composed of Department of Trade and Commerce officials and a group of Canadian businessmen. These would be selected by the Department of Trade and Commerce, bearing in mind their interest in Latin America but also taking into consideration suggestions made by such associations as the Canadian Manufacturers Association and the Canadian Exporters Association. This is a welcome proposal from our point of view because, as you may remember, there was some criticism at a recent Canadian Exporters Association meeting by their members as to the amount of cooperation given to them by Canadian Government officials abroad.

4. Mr. Howe will be accompanied by Mr. W.F. Bull, Deputy Minister, Mr. A.L. Savard, Latin American Area Officer and one of the Minister's Private Secretaries.

5. Two itineraries are being considered:

(a) A short tour during which the Mission would visit Cuba, Brazil, Trinidad, Venezuela, Colombia, Guatemala and Mexico. The tour would last about five weeks.

(b) A more extensive tour which would include the West Coast countries of Peru and Chile as well as a visit to Argentina and Uruguay.

5. [sic] The first itinerary presents little if any political difficulties, although countries like Argentina, Peru, Chile and Uruguay will not be too happy to be left out altogether. The second tour raises the problem of a visit to Argentina, and we have been consulted informally by the Department of Trade and Commerce about the advisability of such a visit at this time.

6. Canadian trade with Argentina has fallen badly due to the restrictions and difficulties placed in the way of international trade generally by the Peron

Government. A visit by Mr. Howe might give a fillip to the situation and bring from increased interest in trade with Canada. It is doubted, however, whether any immediate results could be achieved; long term prospects could, however, be served. Our information from Argentina indicates that the Peron régime has been weakened in the last year by economic difficulties and the question arises as to whether Mr. Howe should go there at a time when Peron is in such a predicament. We are inclined to feel that, because of the nature of the visit which is basically one of trade, Mr. Howe should not be advised not to go to Argentina. It would be up to the businessmen to decide whether the trip is worth it or not from their point of view. We should point out, however, that should Mr. Howe's itinerary include Chile and Peru and exclude Argentina, this could have a bad effect on our relations with that country. The choice therefore would be either to agree on itinerary (a) or (b), including Argentina.

7. You will have noticed that no suggestion is made that a representative from this Department be included among the officials accompanying Mr. Howe. This is not very satisfactory from our point of view. A representative of this Department accompanied the three earlier trade missions to Latin America. This has proven useful not only to the mission but also to our offices in Latin America, as well as to the Department. The role of such an officer would be to advise the Head of Delegation on matters of policy, to act as liaison officer between the Department of Trade and Commerce and our own diplomatic missions and between the trade mission and the Foreign Offices of the countries to be visited. While the presence of such an officer is not essential for the success of the visit, it seems to me that all concerned would benefit from it. Perhaps an External Affairs officer, if he were well chosen, could play an even more important role on the mission as adviser on our external trade policy generally. I am thinking of people like LePan or Warren who, if they could be spared, would, during the negotiations in the Latin American countries, avoid many pitfalls.

8. The time of the visit of this Mission to Latin America raises in a rather acute form the problem of the establishment of diplomatic missions in Uruguay, Venezuela and Colombia. With your concurrence, I would suggest that we endeavour to have those Missions opened before Mr. Howe's visit. Otherwise, there will be awkward problems and, in Colombia and possibly Uruguay, the Mission would have to be introduced to the local authorities by the United Kingdom Ambassador. This should be avoided. I realize that it will not be easy to find qualified personnel for those three Posts but we should, in my view, make a very serious effort to meet this problem which has already been in abeyance for some time.<sup>1</sup>

9. Your directives would therefore be required on the following points:

1) If you agree with the general considerations advanced in paragraph 6, you might consider it appropriate that we advise the Department of Trade and Commerce that there is no objection to itinerary (a), and that on the whole, we do not feel we should raise any objection towards itinerary (b) as long as Argentina is not excluded.<sup>2</sup>

---

2) Would you wish us to take up with the Department of Trade and Commerce the desirability of attaching one of our officers to the Mission?<sup>3</sup>

3) Do you agree that we should attempt to open our Missions in Uruguay, Venezuela and Colombia in advance of the tour?<sup>4</sup>

Dear Mr. Bull,

We have been most interested in this Department to learn of the projected visit of your Minister to Latin America this coming January. As you know, we believe that a Canadian good-will mission at this time would help considerably in bettering our relations with the Latin American republics. We are particularly pleased that Mr. Howe is agreeable to heading the Delegation and that you will be going with him. We shall be most interested to learn later on as to which Canadian businessmen will be joining the group.

We feel too, that the political implications of this mission may be most worthwhile and, for that reason, we would like to propose that one of our External Affairs officers be invited to join the group. I understand that Mr. Pearson has already mentioned this point to Mr. Howe and that your Minister agreed.

You will doubtless be letting me know as soon as possible when the proposed dates and suggested itinerary are more settled. On our side, we shall be most pleased to cooperate in any way towards making this mission the success it should be.

Yours sincerely,

L.D. WILGRESS

Ottawa, August 29, 1952

Dear Mr. Wilgress,

I have delayed replying to your letter of June 30 until the Minister's plans with regard to heading a Mission to Latin America had become more definite.

The departure date has now been tentatively set for January 5 and the return date about February 14, with the Mission travelling by R.C.A.F. plane, but here again details have still to be worked out. The countries to be visited include Brazil, Argentina, Uruguay, Venezuela, Colombia, Mexico and Cuba, with a stop-over en route to Trinidad.

I welcome your offer of co-operation in making the Mission a success. In this connection, while I should appreciate your advising the various Heads of Mission of what is proposed, I would suggest, however, that official advice to the Governments concerned be delayed until some time late in October, when further information will be available as to the exact date of arrival in each city.

Your proposal to have an External Affairs officer accompany the Mission is acceptable to the Minister, because, like you, he feels that the political implications may be well worthwhile. I assume that whoever may be selected from External Affairs would be available for assisting in supervising the many duties that cannot be avoided in carrying through a successful Mission of this kind.

I shall be pleased to keep you advised as to what progress we are making with regard to persuading Canadian businessmen to form part of the Mission. Up to the present, both Mr. Jim Duncan, of Massey-Harris Company Limited, and Mr. Doug Ambridge, of Abitibi Power & Paper Company Limited, have indicated their willingness to accompany the Mission.

Yours faithfully,

Ottawa, September 17, 1952

Dear Mr. Sharp,

I wish to acknowledge Mr. Bull's letter of August 29 in which he was good enough to give me preliminary information regarding your Minister's plans for the good-will Mission that he will be leading to Latin America early next year.

2. I understand that the tentative itinerary is now being considered by Mr. Howe and I trust you will be able to inform me shortly of the dates selected for the visits to each country. I should also welcome receiving the names of those who are to accompany Mr. Howe. As soon as these details are available I shall be glad to ask our heads of mission in the countries to be visited to approach the governments concerned. As you will appreciate, the more advance notice these governments have of the fact that a special Mission is contemplated, the greater will be their interest in it.

3. I note from Mr. Bull's letter that it is now planned to include stops in Argentina and Uruguay. This raises the question of whether feelings will be hurt in Chile and Peru (particularly the former) if, when the Mission passes so close to these countries, it does not include stops in Lima and Santiago as well. General Odria is in power in Peru and General Ibanez will doubtless have taken office as the new President of Chile by the end of the year. The latter's government, like that of General Odria, will probably be authoritarian and friendly to General Peron. It is quite likely that in government circles in Peru and Chile and/or in the press of these countries there will be some reference to the fact that Chile and Peru are not considered "important enough" for the Mission to visit. Such references are perhaps not likely to have very serious political repercussions but might lead to some form of interference with trade such as the withholding of import licences or stricter application of currency controls. This is a matter that would be of more direct concern to your Department and I realize that to travel down the West Coast and stop over in Peru and Chile, while not involving any greater mileage, would mean prolonging the trip by about five days which your Minister might be reluctant to do.

4. I am glad to hear that you have been able to arrange for a number of important Canadian businessmen to join the Mission. The Embassies in Latin America will, I feel sure, be glad to provide every assistance to the Mission that may be required.

Yours sincerely,

L.D. WILGRESS

TELEGRAM 34<sup>5</sup>

Ottawa, October 24, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT

In January 1953 a good-will mission, headed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and principally concerned with trade, will make short visits to Mexico, Colombia, Venezuela and the three countries on the east coast of South America, with three brief stop-overs in the Caribbean. Full itinerary has been sent to you by bag. Announcements will possibly be issued in Ottawa and host capitals as early as November 7. The release date will be telegraphed when agreed upon. The governments concerned are being asked at present to agree to receive the mission.

2. The countries to be visited are our main present markets in Latin America. The Department of Trade and Commerce took fully into account the advantages of including in the itinerary stops in Peru and Chile but, finding that the time at the disposal of Mr. Howe (between sessions of Parliament) and the business members of the mission was very limited, was forced to a decision, with great regret, that on this occasion it was impossible to extend the tour to the West coast of South America or to Central America.

3. The information in paragraph 2 above is designed to assist you in answering any questions asked after the announcements are made. You may add, if necessary, that this tour is being undertaken in line with a general policy of sending trade missions to the Latin American and other areas and that it is hoped that a tour which will include Central America and the west coast of South America will prove feasible in the not too distant future. At the same time you should not encourage proposals for a further tour at an early date. The matter should be treated as confidential pending announcements. It is considered that if an attempt were made to explain the situation to the Peruvian and Chilean Governments before the announcements, they would press for extension of the itinerary and our embarrassment would be the greater.

LATIN AMERICAN GOODWILL TRADE MISSION

Basic Data

1. The Right Hon. C.D. Howe, Minister of Trade and Commerce, announced on November 7, 1952, that he would head a goodwill trade mission of government officials and businessmen to Brazil, Argentina, Uruguay, Venezuela, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Haiti, Cuba and Mexico, visiting them in that order. He will visit the capitals of each country and, in addition, will call at Sao Paulo, in Brazil.

2. Itinerary. The Mission plans to leave Ottawa on January 5, 1953, and is due back in Canada on February 10. The scheduled dates of arrival are as follows:

Rio de Janeiro	January 7
Sao Paulo	January 11
Buenos Aires	January 15
Montevideo	January 18

Caracas	January 22
Bogota	January 28
Ciudad Trujillo	February 1
Port-au-Prince	February 2
Havana	February 2
Mexico City	February 5

3. Businessmen. Personnel of the Mission will include the following businessmen:

Mr. D.W. Ambridge, C.B.E., B.Sc., President and General-Manager of the Abitibi Power & Paper Company, Limited, with head office in Toronto, who is representing the Canadian Chamber of Commerce on the Mission.

Mr. Jean-Marie Bonin, General-Manager of La Cooperative Agricole de Granby, of Granby, Quebec, who is representing La Chambre de Commerce de la Province de Quebec on the Mission.

Mr. Clive B. Davidson, Secretary of The Canadian Wheat Board, Winnipeg, Man.

Mr. James S. Duncan, C.M.G., Chairman and President of the Massey-Harris Company, Limited, with head office in Toronto, who is representing the Canadian Manufacturers' Association on the Mission.

Mr. Alex Gray, President of the Gray-Bonney Tool Company, Limited, of Toronto, who is representing the Canadian Exporters' Association on the Mission.

Mr. Frank L. Marshall, V.P. In Charge of Export for Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Limited, with head office in Montreal, and President of the Canadian Inter-American Association.

Mr. K.F. Wadsworth, President and General-Manager of the Maple Leaf Milling Company, Limited, with head office in Toronto.

4. Aircraft. The party will travel in the R.C.A.F. "C-5" aircraft, which has carried many important personages on visits in Canada. Her Majesty the Queen, then Princess Elizabeth, and the Duke of Edinburgh travelled in it during their visit to Canada in 1951.

5. Purpose. The fact that a Minister of the Crown and senior executives of leading Canadian firms selling in the market are paying a visit to nine Latin American countries is, of itself, a positive indication of Canada's continuing goodwill and great interest in the further development of trade. Members of the Mission will be enabled to increase their knowledge of business conditions and prospects by meeting with leading government and business executives. They will have opportunities, at functions and in private, to present a picture of Canada's industrial growth and commercial aspirations, so that business and government in the nine countries will have their attention focussed on Canada as a market and a source of supply.

6. Former Canadian Missions. Over the years, various official and semi-official missions from Canada have visited Latin America. The Canadian Government, in conjunction with the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, sent a large delegation to Buenos Aires in March, 1931, when the Canadian pavilion at the British Empire Exhibition was opened. Visits were also made at that time to Uruguay and Brazil.

The Hon. James A. MacKinnon, former Minister of Trade and Commerce, headed a trade mission to South America in 1941, and in February, 1946, he visited Mexico, Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama and Colombia.

7. Canadian Representatives in Latin America. Canada recently appointed ambassadors to Colombia, Uruguay and Venezuela. One of the first functions of these officers will be to welcome Mr. Howe and the Trade Mission. Canada now has diplomatic missions at nine capitals in Latin America — the others are in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Cuba, Mexico and Peru. In addition to Foreign Trade Service officers posted with the missions, there are Canadian Trade Commissioners in Ciudad Trujillo, Guatemala City and Sao Paulo.

8. Trade with the Nine Countries. The extent to which trade between Canada and the nine countries to be visited on the forthcoming mission has increased is indicated by the fact that the aggregate value of trade in 1951 amounted to $404 million, compared with only $27 million in 1938, immediately prior to the Second World War. Canadian exports have risen in value from $15 million to $166 million during those thirteen years. This increase indicates how great are the possibilities of the Latin American market for Canadian goods, and how much can be accomplished by continuous and intelligent efforts to sell in that area.

Canadian imports from the nine countries on the itinerary of the trade mission increased in value from $12 million in 1938 to $238 million in 1951.

9. Government Officers on Mission. Personnel on the Mission will include the following government officers:

Mr. Wm. Frederick Bull, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Jules Léger, Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Alfred Savard, Area Trade Officer, Canadian Trade Commissioner Service, and Secretary of the Mission.

Mr. M. Schwarzmann, of the International Trade Relations Branch, Department of Trade and Commerce.

Wing Commander Frank Bell, DFC., AFC., CD, R.C.A.F. Conducting Officer on the Mission.

DESPATCH X-1456

Ottawa, September 13, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

POSSIBLE INVITATION TO CANADA TO ACCEPT
OBSERVER STATUS AT 10TH INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE OF THE ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES TO BE HELD
IN CARACAS, VENEZUELA IN 1953

Attached is a State Department memorandum, copy of which was left with the American Division by Mr. J.H. Morgan, Counsellor of the United States Embassy in Ottawa, for informational purposes only. However, it poses a new and very interesting question as to whether Canada would attend the next meeting of the Organization of American States as an observer, and it gives the background of U.S. views at an official level on Canadian participation in the OAS.

2. You will observe this memorandum has been prepared for background use in connection with talks which either Mr. Matthews or Mr. Miller intends to have with you. Mr. Morgan was not advised by Washington whether these discussions had yet been held with you, but we thought you might like to have their departmental memorandum for early consideration.

3. In Mr. Morgan's informal talk with the American Division, he inquired as to what our views might be and he was told that we would give consideration to the problem and advise him shortly as to our reaction. He was told of our past relations with the OAS and informed of the public statements made by the Prime Minister and Minister in 1949, bringing him up to date by a resumé of our most recent statements of policy as set out in our secret letter of instructions to the Canadian Ambassador in Brazil, being,

a) that Canada is not prepared at present to join the Organization of American States, but that we do take a certain part in the inter-american system of organizations and technical conferences,

b) that Canada is not seeking an invitation to join the OAS,

c) that for the time being we prefer not to receive an invitation,

d) that knowledge of the OAS or the Pan-American Union is very limited in Canada and that there does not seem to be any pressing reason at the moment which would prompt us to change our attitude to the inter-american system,

e) that our economic, cultural and other mutual relations with the various Latin American republics had always been very good and that we expected they would improve constantly.

4. The reasons above are those put forward towards joining the OAS as a full-fledged member while the present query is whether we would attend as observers only — in this instance, but with the hope that this action might lead to membership later. This creates a new situation and one which should be assessed with considerable care. It is not impossible that the State Department is beginning to feel that the United States is getting into a position of being one against twenty and that the U.S. Government may even attempt to press us to join the OAS in order to counteract the growing anti-United States propaganda throughout Latin America.

5. Mr. Morgan was asked if the U.S. Ambassador in Canada or he were of the opinion that our entry into the OAS would, in their view, tend to have good or detrimental effects upon the direct friendly relations now existing between the U.S. and Canada. He appeared quite surprised at this approach, considered it a most interesting point and said he would talk further with Mr. Woodward on this subject. He was also told that we felt our participation in the United Nations, NATO and Commonwealth organizations were about all we could handle at the present time, and that even if we viewed this approach with favour we would find it extremely difficult to provide sufficient personnel to enter properly into the various bodies of the Organization of American States. This point, however, would not preclude our going to the 1953 Conference as an observer.

6. We would be most interested to learn from you whether you have recently been approached on this subject, and to have your views of the opinions expressed in the attached memorandum.

POSSIBLE INVITATION TO CANADA TO ACCEPT
OBSERVER STATUS AT TENTH INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE

As you requested, this memorandum, in which BNA (British Commonwealth and North European Division) has concurred, has been prepared for your background in connection with the discussion you indicated you would have with Ambassador Wrong. The immediate question is whether Canada would accept observer status at the Tenth Inter-American Conference to be held in Caracas in 1953, if an invitation should be extended. Dr. Lleras Camargo, Secretary General of the Organization of American States, is convinced that the action necessary to extend the invitation cannot be taken successfully unless there is good reason to believe that it would be accepted.

The principal arguments for acceptance which might be addressed to the Canadian are: (1) that the gesture of good will would be well received by and would influence attitudes of the representatives of governments with which Canada is presumably anxious to develop increased economic relations, with which she must deal in the United Nations and other international organizations of which she and they are members, and whose continued cooperation in the development of the strength of the free world is indispensable; (2) that, without commitment as to eventual membership in the Organization of American States and its constituent organs, the observer status would offer Canada an opportunity to become fully acquainted with the nature and function of the Organization; (3) that from the purely intelligence point of view, the opportunity to acquire information regarding the activities and motivations of the governments of the twenty Latin American Republics should be valuable to Canada; and (4) that Canadians have participated in Inter-American meetings, such as the recent Consultation on Geography, with what may be assumed to be mutually beneficial results.

The chief Canadian objection is likely to be that acceptance of observer status would be regarded as a first step toward eventual membership in the OAS, a role which they do not seem to wish to assume. Their antipathy toward such membership appears to stem from (1) a somewhat personalized psychological disinclination to be associated with Latin Americans, many of whom they do not respect and frequently distrust; (2) concern lest membership in the OAS might somehow be interpreted as a weakening of bonds with the members of the British Commonwealth and their NATO relationships; (3) opposition to contributing to the costs of an additional international organization; (4) unwillingness to run the risk of becoming involved through the operations of the OAS peace and security machinery in disputes among American Republics; (5) concern lest they be placed in an awkward position in relation to the long standing controversies between the UK and certain of the Latin American countries over territorial matters.

For your own information, some of the principal advantages to the United States of Canadian membership in the OAS seem to be: (1) that this would tend to ameliorate somewhat the unique position of the United States as the only English-speaking member; (2) that another country with a high degree of both the theory and practice of representative government would be a valuable contributor to the liberal principles which are the declared aim of Latin American countries, but which are so often contradicted by them in practice; (3) Canada's membership would remove one of the difficulties in the way of extending the practice of having inter-American specialized organizations serve as the regional units of United Nations organizations; (4) Canadian officials and experts in specialized fields could make valuable contributions to the solution of American problems; (5) it would help to round out whatever geographical basis there is to the hemisphere as an international region; (6) Canada's weight would be helpful in efforts to preserve inter-American peace. (It is doubtful, however, that, so long as the basic concept of the North Atlantic Treaty is maintained, Canada's participation in the Rio Treaty would offer any striking gain to security from outside the hemisphere.)

DESPATCH No. 2074

Washington, September 25, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

SUGGESTED PRESENCE OF CANADIAN OBSERVERS
AT THE NEXT INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE

Reference: Your Despatch EX-1456 of September 13th.

1. I have read with much interest your despatch and the State Department memorandum, of which a copy was enclosed. I have not been approached by either Mr. Freeman Matthews or Mr. Miller<sup>6</sup> on this subject. Mr. Matthews is at present on leave, and it may be that he will get in touch with me on his return. A good many months have passed since the question of Canadian participation in the Organization of American States was last mentioned to me. It has never been discussed with me except in a very informal manner, usually by Mr. Miller when I encountered him at some social function.

2. If the State Department does put to me the question of the acceptance by Canada of observer status at next year's Conference at Caracas, I intend to adopt a position of cautious reserve. I find the arguments in favour of Canadian acceptance which are set forth in the second paragraph of the State Department memorandum far from convincing. It is quite possible that there would be benefits to Canada on the lines suggested in the first argument, but I should think that we can get in other ways the advantages suggested in the second, third and fourth arguments. The statement of Canadian objections in the third paragraph is, of course, incomplete, and an additional objection not mentioned is the ignorance of the Canadian public of the Organization of American States and the prevailing lack of interest in a closer association of Canada with its operations.

Edward G. Miller, Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs, Department of State of United States.

3. I find indeed that the statement in the final paragraph of the principal advantages to the United States of Canadian membership in the O.A.S. contains more convincing arguments for acceptance of the suggestion that Canadian observers should attend the next Conference. I have long held the view that what Canada would get out of closer association with the O.A.S. was much less important than what Canada might put into it. The fact that the Department of State is of the opinion that Canadian membership would make a contribution of value in a number of different ways is to me a more appealing argument in favour of acceptance of the proposal for a trial run at Caracas in observer status than any enumeration which can be made of direct benefits to Canada which might conceivably result.

4. It would not be beyond our capacity to send a small delegation to Caracas for this Conference, and the experience so acquired would be of value in examining the justification of continuing to pursue our policy of aloofness. The main argument against such a course, however, is that it would thereafter be difficult to disengage ourselves and to refuse further proposals for a continuing closer association with the O.A.S. For this reason I am inclined to hope that you will authorize me to inform the State Department in due course that, while we appreciate the suggestion, we should not like to receive an official invitation at the present time.

OBSERVER STATUS FOR CANADA AT 10TH INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE OF THE ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES TO BE HELD
IN VENEZUELA LATE IN 1953

On September 12, Mr. Morgan, Counsellor of the U.S. Embassy, left with the American Division a copy of the attached memorandum of September 3<sup>7</sup> on this question which was prepared as a brief for the State Department's use in approaching Mr. Wrong in the matter. It will be seen that the State Department apparently plans to raise with Mr. Wrong the question of Canada accepting observer status at the 1953 O.A.S. Conference, although the memorandum includes arguments in favour of Canadian membership in the O.A.S.

We recently learned informally from a member of the Canadian desk of the State Department that the U.S. Embassy received the memorandum for its information only, and had no instructions to take up the question with us, but

Mr. Wrong has now asked for instructions as to how he should handle any proposal that is made to him.

Attached are the significant portions of:

(a) Our despatch No. X1456 of September 13 to Mr. Wrong in which we sought his views on the State Department memorandum and indicated the information on current Canadian policy regarding the O.A.S. which the American Division had given informally to Mr. Morgan when he called;

(b) Mr. Wrong's despatch No. 2074 of September 25, giving his views regarding the State Department memorandum.

The U.S. memorandum contains some impressive arguments in favour of acceptance of observer status at the 1953 meetings and of Canadian membership in the O.A.S. The counter-arguments in the attached papers are, however, pretty compelling at the present time and one of the main problems in accepting observer status in 1953 would be that it would then be more difficult to put off further proposals for a closer association with the O.A.S.

I am not convinced that membership in the O.A.S. would benefit Canada or improve our situation to a degree corresponding to the effort involved; also, I take it that under present circumstances our contribution to the Organization could not be substantial. Our existing attitude towards observer status and membership might, of course, become difficult to maintain if considerable pressure were brought to bear on us by several members of the Organization to join it, and the whole position would have to be reconsidered if some day an inter-American economic agreement provided a new structure, not only for inter-American trade, but also for the treatment of foreign enterprises in all the other American countries.

On balance, I do not feel I can recommend that we become more closely associated with the O.A.S. at this time. If you agree, I propose asking the American Division to prepare a message to Mr. Wrong authorizing him, as he suggests in his final paragraph, to reply to any State Department approach that while we appreciate the suggestion of observer status, we would not like to receive an official invitation at the present time.

As the question of Canadian association with the O.A.S. does not appear to have been before other Ministers since 1947, you might prefer to raise the matter with Mr. Howe, or with the Cabinet on Thursday, before I reply to Mr. Wrong.

TELEGRAM EX-2025

Ottawa, October 18, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

SUGGESTED PRESENCE OF CANADIAN OBSERVERS
AT THE NEXT INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE

Reference: Your despatch No. 2074 of September 25, 1952.

Following from Wilgress, Begins: I am very grateful to you for letting me have, in your despatch under reference, your views on this question.

2. My immediately following telegram† quotes memorandum of October 8 in the matter that I gave to the Minister. He had intended raising the question at the Cabinet meeting on October 9. An opportunity did not arise, however, and Mr. Pearson feels that it should now be possible to defer Cabinet consideration of the problem until after the General Assembly of the United Nations, since the Caracas Conference will be held late in 1953.

3. In the circumstances, should the State Department approach you, I should appreciate it if you would take the line that, as Mr. Pearson will be in New York for some time and as the question of Canadian attendance at the 1953 conference does not appear to be urgent at this stage, you doubt that there is much point in discussing the matter at the present time.

4. For your own information, Mr. Pearson has no strong views as to whether or not Canada should accept observer status and will be content to be guided by the views of his colleagues.

5. I should add a word of explanation about the opening words of the second paragraph of the memorandum of October 8. When Mr. Wight of the State Department was in Ottawa at a reception after the last P.J.B.D. meeting, Mr. Eberts, hoping to learn whether the State Department expected any report on our reactions to its memorandum before it approached you, said that the U.S. Embassy had mentioned to us a State Department memorandum on the O.A.S. To protect Mr. Morgan's position, it was not indicated that he had left a copy of the memorandum with us. Mr. Wight, while apparently not in the least concerned that we had been told of the memorandum, made it clear that, so far as he knew, it had been sent to the U.S. Embassy for its information, without any instructions to take it up with us, and that it was not planned to use the Embassy here as a channel for discussion of the observer proposal. The substance of the State Department's memorandum was not discussed with Mr. Wight.

6. It was as recently as October 16 that Mr. Morgan last asked whether the Department had reached any conclusion regarding the State Department's memorandum. If and when the U.S. Embassy approaches us again, we plan to say that Mr. Pearson did not have an opportunity to consult his colleagues before he left and that, as he will be away for some time and the matter does not appear urgent, we do not think a decision could be reached for the present. We will also suggest that, if the State Department is still thinking of approaching you some time, it would seem preferable to confine discussion to Washington in order to avoid the misunderstandings and confusion that might arise from dealing with the matter through two channels. Ends.

We thought you might be interested to learn that Mr. Morgan, Counsellor of the United States Embassy in Ottawa, called on Mr. Stark last week to enquire whether any decision had been reached on this question. Mr. Stark spoke to him along the lines mentioned in paragraph 6 of our telegram to you, returned the copy of the State Department memorandum which Mr. Morgan had originally given him and stressed the fact that, in order to avoid any confusion, it seemed preferable to confine discussion to Washington.

2. You will recall from paragraph 5 of our despatch no. X-4516<sup>8</sup> of September 13 that we had asked Mr. Morgan if his Ambassador or he were of the opinion that our entry into the O.A.S. would have any effect upon the friendly relations now existing between the United States and Canada. You may be interested to know that in Mr. Morgan's informal talk with Mr. Stark he mentioned he had discussed this point with Mr. Woodward and that his Ambassador did not foresee that any question of substance could arise in the O.A.S. on which Canada might take such a strong position in favour of a Latin-American country that U.S.-Canadian relations would be prejudiced.

Ottawa, October 28, 1952

CONFIDENTIAL

OBSERVER STATUS FOR CANADA AT 10TH INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE OF THE ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES TO BE HELD
IN VENEZUELA LATE IN 1953

Early in September the United States Embassy showed us, informally, a State Department memorandum of September 3 on this subject. This memorandum, which indicated that the State Department planned to raise the matter with the Ambassador in Washington, was brought to the attention of Mr. Wrong in our despatch no. X-1456 of September 13. Mr. Wrong then gave his views in despatch no. 2074 of September 25. On October 8, a departmental memorandum on the question was prepared for me. As, however, I did not have an opportunity to discuss this matter in Cabinet before leaving for the General Assembly of the United Nations, Mr. Wrong was informed in a telegram of October 18, that Cabinet consideration of the problem was unlikely until after the General Assembly. Copies of all above-mentioned papers are enclosed.

2. I would appreciate receiving from you at an early date any suggestions or comments you wish to make concerning this question of Canadian observers attending the 10th Inter-American Conference of the Organization of American States. You will appreciate that discussion of the question at this stage with officials of the O.A.S. or of any governments that are members of the Organization would not be desirable since it might well lead to additional pressure for us to send observers to the 1953 Conference before the Canadian Government has an opportunity to formulate views in the matter.

3. I am sending a similar despatch to all our offices in Latin America.

OBSERVER STATUS FOR CANADA AT NEXT O.A.S. MEETING

Reference: Your despatch No. X-345, October 28, 1952, and our air telegram No. 14 of November 15, 1952.†

Since the Ambassador is at the General Assembly and will not return until after the next courier leaves on November 21, we suggested in our air telegram that you might get his personal views in New York. In the meantime, we offer an interim reply.

2. In the first place we have tried to look at the matter specifically from the local point of view of this Embassy. We find it hard to believe that O.A.S. membership could help us materially to get more information than we can get now (points 2 and 3 of the arguments for acceptance in the U.S. memorandum). There are no political problems between Mexico and Canada that membership would help solve. We think, on point 1, that our present good relations with Mexico already constitute an excellent background for the steadily increasing trade between the two countries. On point 4, so far as we know, Canada has participated only in meetings on technical subjects.

3. So far as Mexico is concerned, therefore, we can see no great advantage in closer approach to O.A.S. It is fair to add that neither do we see any real objection or disadvantage.

4. In the wider sphere, it seems to us that of the four U.S. arguments for acceptance, the one requiring serious study is the first. If we were to make a "gesture of goodwill" by accepting observer status at Caracas it is doubtless true that our gesture would be well received; in fact it might well cause a wave of enthusiasm. But underlying this, we suspect, would be the assumption that Canada was now well on the way in, and that her full membership would follow as a matter of course. What then would be the result when, or if, it should become apparent that Canada was not prepared to accept membership? So far as goodwill is concerned, would the reaction be strong enough to leave in the end a minus rather than a plus result? Or, if our Canadian attitude and our reasons for hesitation were tactfully and skillfully explained would the Latin-Americans be content to accept the half loaf and have us in there as perennial observers, while still cherishing the hope that we would some day be members? (Once we accept observer status at Caracas I do not see how we can then draw back to our present aloofness; we are going to be observers from there on into the indefinite future, or until we accept membership.)

5. That question of Latin-American reaction seems to be the principal factor. Another important one is the suggestion made in the U.S. memorandum that Canadian membership could make a valuable contribution in various ways. This is the point which appealed strongly to Mr. Wrong (paragraph 3 of his despatch). It deserves serious consideration. A third is the possibility, often mentioned in previous discussions, that we might find ourselves in an awkward position if compelled to take a stand one way or the other in any controversy between the United States and one, or more, of all of the Latin-American members.

6. Our conclusion is while we should not hastily rule out the possibility of accepting observer status we must not accept it until we have studied these and all other factors and have decided that we are aware of all possible consequences and prepared to accept them.

7. I do not know whether the Ambassador will fully agree with what I have said here; I understand he inclines toward caution in approaching closer to O.A.S. but I have had no opportunity to consult him. I hope you were able to get his opinion in New York. If he wishes to make any further comments from here he can use either the December courier or an air telegram.

8. We assume you will keep us advised of developments; we shall be interested.

CONFIDENTIAL

OBSERVER STATUS FOR CANADA AT 10TH INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE OF THE ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES
TO BE HELD IN VENEZUELA

Reference: Your despatch No. X-234 of October 28, 1952.<sup>10</sup>

I should like to make only one point concerning the desirability of Canada sending an Observer to Caracas next year. It seems to me that the invitation should be considered in the light of the fact that Canada will very shortly be establishing diplomatic relations with three countries which are members of the OAS and that a Goodwill and Trade Mission headed by a senior Cabinet Minister will tour through Latin America early in the new year. Taken alone, these events could indicate merely an increased Canadian interest in trade relations with Latin America. However, if in addition Canada accepts an invitation to send an Observer to Caracas, it will, I suggest, be impossible to avoid the appearance that the Canadian Government is now prepared to play a more active role politically in Latin America. I agree too that if we sent an Observer, it would be difficult to avoid increasing our activities in the OAS and thereby giving the impression that we intend eventually to apply for full membership.

2. I understand that a policy paper on Canada's relations with Latin America has been under discussion for the past year in the departments of External Affairs and Trade and Commerce; no doubt Canada's attitude toward the OAS has been thoroughly reconsidered there. In any case the arguments for and against Canadian membership are well known. I should like however to express my agreement with Mr. Wrong's view that the benefits to Canada of closer association with the OAS would be much less important than what Canada could put into the Organization. The question which must be answered therefore is whether Canada is yet willing to assume the added responsibilities which more active participation in the OAS would entail.

3. The State Department memorandum of September 3 is unusually interesting, in particular the last paragraph which indicates the extent to which their views on Canadian membership in the OAS have changed in the last few years. I was also struck by the suggestion in paragraph three that Canadian opposition to membership in the Organization stems from "a somewhat personalized psychological disinclination to be associated with Latin Americans, many of whom they do not respect and frequently distrust." My personal experience confirms the truth of this statement. Moreover I think that Latin Americans are aware of this Canadian feeling toward them and that to be realistic we ought to discount somewhat suggestions that there is nothing but good will toward Canada in Latin America. I do not know how Canadian membership in the OAS would affect the situation but it would undoubtedly force many Canadians to reconsider their attitude toward the inhabitants of this part of the world.

OF THE ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES TO BE HELD IN VENEZUELA LATE IN 1953

One of the unfinished matters awaiting me was your above mentioned despatch.

2. It is rather difficult for me to make any comments or suggestions in regard to the desirability of a Canadian observer to attend the 10th Inter-American Conference of the Organization of American States. In view of the recent changes in the political situation here and also, I understand, the fact that one of the matters which might come up for discussion would be the granting of asylum to political refugees which might be a very contentious matter, it is quite possible that this conference may not be held at the time and place suggested.

3. It would appear to me that should we accept an observer status at such a meeting that this would mean opening the door to an invitation to full membership which, if it were accepted, would put us in a position of at some time or other, having to support the other English-speaking member (U.S.A.) or support the Latin-American group which would seem to be a very undesirable position to be in.

4. I have not had the opportunity to get the feeling as to whether or not our relations with the Venezuelan Government and people will be in any way improved as a result of appointing an observer and subsequently obtaining membership but for the reasons indicated above, I feel that it is undesirable.

LETTER No. 19

Mexico City, January 14, 1953

OBSERVER STATUS FOR CANADA AT 10TH INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE OF THE ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES
TO BE HELD IN VENEZUELA LATE IN 1953

Reference: Our despatch No. 479 of November 19, 1952.

I do not propose going over ground already covered in the despatch under reference or in Mr. Wrong's despatch No. 2074 of September 25, 1952. With the views expressed in both those despatches I am in complete agreement. I would, however, like to go over some aspects of this question which may bear a little emphasis.

2. In my opinion Canada, at the present time, is taking much too little interest in Latin-American affairs and for that reason does not make full use, except commercially, of existing facilities here, namely eight (at the time of writing) full-fledged diplomatic missions, to achieve some of the desirable aims outlined in the State Department's memorandum of September 23, 1952,<sup>12</sup> which brought about this enquiry.

3. Without actively participating in the work of the OAS, either as a full-fledged member or as an observer at the Caracas meeting, it would I think be possible to go some way towards:

(a) ensuring the continued cooperation of the Latin-American countries in the development of the strength of the free world;

(b) combatting the anti-Yankee campaign which is spreading in Latin America: a campaign fanned by narrow nationalistic groups who are frequently supported by the Communists;

(c) contributing to the fuller acceptance of those liberal principles which are the avowed aim of the Latin-American republics, but which are so frequently contradicted by them in practice; and

(d) solving Latin-American economic and political problems by increased technical assistance, etc.

4. My officers and I have already gone into the question of ways and means whereby Canadian activities in Latin America could be increased without necessarily enmeshing Canada in OAS affairs. You may wish to review my despatch No. D.231 of June 5, 1952,† commenting on the Department's draft policy paper on Latin America, in which several such examples are given. In this connection, you may also wish to refer to a memorandum prepared by my Information Officer on January 10, 1952,<sup>13</sup> at the behest of Mr. H.O. Moran, on the development of Canadian information and cultural activities in this part of the world.

<sup>12</sup>La date exacte est le 3 septembre ; voir annexe, document 1040.

The correct date is September 3; see enclosure, document 1040.

5. Only when Canada will have exhausted the potential influence which she could exercise in Latin America through encouraging the activities of her missions, should she, in my opinion, give consideration to aligning herself more closely with the OAS. If ever the time should come when Canada will feel disposed to accept an invitation to join the OAS, she will then be in a better position to make an effectual contribution to the work of the OAS.

Rio de Janeiro, January 21, 1953

OBSERVER STATUS FOR CANADA AT 10TH INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE OF THE ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES TO BE HELD
IN VENEZUELA LATE IN 1953

Reference: Your despatch No. X-294 of October 28, 1952.<sup>14</sup>

I have given considerable thought to this question. I can, of course, speak only from my experience in Brazil and in Cuba during the past four years.

2. In my humble judgment, acceptance of any invitation to send observers to the 10th Inter-American Conference of the Organization of American States to be held in Venezuela late in 1953 would be tantamount to a decision to join the Organization, or, at the very least, as suggested in Mr. Wrong's despatch of September 25th, it would be difficult to disengage ourselves and to refuse further proposals for a continuing closer association with the O.A.S. The matter, therefore, resolves itself into the question as to whether Canada is prepared to consider favourably the suggestion of becoming a member of the O.A.S. On the larger political issue, my views, I feel, may be of little value and I shall, therefore, confine my observations largely to reporting on the situation, as I see it, in Brazil and my earlier experience in Cuba.

3. Since I came to Brazil more than fourteen months ago, no Minister or other official of the Brazilian Government has ever mentioned the O.A.S. to me. They frequently discuss their co-operation with Canada in the United Nations and its agencies, such as the World Health Organization and

U.N.E.S.C.O. It is, of course, possible as the time for the 10th Conference approaches, greater interest may be manifested and, if so, I shall promptly report.

4. The only agency of the O.A.S. with headquarters in Brazil is the Inter-American Juridical Committee. The United States of America has a permanent representative on this Committee, Mr. George Hodges Owen. Mr. Owen is a personal friend and has recently sent me the draft report of the Committee on Uniformity of Legislation in International Cooperation in Judicial Procedures. I suspect, with all respect to the other members of the Committee, that the report has been largely prepared by Mr. Owen, for it emphasizes that both in the United States and Canada, many of the questions under study are matters not for the Federal Legislatures but for the States and Provinces respectively and stresses that procedures based on the English Common Law are in force in most of the States of the Union and in nine of the ten Provinces of Canada. From time to time, Mr. Owen has asked me questions about Canadian systems of law, and I think his reference to Canada in the draft report is to reinforce his argument that many of the suggestions put forward in the Committee discussions are not practicable for the countries in the Americas, which have a fixed division of powers between the Federal and State (or Provincial) Legislatures.

5. During the recent visit of the Canadian Goodwill and Trade Mission headed by the Rt. Hon. C.D. Howe, Mr. Howe and other officials had several conversations with leading members of the Brazilian Government but I cannot recollect that any question was raised which even remotely touched Canada's participation in the O.A.S.

6. My conclusion is that Brazil would probably welcome Canada's participation in the O.A.S., because the feeling of both the Government and the people is one of exceeding friendliness to Canada. On the other hand, it must be kept in mind that, after the United States, Brazil is the most populous of the other States and, to a limited degree, keeps aloof from the Spanish speaking Republics. In other words, it regards itself as No. 2 in the Union; if Canada should join, the Brazilians might feel that, having regard to our greater trade and greater national wealth, we would elbow them out of this position. If, in any controversy, we should agree with the United States, we might be represented as simply following the United States line as a satellite; if, on the other hand, we disagreed with the United States, the effort might be made to use Canada as the spear-head of the opposition. It is properly pointed out in Mr. Wrong's despatch of September 25th, 1952, that there is a lack of interest on the part of the Canadian public in the O.A.S. It may be unfortunate but I cannot conceive of very many of our people becoming very interested in a dispute between Paraguay and Brazil, unless, indeed, the issues involved should be such as to threaten world peace.

7. In Cuba, on the other hand, between 1949-1951, I found a much greater interest in the O.A.S., probably due to the fact that the O.A.S. was called upon to adjudicate differences between Cuba and the Dominican Republic.

8. One of the questions occasionally raised was the Colonial issue as affecting the British, French and Dutch colonies and territories in this Hemisphere. While the cooler heads were inclined to deprecate pressing the question, undoubtedly there were others, who not appreciating the efforts made by the Mother Countries for the benefit, in most cases, of the peoples resident in these colonies and territories, were disposed to emulate Bolivar and to try to assist the population to throw off the yoke of the European oppressors! This is a question which may be pressed at any time and, in respect of it, I am afraid our attitude would be liable to misrepresentation, for the logical Latin mind finds it difficult to understand our position in the Commonwealth, and that the units have a common Sovereign and yet are not subordinate one to the other.

9. While I am very anxious that Canada should cultivate the closest possible relations with Latin America, I am not convinced that the most effective measure to be taken to that end is by becoming a member of the Organization of American States at the present time. I realize that there are many weighty arguments on the other side, but, on balance, this paragraph expresses my conclusion in the light of my experience. Again, however, I feel that, if we are not prepared to join the Union, we should not be represented by official observers at a general Conference; to send observers and then decide not to join would, I am sure, have a deteriorative effect on our relations with many, if not all, of the component States.

CONFIDENTIAL

OBSERVER STATUS FOR CANADA AT 10TH INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE OF THE ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES TO BE HELD
 IN VENEZUELA LATE IN 1953

Reference: Your despatch No. X-292 of October 28, 1952.<sup>15</sup>

My absence on annual leave has prevented me from sending you my views at an earlier date. I should like at least to outline my reasoning on this subject.

2. I think we have to agree that many Canadians have a superiority complex towards Latin Americans. The State Department memorandum of September 3, 1952, rather crudely attributes this attitude to "a somewhat personalized psychological disinclination to be associated with Latin Americans, many of whom they do not respect and frequently distrust." We have on our files a copy of a letter of January 11, 1950, addressed to Mr. Heeney by Mr. Wrong which says: "I remarked to Mr. Kennan — and he did not disagree — that Pan American conferences seemed to me to be more wasting of time and effort than any of the too numerous international gatherings at which we were now represented."

3. Latin Americans, who do not lack intuition, are becoming aware of our above-described attitude. As an illustration of this statement, I might refer you to the comments of the Brazilian press when we abstained from attending the First Congress of the Latin Union (Mr. Morin's despatch of November 9, 1951).

4. From time to time we make known our desire to develop our trade with Latin American countries. In this connection, we should bear in mind that they are countries where sentiment plays a part, in addition to reason. Possibly it should not be so, but it is. Unless we show active marks of consideration and friendship, I doubt that we shall reap from them the commercial advantages which we might otherwise expect.

5. I may be unduly influenced by the fact that I operate in a Latin American post. I want nevertheless to say that, in my opinion, we have not yet acquired the habit of giving to Latin America the relative importance which it has. For instance, the Meeting of Heads of Divisions reports, and especially our Departmental reports to Cabinet, contain far more on India and Pakistan than they do on all the Latin American republics taken together. Politically, of course, Latin America does not constitute at present a vital zone, such as the Far East, where the Communist menace is supreme. Economically, however, taking into account the long-term possibilities offered to us by the similarly under-developed Latin American area, I submit that we should gradually increase our concern about it. Without ceasing to look East and West, we should also look farther South than the United States.<sup>16</sup>

6. The argument for non-participation based on lack of knowledge of the O.A.S. by the Canadian public appears to me one which should prompt us to send an observer. Ignorance is a poor argument on the part of one who is offered the means to learn. Regular Inter-American Conferences take place only every five years, which means that very little personnel and money would be involved in sending a small delegation of observers. Furthermore, I personally do not see how the sending of observers to the coming Conference would make it difficult for us to refuse closer association with the O.A.S. if we do not want to pursue the experience any further. We could surely make it plain that our sending of observers to Caracas is without any compromise as regards subsequent conferences.<sup>17</sup>
